an opportunity given to them to meet them. The Sessions Judge in his order says that the original charge as originally framed by him did not impute any offence at all and that the accused cross examined the witnesses with the intent of showing that they did not take part in the assault or in the beating, they were not prejudiced by the subsequent alteration. We are unable to follow the reasoning. The mere fact that the accused cross-examined the witnesses examined by the prosecution to prove the alleged unsustainable charges, is not a ground for holding that by substantially altering the charges they were not prejudiced. As was pointed out in Birendra Lal v. Emperor (1), the Sessions Court is not a Court of original jurisdiction and, though vested with large powers of amending and adding to charges, can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal and not with regard to matter not covered by indictment; that is exactly what has happened in this case. The first charge in the original indictment does not refer to the beating and to the causing of hurt. Simply because the accused have chosen to examine the witnesses for the purpose of proving that they were not the aggressors and that they were acting in self defence, it would not follow that they were not prejudiced by the specific charges which had been made against them at the close of the trial. If we may say so, the charge framed by the Magistrate is in many respects more specific, whether it was sustainable or not is not a matter which we need go into at present. Then as to the charges which the Sessions Judge framed at the beginning of the trial. It was the duty of the Sessions Judge in a case where several persons were charged with the serious offence to have drawn up the charges with care and framed specific charges against the accused. Even the amended charges are vague and we are not satisfied that on the amended charges objection cannot be taken by the accused. However that may be, we must draw the attention of the Sessions Judge to the fact that he was wrong in holding that the accused were not prejudiced by the course adopted by him in altering the charge in material portions of it at the close of the trial.

(1) 32 C. 22; 8 C. W. N. 784; 1 Cr. L. J. 794.

We are obliged, therefore, to quash the whole proceedings and to send the case back to the Sessions Judge for trial de novo. We expect him to frame specific charges with reference to the order of committal and to put the accused on trial on these charges.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 439—Order requiring security to keep the peace made without enquiry, legality of—Accused willing to give security, effect of—Revision, maintainability of.

It is illegal to make an order requiring a person to furnish security to keep the peace, without any inquiry as to whether he was likely to commit a breach of the peace, or was otherwise a proper subject for proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 412, col. 1.]

The fact that a person has, in obedience to an order, expressed his willingness to furnish the security demanded to keep the peace, is no bar to his moving the High Court to set that order aside. [p. 412, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Magistrate, First Class, Basti, dated the 26th August 1919.

Mr. B. N. Vyas, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—On the 13th June 1919 Mathra, the complainant, made a report at the Police station in which he charged three persons with simple assault. On the 16th June he filed a complaint in Court, in which he stated that the three persons whom he had already named at the Police station together with the applicant in the present case and a large number of their servants had attacked the complainant, had forcibly taken away his ox and begun to beat him and when the complainant's aunt came to rescue him, they beat her and stole her ornaments and decamped with the ox and the ornaments.

ROHAN V. EMPEROR.

The charge which was originally against three persons only of simple assault had grown into a full fledged dacoity against a large number. When the matter came up for enquiry before the learned Magistrate, he proceeded to examine the complainant Mathra and then recorded the following order:—"In the first report complainant named only a very few persons and as the Police had not challaned, it was for them to adduce evidence. I have examined Mathra complainant and I have noticed his aversion to state facts against accused. The parties have colluded and it would be futile to proceed with the trial. Under the circumstances, the prosecution will fail to give evidence in support of their version and I would, therefore, only bind down the selected accused under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The accused summoned will be discharged under section 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code."

He there and then issued notice to three of the accused, who are Zamindars, calling on them to show cause why they should not furnish security to keep the peace for one year. On being asked what each of them had to say as to the notice served on them they replied that they were prepared to furnish the securities as demanded. One of these persons, namely, Chandra Shekhar, has moved this Court in revision against that order. I admitted the application and sent for the record. It seems to me that the order of the Magistrate was wholly illegal. There was no enquiry as to whether these persons were likely to commit a breach of the peace or were otherwise proper subjects for proceedings under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I do not think the fact that the applicant and his co-accused were prepared to give the securities demanded in any way prevents them from moving this Court. Following the cases reported as Ram Ohandra Haldar v. Emperor (1) and Mul Ohand v. Emperor (2), I set aside the orders under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If the securities have been given they must be cancelled.

The mere fact that some of the witnesses produced by a person against whom proceedings have been instituted under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, are his caste-fellows, is not by itself a sufficient reason for discrediting their testimony. [p. 413, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Kheri, dated the 7th May 1919, upholding that of the Magistrate, First Class, Kheri, dated the 5th March 1919.

Babu Har Narain Das, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Rohan, is a co sharer in the village Barkhar. He has been bound over to be of good behaviour for a period of one year. He is described as a habitual thief and burglar, but it is admitted that his name never found a place in the history sheet.

The Sub-Inspector in charge of the Police station Mohamdi states that from a year the character of the applicant has been generally assailed and that he found reason to suspect him in connection with two dacoities, in which the evidence was not strong enough to enable him to send him up for trial. He admits, however, that he investigated only one of the dacoities and that in connection with it the applicant was not named in the report made to the Police. The grounds on which he is said to have been suspected are not forthcoming.

The evidence of the people belonging to the village and its neighbourhood is of a very varied character. Some of them, who have been produced for the prosecution, state that from 10 or 11 months they have been hearing complaints against the applicant, but others have been produced on behalf of the defence who give him a good character. Ram Ratan, the headman of the village Barkhar, is the only resident of Barkhar produced on behalf of the prosecution. He admits that he gave evidence against the brothers of the applicant in a case under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and that the latter were bound over. Tota Ram is the headman of an adjoining village. He too admits that he gave evidence in a case in which a brother of the applicant was charged with murder. Prag Dat is a co-sharer of another village. He too gave evidence against a brother of the applicant in a proceeding under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure arising out of a quarrel he had with Bhajan Lal with whom the brother of the applicant was employed. Kalka Prasad, a co-sharer in Muhammadpur, which is two miles off, states that he heard complaints against the applicant, but admits that he did not make any enquiry into the truth of those complaints. Prag Dat is a co-sharer of another village $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles off. He states that he heard from 10 or 11 months that the applicant commits thefts and burglaries, but admits that he never made any report about it. Two other co-sharers of adjoining villages have been produced to give evidence to the same effect.

Against this evidence there is the evidence of five witnesses, belonging to the village Barkhar itself, who state that they never heard anything against the character of the applicant. They are men of some standing. Jagan Nath, for instance, pays a land revenue of Rs. 60 per year and carries on money-lending business. Shanker Dayal pays a land-revenue of Rs. 27 per year. Balbhaddar Prasad is a cultivator of that village. Tulshi is a small land-holder and cultivator of that village and so is Nil Kanth. Some witnesses from the adjoining villages have also been adduced to give similar evidence. The mere fact that some of these witnesses are caste-fellows of the applicant is, as pointed out in Miharban Singh v. Emperor (1) and Gur Bakhsh Singh v. Emperor (2), not by itself a sufficient reason for discrediting their testimony. If the applicant was by repute a habitual thief or burglar, there is no reason why the residents of his village, other than the headman, should not have been forthcoming to bear testimony to his reputation or character or why no history sheet was ever started about him. The evidence at all events is not sufficiently clear to justify an action being taken against him under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The application is, therefore, allowed, the order of the Court below set aside and the security bond, if any, filed by the applicant will be discharged.

Where a prima facie case is made out against an accused person in the Court of a Magistrate, and the case is triable exclusively by a Court of Session, the Magistrate ought to commit the accused for trial by that Court, and not dispose of the case himself. [p. 414, col. 1.]

of Mr. Bisheshar Nath, Magistrate of the First Class, dated the 14th July 1919, that he is of opinion that "there can be no doubt that the man was murdered and probably one or all of the accused are directly or indirectly involved in it. That an attempt of the deceased's brother to fabricate evidence with the help of the head Moharrir has spoilt the whole case." This was most certainly a case in which the learned Magistrate should never have passed an order of discharge. It is evident from what he has written that there was a prima facie case, and that case triable by the Court of Session only. This Court has often pointed out to learned Magistrates that they should not dispose of a case, triable by the Court of Session only, when there is a prima facie case before them. The remarks made by the learned Magistrate are:—

"I do not feel justified in wasting the time of the Court of Session by sending up a case which was useless to stand upon."

Whatever they may mean, I direct further enquiry to be made into the case and when the further enquiry is complete, the case be committed for trial to the Court of Session under a charge declaring that the accused is charged with an offence under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. It will be for the Court of Session to decide the case. Let the record be returned.

Offence—"Service of a railway," meaning of—Railway Board Act (IV of 1905), rules under, rr. 229, 231, 244, effect of.

The expression "service" of a railway in section 121 of the Railways Act includes collecting tickets and fares from passengers. [p. 415, col. 1.]

Rules 229, 231 and 244 of the rules framed under the Indian Railway Board Act give sufficient authority to a station master to appoint one of the station staff temporarily to do the duties of a particular post in the station and when the person so appointed temporarily performs that duty, he is a railway servant acting in the discharge of his duty, and obstruction to him is punishable under section 121 of the Railways Act. [p. 416, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Magistrate, Markapur, in Criminal Appeal No. 334 of 1919, preferred against the order of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Giddalur, in Calendar Case No. 529 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. S. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Petitioners.—Under section 69 of the Indian Railways Act the only person authorised to collect tickets and demand excess fare is the railway servant "appointed by the Railway Administration in that behalf". A person to whom the function is delegated temporarily by the station master does not satisfy that requirement. The signaller, therefore, had no authority to demand tickets. Obstruction to him is not obstruction to a railway servant in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor.—The 'Railway Administration' do not appoint the station staff direct. The appointment is made by their agents. Under the rules framed under the Railway Board Act the members of the station staff can exchange duties with each other with the permission of their superior officer. The station master is impliedly authorised to assign temporarily particular functions to particular members of the station staff. The delegation of the signaller to collect tickets was valid and obstruction to him in the discharge of that duty is an offence under section 121 of the Railways Act.

ORDER.—The three accused (petitioners in revision) were convicted by the Giddalur Stationary Sub-Magistrate, the first two, of the offences under section 120 (b) of the Indian Railways Act, IX of 1890.

The petition is not pressed as regards the 3rd accused except in the matter of sentence (a fine of Rs. 25 has been imposed on each of the accused), but we do not think that the sentence is so excessive, having regard to the facts found by the first Magistrate and by the Appellate Magistrate, to call for interference in revision in the case of any of the accused on that sole ground.

As regards the 1st and 2nd accused, the facts found are: (a) on 21st November 1918 the station master of Giddalur (P. W. No. 1) deputed the signaller (P. W. No. 2) to collect tickets and excess fare (where such has to be collected) from the passengers alighting from the 45 Up train arriving at Giddalur in the evening; (b) the 1st accused alighted with a rice bag and P. W. No. 2 demanded payment of excess fare, evidently as the rice bag was heavier than the weight of the luggage allowable on his ticket; (c) the 1st and 2nd accused assaulted P. W. No. 2 and also P. W. No. 1 (station master) when he intervened to help P. W. No. 2.

"Railway servant" is defined in section 3, clause 7, as "any person employed by a Railway Administration in connection with the service of the railway". "Railway Administration" means (in this particular case) "the Railway Company." [See section 3, clause (6).] "Railway Company" means "owners or lessees of a railway or parties to an agreement for working a railway" (clause 5).

Thus a "railway servant" in section 121 is a person employed by the owners or lessees of the railway or the persons working the railway in connection with the service of the railway.

The employment (we take it) is by appointment, and the "service of a railway" includes collecting the tickets and fares from passengers.

The appointment of the ticket collector cannot be, and is not, made by all the proprietors forming the Railway Company who are usually in England but through agents appointed under rules, the rule making power being invested in the company under section 47, such rules providing (among other matters) "(e) for regulating the conduct of the railway servants and (g) generally, for regulating the travelling upon, and the use, working and management of, the railway".

Mr. A. S. Viswanatha Iyer, who appeared for the accused, did not dispute that P. W. No. 1 was the validly appointed station master and P. W. No. 2 validly appointed signaller at the station. It is also found by the lower Courts that the station master did depute the signaller to collect tickets. Rule 244 of the General Rules made by the Railway Board acting under the Indian Railway Board Act (IV of 1905) says: "The station master shall be responsible for the efficient discharge of the duties devolving upon the several members of the staff employed, and such staff shall be subject to his authority and directions in the working of the station" Rule 229 says: "Every railway servant must promptly obey all lawful orders given by any person placed in authority over him." Rule 231 (1) allows a railway servant with the permission of his superior officer to exchange duty with any other railway servant. We think that these rules give sufficient authority to the station master who delegates the duty of collecting tickets to a signaller. Thereupon and especially when the signaller consents, it becomes the duty of the signaller as a railway servant to collect tickets, and there is nothing to prevent him from consenting to undertake the duty of collecting tickets. Once he undertakes such a duty and does acts in discharge of that duty he must be held to be a railway servant acting in the discharge of his duty within the meaning of that expression in section 121.

Mr. A. S. Viswanatha Iyer, if we understood his rather subtle argument aright, relied upon section 69 of the Indian Railways Act and contended that the passenger was bound to present his pass or ticket only to the railway servant "appointed by the Railway Administration in that behalf," and hence it followed that he need not present a pass or ticket to a railway servant who was not appointed by the Railway Administration but who was only appointed by the station master temporarily, and that obstruction to that person when he demands a pass or ticket is not obstruction to a railway servant in the discharge of his duty. We are unable to accept this argument. The appointment by the "Railway Administration" or Railway Company of a particular person to do a particular duty is through agents empowered by rules, and we think that the rules empower the station master as agent of the Railway Administration to appoint one of the station staff temporarily to do duties of a particular post in the station and when the person so appointed to do that duty temporarily performs that duty, he is a railway servant acting in the discharge of his duty and obstruction to him is punishable under section 121 of the Indian Railways Act. We, therefore, dismiss the revision petition as regards accused Nos. 1 and 2 also.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 12th August 1919.

Mr. S. O. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision asking this Court to quash the order sanctioning prosecution of the applicant under section 211, Indian Penal Code. It is found that the applicant and the person against whom he brought a case under section 408, Indian Penal Code, are on bad terms with each other. The Magistrate who tried the case acquitted the accused and subsequently gave him sanction to prosecute the applicant, and the learned Sessions Judge has refused to interfere. It seems to me that if the trial Court was of opinion that in the interests of public justice proceedings should be taken against the applicant, it could and should have acted under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I am very loath to give sanction to a private individual, specially in a case where he and the opposite party are actuated by enmity. These cases are not brought to vindicate public justice but to satisfy private spite. In this case, however, the learned Sessions Judge says that there are certain points in Sheikh Sanao's case which can most probably be shown to be false, and this might probably lead to a conviction under section 211, Indian Penal Code. I think before sanction should be given there ought to be a very much stronger case made out than what appears in this case and there should be a strong probability of conviction before sanction is given. I allow the application and set aside the order of sanction.

G. obtained the exclusive privilege in respect of an invention under the Inventions and Designs Act, 1888. Under the Patent and Designs Act, 1911, which repealed the Act of 1888, his exclusive privilege was converted into a patent and extended throughout British India, including British Baluchistan and the Santhal Parganas. The Act of 1888 was never applied to Berar, but by a Notification of the Government of India issued under the Act of 1911, Berar was included in the term British India. No Controller of Patents was appointed for Berar nor was a Patent Office established there and in an action for infringement of the patent it was contended that the patent was not operative in Berar:

Held, that the patent was operative in Berar and an infringement thereof was actionable, that although a separate Controller of Patents was not expressly appointed for Berar, the officer appointed to this office for British India was the Controller for Berar; and that though the patent was granted on a date anterior to the date of the Notification of the Government of India, that Notification had the effect of making it valid in Berar from the date on which it was granted [p. 48, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Civil Suit No. 18 of 1917, dated the 2nd September 1918.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent, a resident of Kalyan in the Bombay Presidency, obtained in 1906 the exclusive privilege, under the Inventions and Designs Act of 1888, in respect of the invention of an improved method of working kilns for burning bricks. This Act was never applied to Berar. It was repealed by Act II of 1911, the Patents and Designs Act. Under section 81 of Act II of 1911, the plaintiff made an application to have his exclusive privilege converted into a patent under the Patents and Designs Act. Exhibit P-12 shows that the plaintiff has the exclusive privilege of making, selling and using the invention for fourteen years from the 17th February 1906. This privilege under the term of the patent extends throughout British India including British Baluchistan and the Santhal Parganas. The patent was granted on the 3rd April 1913. By Notification in the Foreign Department No. 3510-I. B, dated the 3rd November 1913, published in the Central Provinces Gazette, dated the 22nd November 1913, Part I, page 1004, the Governor-General in Council was pleased to apply to Berar, amongst other Acts, the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911, with the following modification: the words "British India" shall be read as referring to "British India and Berar."

By reason of the application under section 81, the patent became a patent granted under the provisions of Act II of 1911. So far as the operation of that Act is concerned, the patent extended only to the whole of British India including British Baluchistan and the Santhal Parganas. The question is, whether the Notification above referred to made it a valid patent in Berar and its infringement there actionable. Under section 12 of Act II of 1911, the plaintiff became entitled to the exclusive privilege of making, selling and using the invention throughout British India. The Notification directs that here we should read, so far as the Berar enactment is concerned, "throughout British India and Berar" for "throughout British India." This is the view which has been taken by the Court below.

It is, however, contended that as no Controller of Patents and Designs has been appointed for Berar, nor a Patent Office established there, the patent has not become operative in Berar, notwithstanding the Notification just referred to. I am not prepared to accept this view. If the authorities intended to have a separate Controller of Patents and Designs for Berar, the appointment would have been made long ago. None has yet been made. The Officer who has been appointed Controller of Patents and Designs is to be regarded as Controller for the whole of British India including British Baluchistan and the Santhal Parganas. This follows from section 1, sub-section 2. Similarly, the Patent Office is a Patent Office for the same area. Although the Controller has not been expressly appointed Controller for Berar, the intention of the Notification, it appears, is to make him the Controller of Patents and Designs for British India and Berar, and similarly the Patent Office a Patent Office for British India and Berar.

It is pointed out that the patent (Exhibit P-12) was granted on the 3rd April 1913, and the Notification came into force on the 2nd November following, and hence it is urged that as the patent is in terms limited to British India including British Baluchistan and the Santhal Parganas, it has no force outside that area, until a fresh certificate or patent is granted under the authority of the Notification. I am also not prepared to accede to this argument. At the time when the patent was granted it did not extend to Berar, but upon the introduction of the Patents and Designs Act into Berar by virtue of the Notification, the patent became operative in Berar. In order to determine the extent of the grant we are directed to substitute "British India and Berar" for "British India", and to give due effect to the intention of the Notification this substitution must be made not only in the wording of the Statute but also in any patent or certificate issued thereunder, as well as in the designation of any appointment made and office created under the British Indian enactment. The result is that the patent was a valid patent in Berar, and its infringement there was actionable.

The decision of the case on the merits has not been questioned before me and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

—Minor living with mother—Guardian, whether should be appointed—Welfare of minor.

In the absence of any allegation against the character of the mother of a boy aged 9 years and of anything to show that she is not capable of looking after the child, the appointment of a guardian is unnecessary and the boy should not be removed from her care.

Where the object of a person who applies to be appointed the guardian of a minor is not so much the welfare of the minor as the vindication of his own rights to be appointed a guardian, his application should be disallowed.

Appeal from an order of the Officiating District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 4th June 1919.

Mr. K. N. Katiu, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the Court below appointing the grandfather of the minor to be guardian in spite of the objection made by the appellant, who is the minor's mother. The minor is now said to be 9 or 10 years of age. The parties are Muhammadans. The property of the family consists of two buffaloes in which the mother and the other children also have shares. In the course of the proceedings the respondent, the applicant for the guardianship, stated that he did not wish to handle the property and that it might be left with the mother. The sole ground upon which he applied to be made guardian of this minor was that the mother's brother was denying his right to be guardian. The object, therefore, of his application is not the welfare of the minor but the vindication of his own rights to be a guardian. The minor's father died six years ago. The minor arrived at the age of seven years some three years ago. It is an admitted fact that the mother has always taken care of her children. The respondent Makka, the grandfather, has not taken any steps to benefit the minor all these years. Admittedly there are two religious factions in this caste; the mother belongs to one, while the respondent belongs to the other. It appears to us that this is probably the cause of the application. We cannot see that it is for the benefit and welfare of the minor that a child of his years should be taken from his mother against whose character no allegations whatsoever have been made. The circumstances are such that in our opinion there is no necessity whatsoever to appoint any guardian. The mother is quite capable of looking after her own children. We, therefore, think that the order of the Court below is not based on good grounds. We allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Court below. There is no necessity whatsoever in the present case for the appointment of any guardian. The appellant will have her costs from the respondent in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Those portions of a wajib-ul-arz that refer to custom are not provisions intended to enure for the duration of the settlement only but are statements that a certain custom exists. [p. 423, col. 2.]

There is a presumption as to the correctness of such entries in a wajib-ul-arz, but though such entries are evidence, the presumption as to their correctness is a rebuttable one. [p. 423, col. 2.]

The riwaj-i-am carries with it a certain presumption of correctness, but the presumption is rebuttable and when positive instances are given, the riwaj-i-am cannot be regarded as overriding them. [p. 424, col. 1.]

In the case of self-acquired property the general custom is that daughters are preferred to collaterals. [p. 424, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the entries in the wajib-ul-arz do not distinctly state that they relate to self-acquired property as well as ancestral, they should be read as merely referring to ancestral property. [p. 424, col. 2.]

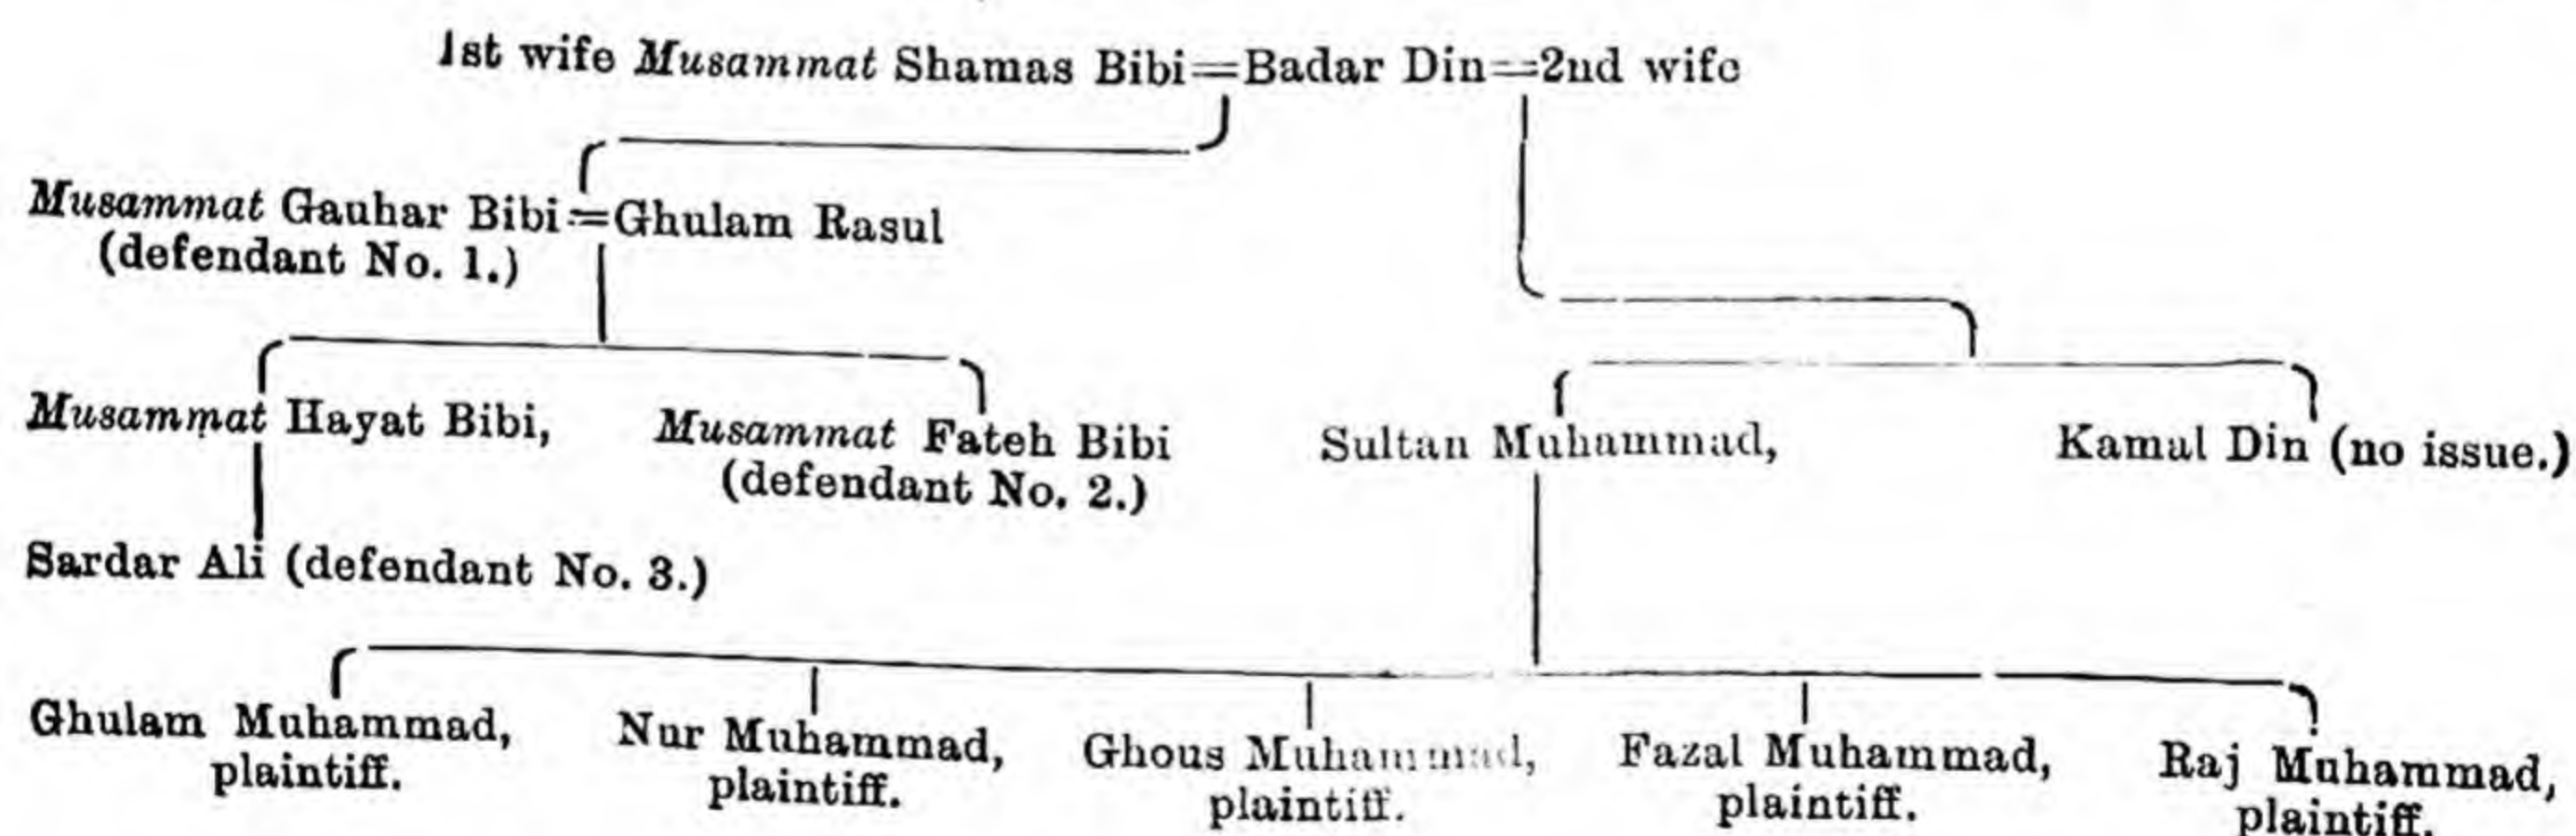

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Shahpur, dated the 2nd December 1913.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Sheikh Niaz Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

BROADWAY, J.—The following pedigree table will assist in understanding this case:—

On the 19th of April 1913 Musammât Gauhar Bibi widow of Ghulam Rasul executed a deed of gift in favour of her daughter Musammât Fateh Bibi and her grandson Sardar Ali, making over to them her deceased husband's estates in the villages of Barj Ghulam Rasul, Bharat, and Miana Hazara. On the 2nd of May 1913 Ghulam Muhammad and his brothers instituted the present suit, alleging that the property conveyed under the deed of gift was ancestral with the exception of 1/4th of Sailanwala well and 1/2 of Kadharanwala well which was acquired by Ghulam Rasul, and that Musammât Gauhar Bibi had no power to make the gift. It was prayed that the plaintiffs be granted a decree, declaring that the said deed of gift was null and void and would not affect their reversionary rights on the death or remarriage of Musammât Gauhar Bibi. The defend.

ants denied the right of the plaintiffs and pleaded, inter alia, (1) that the entire property in suit was acquired by Ghulam Rasul and was not ancestral;

(2) that the plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed to the property in the presence of the donees, who were the rightful heirs;

(3) that on the death of Ghulam Rasul his mother Shamas Bibi had taken possession of the property and held it adversely for 13 years and that on her death it had devolved on Musammât Gauhar Bibi.

It was admitted that the parties were bound by agricultural custom in matters of succession, and alleged that by custom as well as by their personal law daughters succeeded to the acquired property of their father in preference to collaterals (page 570, paper book).

On the pleadings the following issues were settled:—

(1) Is the property in suit other than $\frac{1}{4}$ th of Sailanwala well and of $\frac{1}{2}$ Kadhranwala well ancestral?

(2) Are not the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (donees) next heirs if the property is not ancestral?

(3) If the property in suit is ancestral, had not Gauhar Bibi any right to make a gift of it to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3?

(4) Are the defendants Nos. 2 to 3 estopped from raising any such plea in view of the judgment, dated the 5th May 1903, by Mian Abdul Hamid?

(5) Was Musammât Shamas Bibi in adverse possession of the land in suit after the death of Ghulam Rasul and did she acquire full proprietary rights?

(6) If so, how does it affect the case?

The findings as to Issues Nos. 5 and 6 were that though the land had been mutated in favour of Musammât Shamas Bibi on the death of Ghulam Rasul, she had not been proved to have acquired full proprietary rights.

As to Issue No. 4 it was held that the defendants were not estopped from raising the pleas in question.

On Issues Nos. 2 and 3 it was found that daughters succeeded to their father's acquired property in preference to collaterals and that Musammât Gauhar Bibi had the power to make the gift so far as that was concerned, but that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed to the ancestral property,

In deciding Issue No. 1 the property in each of the three villages was dealt with separately and it was held:—

(a) that the land in Burj Ghulam Rasul and Bharat was the self-acquired property of Ghulam Rasul;

(b) that the property in Miana Hazara consisted of (i) Sailab land, (ii) land attached to the wells Sailanwala and Kadhranwala and the Jhalar, (iii) house and that one-fourth of well Kadhranwala land and 278 bighas 1 kanal of Sailab land were ancestral and the rest acquired.

The plaintiffs were, therefore, granted a decree declaring that the said deed of gift executed by Musammât Gauhar Bibi "shall not affect their reversionary rights after her death or re-marriage re $\frac{1}{4}$ th of Kadhranwala well and 278 bighas 1 kanal of land situate in Miana Hazara as claimed."

Against this decree both sides have preferred appeals which will be disposed of by this judgment.

The plaintiffs in their appeal claim that the whole of the property left by Ghulam Rasul was ancestral, while the defendants in their appeal attack the findings as to the property decreed.

It will be as well to consider first the nature of the properties in the three villages and to decide whether they are self acquired or ancestral.

A. Burj Ghulam Rasul.

Mr. Nanak Chand for the plaintiffs-appellants contended that the finding of the trial Court that this property was self-acquired was erroneous.

Exhibit P. 38 (pages 50-51 of printed book) shows that in 1891-92 and in 1908-09 the lands in the village were held jointly by Musammât Gauhar Bibi and the descendants of Badr Din by his second wife, Musammât Gauhar Bibi holding half. As the rule of descent is said to be chundawand, she would have held half whether the property was ancestral or self-acquired. It is common ground that Ghulam Rasul and his father Badr Din separated somewhere about the year 1838. From the Revenue Records of 1853 it appears that the lands in the village were jointly held by Ghulam Rasul and his half brothers, Ghulam Rasul holding a half share (see Exhibit P. 24, page 32, printed book). It is, therefore, stated that some 19 years previously Maharajah Ranjit Singh had found the "Bela" lying waste and granted a snad for the foundation of the village.

There was litigation in connection with this village in 1855, Jodh Singh and others bringing a claim against both Ghulam Rasul and Badr Din, alleging that they had wrongfully taken possession of the lands. This was ultimately decided in favour of Badr Din and Ghulam Rasul, but in the course of the proceedings Badr Din made a statement, Exhibit P. 7, page 12, printed book, in which he supported the entry relating to Maharajah Ranjit Singh.

In 1856 and again in 1859, Exhibit D. 1, page 369 and Exhibit D. 2, page 370, printed book, show that Ghulam Rasul was looking after the land and the revenue was settled with him. To the same effect are Exhibit D. 6, page 374, Exhibit D. 9, page 379, and Exhibit D. 10, page 379, while Exhibit D. 3, page 371, Exhibit D. 4, page 371, and Exhibit D. 5, page 373, show that the same was the case even before 1853.

In the litigation started by Jodh Singh and others it was definitely alleged that Ghulam Rasul and Badr Din had forcibly taken possession of the land in suit, see Exhibit D. 15, page 383, and the claims were finally withdrawn or at any rate settled in 1859; see Exhibit D. 17, page 385, printed book.

In 1859 the pedigree table for the village shows that Badr Din and Ghulam Rasul are entered side by side as founders of the village, see Exhibit D. 7, page 375, and in the same year 200 bighas of land that had emerged from the river were entered as the property of Ghulam Rasul, see Exhibit D. 13, page 381, printed book.

Taking all these circumstances into consideration there seems to be no doubt that this village was founded by Badr Din and Ghulam Rasul jointly and that Ghulam Rasul's share cannot be regarded as ancestral qua the plaintiffs.

B. Bharat.

While Mr. Nanak Chand attacks the finding of the trial Court with regard to this village, Mr. Sheo Narain for the defendants-respondents contends that the whole of the village was acquired solely by Ghulam Rasul, who out of deference to his father allowed Badr Din's name to be entered as owner of half in 1859.

From Exhibit P. 6, pages 10 and 11, printed book, it appears that this village was originally founded by Jodh Singh during the regime of Wazir Ratno. He was unable to meet the revenue demands and left the lands. Badr Din applied to the British Government for a lease of the village. This was granted and Badr Din became a lease-holder with the proviso that should any one come forward with a claim within 12 years, that person would be given possession otherwise the lease would continue.

In 1857 Badr Din's name is entered in the proprietors column (page 366, printed book) and in 1859 he and Ghulam Rasul are entered as joint owners in equal shares. Badr Din was, however, merely a lease-holder in 1853: see Exhibit P. 23, page 31, printed book.

On the 3rd January 1854 Badr Din filed an application, Exhibit D. 21, page 435, printed book, pointing out that he had suffered losses and asking for a remission.

A year later on the 4th January 1855 the application was treated as one for permission to resign the lease and sanction was accorded to his resignation, Exhibit D. 22, pages 435-436, printed book.

On the 3rd May 1859 Ghulam Rasul filed an application asking that the revenue for the village might be fixed, Exhibit D. 25, page 438.

On the 28th June 1859 orders were passed assigning the revenue to Ghulam Rasul, Exhibits D. 26 and D. 27, page 439, and Ghulam Rasul was directed to file the necessary application which he did on the 8th August 1859, Exhibit D. 29, page 441, and formal orders were passed on the 15th August 1859, Exhibit D. 28, page 440.

It is on these facts that Mr. Sheo Narain contends that the village was acquired by Ghulam Rasul after Badr Din had given it up. Badr Din and Ghulam Rasul, however, both signed an agreement relating to the duties of lambardars in connection with the village on the 16th July 1859, Exhibit D. 98, page 556, and on the 28th April 1853 Ghulam

GHULAM MUHAMMAD v. GAUHAR BIBI.

Rasul had applied in his own name for the fixing of the revenue, page 606. In these circumstances it appears that father and son were acting in conjunction and that though the land was finally leased to Ghulam Rasul it was for the benefit of both. It seems clear, however, that it was acquired as much by Ghulam Rasul as by his father and that it cannot be regarded as ancestral qua the plaintiffs. This is strengthened by Exhibit D. 31, page 443, in which father and son are shown as joint acquirers.

Before dealing with the remaining village it will be as well to dispose of a contention advanced by Mr. Nanak Chand. The learned Counsel referred to Exhibit P. T and Exhibit P. J at pages 347 and 364 respectively. These are duplicates of the same document which was executed by Badr Din on the 23rd May 1863 and was signed by all his sons in token of agreement.

This document was executed a few days before Badr Din's death and contains an inventory of his estate. It recites the fact that he had already partitioned his property, giving Ghulam Rasul his full share and retaining the rest in his own name. What had been given to Ghulam Rasul is detailed as also is what Badr Din still held. This portion he declares to belong to his sons by the second wife. From this Mr. Nanak Chand contended that Ghulam Rasul by signing had admitted that the property was joint up to 1863 and that he, therefore, must be held to have inherited his share from his father.

Now as to this it is evident that as far back as 1853 it had been recorded that Ghulam Rasul had been separated from his father for a considerable period. In 1863 Badr Din was practically on his death-bed when this document was drawn up. Ghulam Rasul had undoubtedly been largely instrumental in acquiring the lands in Burj Ghulam Rasul and Bharat. His share had been duly entered up in all the property and he was in possession of the same. The family was, as far as is known, on good terms and there is force in Mr. Sheo Narain's contention that Ghulam Rasul, having acquired his share of the two villages along with his father and being well off, did not care or wish to create any difficulties.

His signing this document cannot be regarded as any such admission as is contended for by Mr. Nanak Chand. Indeed the document itself recites the fact that the partition had taken place long before, so that, even at that date, it is clear that Ghulam Rasul was entirely separate from the rest of the family. Doubtless any claim by him to share in the property left by Badr Din might have been met by his assent to this document, but no such claim has at any time been made.

It is thus clear that these two villages must be regarded as the self-acquired property of Ghulam Rasul.

O. Miana Hazara.

This village is the original home of the parties and the property in it consists of:—

- (i) Sailab land;
- (ii) land attached to wells Sailanwala and Kadhranwala and the Jhalar;
- (iii) house.

As held above, Gulam Rasul cannot be bound by any admission by his signing Exhibit P. T or allowing his half brothers to take the property left by Badr Din, and it is clear that Badr Din partitioned the property in this village, giving half to Ghulam Rasul and retaining the other half himself.

According to the Revenue Records the rule of succession in this village was "pagwand," but Badr Din deliberately departed from this rule and gave half to Ghulam Rasul. This is borne out by Exhibit P. 39, page 92, printed book (November 1859); Exhibit P. 31 and Exhibit P. 29, pages 357 to 363, printed book (1863).

Admittedly the Sailanwala lands were acquired by Ghulam Rasul. So far as the Kadhranwala well is concerned, half of it is admittedly Ghulam Rasul's acquired property. This well is not mentioned in Exhibit P. T and while Mr. Nanak Chand claims that the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in Amir Shahwala well was exchanged for a $\frac{1}{2}$ share in Kadhranwala, Mr. Sheo Narain points to Exhibit D. 44, dated 2nd April 1860, page 453, printed book, and Exhibit D-37 (1859) page 451, printed book, and contends that the former shows that $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of the well and not $\frac{1}{2}$ was purchased by Ghulam Rasul, while the latter shows him in possession of the whole.

No deed of exchange has been produced and the exchange has not been proved and it would, therefore, seem that Badr Din's connection with the well has not been made out and the whole well should be regarded as having been acquired by Ghulam Rasul.

The Jhalar land, however, has not been shown to have been so acquired and may be regarded as ancestral. The Sailab land seems to be on the same footing, Exhibit D. 41, page 460 (1859). Regarding the house there is certainly no definite evidence as to its being ancestral and as Exhibit D. 40, page 458, printed book, shows separate possession, the trial Court's finding should be upheld.

On the findings it follows that the lands in the villages of Burj Ghulam Rasul and Bharat in their entirety, and the Sailanwala and Kadhwanwala wells and the house in Miana Hazara must be regarded as self-acquired, leaving an area of 702 bighas 1 kanal as ancestral, deducting from the total area of 832 bighas 3 kanals the Sailanwala land, 19 bighas 2 kanals, and the Kadhwanwala land, 111 bighas, or 130 bighas 2 kanals. Mr. Nanak Chand, however, contended that whether the property was ancestral or self-acquired collaterals excluded daughters.

Mr. Sheo Narain on the other hand urged that when a father divides his property in his lifetime among his sons, whether the division is on any particular system or merely arbitrary, the heirs in one group so formed must be exhausted before the members of the other group or groups can succeed [Kaila Singh v. Tahal Singh (1)].

Therefore, he argued, if the daughters are heirs to their fathers' property, the gift by Musammal Gauhar Bibi merely accelerated the succession and the plaintiffs, not being the heirs, could not sue. So far as the self-acquired property is concerned this is no doubt correct, but ancestral property does not necessarily cease to be ancestral, nor become self-acquired or non-ancestral, on partition. The question, therefore, is whether the daughters are the heirs of Ghulam Rasul.

As to this Mr. Nanak Chand referred to the wajib-ul-arz of Miana Hazara (1859) Exhibit P. 39, page 92, Printed Book, in paragraph 5 of which it is declared that the rule of descent is pagwand and that daughters did not succeed. Badr Din, however, had it entered that he had given Ghulam Rasul half of his property and that his other sons would succeed to the property held by him at this death, thus departing from the ordinary rule. The entries in the Revenue Records of the other two villages Burj Ghulam Rasul and Bharat are to the same effect; see Exhibit P. 22, page 29, printed book, and Exhibit P. 21, page 28, printed book, which both relate to 1859.

Those portions of a wajib-ul-arz that refer to custom are not provisions intended to enure for the duration of the settlement only, but are statements that a certain custom exists [see Rahiman v. Bala (2), Master v. Pohlo (3)]. There is also a certain presumption as to the correctness of such entries as held in Dilsukh Ram v. Nathu Singh (4), Dakas Khan v. Ghulam Kasim Khan (5), Digambar Singh v. Ahmed Sayeed Khan (6), Aulia v. Alu (7), Ahmad Shah v. Khuda Bakhsh (8), Maha Ram v. Ram Mohar (9) and Muhammad Faiyaz Ali Khan v. Behari (10) but, though such entries are evidence, the presumption as to their correctness is a rebuttable one.

Mr. Nanak Chand then referred to Wilson's Tribal Custom in the Shahpur District, pages 46, 48 and 49, and contended that Badr Din and his family being khokars, the customs referred to by Mr. Wilson applied to them and were conclusive.

Badr Din is shown in Exhibit P. 23, page 31, printed book, as a "Sipra" khokar, but this is the only instance of his being so described, and having regard to Ibbetson's Punjab Ethnography (paragraphs 468-469), the Census Report, 1901, Table XIII, page XCII, the Census Report, 1911, page 464, and the Shahpur Gazetteer, 1917, page 85, note, it is by no means certain that "Sipras" are a sub-section of khokars. They would, of course, be included in the Miscellaneous Muhammadan Tribes. Wilson's Tribal Custom is no doubt a work of considerable authority, but it cannot be regarded in the present case as finally settling the point in issue.

The riwaj-i-am also carries with it a certain presumption of correctness, as has been repeatedly held in decisions such as Umar v. Musammât Sahib Khatun (11), Ali Muhammad v. Dulla (12), Sheran v. Musammât Sharman (13), Mehr Khan v. Karam Ilahi (14), Sher v. Alam Sher (15), Beg v. Allah Ditta (16) and Saide Khan v. Musammât Amir-un-nissa (17) which it is not necessary to discuss in detail.

These presumptions are also, however, rebuttable and the trend of the decisions cited by Mr. Sheo Narain, viz., Nidhu v. Ram Singh (18), Zainab Bibi v. Bader-ud din (19), Lelu v. Ram Chand (20), Ohuttan v. Hazori Lal (21), Budhi Parkash v. Chander Bhan (22), seems to be that when positive instances are given, the riwaj-i-am cannot be regarded as overriding them. In the case of self-acquired property the general custom is that daughters are preferred to collaterals: Article 23 (2), Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law. In the present case the entries in the wajib-ul-arz of these villages do not distinctly state that they relate to self-acquired property as well as ancestral and in Civil Appeal No. 665 of 1905 printed at page 498, printed book, it was held by a Division Bench of the Chief Court that similar entries should be read as referring merely to ancestral property. There is no reason to doubt the correctness of this dictum, nor does the answer to question 17, page 49, of Wilson's Tribal Custom militate against it.

It is then for the plaintiffs to show that collaterals exclude daughters and this they have not done, while as pointed out by the trial Court, various specific instances have been given by the other side, which afford good evidence in rebuttal of the entries in the wajib-ul-arz and the riwaj-i-am. Qua ancestral land, however, the general custom is against daughters succeeding and the instances referred to do not assist the defendants so far as the ancestral land is concerned and the wajib-ul-arz and riwaj-i-am, standing unrebutted as they do, must be given effect to. I would, therefore, vary the decree of the Court below so as to grant the plaintiffs a decree, as prayed declaring that the deed of gift executed by Musammât Gaubar Bibi shall not affect their reversionary right, on her death or re-marriage, in 702 bighas 1 kanal of land situate in village Miana Hazara and now in suit. The claim relating to the other properties I would dismiss, leaving the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

PETMAN, J.—I agree.

Decree varied.

judicata—Promissory note, suit on—Dismissal for default—Suit, subsequent, on original cause of action, maintainability of.

Plaintiff sued to recover a sum of money advanced on a promissory note. The suit was dismissed in consequence of his failure to put in an appearance. An application to reinstate the suit was dismissed, as also an appeal against the order dismissing the application. He then instituted a fresh suit to recover the same sum of money on the basis of entries in his account book, and alleged that the promissory note was null and void and ineffective and that he was entitled to recover the sum in lieu of which the promissory note had been executed.

Held, that the suit must fail, as the plaintiff's cause of action was one and indivisible, and the fact that the transaction was recorded in his account book did not give him another or different cause of action. It is only where a promissory note is invalid owing to some inherent defect therein, that the party suing thereon is entitled to fall back upon an action for money had and received to his use, and not where, as in this case, the previous suit was dismissed in default of plaintiff's appearance. [p. 425, col. 2.]

First appeal from the order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 29th January 1919.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, Mr. Haribans Sahai and Pandit Lakshmi Narain Tewari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of the following circumstances. Baijnath Prasad, the plaintiff, sued the defendants in the Court of the Munsif of Allahabad in Suit No. 633 of 1916. In that suit he stated in the first paragraph of his plaint that the defendants, after borrowing Rs. 575 by means of a promissory note on the 26th of April 1916 at Allahabad, promised to pay on demand. The cause of action arose at Allahabad on the 26th of April 1916, the date on which the promissory note was executed. The suit was dismissed under the provisions of Order IX, rule 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, that is to say, the plaintiff did not appear and the defendants, who appeared, denied the claim. Subsequently the plaintiff applied to have the suit reinstated, but the application was dismissed on the 28th of April 1917 and an appeal from that order of dismissal was also rejected. Subsequently he brought this Suit No. 78 of 1918 in the same Court.

In the first paragraph of his plaint he stated as follows:—"On Baijakh Badi 9th, Sambat 1973, corresponding to the 26th April 1916, the defendants borrowed at Allahabad from the plaintiff Rs. 575 bearing interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem as per entries made in the account book, a copy of which is annexed hereto, and executed a promissory note in lieu thereof." Then after describing the failure of his first suit he proceeded to state in paragraph No. 4 as follows:—"No suit can be instituted on the basis of the said promissory note payable on demand. It is altogether null and void and ineffectual, but the plaintiff is entitled to realise the principal amount due to him in lieu of which the promissory note aforesaid was executed." The cause of action for this suit arose on the 26th of April 1916.

From these recitals it is quite clear that what happened was this:—The defendants asked the plaintiff for a loan. The plaintiff agreed to give it on the defendants executing a promissory note for the said amount, and on execution of it the plaintiff gave the defendants the money. The defendants failed to repay it. The plaintiff sued to recover the amount then due. The recital of the above facts constitutes the plaintiff's cause of action, which seems to us to be one and indivisible. We do not see how the fact that the plaintiff recorded the transaction in his account book or private diary can give him another or a different cause of action. The plaintiff sued to recover the amount due and his suit was dismissed. It was not dismissed because of any inherent defect in the promissory note itself, but it was dismissed because the plaintiff failed to put in an appearance. Therefore, it is inaccurate to say, as was said by the plaintiff in paragraph No. 4 of his plaint, that the promissory note is altogether null and void and ineffectual. It is a perfectly good promissory note, and this is not one of those cases in which the Courts have held that where a promissory note is invalid and amounts really to nothing more than a piece of waste paper, the plaintiff can fall back upon an action for money had and received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use on the ground that there is a total failure of the consideration by reason of the invalidity of the promissory note. It seems that what we have said above is really the law as laid down in the case on which the learned Subordinate Judge relied, that is to say, Baij Nath Das v. Salig Ram (1). The facts of this case are distinguishable from the numerous cases which have been referred to in argument before us. The result is that we allow the appeal and setting aside the order of remand of the learned Subordinate Judge, restore the order of the Munsif with costs, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

EXECUTION OF DECREE APPEAL No. 3 OF 1919.
January 30, 1919.

KALKA SINGH—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—

GUR SARAN LAL—DECREE-HOLDER—
RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15, Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182—Execution of decree—Application, dismissal of, for want of bidders—Application, subsequent, presented more than three years after dismissal of previous application—Limitation.

Where no obstacle, actual or resulting, is imposed upon the execution of a decree by the Court executing the decree or by a Court before which an appeal from an order passed in the execution proceeding is pending or by the Court before which a suit or appeal to contest the validity of the decree or the order passed in execution is awaiting trial, there is nothing to stop the running of limitation either under Article 181 or under Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 427, col. 2.]

The dismissal of an application for execution for no fault of the decree-holder is a mere direction to the officers of the Court to remove the application from the pending list, but the decree-holder's right to apply for its revival accrues from day to day and will be barred if no application is made for the purpose before three years have elapsed from the date when such proceedings were closed in fact or struck off. [p. 427, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Second Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 30th November 1918, upholding that of the Munsif, North Lucknow, dated the 30th August 1918.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this case is whether a certain application for execution is barred by time. On the 10th August 1907 a decree absolute for sale was obtained by the decree-holder-respondent and another person named Ram Narain. Various efforts were made to execute that decree but without any success. It is only necessary to refer to two applications for execution. One was made on the 25th January 1911 which was struck off on the 31st October 1911, in consequence of the fact that no person was willing to bid for the property mortgaged and the decree-holder was unable to take any further steps to proceed with the execution. The reason why no person was willing to purchase the property was that a suit had been filed by Dhir Singh and some other persons contesting the enforceability of the mortgage, on the ground that the mortgagor had only a life-interest in the property mortgaged and that that life-interest had expired with the death of the mortgagor. The interest claimed by Dhir Singh and those who joined with him in the suit was that of persons entitled to succeed to the property on the expiry of the life estate. That suit was dismissed on the 15th March 1912. An appeal filed from that decree was dismissed on the 15th March 1913. On the 24th July 1913 a fresh application for execution was made by the decree-holder for the sale of the mortgaged property, but it was not properly prosecuted and was eventually struck off for default on the 15th November 1913.

Meanwhile Dhir Singh and his companions filed a second appeal in this Court, which was dismissed on the 13th July 1915. On the 5th July 1918 the present application for execution was filed. It is within three years from the date when the appeal filed by Dhir Singh and his companions was decided but beyond three years from the date when the preceding application for execution was struck off for default.

The Courts below have allowed the execution to proceed, treating the present application as being within time. It would undoubtedly have been so, had the application been filed within three years from the date on which the previous application for execution was struck off. In Qamar ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that an application for execution made to revive and carry through a pending execution, suspended by no act or default of the decree-holder, was not governed by Article 179 of Act XV of 1887, which has now been replaced by Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908). It does not, however, follow that there is no limitation applicable to an application for such a revival. Where an execution has been stayed by an injunction or other order, section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act provides that the period during which such injunction or order was in force shall be excluded in computing the period of limitation applicable to an application for execution. The injunction or order aforesaid might be passed in the execution proceeding itself by the Court executing the decree or by a higher Court on appeal either from the decree under execution or from the order passed in the execution proceeding, or it may be passed in a suit or appeal to contest the validity of the decree under execution or the order passed in execution thereof. Where in such an appeal, suit or other proceeding arising therefrom an order has been passed prejudicial to the decree-holder and such an order operates as an express or resulting impediment to the execution in whole or in part, the decree-holder is entitled to wait till he succeeds in getting that order discharged. In Qamar ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (1) such an order had been passed on an appeal from an order passed in the execution proceeding and the right of the decree-holder to apply for execution was in consequence suspended. In Sheikh Mahomed v. William Alfred Thomas (2) and Muhammad Nabi Reza v. William Alfred Thomas (3) the progress of the execution was similarly interrupted on account of the appeals filed by the judgment debtor from the orders passed in the execution proceeding. The decisions in Rungiah Gounden

& Co. v. Nanjappa Row (4) and Ruddar Singh v. Dhanpal Singh (5) afford instances of cases where the execution was stayed by an express order. In Gurudeo Narayan Sinha v. Amrit Narayan Sinha (6) the interruption was partial. In all these cases, the decree-holder was held entitled to execute the decree as soon as the interruption was removed.¹

These considerations do not, however, apply where no such obstacle has been imposed either by the Court executing the decree or by a Court before which an appeal from an order passed in the execution proceeding is pending or by the Court before which a suit or appeal to contest the validity of the decree or the order passed in execution is awaiting trial. Where there is no such obstacle, actual or resulting, there is nothing to stop the running of limitation, which will be governed by Article 181 or 182 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), whichever may be applicable. As pointed out in Chalavadi Kotiah v. Poloori Alimelammah (7), the dismissal of an application for execution without notice to the parties and for no fault of the decree-holder is a mere direction to the officers of the Court to remove the application from the pending list; but the decree-holder's right to apply for its revival accrues from day to day and will be barred if no application is made for the purpose before three years have elapsed from the date when such proceedings were closed in fact or struck off.

On behalf of the decree-holder-respondent reliance is placed on the decision in Ganga Prasad v. Jwala Prasad (8) and Kaniz Zohra v. Syam Kisen (9). In the former case the order removing the case from the file on an application being made by the judgment debtor for time to comply with the decree was treated as an order staying the proceedings. In the latter case the application for revival was made within three years from the date when the previous application for execution was struck off. The suit filed by Dhir Singh and his companions to contest the enforceability of the mortgage having been dismissed by the

A suit in the nature of a Small Cause instituted in the Court of a Munsif not invested with Small Cause Court powers and registered as an ordinary suit was tried as an ordinary suit by a Munsif who possessed Small Cause Court powers. On revision before the High Court it was contended that the decision of the Munsif ought to be regarded as a decision of a Small Cause Court and that it was not open to appeal:

Held, that under section 32 (2) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the Munsif who finally dealt with the case was bound to try it as a regular suit and the procedure adopted by him was perfectly correct, and that, consequently, his decree was not a final decree. [p 429, col. 1.]

Civil revision against the order of the Sessions and Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 27th of February 1919.

Mr. K. O. Mithal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—I have listened to the arguments in this case and have made up my mind that the application should be dismissed. I may say at once that the case being a case under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, I should not be disposed to interfere unless the law obliges me to. The suit was a suit for Rs. 47 4 0. It was tried in the Court of a Munsif, who admittedly was possessed of Small Cause Court powers up to a limit of Rs. 50. The Munsif, however, tried the suit as a regular suit and gave a decree in favour of the defendants. The plaintiff appealed and the appeal was heard by the Subordinate Judge of Mirzapur. He reversed the decision of the Court below and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff. Now we have this application in revision, in which it is contended on behalf of the defendants that no appeal lay to the Court below and that the order of the Subordinate Judge is void as having been passed without jurisdiction. The way the case was put on behalf of the petitioners is this. It is said that the suit as framed was a suit exclusively cognisable by a Court of Small Causes and that the Munsif who decided the case being a Munsif invested with the powers of the Small Cause Court it ought to be taken that his decision was the decision of a Court of Small Causes and was not, therefore, open to appeal. I take it as admitted that the suit was a suit ordinarily cognisable by a Court of Small Causes and that to this extent the case put forward by the petitioners is correct. Even then I should not be disposed to interfere in these proceedings in view of the fact that the case has been fully tried out and has not been disposed of in the summary way in which Small Cause Court cases are usually dealt with. The learned Counsel for the petitioners, however, referred me to a judgment of this Court which is to be found reported as Abdul Majid v. Bedyadhar Saran Das (1). That case follows a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court reported as Kollipara Seetpaty v. Kankipaty Subbaya (2). The view taken in this latter case was that where a small cause suit is tried by a Munsif on the original side and his decision is reversed in appeal by the Subordinate Court, the High Court is bound to set aside the decree in appeal as having been passed without jurisdiction.

The learned Counsel for the opposite party, however, has been able, in my opinion, to put a different complexion on the facts and after some argument it has been admitted before me that the statements of fact made by the learned Counsel for the opposite party are correct. It seems that this suit was filed on the 6th of August 1918 and it was filed in the Court of the Munsif of Mirzapur. At that time the permanent incumbent had gone on leave and there was officiating in his place one Mr. Charu Chandar, who admittedly was not invested with the powers of a Small Cause Court Judge. The case was instituted in his Court and was necessarily registered as an ordinary suit. The case came on for trial in the month of November 1918. By that time Mr. Raj Rajeshwar Sahai, the permanent Munsif, had returned from leave. It is not disputed that this gentleman was invested at that time with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes up to the pecuniary limit of Rs. 50. Mr. Raj Rajeshwar Sahai, as I have said, tried the case as an ordinary suit and, in my opinion, that was the proper course for him to adopt. The suit was filed while his locum tenens who was not invested with the Small Cause Court powers was carrying on, and consequently, under the provisions of section 32, sub-section (2) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, I think it was the duty of the Munsif who finally dealt with the case to try the case as a regular suit. If any authority on this proposition is required, it will be found in a ruling of this Court which appears to me to be exactly in point. That is the decision of a single Judge of this Court reported as Jagmohan Lal v. Lakha (3). I cannot distinguish the facts of that case from the facts of the case before me. Apart from this authority of this Court there are at least three other cases which support this view. One of these is to be found reported as Mahima Chandra Sirdar v. Kali Mondol (4), another case is Hari Kamayya v.

Hari Venkayya (5) and another Sambhu v. Ram Vithu (6). It seems to me, therefore, that it is not any longer possible to contend that there was any irregularity in the trial of the first Court. On the contrary the procedure of the Munsif was perfectly correct and if he tried the suit out as a regular suit and did not exercise his powers in this particular instance as a Court of Small Causes, it follows that the petitioners here are not entitled to argue that the decree of the first Court was a final decree as provided by section 27 of Act IX of 1887. On the authorities to which I have referred an appeal certainly lay to the District Judge and the result, therefore, is that I hold that there was no want of jurisdiction in the Court below to hear the appeal. The application fails and is dismissed with costs to the opposite party.

Application dismissed.

KUNJA BEHARI ROY v. PANCHANON SIKDAR.

FACTS.—One Panchanon Sikdar obtained a decree for Rs. 400 against Kunja Behary Roy and another in the Court of Small Causes at Khulna and in execution of the said decree applied for attachment of two plots of land one forming the homestead and the other forming an agricultural holding of the said Kunja Behary Roy and another the judgment debtors. On the judgment-debtors objecting to the attachment on the ground that the said two plots of land formed their non-transferable occupancy holding the decree-holder withdrew the attachment with respect to the plot of agricultural holding but continued his execution with respect to the homestead land. The matter coming on for trial, the Courts below allowed attachment of the said land. The Court of appeal below held that "the evidence shows that the property in question is the homestead of the debtors and that no agricultural land is attached to the jama. Therefore, the case is governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act," and affirmed the decision of the Court of first instance. The judgment-debtors filed this second appeal against the said judgment.

Babu Gopal Ohandra Das, for the Respondents, took a preliminary objection as to the competency of the appeal. The suit out of which these execution proceedings have arisen is a suit of the nature of small causes and being valued under Rs. 500 is not appealable. The execution proceedings, therefore, are also not appealable. Cited Peary Lal Singh v. Radha Nath Singh (1).

Babu Nalin Ohandra Pal, for the Appellant.—Section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates the case of a suit, and the present appeal having arisen out of execution proceedings under section 47 the appeal is competent.

On the merits, my submission is that the judgment of the Court of appeal below is wrong in law because in view of section 182, Bengal Tenancy Act, homestead land of a Raiyat is governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and not by the Transfer of Property Act, even though it does not form part and parcel of any of his agricultural holding. The real test is whether the tenant of the homestead land is a Raiyat of the village in which the said land is situate. See Kripa Nath Ohakravarti v. Seikh Anu (2), Golam Mowla v. Abdool Sowar Mondul (3), Krishna Kanta Ghosh v. Jadu Kasya (4), Harihar Ohattopadhyaya v. Dinu Bera (5), Dina Nath Nag v. Sashi Mohan Day Tarafdar (6). The incidents of an occupancy holding, the chief of which is non-transferability, are therefore, applicable in the case. That the judgment-debtor is a Raiyat of the village in which the homestead land is situate is admitted in this case, because the agricultural holding in respect of which the decree-holder has withdrawn his attachment on the objection of the judgment-debtor is adjacent to the homestead land though not attached to it and is within the same village. The withdrawal of the attachment does certainly amount to an admission that the judgment-debtor holds the agricultural holding as a non-transferable occupancy Raiyat. The learned Judge below has, moreover, placed the entire onus upon the judgment-debtors and therein he has erred. Prima facie, the debtors being, as they are, Raiyat of the village in which the agricultural holding is situate, the presumption of non-transferability should have been raised in their favour and the burden of proving that the said land is transferable or is governed by the Transfer of Property Act should have been placed upon the decree-holder.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case cannot be distinguished from those in the case of Peary Lal Singha v. Radha Nath Singha (1). We must, therefore, hold that no appeal lies in this case. The case is not one which would justify us in interfering in the exercise of our revisional powers.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Interest Act (XXXII of 1839), s. 1—Sale of goods—Vendor, whether entitled to interest on price of goods—Agreement to pay interest, absence of—Notice to claim interest, failure to give, effect of.

In the absence of any agreement to pay interest upon a particular transaction, or of any notice of the creditor's intention to claim interest in case the debt is not discharged by a certain time, a claim for interest cannot be brought within the purview of the Interest Act and consequently cannot be decreed.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Benares.

Mr. S. P. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question to be discussed in this appeal relates to interest. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs to recover the price of goods supplied to the defendants. The claim as laid included a claim for interest at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem. One of the pleas raised in defence was that the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim interest as there had been no agreement for payment of the same. The Court of first instance, relying on the statement of one of the defence witnesses, thought that the plaintiffs were entitled to interest at the rate of 0 8.0 per cent. per mensem. In appeal the learned District Judge has refused the claim for interest. He has referred to the provisions of the Interest Act (XXXII of 1839), and says the plaintiffs have failed to bring their case within the purview of that Act. After hearing the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellants I think the Judge's view must be maintained. It is not pleaded here that there was any written instrument containing an agreement to pay interest, nor again was it claimed by the plaintiffs that they had given any notice to the defendants of their intention of claiming interest in case the debt was not discharged by a particular time. It is true as argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants, that there is a proviso to this enactment of 1839 whereby notwithstanding anything contained in the Act, interest is to be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law, the word now referring, of course, to the year 1839. The only piece of evidence to which I have been referred for the purpose of showing that this case falls within the proviso is the statement of one Kishen Das, the witness whose evidence was relied upon by the Court of first instance. He is a son-in-law of one of the defendants, and in his cross-examination stated as follows: "I purchased tar from the plaintiffs and paid interest at the rate of ten annas per cent." It would be difficult, in my opinion, to found on this statement an agreement to the effect that the present transaction is one in which interest is payable according to law. I think the decision of the Court below is correct. The appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs to the respondents.

SATISH CHANDRA V. NISHI CHANDRA DUTTA.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 166, 181—Execution of decree—Sale in execution—Application to set aside sale—Limitation applicable—Scope of Art. 166.

The scope of Article 166, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act is not limited to applications under Order XXI, rules 89, 90 and 91 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Article is perfectly general in its terms and refers to an application under the Code to set aside a sale in execution of a decree. [p. 432, col. 1.]

An application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree passed against the father of the applicant, on the ground that the property sold belongs to the applicant and not to his father, is governed by Article 166 and not by Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 432, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 13th August 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Patiya, dated the 5th May 1917.

Babu Kshitish Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Prabodh Kumar Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor against an order of the District Judge of Chittagong, holding that his application to set aside a sale was barred by limitation.

In the first place, it is doubtful whether any appeal lies; and the learned Pleader for the appellant has not been able to satisfy us on this point. He conceded that if the amount of the suit was below Rs. 500 there would be no second appeal, but as to that we have not been informed.

Turning to the merits of the application, it appears that a decree was passed in 1904 against the appellant's father. In 1911 his father died. In 1913, presumably in an application for execution, the appellant was substituted in the place of his father, who had died two years before. Attachment was levied on immoveable property in the hands of the appellant. The property was brought to sale on 12th November 1915. The application now before the Court was presented on the 8th November 1916—almost a year after. It is argued for the appellant that Article 181 of the Limitation Act applies, and not Article 166. There appears to be no good reason for limiting the scope of Article 166 to applications under Order XII, rules 89, 90 and 91 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Article is perfectly general in its terms and refers to an application "under the Code to set aside a sale in execution of a decree". We are referred by the appellant to the case of Ajo Koer v. Gorak Nath (1) and to another case in the same volume, Upendra Nath Kalamuri v. Kusun Kumari Das (2). But these were cases where application was made before and not, as here, after the sale. The policy of the Legislature appears to be that questions such as this arising in execution should be brought before the Courts and decided with the least possible delay. In this case no explanation is forthcoming why, if this property was really the property of the appellant, he did not immediately upon attachment prefer a claim under Order XXI, rules 58, of the Civil Procedure Code. Such a claim would have to be made without unnecessary delay, and a suit to establish his right, if the claim were refused, would have to be filed within a year. It is conceded that applications under Order XXI, rules 89, 90 or 91, must be filed within 30 days of the sale. Why, then, in a case like the present, where the appellant has been guilty of laches in bringing his case before the Court at all, should the law allow him three years to do so? In my opinion, Article 166 is applicable, and the application of the appellant should have been made within 30 days from the date of the sale. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

There is no second appeal in a suit of a small cause nature of value below Rs 50. An order of remand, therefore, in such a suit is not open to appeal. [p. 433, col 1.]

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Moradabad, dated the 9th December 1919.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is raised in this appeal that no second appeal lies. The facts are briefly as follows:—The plaintiff-respondent and the defendant-appellant with effect from the 1st of July 1914, that is the beginning of the year 1322 Fasli, were owners of two separate mahals in a village after a perfect partition had been effected. In the year 1322 Fasli the revenue of both these mahals fell into arrears. The plaintiff was forced to pay the revenue not only of his own mahal but also of the defendant's mahal to the extent of Rs. 127. He brought the present suit to recover their sum plus interest from the defendant in the Court of the Munsif.

The Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that no suit lay to recover the amount. The plaintiff appealed. The lower Appellate Court came to the opposite conclusion and remanded the suit for decision on the merits to the first Court. The defendant has come up here on appeal from this order of remand. Under Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (4), an order under rule 23 of Order XLI remanding a case is applicable where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court. It is contended and with force that in the present suit no second appeal would have lain from the decision of the Appellate Court because the suit is one of a small cause nature, the sum to be recovered being below Rs. 500. On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged that Article 39 or 40 of Schedule II of the Small Cause Courts Act would cover the suit. But with this we cannot possibly agree. The plaintiff did not pay the money in a representative capacity on behalf of the defendant, therefore, Article 39 cannot apply. Article 40 refers to a suit for profits and does not apply. Article 41 refers to a suit by a sharer in joint property, which is not the case here. It is clear that if any suit can lie, it does not fall under any of these articles and is really a suit of a Small Cause Court nature being for a sum below Rs. 500. Therefore, no second appeal would have lain from a decree of the Appellate Court and no appeal, therefore, lies from the order of remand. There are decisions on the point in the case of Nath Prasad v. Baij Nath (1) and the case of Qutub Husain v. Abul Hasan (2). The decision in the case of Tulsa Kunwar v. Jageshar Prasad (3) contains remarks which apply to the facts of this case. We have been asked to treat this case as a revision, but in view of the fact that the money was admittedly paid and has not been refunded we decline to do so. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 24th April 1917.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose, Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. N. Sen Gupta, Babus Ram Dayal Dey and Nerode Bandhu Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor, and the only point for our determination is whether the decree-holder's right to execute his decree is barred by limitation.

On 5th December 1910 the decree was passed by the Chief Court of Lower Burma for a sum of Rs. 5,000 and odd.

On 17th March 1913 that Court ordered notice to issue to the judgment-debtor under Order XXI, rule 22.

The notice was sent to Chittagong for service but was not served for want of an identifier.

On 23rd December 1913 the decree-holder applied to execute the decree but withdrew that application on 5th January 1914.

On 9th August 1915 he made a third application, on 29th September 1915 a fourth, and on 12th January 1916 the fifth and present application.

Of these notice of the last only was served on the judgment-debtor, who now comes in and pleads limitation.

The question is whether the application of 17th March 1913 saves limitation. It is argued for the appellant that it was not an application for execution, and that, if it can be so regarded, it was not "in accordance with law." The application was headed as "for execution" and was written in the tabular form prescribed by the Code for such an application. In stating "the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required" in column 10 it said "by notice to the defendant through the District Court of Chittagong to show cause, if any, why the decree should not be executed against him by arrest and imprisonment of his person or by attachment and sale of his movable and immovable properties".

I am disposed to think that it was an application for execution, though possibly loosely expressed. Although with regard to the attachment of property no particulars were given, it was explicit enough as to execution by arrest and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor. But it is not necessary to rest our decision on that ground, as the application was clearly to take a step-in-aid of execution. This was decided by a Bench of this Court in Gopal Ohunder Manna v. Gosain Das Kalay (1). There was a reference to a Full Bench in that case, but on another point which does not here arise. It was suggested that the change in the wording of section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which was made on its re-enactment as Order XXI, rule 22 would make that decision inapplicable to the present case. It is true that there has been a slight change and the rule now begins "where an application for execution is made," etc. But while the rule prescribes that in certain cases a notice shall issue, it does not forbid the issue of such a notice in cases where it is necessary but where no application for execution has in fact been made. It cannot, therefore, be said that the application for such a notice was not an application in accordance with law. The case thus falls both under clause 5 and also under clause 6 of Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. In this view of the case the decree-holder's present application is within time, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Hearing-fee 5 gold mohurs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. The view I take is that expressed by my learned brother in the first part of his judgment, namely, that the application for execution filed on March 17th, 1913, was of such a nature as to save the decree from being barred by limitation. Beyond that it is unnecessary to go for the purpose of this appeal, and I wish to refrain from expressing an opinion upon the question whether a decree-holder can keep his decree alive by asking for a notice to be issued under Order XXI, rule 22, without presenting an application containing the details required by rule 11.

Civil revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Budaun, dated the 16th February 1916.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ibn-i-Ahmad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Second Appeal No. 1549 of 1917 and Revision No. 157 of 1918, which arise out of the same matter, are heard and determined by me together. The facts must be briefly stated. The respondent Budh Sen brought a suit for contribution against the opposite party in the Court of Small Causes, that of the Munsif of East Budaun. He sought to recover contribution in that he had paid the whole costs of a former suit which had been decreed against both him and the present appellant IkhlAQ Ali. That suit was transferred to the Court of the Honorary Munsif under section 8, sub-section 2, of the Honorary Munsifs Act, II of 1896. The Honorary Munsif dismissed the suit. An appeal was preferred and transferred apparently to the Subordinate Judge for decision. The Subordinate Judge on appeal decreed the suit on the 16th February 1916. In execution of that decree a house was sold and purchased by some third party on the 11th of January 1917. When the sale came up for confirmation, the judgment-debtor raised an objection to the confirmation of sale on the ground that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to hear and decide the appeal, in that the suit was one of a small cause nature and that no appeal would lie; therefore, the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge was a nullity as having been passed without jurisdiction. He, therefore, asked that the sale should not be confirmed. The Munsif acceded to his request and refused to confirm the sale. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge, who on the 30th of May 1917 set aside the order of the Munsif and directed that the sale be confirmed. IkhlAQ Ali came here on appeal and his appeal is No. 1549 of 1917. A preliminary objection was taken that no second appeal lay to this Court, the suit being a suit (by reason of its value) of a small cause nature. I thereupon allowed the appellant to file a revision against the original decree passed by the Subordinate Judge on appeal, the ground taken being that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The point taken was that because the suit was first instituted in the Court of Small Causes and was transferred thence to the Court of the Honorary Munsif, the Honorary Munsif must be deemed to have decided the suit as a Small Cause Court in view of the last paragraph of section 24 of the present Civil Procedure Code and section 25 of the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882. There is a complete answer to this in section 8 of the Honorary Munsifs Act, in the proviso to clause 2 of that section, which runs thus: "provided that the last paragraph of section 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure shall not be deemed applicable to cases so transferred from Courts of Small Causes." The law has distinctly laid down that when an Honorary Munsif acting under the Act decides a suit transferred to his Court from a Court of Small Causes, he shall not be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes. His decree, therefore, will be appealable and the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The learned District Judge's decision, therefore, on the appeal was a correction, though perhaps not for the reasons given. The result, therefore, is that the revision must fail and is dismissed with costs.

The appeal also will fail and is equally dismissed with costs.

Revision dismissed.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Badri Nath Kapur, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act for revision of the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for Rs. 330. The parties are brothers and the suit is based upon a bond for Rs. 200 executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff on the 18th February 1913. The consideration is stated to be expenses incurred on the marriage of the defendant, which took place $1\frac{1}{2}$ years before the execution of the bond. At the time when it was executed the defendant was some 18 years and 9 months of age, but at the time when the debt was incurred he was a minor. The lower Court was of opinion that the defendant could not incur any debt while he was a minor and that, therefore, at the time when the bond was executed there was no debt which the plaintiff could have recovered and the bond was consequently without consideration. The lower Court has omitted to consider section 25 (2) of the Indian Contract Act, which says that an agreement made without consideration is void unless it is a promise to compensate, wholly or in part, a person who has already voluntarily done something for the promisor. It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the bond was a promise by the defendant to compensate the plaintiff who had previously voluntarily done something for the defendant, i. e., had spent money on getting him married. In Karam Chand v. Musammatt Basant Kaur (1) it was held that an agreement made by a person of full age to compensate wholly or in part a promisee who had already voluntarily done something for the promisor even at a time when the promisor was a minor, did fall within the terms of section 25, clause (2), of the Indian Contract Act. Having regard to this ruling the decision of the lower Court that the bond is void is erroneous. Mr. Kapur on behalf of the respondent cited Ramgopal Jhoonjhoonwalla v. Joharmall Khemka (2) and supported the proposition that an error by the Small Cause Court on a question of limitation does not justify the interference of the High Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. That ruling was, however, dissented from in the Punjab Chief Court case of Sarab Dial-Ishar Dass v. Devi Ditta Mall-Gordhan-Das (3). Moreover the present application for revision is under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act, under which a Court has wider powers than under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. I am, therefore, of opinion that the High Court has full power to interfere on the revision side with the order of the lower Court in the present case.

It is, however, contended by Mr. Kapur that the lower Court has found that the consideration for the bond is not proved. This, I think, was merely a remark made by the Court at the end of its judgment without fully appreciating the evidence on the record. The Court really did not have to go into the question of consideration at all, as it was of opinion that the suit failed on another ground. The defendant does not appear to have been asked whether he executed the bond or not, but he denied having borrowed any money. At the same time he admitted that his brother had spent money on getting him married. The evidence of the plaintiff himself and of Ganga Sahai, the writer of the bond, is sufficient to show that the defendant voluntarily executed the bond after admitting receipt of the consideration. Under these circumstances I consider that the consideration is sufficiently proved. At the same time I do not think that the plaintiff is entitled to any interest. He is merely entitled to be compensated for the money actually spent by him and to nothing further [see the remarks in Karam Ohand v. Musammatt Bisant Kaur (1).]

I, therefore, allow the revision and setting aside the order of the lower Court give the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 200 against the defendant with costs in proportion in both Courts.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 7—Acceptance, what amounts to—Proposal to purchase goods accompanied by price—Price credited by seller to purchaser's account—Acceptance, whether complete.

The acceptance of a proposal must be absolute and unqualified and a person making a proposal cannot impose on the party to whom it is addressed, the obligation to refuse it under the penalty of imputed assent, or attach to his silence the legal result that he must be deemed to have accepted it, but an acceptance may be made without express communication. [p. 438, col. 2.]

A written proposal for the purchase of goods, accompanied by a sum of money as the price thereof, conveyed by a purchaser to the seller and received by the latter, who credits the money so received to his account, amounts to a definite acceptance of the proposal and renders the seller liable in an action for damages in case of his failure to carry out the contract. [p. 438, col. 2.]

Civil revision against the order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Moradabad, dated the 26th November 1918.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. K. Malviya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A suit was brought by the plaintiffs, a firm of chemists in Moradabad, against the defendants, also a firm of chemists carrying on a business in Benares. The amount in dispute was Rs. 61-10-0 and this sum was claimed by the plaintiffs on account of an alleged breach of contract. The main defence to the suit was that there was no contract between the parties. The lower Court found in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the claim. There were several other points debated in the Court below but here I am concerned only with the question whether or not there was a binding contract between the parties.

The facts may be briefly stated as follows:—On the 7th of February 1918 the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants enquiring the price at which they could supply cocaine. The defendants replied on the 13th of February 1918 informing the plaintiffs that the rate for cocaine was Rs. 20 per ounce "without engagement." The meaning of this latter expression is that as the market rate of cocaine was varying from day to day, the defendants were unable to quote any definite rate for the article.

On the 14th of February the plaintiffs sent to the defendants a money order for Rs. 17.8. On the coupon attached to the money order the plaintiffs wrote and asked that the defendants should set aside for them a certain amount of cocaine, the price of which was represented by Rs. 17.8.0. It is admitted that the price was calculated on the quotation of Rs. 20 per ounce which had been given by the defendants. It is proved that the money sent by this money order was received by the defendants on the 16th of February 1918; an acknowledgment of the receipt reached the plaintiffs in due course. It was stated at the time the order was given that the plaintiffs were applying to the Collector of Moradabad for a permit to import the cocaine and the defendants were asked to delay the sending of the parcel until the permit had been obtained.

On the 23rd of February the plaintiffs sent the permit which they obtained from the Collector. On the 4th of March 1918 the defendants intimated to the plaintiffs that they were unable to supply cocaine at Rs. 20 per ounce. They intimated that the price had risen and asked the plaintiffs what they were prepared to do. The plaintiffs apparently took up the position that there was a contract for the supply of the article at Rs. 20 per ounce and they wrote accordingly. Later on, the defendants returned the money to the plaintiffs, who refused to receive it; the result has been this suit for breach of contract, the damages claimed being on the difference between the alleged contract rate and the market price of the day.

As I have already said, the Judge of the Court below took the view that there was a binding contract between the parties. He treated the order of the plaintiffs, which was sent to the defendants on the 14th of February 1918, as a proposal and was of opinion that that proposal had been accepted by the defendants by their conduct. The learned Judge pointed out that the defendants had accepted the money and had kept silent for a considerable period. In his judgment, therefore, the defendants had bound themselves by their conduct and their refusal to deliver the cocaine at the rate quoted in their first letter amounted to a breach of contract.

The argument here is that there was no acceptance of the plaintiffs' offer. It was said that the mere neglect of the defendants to give a speedy answer to the communication sent by the plaintiffs on the 14th of February 1918 could not have the result of placing the defendants under a legal obligation. If there had been nothing more in the case than the communication of a proposal by the plaintiffs followed by silence on the part of the defendants, this argument would have been sound enough. On this point I may refer to a judgment of the Bombay High Court, Haji Mahomed Haji Jiva v. E. Spinner (1). At page 524 of the report Jenkins, C. J., observes: "I take it to be clear that a person making a proposal cannot impose on the party to whom it is addressed, the obligation to refuse it under the penalty of imputed assent, or attach to his silence the legal result that he must be deemed to have accepted it."

He referred in support of this dictum to an English decision, Felthouse v. Bindley (2). As is observed in the commentary to section 7 of the Indian Contract Act edited by Pollock and D. F. Mulla, "Neglect to answer a business offer is certainly not, as a rule, prudent or laudable; still there is no legal duty to answer at all".

The facts of this case, however, are different, for we find that not merely was there a written proposal conveyed from the plaintiffs to the defendants but the plaintiffs along with the written order sent a sum of money which the defendants accepted.

In these circumstances, I think, it was open to the Court below to find that there was an acceptance of the plaintiffs' proposal. The acceptance of a proposal must be absolute and unqualified, but it is also well established that an acceptance may be made without express communication. Here it seems to me the Judge of the Court below could reasonably find that the conduct of the defendants in receiving this sum of money and crediting it to their account amounted to a definite acceptance of the plaintiffs' proposal. For these reasons I

Provident Fund Act (IX of 1897), s. 4—Provident fund deposit, whether can be attached in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—"Acting illegally", meaning of—Execution of decree—Order directing attachment of property not liable to attachment, legality of.

Whether an employee is in service or out of service, whether he be alive or dead, his share of the provident fund is unattachable in the hands of the provident institution under the provisions of section 4 of the Provident Fund Act. [p. 440, col. 2.]

Sub-section (2) of section 4 of the Provident Fund Act does not in any way cut down sub-section (1) of the Act. It ensures that money payable to a widow or child as such directly shall not, even in their hands, be treated as assets of the deceased depositor's estate. The only light thrown by the second sub-section upon the first is that the first did not go far enough. [p. 440, col. 2; p. 441, col. 1.]

Where in spite of statutory provision to the contrary, a certain sum of money held in deposit by a provident institution was attached in execution of a decree:

Held, that in passing the order of attachment the execution Court had "acted illegally" within the meaning of section 115 clause (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 442, col. 2.]

All cases of acting illegally are cases of error in law, though the converse is not always true. Any error in law which amounts to a usurpation of authority in the act done by a Court comes within clause (c) if it is not already within clause (a) of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the broad sense of the word no Court ever has jurisdiction to act illegally, though it may have jurisdiction to make an order which in fact or in law is wrong. [p. 441, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. L. P. E. Pugh (with him Mr. A. K. Roy), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case I am asked under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an order made by the Small Cause Court on 23rd November 1918. That order is as follows: "Payable in two weeks. In default execution to issue."

The action was tried in the Court of the 2nd Munsif at Monghyr. The plaintiffs in 1914 lent Rs. 200 on a promissory note to the defendant's son, who was an employee of the E. I. R. and who died on the 27th September 1916 leaving neither widow nor children. So far as the parties know, he left no Will and neither Probate nor Letters of Administration have been granted to anyone in respect of his estate. The plaintiffs in 1917 applied as creditors to the District Judge at Monghyr for a grant of administration, but their application was dismissed. In these circumstances the action was brought against the defendant, apparently as being "the heir at law and legal representative" of his son. As appears by the Munsif's decree of 29th January 1918 the suit was decreed with costs. There is nothing on the face of the decree to show that it is not an ordinary personal judgment against the father or to limit execution thereon to the property of the deceased. Both before and during the trial the plaintiffs and defendant seem to have litigated between themselves the question whether the money standing to the credit of the deceased with the Provident Institution of the E. I. R. was attachable for the debt in view of section 4 of Act IX of 1897 as amended by Act IV of 1903. The Munsif and on appeal the District Judge both held that it was attachable, for reasons which I am unable to appreciate.

On the 18th July 1919 the Munsif's decree was transmitted for execution to the Small Cause Court at Calcutta. This Court has treated the decree as one against the deceased's estate, which is at all events in substance correct. On 1st August a prohibitory order, in the form specified by Order XXI, rule 52, of the Code issued to the Manager of the Provident Institution, as being a public officer, and not to the Trustees who are, I think, the only proper parties. It was returned with a reference to the Act. After some correspondence on the 23rd September a notice was issued from the Court to the manager requiring him personally to appear and show cause "why the money attached in his hands by a prohibitory order, dated 1st August 1918, should not be deposited in Court or in default why execution should not be issued against him." The matter ultimately came before a Judge on the 22nd November 1918 and as to what happened then there is no dispute between the parties. The respective attorneys argued the question whether Provident Fund moneys were not attachable in view of the Acts above mentioned in the case of a depositor who had died leaving neither widow nor child. No evidence was taken: nor indeed was there need of any, in view of the entire absence of any intention to dispute the facts about the nature of the institution or of the fund in question. No issue was directed. The subject matter of the attachment was defined by the notices "certain money now in your hands, viz., Rs. 1,182-2 out of the Provident Fund money due to the deceased H. W. Lakin." The learned Judge has given no statement of his reasons, but he has held this money to have been validly attached by the notice of the 1st August and has ordered execution—presumably against the manager, possibly against the institution—to issue in default of payment.

Now, in view of these three decisions, it may be well to state shortly the purpose and intention of the Acts. These Acts make provision in the interests of certain large classes of employees for a scheme of compulsory and to a limited extent voluntary thrift. Part of the employee's wages is impounded, whether he likes it or not: within narrow limits he has an option to contribute more: the employer has on his side to add a contribution: and these sums together with interest, profits or other increments make a total fund of which a defined proportion is held on the individual account of each employee. The Legislature is dealing with people who are poor, with people who are being compelled, and with such people in very large numbers. Its intention is that such people shall in case of necessity be able to afford a passage home to Europe, in case of retirement have something to live on, in case of death have something to leave. It is not ignorant that if a railway has a hundred thousand employees, the temptation to run into debt or to charge or anticipate his share will occur at some moment of his lifetime to ninety thousand of them at least. Neither the railway company nor the institution is to have its money wasted in large quantities upon the management expenses. There is to be no standing army of attorneys and attorneys' clerks attending to notices and orders from all the Courts in India, settling priorities among competing claims, paying the money into Court as soon as it comes in and acting towards creditors and mortgagees as a providence with costs cut of the fund. By rules made for this institution under the Act, when one employee dies his share if small is to be summarily and directly distributed according to special rules which brush aside the ordinary law as to Wills or intestate succession. If his share is large it is payable to his executor or administrator and to him only on production of his grant: the burden of a due administration is thus put upon the proper shoulders. Whether the employee is in the service or out of the service, whether he be alive or dead, his share is unattachable in the hands of the institution. This is the very basis of the scheme. Section 4 (1) of the Amended Act has been judicially construed in Veerchand v. B. E. & O. I. Ry. Co. (1) and Seth Manna Lal v. Gainsford (2). It means what it says and is no hardship upon anybody. The plaintiffs' point ever since their action was started before the Munsif, at the trial, on appeal before the District Judge, before me and most probably in the Small Cause Court rests upon sub-section (2) of section 4. That has got nothing to do with this case and in no way cuts down sub-section (1). It is a further provision directed to a wholly different matter. It ensures that money payable to a widow or child as such directly shall not, even in their hands, be treated as assets of the deceased's estate. Nay more; the Legislature knowing that this might be rendered ineffective by getting the widow or child to incur or to join in incurring the debt, provides (for the more complete discouragement of creditors) that such money, although in the hands of the widow or the child, shall not be made to answer for their own debts if incurred in the lifetime of the deceased. The only light thrown by the second subsection upon the first is that the first did not go far enough.

The result is that, in my view, the order of 23rd November 1918 is one which purports to attach that which the Legislature has forbidden any Court to touch.

I have now to see whether this comes within the scope of section 115 of the Code. It is quite impossible to suggest that the learned Judge held an inquiry upon evidence as to any disputed facts or that his error consisted in his holding wrong'y upon any matter other than his own powers. What has happened is that there is a prohibition in the Statute, that he has failed to see it, and that he has done what the Statute forbids. Whether he has misread the definition of "compulsory deposit" or has wrongly imported some qualification into sub-section (1) of section 4—and these are the only alternatives—his error is the same in nature for the present purpose. In the face of an objection that he had no power to do so, he has done what the Statute forbids, not being under any misapprehension as to the facts: he has done intentionally an act of the very class prohibited; and he has done it solely because the words of the Statute failed to convey the (prohibition to his mind.

A review of the cases upon this section leads me to think that whether or not this case comes within clause (a) it can only escape this clause by falling within clause (c). It comes very close indeed to what has been frequently instanced as a typical case under clause (c)—execution levied upon the tools of an artisan contrary to section 40 of the Code: Badami Kuar v. Dinu Rai (3), Dhan Singh v. Basant Singh (4), Sew Bux v. Shib Ohunder Sen (5). What the Small Cause Court has done here is, I think, a long way further on the wrong side of the border line that divides mere error in law from acting illegally than was the order set aside by Petheram, C. J., and Ameer Ali, J., in Sheoraj Nandan Singh v. Gopal Suran Narayan Singh (6). All cases of acting illegally are cases of error in law, though the converse is very far from true. The element which must be present in the nature of the error to give rise to the power of revision has never been very precisely defined, but I think it clear upon the Statute, and not really doubted in the decided cases, that any error in law which amounts to a usurpation of authority in the act done by the Court comes within clause (c) if it is not already within clause (a). In the broad sense of the word no Court ever has jurisdiction to act illegally, though it may have jurisdiction to make an order which in fact or in law is wrong. I think that the Legislature, when in 1879 it added the last clause, can only have meant to obviate unprofitable nicety in the interpretation of the word "jurisdiction" in the section as it originally stood. If the dictum of Woodroffe, J., in Shew Prosad v. Ram Ohunder (7) be right as to the two meanings of the word and as to the narrower meaning having been intended, it is, I think, an irresistible conclusion that "the legal authority of a Court to do certain things, namely, to make a particular order in a case over which it has jurisdiction in the sense stated," is the very matter to which the first part of the newer clause is addressed. If a mere irregularity is to be corrected provided only that it is material (as the Statute plainly says), it is indeed strange that excess of authority in matters of substance should be left without remedy altogether. It was argued at the bar on the strength of the judgment given by Jenkins, C. J., in the case last cited that the words "acted illegally" refer only to matters of procedure. This is, I think, a misunderstanding. Save in extreme cases such matters come within the last words of clause (c). The word "procedure" is used by the Chief Justice as covering all three clauses of the section—a clear though certainly an extended sense. The phrases are "faults of procedure," "error of law and not of procedure," and I think he is adverting to the general scope of the section as a whole in short and comprehensive phrase. He uses the word "procedure" as the keynote of the section, just as the Privy Council in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (8) use the word "jurisdiction." In his judgment the word "procedure" does not mean merely the method of conducting a case, and in the Privy Council's judgment the word "jurisdiction" does not mean merely propriety of forum.

In India the law, both substantive and adjective, has been codified in so many of its branches and positive rule covers now so many matters, that it is peculiarly easy to represent errors of law as matter of jurisdiction. Despite the discretionary nature of the revisional powers, the decisions under section 115 show a lively and well-founded terror lest this Court should be inundated with mere matters of appeal. From time to time, but not without recurring checks, the construction of this section has drifted towards the view which the respondent here contends for; but it has never, I think, arrived at it. Logically put that view must be:—that clause (a) refers only to the propriety of the forum; that clause (b) applies only where a case has not been entertained for decision at all, but has been wrongly dismissed in limine; and that clause (c) refers to errors in the method or manner of the trial. In my opinion this construction, when narrowly looked at, is found to be doubtful and in conflict with a respectable body of authority at every point. Taken broadly, I think that it eviscerates rather than interprets the section. It gets rid of difficulty but by a process of jettison. It is plain enough that revision is not appeal, but there is no necessity to throw away the baby in emptying the bath. Jurisdiction to try a suit does not mean jurisdiction to anything whatever by order made in the suit: if it did, an exception for material errors in procedure (strictly so called) would be almost ludicrous. In the present case the applicant only came into this suit at all upon an application against him which, fairly read, was an invitation to the Court to do what the Statute denies the power to do. In substance the Legislature has put these funds beyond the reach of the Court below and the Court has stepped out of its sphere in purporting to levy on them. This error is a usurpation, an offence against public order: in the old language a contempt of the Crown, in the language of the section "acting illegally."

I have now to consider the question of discretion in this particular case. Now, the first ground that was given, why I should not exercise my powers, assuming the case to be within the section, is that from the point of view of these creditors, the error was a mere error of procedure in a large sense. I am of opinion that as far as that is concerned, it would be entirely wrong of me to refuse to exercise my discretion on any such ground. From the point of view of the provident institution it is a matter of great importance: the Act regards it as a matter of great importance; it has been a matter of dispute from the very commencement of these proceedings, and, if the plaintiff fails upon it, it does not seem to me that I ought to regard it as a trivial matter or as a mere matter of form.

The next ground that was given is that there has been no application for a new trial in the Small Cause Court. I am satisfied that the right to make such application is at least doubtful. After all there have been decisions by three Judges upon this matter, and I think it would be very hard if the proper remedy were refused to the present applicants on the ground that they had not attempted to get a fourth. In addition the application here brought was an application against the manager, that is to say, in such a way that it leaves it very doubtful whether if this order were to be allowed to stand, the trustees as representing the institution would not, by a suit such as they have instituted in this Court, be able to render that order infructuous. It seems to me, looking at the matter as a whole, that there is no reason whatever why the remedy asked for should not be given, and the order I shall make is that the decree of the Small Cause Court be set aside with the costs of this Rule and the matter remitted back to the Small Cause Court to proceed according to law.

As regards the motion and the action which were tried and argued together along with the Rule under section 115, it is not now necessary to go into the technicalities or the merits of the action at all. As I am setting aside the order under section 115, I shall make no order on the motion and order that the action be dismissed.

The question arises as to what to do with the costs of the motion and the action. In my opinion, the correct order to make as regards costs of the motion and action is, that the trustees of the provident institution must pay to the defendants in the action any costs that have been incurred by them extra to the costs which they required to incur in connection with the Rule.

The result, therefore, will be that the costs of the Rule must be paid by the respondents—that is the plaintiffs in the original action before the Munsif—to the manager, but that the trustees must pay to them the costs which they have incurred as defendants in the action and as respondents to the motion, in so far as those costs are additional to the costs which they have incurred as respondents in connection with the Rule.

Rule made absolute.

CIVIL REVISION No. 40 of 1919.

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104 (f), Sch. II, paras. 15, 21—Arbitration, reference to—Arbitrator deciding dispute upon his own knowledge—Award, validity of—Order directing award to be filed—Appeal, whether lies—Decree following upon order, effect of.

An order directing an award to be filed is appealable. The fact that a decree is drawn up in terms of the award has not the effect of taking away the right of appeal against the order. [p. 443, col. 2; p. 444, col. 1.]

Where, in the absence of any agreement that an arbitrator should decide a dispute upon his own knowledge of the facts and without taking any evidence, an arbitrator does so decide a dispute, his act is fatal to the award on the ground of misconduct. [p. 444, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 12th December 1918.

Mr. S. D. Sinha, for the Applicant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The application has reference to an order passed in appeal in certain arbitration proceedings. It appears that the plaintiff-petitioner applied to the Court of the Munsif to have an award made a rule of Court. This application was made under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure. The Munsif followed the procedure laid down in this paragraph and eventually wrote an order directing the award to be filed, and thereafter a decree was prepared on the basis of the award in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 21 (2) of the Schedule. The defendants went in appeal to the lower Appellate Court against the order directing the filing of the award. The lower Appellate Court entertained the appeal, set aside the order of the Court of first instance and directed that the application for the filing of the award should be dismissed. The plaintiff now comes here in revision, and the first ground taken is that the Court below acted without jurisdiction in entertaining the appeal. The learned Counsel for the petitioner had to admit that section 104 (f) of the Code of Civil Procedure clearly lays down that an appeal does lie against an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration made without the intervention of the Court. But according to the ground taken in the first paragraph of the memorandum no appeal lay because the order of the first Court directing the award to be filed had become merged in a decree, and admittedly no appeal lies against the decree. It is only necessary to say that the law and the cases seem to be against this contention of the applicant, and I am referred in this connection to a case reported as Soudamini Ghose v. Gopal Ohandra Ghose (1).

For a further authority see Hari Kunwar v. Lakhmi Ram Jani (2). At page 488* of the report the Judges, dealing with this very matter, point out that the bare fact that a decree has been drawn up after the passing of the order cannot take away the right of appeal against the order.

The first ground, therefore, fails. The other point which has been argued is that the Court below acted with material irregularity in discussing certain pleas of misconduct which, it is said, were not raised in the Court of first instance. It is true that in the first Court the defendants, by way of answer to the application, made general allegations of misconduct against the arbitrator. However this may be, it is certain that one definite allegation of misconduct was raised in the first Court, namely, that the arbitrator had decided the case of his own knowledge and without taking any evidence from the parties. The learned Judge of the Court below finds that this was the case, and accordingly he has held that the arbitration is null and void. It is argued here that the mere fact that the arbitrator decided the case of his own knowledge and without taking any evidence does not amount to misconduct. This matter has to be determined in the light of the language of the agreement by which the dispute was referred to arbitration. If the parties agreed that the arbitrator should decide the dispute between them on his own knowledge, and further agreed that there was no need for him to take any evidence, no misconduct can be disputed. But there is nothing in the language of the agreement to suggest that it was the intention of the parties that the arbitrator should act solely upon his own knowledge of the facts. That he has done so is fatal to the award, in which he expressly says that he has decided the case upon the basis of his own knowledge. I am satisfied, therefore, that the order of the Court below is correct, and there is no ground on which I can interfere. The application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CAUSE No. 1 of 1914.

August 21, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Marten.

THE RHEINFELS.

Hague Convention No. VI of 1907, Arts. 1, 2, 3—Art. 3, whether applicable to German ships—"Port" in Arts. 1 and 2, meaning of.

Article 3 of the 6th Hague Convention does not apply to German ships, as Germany did not agree to this particular article. [p. 447, col. 1.]

The word "port" in Articles 1 and 2 of the 6th Hague Convention means a place where ships are in the habit of coming for the purpose of loading or unloading, embarking or disembarking. [p. 446, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the following judgment, dated September 4, 1914, of Macleod, J.:—"The SS. Rheinfels, being an enemy vessel and having entered the Port of Bombay after a declaration of war, is to be detained until further order and to be handed over to the Director, Royal Indian Marine, on his requisition; such requisition will be subject to any claim for payment of compensation between Government and the claimants made against the Crown, which question will have to be decided after the war.

Liberty reserved to apply for the confiscation of the vessel.

Any application for cargo not delivered can be dealt in the same way as cargo claimed from the SS. Warturm."

In 1919 the Crown applied for condemnation of the ship as prize.

Mr. Bahadurji (Acting Advocate-General) for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for condemnation of the German steamship Rheinfels, her freight and stores and such of her cargo as has not been delivered. She arrived in the vicinity of Bombay harbour as long ago as the 7th August 1914 in the morning. She belonged to the Hansa line, her gross tonnage was 5,512 tons, and her speed according to her officers was 10½ knots. She was fitted with wireless apparatus, and was bound for Bombay, her last port of call having been Aden, some 1,650 miles away. War between England and Germany began at 1 P. M. on 4th August. She, therefore, left her last port before the outbreak of war.

Under an order of this Court of the 4th September 1914, an order was made in somewhat similar terms to that in The

Ohile (1). It pronounced that the steamship Rheinfels belonged at the time of the capture and seizure thereof to enemies of the Crown, and it ordered the detention of the ship and all her store until further order. The ship herself was handed over to the Director, Royal Indian Marine, on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council. There was liberty to apply for the confiscation and condemnation of the ship, her stores and cargo.

It is under the liberty to apply in this order that the present application, which is by way of motion, is now made. At the date when the order of the 4th September 1914 was made, the old Prize Court Rules, which date, I suppose, from the Napoleonic Wars, were still in force. It was not till the 6th November 1914 that by a Notification of the Governor-General in Council the present English Prize Court Rules were brought into operation in India. By the English Prize Courts (Procedure) Act, 1914, which enabled these Rules to be made, there was an express provision dealing with cases where Prize Court proceedings had already begun before the Act came into force. One alternative was provided by section 1, subsection 2 (b), viz., that the cause might be continued in accordance with the new Rules subject to such adaptations as the Court might deem necessary to make them applicable to the case.

Accordingly by an order of this Court, dated the 31st March 1914, it was ordered that this cause be continued in accordance with the Prize Court Rules (1914) subject to such adaptations as the Court has deemed or may deem necessary in order to make them applicable to this cause. And the order went on to provide that this cause be set down for further hearing on a date which was subsequently altered by another order of the 29th July 1919.

The reason why the Crown is now asking for condemnation of the ship is this: that it is now ascertained, so it is said, that the ship was not captured in the port or harbour of Bombay, as was the evidence before this Court in September 1914, but was captured outside that port, if one uses the word "port" in the sense in which it is used in the sixth Hague Convention. Consequently, it is said, on behalf of the Crown that Articles 1 and 2 of the Hague Convention do not apply.

The second and alternative ground on which the application is made is this, that having regard to the wireless messages which were sent from or received at the Government station, Butcher Island, Bombay, and from other circumstances, the Court ought to infer that the Rheinfels was aware of the outbreak of hostilities between England and Germany before she entered the port of Bombay, and that consequently she was not entitled to the protection given by Articles 1 and 2 of the Hague Convention, even if she did enter the port.

I think it is still open to the Crown to take these points despite the order of 4th September 1914. That order only finally decided that the Rheinfels was a German ship. It left open the question whether she could be condemned as prize.

Taking then the point as to the place of capture first, I think it established that this ship was stopped and boarded by the British military authorities, that is to say, by the Chief Examining Officer, Commander Shearme, R.I.M., and two subordinates some three miles seawards from the Prongslight-house. This light-house is at the end of a reef which juts out into the open sea for about half a mile South or south-west from Colaba Point. It must not be confused with Colaba light-house which is on the point itself. The officers came in a launch from the tug Rose, which was then engaged in war examination purposes under military orders. On boarding the ship, these officers exercised rights, which would not, I think, have been justified in time of peace. Amongst other things, they entered the wireless cabin on the ship, they took possession of the books, they turned the wireless operators out of the cabin and then locked it up. Further, the ship then proceeded with Commander Shearme on board, and escorted by the launch, to an anchorage south of what is known as the Middle Ground Shoal, where an armed party was put on board.

It is also established, in my opinion, that even this anchorage on the south of the Middle Ground Shoal is not a part of the "port," in the sense that ships load and unload there. The evidence is that ships do not load and unload there, and that in the monsoon it would be unsafe for any ship to discharge into lighters at that spot. In fact that anchorage is the usual examination anchorage. The place where a ship loads or unloads is further north, viz., to the north or north-east of the Middle Ground Shoal, unless, as is more usual, the ship goes into the docks themselves. A chart of Bombay has been put in, and there the witness has marked with a cross the place south of the Middle Ground, where the Rheinfels was anchored. The chart is an old one, and unfortunately does not take in the Prongs light-house, nor the spot where the ship was first boarded. I have not, however, thought it necessary to adjourn the case for a further chart to be put in. The oral evidence is reasonably clear, and can, if necessary, be supplemented by an atlas, such as the Graphic Atlas of the World, which has small but useful maps of Bombay on pages 64 and 67 of the 1910 Edition. I have not had the advantage of seeing Commander Shearme in the witness box, as Counsel tells me he is in England, but his subordinate officer, Mr. Warden, has given evidence before me, and given it carefully and well.

(1) (1914) P. 212; 84 L. J. P. 1; 1 P. Cas. 1; 112 L. T. 248; 12 Asp. M. C. 598; 58 S. J. 852; 31 T. L. R. 3.

The significance of the place of capture lies in this, viz., that by two decisions, the one by Sir Samuel Evans in The Mowe (2) and the other by their Lordships of the Privy Council in The Belgia (3), it has been clearly established that the word "port" in the 6th Hague Convention does not mean a port in the sense of a fiscal or customs port, nor does it refer to territorial waters. It "must be construed in its usual and limited popular or commercial sense as a place where ships are in the habit of coming for the purpose of loading or unloading, embarking or disembarking [see The Mowe (2)]. Accordingly in the case of The Mowe (2) although she was captured in the Firth of Forth, which was within the fiscal limits of the port of Leith, she was held to be captured at sea and not in port.

Similarly, in the case of The Belgia (3) which was captured outside Newport, that is to say, outside the entrance to the river Usk, which is the river for Newport, there, too, the ship was held not to have entered a port.

So, too, in The Erymanthos (4) it was held by the Malta Prize Court that the ship, though captured at the Malta examination anchorage, was not captured in port.

The 6th Hague Convention, or rather the English translation of it, will be found on page 444 of the English Manual of emergency Legislation. Article 1 runs as follows:—

"When a merchant ship belonging to one of the belligerent Powers is at the commencement of hostilities in an enemy port, it is desirable that it should be allowed to depart freely, either immediately, or after a reasonable number of days of grace, and to proceed, after being furnished with a pass, direct to its port of destination or any other port indicated to it."

Then it goes on:—

"The same principle applies in the case of a ship which has left its last port of departure before the commencement of the war and has entered a port belonging to the enemy while still ignorant that hostilities have broken out."

Stopping there, the decisions I have referred to establish that for Article 1 to apply, a ship must "enter a port." Therefore, if she is captured at sea before she enters a port, Article 1 does not apply.

Then Article 2 provides:—

"A merchantship which, owing to circumstances beyond its control, may have been unable to leave the enemy port within the period contemplated in the preceding article, or which was not allowed to leave, may not be confiscated. The belligerent may merely detain it, on condition of restoring it after the war, without payment of compensation or he may requisition it on condition of paying compensation."

But there, again, she has to be in the enemy port. If she is captured before that, then the article does not apply.

(4) (1914) 1 Br. & Col. P. O. 339.

THE RHEINFELS.

Article 3 deals with ships which left their last port before the war as here and are encountered at sea while still ignorant of hostilities. I use the words "at sea" advisedly, as the English translation "on the high seas" appears to be a mistake [see The Mowe (2)]. They also must not be confiscated but only detained. It has, however, been decided that this article does not apply to German ships, because Germany did not agree to this particular article, and consequently her ships cannot claim the benefit of it. That was decided in The Marie Glaeser (5) and also in The Perkeo (6). Accordingly, I have only to deal with Articles 1 and 2.

Turning then to the facts of this case, I have already said that I am satisfied the ship was stopped and boarded well outside the Prongs light-house. In saying that, I did not overlook the original evidence, viz., the joint affidavit of Commander Warden and Commander Shearme of 10th August 1914, in which Commander Shearme stated that the ship arrived in the "harbour" of Bombay on the 7th August and that on the same day she was captured by him and his crew assisted by the Examination Battery in the "harbour" of Bombay, and that a military guard was placed on board in charge of the steamship and her papers. So, too, in the answers to interrogatories administered to the master and officers of the German ship, they all say that she was taken and seized in Bombay "harbour".

Curiously enough in The Belgia (7) Sir Samuel Evans had very similar evidence before him; that is to say, there was an affidavit by the Surveyor of Customs saying that the ship was seized as prize for the use of His Majesty in the "port" of Newport. Similarly the writ in the action described the ship as having been seized at the port (see page 305). Sir Samuel Evans in his judgment stated:—

"The circumstances under which this vessel was captured have been fully stated to me, and I must decide the case in accordance with what was actually done, and not in accordance with any language, accurate or inaccurate, which may have been used by the laymen in and about the port of Newport at the time of the commencement of this war, when people were not familiar with the nomenclature or with the provisions which one has made since."

Then he says:—

"I find, in fact, that this vessel was captured at sea after the outbreak of hostilities."

Then he describes the place and proceeds:—

"Being captured there and in these circumstances, I have come to the conclusion that she was captured at sea. If that is right, I need not trouble at all about the Hague Convention No. VI, Articles 1 and 2; but in deference to the argument of Counsel for the claimants I will say a word or two about them."

That was the decision which on appeal was affirmed by the Privy Council in The Belgia (3).

Under the above circumstances, I am satisfied that this ship, whether she was captured outside the Prongs light-house or on this examination ground south of the Middle Ground, had not entered "the port" of Bombay within the meaning of the Hague Convention. But I base my decision primarily on this, viz., that in my opinion she was captured some three miles outside the Prongs light house. I am not satisfied that this spot is within the limits of the fiscal port of Bombay, but assuming that it is, I think it clear on the authorities that this spot is not within the "port" of Bombay, as that expression is used in the Hague Convention.

I also hold on the evidence that she was captured and seized at this spot. Even, however, if she was not captured and seized until she reached the examination anchorage south of the Middle Ground, I should still hold that she had not entered the "port" in the above sense. That anchorage may be a "roadstead", but as pointed out by Sir Samuel Evans in The Mowe (2) in the French text of the Conventions, "the word 'ports' is used in various places in conjunction with, but in contradistinction to, roadsteads and to territorial waters. See Convention XIII, where the words 'les ports, les rades, ou les eaux territoriales,' are frequently used."

It follows that in my opinion the 6th Hague Convention does not apply to this ship and that accordingly she ought to be condemned as a lawful prize.

In the view, therefore, which I take, it is unnecessary to decide the second ground on which the Crown has asked me to condemn the ship, viz., her knowledge of the outbreak of hostilities. The evidence does not establish expressly that the Rheinfels either sent or received any message showing that war between England and Germany had broken out. It is all a matter of inference. She was at the time on a voyage from Aden to Bombay. She no doubt was fitted with the Telefunken system of wireless telegraphy, which would enable her to receive messages from wireless stations in Germany. She would also be able to receive the messages which were sent out from the Butcher Island radio station. It is also proved to my satisfaction that as from the morning of the 5th August to the afternoon of the 6th August, the operator in charge of this radio station was sending out messages to British ships warning them that war had broken out and that they must not enter any German port. It is clear also that from about 7-10 A. M. on the 6th August, the Rheinfels was in wireless communication with Butcher Island, being then some 240 miles away. Her wireless system was a different one, but she used the same wave length as the Marconi system, and accordingly could pick up the messages sent out from Butcher Island. Her wireless system was also in working order. One can tell that from the messages she sent. She was also near the City of Lahore which was also bound for Bombay and receiving messages from Butcher Island.

On the other hand, there is this that the captain did go straight into Bombay and made no attempt to deviate and run for Marmagoa or any other port. Further, he kept up communication and gave his distances. Thus his message at 5.55 P. M. on the 6th stated that he was 130 miles off. In so doing, he was adding to his risk of being captured on the high seas, and it is rather more consistent with his not knowing that war had broken out than with the knowledge that it had. Again, if he knew that war had broken out, but decided the safest course was to go to Bombay, it might have assisted him to have arrived with his wireless out of order, supposing a plausible excuse could be given for that. H.M.S. Dartmouth evidently thought it likely the captain would make for Marmagoa, if he knew of the outbreak of war, for she set out in the afternoon of the 6th to intercept the Rheinfels there. Further, it appears by the answers to interrogatories that the wireless operators were the 3rd and 4th officers. Prima facie these officers would normally be attending to their ordinary duties as 3rd and 4th officers and would have little time left for wireless messages. I cannot, therefore, assume that this cargo boat would necessarily pick up all the messages which a passenger liner might, for the latter might keep two operators exclusively engaged in the wireless cabin.

I have been referred by Counsel to the case of The Gutenfels No. 2 (8), where Mr. Justice Cator, in giving judgment in the Egyptian Prize Court, said:—

"The sole safe rule upon which a Prize Court can act is to assume that every ship fitted with wireless apparatus receives from its Government, either directly or by transmission from other ships, prompt news of the outbreak of hostilities between its own and any other country."

He, however, held on the facts that the ship was ignorant of the outbreak of hostilities. That case went on appeal to the Privy Council on another point (The Gutenfels) (9) where the judgment was varied, and an order made as in the case of the The Ohile (1). Their Lordships did not, however, deal with the above proposition, and I do not think I need either. I have arrived at a definite decision on the first point, and I do not think it necessary to arrive at a definite finding either of fact or law on the second point.

Having regard to my decision on the first point, there will be a decree for the condemnation of the ship, her stores and tackle and also the freight which is in the hands of the Collector of Customs of Bombay. He, I am told, occupies the position of Admiralty Marshal. There is also a small sum in his hands of Rs. 1,295-13-1 representing the net proceeds of certain undelivered cargo on the ship. Nearly all the cargo has been delivered under orders made by this Court from time to time, and this small balance represents unclaimed or undelivered cargo. I condemn this balance also as representing cargo on an enemy ship.

As regards the form of the order, the Admiralty Registrar will no doubt look at the Forms of Order contained in the schedule to the English Prize Court Rules (1914), Form No. 53 (see English Manual of Emergency Legislation, page 331). They will require some adaptation to the present case. The draft order is to be shown to me before it is passed and entered.

As regards the costs, I see there are certain reserved costs here. I will give a general direction that the costs of the Crown are to be paid out of the proceeds in the hands of the Collector of Bombay. Subject to those costs, there will be a direction that the Collector do transfer the moneys in his hands to the Crown or as the Crown may direct. If the Crown does not require taxation or any special order as to costs, the whole fund can be transferred.

I will reserve liberty to apply in case there are any other points which may require the Court's direction.

There is one point of practice which I should like to mention, and that is this. The cause has come before me on viva voce evidence, and certain officers have been brought down to Bombay for that purpose. One has had to come from such a distant place as Rawalpindi. Should, however, a similar case arise in the future, I think the Advocate General should consider whether it is not possible under the Prize Court Rules, 1914, to give evidence by affidavit. The officers of the ship concerned in the capture can certainly give evidence by affidavit [see Order XV, rule 2 (b)]: and I should have thought that other evidence by affidavit might properly be admitted by the Judge under Order XV, rule 2 (e). There may be cases in which viva voce evidence is essential, but in many it is not. Farther, in war time, naval and military officers cannot be spared for attendance in Law Courts, and the same observation applies to wireless operators and censors or cypher experts. My recollection of the English practice is that affidavit evidence was principally used, and that it was by no means confined to officers of the capturing ship. I think that will probably be found a far more convenient course in every way than what has taken place to-day. Not only will it save the time of the Court, but it will also save officers being taken from their ordinary duties or brought by long journeys from the other end of India.

One other point I should also mention. If any matter of the Hague Convention comes up again, there should be a proper official publication of the Hague Convention for use by the Court. I mean an official publication containing the original French text and the English translation. Counsel for the Crown were provided with this in England, and my recollection is of a blue book with the two texts in parallel columns. If there are no copies of this in Bombay, it should, I think, be obtained from England as the French text is material.

I am also told by the Advocate-General that the text of the Peace Treaty has not yet been received here: and that he does not know whether it has any provision with regard to the 6th Hague Convention. I have not, however, thought it necessary to defer my decision till that information was supplied. The question whether the 6th Hague Convention is binding at all as between England and Germany was left open in The Gutenfels (9) and again in The Prinz Adalbert (10), and I of course have not dealt with that question.

Judge's Note.—In correcting the shorthand notes of the above judgment, I had occasion to refer to the Batcher Island Radio log, Exhibit C. I there found that in the early morning of 7th August 1914, this station was recording message from Nauen (in Prussia) sent out in cypher. This was not mentioned to me at the hearing and is in favour of the Crown. The answers to interrogatories denied, however, the possession or knowledge of any Code (except the international Code): and as there is no evidence from the Naval Intelligence Department to show that German cargo ships would know any cypher code of the German Government, it does not perhaps carry the matter much further. Nor does it follow that the 3rd and 4th officers were then engaged in the wireless cabin. On the whole, therefore, I have thought it unnecessary to have the case set down for further hearing.

The order as eventually drawn up was without prejudice to any question whether the property thereby condemned as prize was droits of the Crown or droits of the Admiralty [see The Abonema (11), The Hillerod, The Florida, The Albania, The Adjudant and The Belgia (3)].

Where the original value of a suit exceeds Rs. 10,000, but in an appeal by one of the defendants to the High Court, the contest is in respect of his liability for a sum less than Rs. 10,000, the case, for the purposes of an appeal to His Majesty in Council, does not come within the purview of the first paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, nor does it fall under the second paragraph of that section as involving any question regarding property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards, [p. 450, col. 2.]

The question whether the omission to implead one of the plaintiffs in an appeal to the High Court is fatal to the appeal, is not a question of law of general importance involved in the appeal, to justify a certificate that the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council, [p. 451, col. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. O. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The suit was one for foreclosure of two mortgages, under which a sum of Rs. 14,493 was alleged to be due to the plaintiffs. The defendant, who now seeks to appeal to His Majesty in Council, is the purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property and he contested the claim. The Court of first instance decreed the claim. The present applicant preferred an appeal to this Court and in that appeal he raised the question of his liability in respect of Rs. 3,800 out of the total amount held by the Court below to be due under the two mortgages. In this Court he omitted to implead as respondent one of the persons who was a plaintiff in the suit. On the ground of this omission the learned Judges who heard the appeal in this Court dismissed the appeal. The appellant now applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree dismissing his appeal. The value of the subject-matter of the suit was undoubtedly upwards of Rs. 10,000, but the value of the proposed appeal is only Rs. 3,800. Therefore, the case does not come within the purview of the first paragraph of section 110. It is, however, urged that the decree or final order in this case involves directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of the value of upwards of Rs. 10,000, as mentioned in the second clause of the section. We do not think that the case falls under that clause 2 of section 110. The appeal does not involve any question regarding property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards. The sum of Rs. 3,800, which the appellant seeks to be deducted out of the amount declared by the Court of first instance to be due upon the mortgages, consisted of a principal sum of Rs. 1,125 which was alleged to have been paid to the mortgagee and two other sums in regard to which it was urged that the mortgage was without legal necessity. That was not a question affecting directly or indirectly property of the value of Rs. 10,000 and upwards. The first ground upon which the applicant contends that the case fulfil the requirements of section 110 is in our opinion untenable. It was next contended that the case was otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council and that a question of law of general importance was involved in the appeal. We do not agree with this contention also. The question of law which is raised by the applicant is whether the omission to implead in the appeal one of the plaintiffs was fatal to the appeal. It is said that that plaintiff was represented by the manager of the family to which he belonged and that, therefore, the omission of his name from the array of respondents did not affect the array of parties in the appeal.

This question does not appear to have been raised before the Bench which heard the appeal, and we do not find from the record any suggestion that any of the other respondents was the head and manager of the family to which the minor plaintiff Bansidhar (who was not made a respondent to the appeal) was belonged. Under the circumstances, we think that this is not a case which we can certify to be otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. We, therefore, reject the application with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV,

r. 8—Partition, suit for—Joinder of alienee of family property—Decree for possession of portion of alienated property on payment of certain amount within specified time—Decree, nature of—Redemption decree—Failure to pay amount on due date—Court, power of, to enlarge time.

In a suit for partition of joint family property, the alienee of the family property was impleaded as a party. The Court found the alienation binding on the family to the extent of Rs. 800 and directed delivery of possession of a portion of the alienated property to the plaintiffs on their paying Rs. 400 to the alienee within a specified date. The plaintiffs failed to pay the amount within the time specified but paid the amount subsequently and applied for and got possession of the property decreed. The District Munsif subsequently reversed his own order on the alienee's application, holding that he had no jurisdiction to enlarge the time. The order was confirmed on appeal:

Held, that the decree directing delivery to plaintiffs was in effect a redemption decree and the Court had, therefore, power to enlarge the time for payment under Order XXXIV, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 452, col. 2; p. 453, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 28 of 1918, preferred against the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Erode, in E. A. No. 735 of 1917, in E. P. R. No. 1090 of 1917 (in C. S. No. 4 of 1915, on the file of the Additional District Munsif, Erode).

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107, clause (2), of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Erode, in C. M. P. No. 76 of 1918, in C. S. No. 4 of 1915, on the file of the Additional District Munsif's Court, Erode.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar and K. S. Ganapathy Aiyar, for the Appellants-Petitioners.—The lower Courts erred in holding that they had no jurisdiction to extend the time for payment. The decree directed possession to be delivered to plaintiffs on their paying a certain amount within a specified time. The decree does not state the consequences of non-payment. It does not state that either the suit was to stand dismissed on failure to pay the amount or that the plaintiffs were to be barred of their right to recover the property. Virtually the decree is one for redemption and having condoned the omission of plaintiffs to pay on the due date and accepted payment subsequently, the Munsif should not have reversed his order.

The cases cited by the Munsif are distinguishable. They do not lay down that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to enlarge time. Till there is an order debarring the plaintiff from redeeming, the action is alive and can be revived.

Mr. O. V. Subramanya Aiyar, for the Respondents.—In the absence of an express direction in the decree the lower Courts rightly held that they had no power to enlarge the time. The right to enforce that portion of the decree for possession on payment of money was lost to the plaintiffs the moment the time specified was allowed to lapse.

JUDGMENT.—The application for execution arose out of a partition decree. Some of the members of the family sued their co-parceners for partition and sought to set aside certain alienations in favour of strangers. The decree gave the plaintiffs their share. The Court found that the alienation impeached was binding upon the members of the family to the extent of about Rs. 800 and odd and directed that the plaintiffs do obtain possession of the property in the possession of the alienees after paying a sum of Rs. 400 and odd. In terms and in effect, this portion of the decree was one for redemption. The final decree does not, however, say that, in case the money is not paid within the time fixed, viz., 10th July 1916, the suit for possession of the property shall stand dismissed. Nor does it say that the right to recover possession on subsequent payment is barred to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs did not pay the amount within the time stipulated. They subsequently applied for possession of the property after paying into Court the amount which was ordered to be paid. The Courts below have held that, as the money was not paid within the time fixed, the plaintiffs are not entitled to any further extension of time and that they are not entitled to recover possession of the property.

In the first instance on payment of the money by the plaintiffs, they were put in possession. On an application made by the alienees to cancel that order for possession on the ground that the money was not paid in time, the District Munsif reversed his own order and ordered the plaintiffs to restore possession to the alienees. That order has been confirmed by the lower Appellate Court. It is against it that this civil miscellaneous appeal has been presented.

In our opinion, the application for extension of time ought to have been granted by the District Munsif. He quotes a large number of authorities beginning with Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone (1) and says that he has no power to extend the time. What these decisions have laid down is that by the mere fact of confirmation of the decree by the Appellate Court, further time is not ipso facto given for payment of the money. They are not authorities for the position that the Munsif has no jurisdiction to extend time. Under Order XXXIV, rule 8, last clause, the Court may, upon good cause shown, and upon such terms as it thinks fit, from time to time postpone the day fixed for payment. In Het Singh v. Tika Ram (2) where the decree directed that, if the money was not paid within a particular time, the suit should stand dismissed, the learned Judges held that, as there was no bar to redemption, time should be extended and that the decree did not work itself out. If we turn to the earlier portion of Order XXXIV, rule 8, it is clear that until the defendant obtains an order debarring plaintiff from seeking redemption, the right to apply for further extension of time is not lost. In the picturesque language of Kekewich, J., in Collinson v. Jeffery (3) by the lapse of time fixed for payment, the action is not dead but is in a comatose condition, it will become dead only when an order is obtained under Order XXXIV, rule 8, debarring plaintiff from redeeming. Till then it is alive and is capable of being revised. Under the last sentence of Order

XXXIV, rule 8, Courts have power to extend time for payment. We are, therefore, of opinion that the lower Courts had jurisdiction and were not precluded, by the fact that the money was not paid within the time limited, from extending the period for payment. There is one decision of this Court which, on the face of it, appears to be conclusive of the arguments advanced by the learned Vakil for the appellants. In Moideen Kuppai v. I'onnuswamy Pillai (4) reference was made to sections 148 and 151, Civil Procedure Code, and it was pointed out that these sections have no bearing in regard to applications for extension of time under a mortgage decree. We are not in a position to ascertain what the exact language of the decretal order was in that case. It may be that the order directed that, if the money was not paid within the time limited, the right of redemption would become barred. If that had been specifically mentioned in the decree, no further application by the defendant to bar the right of redemption need have been made. The decree would have worked itself out and would have prevented the Court from exercising its powers, under the last clause of Order XXXIV, rule 8. As we are not in a position to ascertain the facts on which that decision proceeded, we do not regard it as conclusive of the present question.

We have made these observations because the decree appears to be one for redemption. Having regard to the language of the decree and also in view of the charge which the defendants obtained for a portion of the money which was held binding on the family, the decree in this case must be construed as above indicated. In that view, we hold, following Collinson v. Jeffery (3) and Het Singh v. Tika Ram (2), that it was competent to the District Munsif to extend the time and that there was no good cause for his reversing his original order. We must set aside the orders of both the lower Courts and dismiss the petition for re-delivery of the property made by the defendants. As the mistake has been largely due to the laches of the plaintiffs, we do not think that they are entitled to any costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 85—Suit on bahi account—Balance struck and carried forward—Reciprocal demands—Account, whether mutual, open and current—Limitation applicable.

Plaintiff sued for recovery of a certain sum of money alleged to be due on a bahi account. It appeared that plaintiff supplied defendants on occasions not merely with money but with various articles, the values of which were given in the account and debited against the defendants. There were mutual demands between the parties on balances struck up to a certain date, and the account was not closed even on that date, but the balance was carried forward:

Held, (1) that in cases of this kind the Court must look to the dealings as a whole: [p. 454, col. 2.]

(2) that so viewed the accounts between the parties were mutual, open and current: [p. 454, col. 2.]

(3) that the suit was governed by Article 85 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 454, col. 1.]

Imrat Lal v. Lal Chand, 7 Ind. Cas. 715; 75 P. R. 1910; 99 P. W. R. 1910; 124 P. L. R. 1910, followed.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 23rd June 1919, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 13th November 1918, and remanding the case for a fresh decree.

Lala Fakir Ohand, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Ohand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for decision upon this appeal is whether plaintiff's claim to recover Rs. 1,025-4-6, principal, and Rs. 674-11-6, interest, alleged to be due on a book account from defendants, is within time or barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge, second class, held that the suit was within time under Article 85 of the Indian Limitation Act. The District Judge on appeal was of opinion that the accounts between the parties were open, mutual and current up to the 15th of Bhadon Sambat 1963 (20th August 1906), and that as in Sambat 1961 there was a balance in favour of the defendants, it must be held that there was an occasion for a reciprocal demand at one period at least during the currency of the accounts. The learned Judge, however, held that the previous accounts were closed on the date mentioned when a balance of Rs. 53-6 0 was found due from defendants to plaintiff and that subsequently there was on no occasion any balance due from the plaintiff to the defendants, though there were balances due from the defendants to the plaintiff. He held accordingly that Article 85 did not apply to the case; but as it was admitted by the defendants that certain items were included in the balance upon which the plaintiff's suit might be within limitation under the provisions of Articles 52 and 57 of the Limitation Act, he remanded the case for enquiry with regard to such items only.

Plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court, and after hearing arguments at some length I am of opinion that Article 85 is applicable to the present suit. Both Courts are agreed, as I have already remarked, that up to Sambat 1963 the account was open, mutual and current and that reciprocal demands between the parties were possible upon balances struck up to that year. I can find nothing on the record to support the District Judge's view that after the 15th Bhadon Sambat 1963 the nature of the accounts altogether changed and that thereafter it was merely a case of plaintiff's advancing moneys and defendants making payments in cash or in kind in liquidation of their debt. As a matter of fact it is clear that the account was not closed on the date specified, as the balance then struck was carried forward to the credit of the plaintiff in the following account. Furthermore, this is not a case of plaintiff's supplying money and defendants' from time to time repaying plaintiff in money or in goods; for there are items in the account which show that plaintiff supplied defendants on occasions not merely with money but with various articles the values of which are duly given in the account and debited against defendants. The present case is similar in many respects to that reported as Imrat Lal v. Lal Chand (1) and I agree with Scott-Smith, J., that in cases of this kind we must look to the dealings as a whole. So viewed, the accounts disclose independent obligations on the part of plaintiffs and of defendants, and were mutual, open and current and could have given occasion for reciprocal demands between them.

Accordingly I accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the District Judge I restore that of the first Court with costs throughout. In the lower Appellate Court the appellant (Mula Mal) gave up all grounds of appeal except that of limitation.

Appeal accepted.

RESPONDENT.

Madras District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884), ss. 54, 97, 101, 262—Suit to recover tax collected, maintainability of—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Remedy of person aggrieved.

The only remedy of a party aggrieved by the assessment imposed on him under section 54 of the Madras District Municipalities Act is to appeal to the Council under section 97 of the Act. A suit to recover the amount collected is barred under section 262 of the Act and Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to find that the assessment was erroneous on facts or to go into the question of the amount of a person's income. judgment and decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Statut, dated the 22nd August 1918, in Small Cause Suit No. 188 of 1918.

Mr. N. A. Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—It seems to me to be clear that the District Munsif was wrong in holding that section 262 of the District Municipalities Act, IV of 1884, was not a bar to the suit. Clause (2) of that section expressly prohibits a suit in any Court to recover money collected under the authority of the Act, provided that the provisions of the Act have been in substance and effect complied with. There is no case made here that, in assessing plaintiff, any of the relevant provisions of the Act was not complied with, nor is this a suit falling within the proviso to section 262.

Section 54 gives the power to the Chairman to decide the class in which a person has to be placed for professional tax and, in doing so, he has to satisfy himself as to the man's income. The action of the Chairman is subject only to an appeal to the Council under section 97, and section 101 provides that his assessment is final when there is no appeal to the Council, as was the case here. It would thus not be open to the civil Court to find that his assessment was erroneous on facts or go into the question of the amount of the person's income, as that is not a ground on which the application of the prohibition against suits in section 262 can be avoided. In the case cited by the District Munsif, Municipal Council of Ohidambaram v. Venkatanarayana Pillai (1), no question based on section 262 was argued or considered and the case is, therefore, of no authority on the point before me. On the other hand, it was ruled in Municipal Council, Nellore v. Rangayya (2) that even when the tax was wrongly levied on a house which was not completed and occupied, section 262 barred the suit to recover the tax paid from the Municipality and that the aggrieved party's remedy was only by an appeal under section 97 of the Act.

As I hold this suit was barred by section 262, it must be dismissed. The civil revision petition is allowed and the decree of the lower Court is set aside and plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs here and in the Court below.

Trustees Act (XXVII of 1866), ss. 3, 6, 35, 40—Public charitable trust—High Court, power of, to appoint new trustee—Hindu institution—Bombay High Court Rules, r. 75 (z)—Application for appointment of new trustee—Procedure—Practice.

The High Court has power, under section 35 of the Trustees Act read with section 6 of the Act, in the case of a Hindu charitable trust to appoint a new trustee in place of one who has become incapable of acting in the trust. [p. 457, col. 2.]

Applications for the appointment of new trustees should normally be made by petition or summons to be heard in Chambers and the particular Act and section relied on must be specified in the application. [p. 456, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. Mirza, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a motion for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of a trustee who is alleged to be of unsound mind. The applicant is his co-trustee.

The trust is an old charitable trust of a public or religious nature created by the Will of a Hindu lady who died in 1873. This suit was begun in the year 1897, and by orders or decrees of the 29th July 1893 and 11th April 1899 the validity of the trust was established: new trustees were appointed: the charity funds were lodged with the Accountant-General to the account of this suit, and the income was directed to be paid to the new trustees.

In course of time, there have been certain changes of trustees, and for that purpose the parties have adopted a course which seems to me unnecessarily expensive, viz., of applying by motion in Court for the appointment of new trustees. It was said that this course was adopted, because liberty to apply was reserved. I do not find in the orders that any such liberty was in fact reserved to the applicant. Even if there was such liberty, it does not mean that you are obliged to apply in open Court. It means liberty to apply in accordance with the ordinary practice of the Court. Section 40 of the Indian Trustees Act, 1866, expressly authorizes a petition; and rule 75 (2) of the Bombay High Court Rules provides for such a petition being heard in Chambers. I think, therefore, that applications for the appointment of new trustees should normally be made by petition or summons to be heard in Chambers. There is all the more reason for doing that in the present case, as the matter concerns the personal incapacity of one of the trustees, and such matters are, I think, more properly dealt with in Chambers.

It is no doubt true, as the applicant points out, that on two previous occasions in this suit, the appointment has been made by motion in Court. It would not, therefore, be fair on the present application to penalise the applicant for following these precedents. If, however, in future a further appointment should be necessary, then, if the application be once more made by motion instead of in Chambers, it will, I think, be a matter for the Judge hearing the application to consider whether the applicant should not be disallowed any extra costs thereby caused.

Turning next to the motion itself, Counsel first contended that section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code gave me the necessary jurisdiction. In my opinion, it does nothing of the sort. This suit of 1897 cannot be turned twenty-two years afterwards into a suit for the removal of a trustee, who was not even appointed till 1913. Nor is there any consent in writing of the Advocate General thereto.

The matter is far simpler than that. It is an ordinary application for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of a trustee who is no longer capable of acting in the trusts. I, however, wished to be told under what particular section of the Indian Trustees Act or otherwise this application was being made. Care is, I think, required over appointments of new trustees and vesting orders, and I think it would be a wise precaution if it were made obligatory to specify in the application itself the particular Act and section which are relied on, as indeed is the practice in England at any rate as regards vesting orders [see Moss's Trusts, In re (1) and R. S. C. Order LIV (b), rule 4A]. I was not, however, given the necessary information, and in consequence there have been at least two adjournments for that purpose. Section 6 of the Indian Trustees Act, 1866, was next relied on but that applies to vesting orders, and in the present case a vesting order is not required nor indeed is it asked for in the notice of motion.

To-day I have been referred to section 35 of the Indian Trustees Act 1866, which gives power to the Court to appoint a new trustee in all cases in which it shall be expedient to appoint a new trustee or new trustees, and it "shall be found inexpedient, difficult or impracticable so to do without the assistance of the Court." This may be read with section 6, which gives an express power to make a vesting order in the case of a lunatic trustee.

Prima facie, therefore, section 35 would appear to give the Court the necessary jurisdiction. Counsel was unable to refer me to any Indian authority on the point, but I think the careful judgment of Mr. Justice West in Kahandas Narrandas, In the matter of the petition of (2) has a distinct bearing on the present case. It disposes, for one thing, of a possible objection that having regard to section 3, the Indian Trustees Act, 1866, does not apply to a Hindu charitable trust such as I have to deal with. There, as here, the application was for the appointment of a new trustee of a Hindu charity.

able trust. It was objected that the Court had no jurisdiction on petition as opposed to a suit, as the case was not one to which English law was applicable within the meaning of section 3 (see page 170). That objection the learned Judge overruled. Further, I think it reasonably clear that he would have appointed a new trustee under section 35, but for the fact that the trust instrument contained an express power for the respondent (the surviving trustee) to appoint a new trustee with the consent of the petitioner (settlor), and that the respondent was willing to exercise such power. The petition was accordingly directed to be dismissed. It would, however, appear from the foot-note to the report that the parties subsequently agreed to the Advocate General nominating a new trustee, and that such nomination was embodied in the order eventually made.

The English authorities are only useful by analogy: but the analogy is rather close. Section 35 of the Indian Trustees Act, 1866, is practically the same as section 32 of the English Trustee Act, 1850, and section 25 of the English Trustee Act 1893. In M., In re (3) Mr. Justice Stirling held that under the Acts of 1850 and 1852 and in cases where no vesting order was required, the Court of Chancery had power to appoint a new trustee in the place of one who had become a lunatic (see page 83): and that the Chancery Division had still that power under the 1893 Act. As regards vesting orders, the law was different, but that depended partly on a consideration of the English Lunacy Act; and since the above decision, the Lunacy Act, 1911, has restored or given to the Chancery Division the necessary jurisdiction in several cases. The case does not, therefore, apply to India as regards vesting orders. But as regards the appointment of new trustees, it is useful as a decision in support of the jurisdiction under legislation very similar to the Indian legislation.

Weston's Trusts In re (4) is a decision by the same Judge to the same effect. There, however, the trustee was suffering from heart disease, old age (eighty) and consequent impairment of mental faculties. The incapacity to act arose, therefore, from physical and not from mental infirmity.

Under the above circumstances, I am of opinion that I have jurisdiction under the Indian Trustees Act, 1866, to appoint a new trustee in the present case. I need not, therefore, consider whether I have any general jurisdiction apart from that Act.

On the facts, I am satisfied that Harilal Narbheram owing to his mental condition is no longer capable of acting in the trusts, and that another trustee should be appointed in substitution for him. I think it unnecessary to direct any inquiry under section 30 as to his state of mind, or to direct the medical evidence to be on oath and brought up to date. I think I may properly save the charity that expense; but I hope that the medical certificate accepted in the present case will not be adopted as a precedent in any other case. Nor have I thought it essential in the present case to have the application served on Harilal Narbheram [see Memorandum as to Practice (5)]. I think, however, that the title of the application should be amended by being made in the matter of the Indian Trustees Act, 1866, in addition to the existing title.

In the result, there will be an order appointing Mr. Amratlal Bhagwani to be a trustee in substitution for Mr. Harilal Narbheram. The order should state in effect that Mr. Harilal is unable owing to his infirmity of mind to act further in the trusts. The order will then go on to appoint Mr. Amratlal Bhagwani to be a trustee in substitution for him, and to act jointly with the continuing trustee Mr. Bhagwan Rewashankar (the applicant). Then there will be an order directing the Accountant-General to pay all arrears of income and future income to the new trustees until further order.

The costs are to come out of the estate, except that the costs of hearing are to be confined to the costs of one day's hearing only.

Draft order to be shown to me, before it is passed and entered.

Order accordingly.

—Vendor and purchaser—Consideration, application of, towards payment to vendor's creditor—Agreement between purchaser and creditor for substitution of liability, absence of—Vendor's lien, enforceability of.

Where by an agreement between a vendor and purchaser, the purchase-money is to be applied by the purchaser in payment of the vendor's debts, and there is no completed agreement between the vendor's creditor and the purchaser for substituting the latter's liability for that of the vendor, the vendor is entitled to enforce his lien against the purchaser for the unpaid sale consideration. [p. 459, 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in Original Suit No. 13 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. V. Gopalswami Mudaliar, for the Appellant.—The vendor directed the purchaser to pay the sale consideration to third parties. The purchaser communicated this to the vendor's creditors. The vendor cannot, therefore, enforce his lien against the purchaser. The question is one between the creditors of the vendor and the purchaser.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar and M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondents.—There is no substituted contract in this case between the purchaser and the vendor's creditors. The evidence is that the latter expressly declined to receive from the purchaser. Mere communication of the agreement to the vendor's creditor will not do. There must be a completed agreement between the purchaser and vendor's creditor for substitution of the liability. Sivasubramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (1). The vendor does not, under the circumstances, lose his right to enforce the lien.

JUDGMENT.—The 1st plaintiff and his sons, having conveyed certain immoveable properties to the 1st defendant in 1918, in consideration of the 1st defendant paying them Rs. 500 in cash at the time of execution and undertaking to discharge three items of debt to third parties, amounting at the time to Rs. 1,600, Rs. 4,954 and Rs. 946 respectively, brought this suit to enforce their vendor's lien to which they are entitled by section 55, clause 4 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is thereby declared that "the seller is entitled (a) to the rents and profits of the property till the ownership thereof passes to the buyer, (b) where the ownership of the property has passed to the buyer before payment of the whole of the purchase-money, to a charge upon the property in the hands of the buyer for the amount of the purchase-money or any part thereof remaining unpaid and for interest on such amount or part."

It has now been established by the Full Bench in Sivasubramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (1) that a direction by the vendor to pay the whole or a part of the purchase-money to a third party does not necessarily imply a waiver by the vendor of his statutory lien. The decisions in Abdulla v. Mammali (2) and Siva Subramania Mudaliar v. Gnanasammunda Pandara Sannadhi (3), so far as they laid down a contrary principle, were overruled by the Full Bench.

There is an observation in Raghunatha Ohariar v. Sadagopa Ohariar (4) that if the assignee enters into direct relations with the third party on the faith of the original direction and renders himself liable to make the payment to the third party, the assignor cannot, in such circumstances, require the assignee to pay the consideration to himself. So also in Sivasubramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (1) Seshagiri Aiyar, J., observed that if the direction is communicated to the proposed payee, a completed contract may arise between the purchaser and the third party which may preclude the vendor from claiming the money. It is now suggested that such is the case here. It is argued that a new contract between the vendee and the creditors of the vendors to discharge the debts wipes out the former's liability to the vendors.

Reliance is placed on the mention in the sale-deed Exhibit V of the sum of Rs. 4,954 being received by vendor by transferring the liability to pay the principal and interest on the hypothecation bond executed for Rs. 4,000 to Theyagappa Mudali and on the 1st plaintiff's statement in cross-examination that he had informed Kalyanasundaram Mudaliar, who is Thyagappa's brother, that he had transferred to the 1st defendant the liability to pay the amount to him (Kalyanasundaram Mudaliar). But Kalyanasundaram Mudaliar went into the witness-box and did not say that he agreed to substitute the defendant's liability for the plaintiffs' liability; and the 1st defendant examined as defendants' witness No. 4 only stated that when he met Thyagappa Mudaliar and expressed his readiness to pay his debt according to the directions in the sale-deed, the latter said he would consult his father and that sometime thereafter his father received Rs. 1,700 from him and said that the balance would be taken when necessary. This is the only evidence on the point, and we are not satisfied from it that there was a completed contract between the 1st plaintiff's creditors and the 1st defendant that the 1st plaintiff and his sons should be excused from further liability to pay their debts and that the 1st defendant should be accepted as indebted to them in lieu of the 1st plaintiff and his sons. On this point the appeal fails.

The next contention urged for the appellants was that the suit was not maintainable as the plaintiffs have not performed their part of the contract to put the defendants in possession of the lands sold under Exhibit V, notably those which the 1st plaintiff declares to be included in the village of Agra Nirumalai and the 1st defendant declares to be included in South Radha Manakkudi and Kanna Pillai Kattalai.

Now the survey numbers and the extents of each of the items conveyed to the 1st defendant by Exhibit V are given in the schedule to the document. In the body of the sale-deed the villages named are those of South Radha Manakkudi and Kanna Pillai Kattalai and there is a residuary clause conveying such of the lands belonging to the plaintiffs "as may have been omitted to be written in the said villages." The onus, therefore, lay on the defendants to show that any of the lands covered by the residuary clause had not been included in the schedule. In the opinion of the Subordinate Judge they did not succeed in discharging this onus, and after referring to the evidence we see no reason to come to a different conclusion. As regards costs the defendants did not prove that they had made any payments before suit and they did not deposit any sum into Court. They were, therefore, rightly liable for the plaintiffs' costs. The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails on all points and is dismissed with costs.

The form of the decree as drawn up in the lower Court is not as it should be. The amounts to be paid to the mortgagees should be calculated up to the date fixed and entered in the decree. This will now be one in this Court. Time for payment is extended to 25th day of November 1919.

RESPONDENT.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), s. 326, applicability of—Suit to recover refund of octroi duty, nature of—Limitation applicable.

MAKHAN LAL V. MUNICIPAL BOARD OF AGRA.

Plaintiff instituted a suit against the Municipal Board of Agra to recover a sum of money, to which he was entitled under the rules, as refund of octroi duty on goods exported by him from Agra. The suit was dismissed as having been brought beyond the period of six months prescribed by sub-section (3) of section 326 of the U. P. Municipalities Act. The High Court was moved in revision against the order of dismissal, and it was contended that the provisions of the foregoing sub-section referred only to suits arising out of acts done inadvertently or illegally for which a suit for damages would lie, and that that sub-section did not apply to suits for money demandable from a Municipal Board in consequence of a breach of contract or of a legal relation resembling a contract:

Held, that inasmuch as the plaintiff's cause of action had its origin in the refusal of the Municipal Board to pay a sum which it was legally bound to pay, the suit as framed was a suit for compensation within the description of suits in sub-section (1) of section 326 and was not founded upon a breach of contract or the breach of some relation resembling a contract and that, therefore, the rule of limitation contained in sub-section (3) of the section was applicable to it. [p. 461, col. 2.]

Revision against the order of the Small Causes Court Judge, Agra, dated the 5th of September 1918.

Mr. Nihal Ohand, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Mr. N. P. Ashthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case involves the interpretation of section 326 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act (United Provinces Act No. II of 1916). The suit out of which this application has arisen was brought by the plaintiff-petitioner, Lala Makhan Lal, against the Municipal Board of Agra. The claim was to recover a sum of Rs. 218-10-6. According to the facts set out in the plaint the plaintiff is a cloth dealer in Agra who at various times had exported from Agra cloth of considerable value. He claimed that he was entitled, by reason of this export, to have from the Municipal Board a refund of octroi duty. He put in a claim to the Board and his case is that the Board refused to pay to him the full amount to which he was entitled. The balance, which, he said, was owing to him from the Municipal Board, came to Rs. 218-10-6. In paragraph 6 of the plaint, it was stated that the cause of action had arisen on the 31st of October 1917 when the Board refused to pay him the balance claimed.

One of the pleas which was raised by way of defence was that the suit was barred by limitation. This was founded on the provision of sections 326 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act, sub-section (3). The Court below gave effect to the plea and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that it was time-barred. I am not concerned here with any other pleas which were raised in the written statement. The argument, before me is that the Court below misinterpreted section 326 and was wrong in holding that the suit was barred by limitation.

The law relating to the refund of octroi duty is contained in statutory rules which were made under the provisions of the Municipalities Act. On referring to the Municipal Manual, Volume II, page 21, paragraph 73, I find it stated that "a person who exports from a Municipality any goods on which, if they were being imported, octroi would be leviable shall be entitled to receive payment of a sum equivalent to that octroi. This payment (the rule declares) shall be described as refund." It seems clear, therefore, that under the provisions of these rules, which have the force of law, a legal duty is imposed upon a Municipal Board to grant a refund of octroi duty in the cases contemplated by the rules and with the duty a corresponding right arises in favour of the exporter.

Turning now to the provisions of section 326 of the Municipalities Act we find that sub-section (1) provides for the giving of notice of intention to sue when any person desires to institute a suit against a Board, or against a member, officer or servant of a Board, in respect of an act done or purporting to have been done in its or his official capacity. The sub-section requires that a notice of the claim shall be given in the manner prescribed in the sub-section but with these provisions of this sub-section we are not concerned. Coming then to sub-section (3) we find it laid down that "no action such as is described in sub-section (1) shall, unless it is an action for the recovery of immovable property or for a declaration of title thereto, be commenced otherwise than within six months next after the accrual of the cause of action." It is obvious that the actions referred to in sub-section (3) are the suits which are referred to in sub-section (1), and it was by applying the terms of sub-section (3) to the facts of this case that the Court below came to the conclusion that the suit was barred. In order to avoid the application of this special law of limitation it was argued in the Court below that the plaintiff was not seeking damages or compensation and consequently the suit was not a suit of the nature described in sub-section (1), the result being that the period of limitation laid down in sub-section 3 could not be applied. The same argument has been repeated here, though in a somewhat different form. It has been contended that section 326, sub-section (1), refers only to suits arising out of acts done inadvertently or illegally, for which a suit for damages will lie. It has been said that the sub-section does not apply to suits for money demandable from the Board or a member, officer or servant of a Board. The argument in another way is, that the suits referred to in sub-section (1) are suits based upon tort or quasi tort and do not include suits for which the cause of action assigned is a breach of contract or of a legal relation resembling contract.

Several cases have been cited before me, to which I need not refer in giving this judgment. None of them lays down any interpretation on this particular section and as I am of opinion that the wording of the section is quite clear, I deem it unnecessary to refer to any of these authorities.

In the first place it seems to me that section 326, sub-section (1), refers to all suits in which it is intended to bring a suit in respect of an act done or purporting to have been done by a Board or by a member, officer, or servant of a Board in its or his official capacity, that is to say, suits in which the cause of action has arisen out of an act done or purporting to have been done by a Municipal Board or by any of its members or servants. There is no attempt in the sub-section to define suits in accordance with the nature of the relief sought. It is quite true that in prescribing the formalities which must be observed when a notice of an intended suit is being given, it is laid down that the intending plaintiff must specify the nature of the relief sought and also the amount of compensation claimed, that is to say, if the claim is a claim for compensation the amount which the plaintiff desires to recover must be specified. But it is not right to say that there is any justification in the language of the sub-section for the contention that suits are to be divided into suits in which compensation is being sought and into suits in which no compensation is being sought. If we refer to sub-section (3), the point becomes perfectly clear. I have already quoted the language of this section and pointed out that it lays down a rule of limitation for all suits referred to in sub-section (1), "except suits for the recovery of immoveable property or for a declaration of title." I might also refer to the language of sub-section (4), which shows that in a suit to which sub-section (1) applies, relief may be sought by way of injunction. The fact appears, therefore, that the intention of the section is that all suits which claim to have their origin in an act done or purporting to have been done under colour of the Act by a Municipal Board or its members or servants are subject to the special law of limitation laid down in the section.

If the argument of the learned Counsel for the petitioner is that this suit is not based on tort, I am unable to agree with him. I have already pointed out that a legal duty is laid upon a Municipal Board in virtue of the rule which has been framed under the Act and which relates to refund of octroi duty. A breach of a legal duty is a tort and gives rise to an action. I do not accept the argument that this action is founded upon a breach of contract or the breach of some relation resembling a contract. I do not see how it can be argued that there was any contract between the parties in this case by which the defendant Board was legally bound to hand over this money to the plaintiff. The duty is laid upon a Board by a rule carrying the force of law, and, consequently, as the plaintiff alleges a breach of the legal duty, he cannot be heard to say that his action was not founded on tort. I have already pointed out that in paragraph 6 of the plaint the cause of action, which was alleged, was the refusal by the Municipal Board to pay over to the plaintiff the money to which, he said, he was entitled under the rules. Further, I am of opinion that, as framed, the suit is a suit for compensation. The plaintiff is in reality asking for damages by way of reparation for the tortious act committed by the defendant Board, and in that view even according to the argument of the learned Counsel for the petitioner the suit is one of the suits described in sub-section (1) of section 326.

NATESA AIYAR v. MANOYYA AIYAR.

For these reasons I am satisfied that the judgment of the Court below is correct and should be maintained. The application is dismissed accordingly with costs to the opposite party, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 5—Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, rejection of—Construction of document filed with plaint—Adjudication on merits, legality of—'Cause of action,' meaning of—Jurisdiction.

The expression 'cause of action' used in clause (d) of rule 5 of Order XXXIII, Civil Procedure Code, means a subsisting cause of action at the date of the application to sue in forma pauperis, that is, one which has not been extinguished by limitation. In deciding this point the Court must, however, confine itself to the allegations in the petition and must not go beyond them. [p. 463, col. 1.]

A Court should not reject an application under Order XXXIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code on the ground that on the construction of a document filed along with it no cause of action is disclosed. The construction of the document, whether easy or difficult, should be reserved for the trial of the suit. [p. 463, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 26th August 1918, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in Original Petition No. 40 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Jagannadha Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—The lower Court erred in rejecting the pauper application on the construction of Exhibit A. Whether Exhibit A conferred an absolute or only a life-estate was a question to be determined at the trial of the suit. At that stage of the proceedings the Court had to confine only to the question of the pauperism of the applicant and not deal with the merits. It could reject the application if no cause of action was disclosed, but that should be patent on the petition itself.

Messrs. T. R. Vencatrama Sastriar, K. Narasimha Aiyangar and A. Krishna-swami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The Munsif had jurisdiction to reject the application if there was no cause of action. A perusal of the deed of settlement filed with the petition disclosed, in the opinion of the Court, that the plaintiff had no right to sue. Whether the Court was correct in its view or not, it had jurisdiction to pass the order it did.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned Subordinate Judge rejected petitioner's application for leave to sue in forma pauperis without any trial of the question of his pauperism, on the grounds that as regards a portion of his claim he had no cause of action and as regards the rest he was barred by limitation.

The question of the existence or non-existence of a cause of action in this case depended on whether petitioner's mother Baghirathi Ammal had obtained a life-estate or an absolute estate under the deed of settlement executed by his grandfather in 1885. He alleged in his petition that only a life estate had been granted to her and on that allegation his petition clearly disclosed a cause of action. The Subordinate Judge, however, referred to the deed of settlement, which was mentioned in the petition and had been filed along with it and was marked as Exhibit A and construing it he held that it gave Baghirathi an absolute estate, and that in consequence the petitioner had no cause of action to recover any share in the properties sold by her on the ground that the sale was not for proper necessity.

It is contended that the Subordinate Judge acted illegally or with material irregularity in construing Exhibit A at this stage of the proceedings and his order based on such construction should be set aside. A very similar question arose in Gopal Ohandra Neogy v. Bigoo Mistry (1) where a Bench of the Calcutta High Court, following a previous ruling of the same Court in Debo Das v. Mohunt Ram Charn Das (2), held that under section 409 of the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882 the lower Court was not justified in basing the rejection of an application to sue in forma pauperis on its construction of a Will which had been filed with the petition. As pointed out in that case, the construction of the document filed was properly the function of the Court at the trial of the suit and not before the suit was instituted. The new Code has made no material difference on this question.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 70.

(2) 2 C. W. N. 474.

MUZAFFAR ALI v. MUHAMMAD JAWAD.

These rulings were recently followed in this Court in a case under the new Code in the case of Kalliani Amma v. Matathil Veetil Achuthan Nair (3), which itself followed a previous ruling of a Bench of this Court in Govindasami Pillai v. Municipal Council, Kumbakonam (4). In the latter case it was held that, upon an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, the Court should not go into any difficult question of limitation as to which there had been difference of judicial opinion and that Order XXXIII, rule 5, clause (d), of the Code of Civil Procedure which requires, the Court to reject the application when the petitioner's allegations do not show a cause of action, applied only when the absence of a cause of action appeared clearly on the face of the petition. In fact it had been ruled sometime ago by a Full Bench of this Court in Rathnam Pillai v. Pappa Pillai (5) that on a pauper application the enquiry on evidence should be confined entirely to the question of the applicant's pauperism and no evidence as to the merits of the case should be gone into.

No doubt under clause (d) the Court must reject the application if the allegations do not show a cause of action, and that, means a subsisting cause of action at the date of the petition, one which had not been extinguished by limitation; but to decide the point, the Court must confine itself to the allegations in the petition and must not go beyond them. Following the authorities above cited, so far as they bear on the present question, I must hold the Subordinate Judge was not justified in construing Exhibit A for rejecting the pauper application. Though it was filed with the petition and referred to in it, it is after all only a piece of evidence; I do not think the terms of the document can be properly treated as a part of the allegations in the petition. Even if, as the Subordinate Judge thinks, the matter is free from difficulty, which, however, is not clear with reference to Schedule 6 properties, at least the construction of the deed should have been left to the trial of the suit and should not have been determined at this stage. The question should not, in my opinion, be made to depend on the uncertain test of the construction being easy or difficult of determination.

In the view I take, it is not necessary to consider the arguments with reference to the question of limitation. The application must be allowed and the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the petition remanded to him for fresh disposal according to law. Costs to abide and follow the final result of the petition.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109—Suit, value of, below Rs. 10,000—Question in dispute one of evidence—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Leave, whether should be granted.

Where the subject-matter of a suit is less than Rs. 10,000 in value, and the sole question upon which the decision of the case rests is one of evidence, the point is not one of general interest and importance to justify the grant of a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council. MUZAFFAR ALI v. MUHAMMAD JAWAD.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. S. A. Haider, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in a case in which the value of the suit and of the proposed appeal is under Rs. 10,000. But it is said that this is an appeal which is otherwise fit to be brought to the attention of the Privy Council, by reason of the fact that the appeal will turn upon a question of general interest and importance. Now the one point which has been argued is a point which is really a matter of evidence. In the suit one main question was as to the amount of the dower of a lady, named Musammât Sakina Begam. That was in dispute and with a view to influence the Court the kabinnama (deed of dower) of her sister was produced and was put forward to add weight to the contention that her dower was probably the same amount, or approximately the same amount, as that alleged by the defendants to have been the dower of Musammât Sakina Begam. Now the Counsel, who appears to support this application, says that in a case in which the question before the Court is as to the amount of the agreed dower, it is incompetent for the Court to permit evidence to be given of any customary dower which may happen to prevail in the particular family to which the lady belongs, and in support of that proposition he has brought our attention to a case which is found reported as Fazil Khan v. Musammât Karm Begam (1). When that case comes to be looked at, it is found to be a proposition for a most elementary point of law, and the elementary point of law that that case decides is that when a Judge has a duty to decide case A, he must not turn away and decide case B. In that case the plaintiff came forward and asserted that the dower was a specified sum due under a contract. At the end of the case the Judge gave her a decree based not on a contract but based upon something which he found to be a customary dower prevailing in the lady's family. Well he had no right to turn an action of contract into an action based upon a custom. But here the question arises in rather a different form. Neither the trial Court nor the High Court here admitted the kabinnama for the purpose of turning a claim by contract into a claim of custom—but they used it, as they were entitled to use it, in order that having looked at the document it should have some weight on their minds as to the probability of the truth of the case on either side; and as the Court has already pointed out, section 11 of the Evidence Act contemplates just the very thing. You may get sets of circumstances which are strongly evidentiary of the truth of what witnesses say, and those sets of circumstances may be so sufficiently near to the issue in the case as to make it right and proper for them to be brought to the notice of the Court so that the Court should be influenced by them. Now we feel that where there is litigation as to the amount of dower which a lady says was due to her by virtue of a contract, that it is some evidence, at all events certainly receivable evidence, that in her family there was a custom that her dower should be so much, that 2, 3 or 4 of her sisters had been married, that they had each received dower of that amount, we feel that evidence of that kind would raise a presumption, if there were no outstanding points of difference, that her dower would in like circumstances be somewhere about the same amount as the customary dower. It would be evidence which a Judge would be at liberty to reject but also at liberty to give weight to. But of course he must not give a decree on the basis of customary dower. He should give his decree on the basis that the lady, having alleged a contract has proved an agreement to his satisfaction. It is a pure point of evidence and no authority dealing with the law of evidence has been cited to us. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that not only it is not a point of general interest but it is not a point really arguable. The application must, therefore, be dismissed with costs, including fees on the higher scale. We order accordingly.

MARUTI SANTU MORE—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 164, 533—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 21, 26, 80, 91—Confession, oral, made before a Magistrate, admissibility o.

Per Shah, J.—A confession made to a Magistrate during the course of an investigation which is not reduced into writing is inadmissible in evidence and cannot, therefore, be proved by oral evidence. [p. 469, col. 1.]

Per Hayward, J.—An oral confession made to a Magistrate is prima facie relevant under sections 21 and 26 of the Evidence Act, though it has to be proved by oral testimony and not by the production of any writing duly recorded by any Magistrate under section 80 of the Evidence Act. [p. 472, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal by the Government of Bombay from an order of acquittal passed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Satara.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Mr. M. H. Mehta, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case two persons were charged in connection with the murder of a forest guard, named Aba Gudhan, accused No. 1 with the murder under section 302, Indian Penal Code, and accused No. 2 with the abetment thereof under sections 302 and 114, Indian Penal Code, and with causing the evidence of murder to disappear under section 201, Indian Penal Code. They were tried by the Additional Sessions Judge of Satara with the aid of Assessors. The Assessors were of opinion that accused No. 1 was guilty of murder and that accused No. 2 was not guilty of the abetment thereof; but they were divided in opinion as to the guilt of accused No. 2 on the charge under section 201, Indian Penal Code. The learned Judge found that the charge against accused No. 1 was not established, and accordingly acquitted him. He also found that the charge of the abetment of murder against accused No. 2 was not proved and acquitted him of that charge; he found him guilty under section 201 and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for four years.

The Government of Bombay have appealed against the acquittal of accused No. 1 and we are now concerned with his case only.

It is not necessary to set forth the prosecution case in detail. The general outlines of the story have been stated in the second paragraph of the judgment of the lower Court at page 51 of the print which I adopt for the purpose of this judgment.

It is found by the trial Judge that the deceased Aba left Umberkanchan on the 23rd November 1917 for Kolekarwadi and was murdered on his way to that place on the very day, and this is not now disputed. The question in this appeal is whether the accused No. 1 is shown to be the murderer as alleged by the prosecution.

It is urged in support of the appeal, first, that the oral confession made by the accused No. 1 to the 2nd Class Magistrate of Patan on the 1st January 1918 has been wrongly excluded from consideration and that the said confession is true and voluntary; secondly, that the lower Court is wrong in treating the evidence of certain witnesses (Exhibits 21—25) as unreliable as regards accused No. 1; thirdly, that the accused No. 1 pointed out the scene of offence where some blood stains and the upper end of an umbrella, which it is suggested is the broken end of the deceased's umbrella, were found, and lastly, that the confession of accused No. 2 supports the prosecution case.

The first point relating to the admissibility of the oral confession raises an important question of law. In the lower Court the Public Prosecutor did not rely upon this confession. It has been relied upon by the learned Government Pleader here, and the question of its admissibility has been fully argued before us.

The facts which led up to the confession are these. The murder was committed on the 23rd November 1917. The fact of the murder was known on the 4th December, when the dead body was discovered in the limits of Karale, some miles away from Kolekarwadi. The Police investigation commenced on the 20th December and until 30th December apparently nothing was known about the offenders. On the 31st December the accused No. 1 was arrested, and on the following day he was sent to the Second Class Magistrate at Patan for a remand. The evidence of the Magistrate is as follows:—"The Sub-Inspector of Malhar Peith sent to me accused No. 1 Maruti Santu on 1st January 1918 for a remand. I understand that report to mean that the Police wanted that the accused No. 1 should be remanded to their custody. Then I questioned accused No. 1. I also asked him if he was ill-treated or tortured by the Police. Accused No. 1 complained of no torture or ill-treatment. I questioned accused No. 1 in respect of some property referred to in the Police Sub-Inspector's report. I did not reduce that statement to writing, as there is a circular order of the District Magistrate prohibiting Magistrates from recording confessions in cases which are not triable by them. The statement which accused No. 1 made to me was voluntary statement on his part. I refused to hand over accused No. 1 to Police custody and kept him in my custody until he was sent to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, on the 9th January 1918."

It is clear that the alleged confession was made in the course of the Police investigation and before the inquiry or the trial commenced. It could have been recorded under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, but was not recorded. The question is whether any oral evidence in proof of the confession is admissible or, in other words, whether the confession is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document within the meaning of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act.

At the outset I may mention that in my opinion the reason assigned by the Magistrate for not recording the confession does not affect the question of law. The circular of the District Magistrate referred to by the witness is not before us; and I am not prepared to accept the statement of the witness as accurately representing the effect of the circular. If what he states be right, the District Magistrate has issued a circular which is directly opposed to the explanation to section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, which provides that it is not necessary that the Magistrate recording a confession should be a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case. It is quite possible that the so-called circular is merely a recommendation to the Magistrates to see that the directions contained in Supplemental Criminal Circular No. 17, Clause 20, for the guidance of the Police are duly followed. But whatever the circular may be, it cannot change the provisions of section 164 and it has no legal effect so far as the present point is concerned.

I shall first consider the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act and the Code of Criminal Procedure bearing on this point without any reference to the reported cases. The generality of the provisions of section 21 of the Indian Evidence Act relating to admissions is qualified by the provisions of sections 24 to 29 relating to confessions. Section 25 renders any proof of a confession made to a Police Officer inadmissible. Section 23 provides that no confession made by a person while he is in Police custody can be proved against him unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate. This is subject to the provisions of section 91, which provides that no evidence shall be given in proof of any matter which is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document except the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents when that is admissible. In the present case it is clear that no evidence is admissible to prove the contents of the confession, if the confession is a matter required by law to be reduced to writing. This brings me to the provisions of section 164, which provides for the recording of confessions in the course of an investigation under Chapter XIV or thereafter before the commencement of the inquiry or trial. It is urged that the provisions of section 164 are merely permissive and have no compulsory force, as the expression used in sub section (1) is "may record." The confession in question was such as could have been recorded under section 164 by the Magistrate. On a consideration of the provisions of the section and its obvious purpose it seems to me to be clear that such a confession is a matter required by law to be reduced to writing within the meaning of section

EMPEROR v. MARUTI SANTU MORE.

91 of the Indian Evidence Act. Sub-section (2) provides that such confessions (i.e., confessions referred to in sub-section 1) shall be recorded and signed in the manner provided in section 364. The words of section 364 are mandatory. Sub-section (3) requires that no confession shall be recorded unless the Magistrate has reason to believe that it is voluntarily made. The terms of the memorandum which the Magistrate is required to make at the foot of the record show the anxiety of the Legislature not only to see that a confession is voluntarily made and that it is accurately recorded, but to convey an assurance with the record that the Magistrate making it was in fact satisfied at the time both as to its voluntary nature and as to its containing a full and true account of the statement. Taking the provisions of the section as a whole it seems to me that though the Magistrate has the power to refuse to record it if he is not satisfied that it is voluntarily made, he has no such option where he is satisfied that it is voluntarily made. The expression "may record" appears to have been used as the Magistrate has to ascertain whether the confession is voluntarily made. The section is no doubt permissive in that sense. But it is obligatory in the sense that it must be recorded if it is found to be voluntarily made. It is hardly consistent with the purpose and terms of this section to hold that the Magistrate has the option of refusing to record it, even when he is satisfied that it is voluntarily made, if it is to be proved as a confession later on.

The provisions of section 533 have no direct application to the present case. But both its terms and its existence indicate, if at all, that a confession under section 164 requires to be made in writing. Under this section oral evidence is admissible under certain circumstances when the record of the confession does not satisfy the requirements of section 164. But the section has no application where there is no record of the confession and no attempt whatever has been made to comply with the provisions of section 164. The fact that a provision is made to admit evidence within certain defined limits tends to indicate that no evidence outside those limits is intended to be admitted. Further the last clause of section 533, which refers to section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act, also tends to show that the Legislature has impliedly acquiesced in the view that the record of a confession would be a matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document.

In my opinion this construction of section 164 is permissible in view of the observations in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, pages 388, 389 (5th Edition): "Statutes which authorise persons to do acts for the benefit of others or, as it is sometimes said, for the public good or the advancement of justice have often given rise to controversy when conferring the authority in terms simply enabling and not mandatory. In enacting that 'they may' or 'shall if they think fit' or 'shall have power' or that 'it shall be lawful' for them to do such acts a Statute appears to use the language of mere permission; but it has been so often decided as to become an axiom that in such cases such expressions may have—to say the least—a compulsory force and so would seem to be modified by judicial exposition. On the other hand in some cases the authorised person is invested with a discretion and then those expressions seem divested of that compulsory force and probably that is the prima facie meaning." It is needless to cite instances of other Statutes, in which the word 'may' is held to have a compulsory force, as after all whether the word 'may' has a compulsory force in a particular Statute must depend upon the terms and the purposes of that Statute.

An examination of the corresponding provisions of the Code of 1872 in the light of the decisions under that Code appears to me to support the same inference. Sections 122 and 346 of that Code correspond roughly to the provisions of sections 164 and 364 in the Code of 1882 and in the present Code. In the Code of 1872 there was no separate section corresponding to section 533 of the Codes of 1882 and 1898; but the last paragraph of section 346 contained provisions of a limited scope which in the Codes of 1882 and 1898 took the wider form of section 533. Under the Code of 1872 it was held by a Full Bench of this Court, and the view was followed in other cases, that where the record of a confession was inadmissible in evidence owing to some defect in recording it, no evidence was admissible to prove the terms of that record and that a confession was a document that was required by law to be reduced to writing for the purpose of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act; see Reg. v. Bai Ratan (1), Reg. v. Daya Anand (2), Reg. v. Shivya (3) and Empress v. Daji Narsu (4). In each of these cases there was some record of the confession which was held to be inadmissible. But the point of these decisions, as I read them, so far as it is relevant to this case, is that in spite of the use of the word 'may' in section 122 the confession was held to be a document required by law to be reduced to writing within the meaning of section 91. It is likely that section 533 was enacted to relax the rigour of this view. This section is more comprehensive than the last paragraph of section 346 of the Code of 1872. The history of these provisions suggests an inference in favour of the view which I take of section 164.

I may refer here to two decisions of the Chief Court of the Punjab which the learned Government Pleader has invited our attention to. That Court held in Shere Singh v. Empress (5) and Buta v. Empress (6) in effect that section 164 merely authorised but did not require the Magistrate to reduce the confession to writing and that oral evidence to prove it was admissible. The later decision was under the Code of 1882 and there was some record, though a defective record, of the confession. The evidence sought to be admitted was clearly within the scope of section 533 of the Code of 1882. The earlier decision was under the Code of 1872 and in this case also there was some defective record of the confession. But there the learned Judges did not accept the view taken by the Full Bench in Bai Ratan's case (1). I do not see any reason why now we should be asked to ignore the view taken by this Court and to accept the view taken in the Punjab cases as a correct interpretation of section 122. It is quite possible that section 533 represents a compromise by the Legislature between the two conflicting views. In the Code of 1882 the provisions of sections 122 and 346 were reproduced with some modifications which do not affect the present point. The change effected by section 533 does not touch this case. All that I feel concerned to point out is that a confession under section 164 of the Codes of 1882 and 1898 requires no less to be in writing than one under the Code of 1872.

It is significant that the learned Government Pleader has not been able to cite a single instance in which a confession that could have been but was not in fact recorded under section 164, was allowed to be proved by the oral evidence of the Magistrate to whom it might have been made. The case of Emperor v. Gulabu (7) is against the contention urged on behalf of the Crown. I do not think that the fact that the Magistrate was conducting an inquiry in that case is sufficient to differentiate it from the present case. Here the accused was produced before the Magistrate for a remand apparently under section 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the provisions of section 364 apply through section 164. The ratio decidendi of that case would apply to the present case.

It is argued that it is anomalous that an oral confession made to any third person should be provable whereas such a confession made to a Magistrate should not be capable of proof. It is also urged that at any rate the evidence of the Magistrate in his private capacity should be held to be admissible. This argument ignores the distinction which the Legislature has recognised between a confession made when the accused is free (not in Police custody) and that made to a Magistrate in the course of an investigation under Chapter XIV. For reasons which it is not difficult to conjecture, the Legislature has provided a special rule as to the recording of confessions made in the course of an investigation under Chapter XIV before the inquiry or the trial has commenced. And that rule must be given effect to. Besides the accused appeared before the witness as a Magistrate and the accused was questioned by the Magistrate in his official capacity and not as a private individual. I do not think it proper to draw a distinction which is not based on facts and which has the effect of defeating the provisions of law. It seems to me that the contention on behalf of the Crown is directly opposed to the policy of section 164 and of the Criminal Circulars issued from time to time by this Court as to the recording of confessions.

Even if the oral evidence were admissible I do not see how it would be prudent to rely upon it, when such strict safeguards as are indicated by section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, and the Criminal Circular No. 17 are considered desirable to ensure that the confession is voluntary and that it accurately represents what the accused has said. The oral evidence necessarily given after many days would lack that degree of assurance which the written record is expected and required to give. Anyhow as I feel clear that the confession said to have been made before the Magistrate of Patan cannot be proved, I need not consider any further the value of that confession.

The next thing relied upon by the Government Pleader is the evidence of the witnesses, Exhibits 21—25. This is really the most important evidence against the accused; and I have given very anxious consideration to all that has been urged in favour thereof on behalf of the Crown. It is urged, not without force, that there is nothing to show why these five witnesses should falsely implicate accused No. 1. At the same time there are certain general considerations which cannot be ignored and which tell in favour of the accused. In the first place, there is the broad consideration that a Court of Appeal has not the advantage of seeing the witnesses which the trial Court has, and when that Court has not been able to trust certain witnesses, the Court of Appeal should be slow to differ from that Court in its appreciation of that evidence. With regard to two out of these five witnesses the learned Judge has made definite remarks. One of them (Exhibit 21) is said to have given his evidence in a reckless manner and the other (Exhibit 24) did not favourably impress the learned Judge. Generally speaking, these witnesses failed to inspire the confidence of the trial Court, and we have to give due weight to that fact. Secondly, all these witnesses knew about this murder, if their evidence is true, on the 23rd November. They said nothing about it until the 30th December. The Police investigation commenced on the 20th December and even then for ten days they did not break their silence. It must have been known in the village that the investigation was going on and if any of the real culprits were minded to concoct a story to save themselves, they had ample time and opportunity to do so. This circumstance derives some support from the fact that accused No. 2 adopted the unusual and rather suspicious course of going to Karad and surrendering himself to the Police there, who had nothing to do with the investigation on the 31st December, and of making a confession before the Magistrate at Karad on the 2nd. Accused No. 2 is a relation of Babaji and Laxman, who are witnesses in the case. Thirdly, we have the fact that though these witnesses except Dhondi speak of the presence of accused No. 2, their evidence on that point has not been relied upon and that view of their evidence has been accepted or at least acquiesced in by the Crown, as there is no appeal against his acquittal on the charge of the abetment of murder. Fourthly, we have the fact that three out of these five witnesses, viz., Aba, Laxman and Dhondi, admittedly took part in the removal of the dead body, and it is obvious that they are interested in saving themselves from the suspicion which would otherwise attach to them as regards this murder. Lastly, there is nothing to show as to how these persons came to be known to the Police for the first time as witnesses who knew of the murder but were not concerned with it. They came rather suddenly on the scene on the 30th and 31st December, and all of them except Dhondi said that accused No. 1 had murdered the deceased in the presence of accused No. 2. These are, in my opinion, weighty considerations and while apparently there is a bulk of evidence in favour of the prosecution, its quality is open to question.

EMPEROR v. MARUTI SANTU MORE.

Now it is important to remember that the motive, such as it is, equally affects accused Nos. 1 and 2. It seems to me that the evidence in the case points rather to the general unpopularity of the deceased in the village of Kolekarwadi and not to any particular enmity with accused No. 1. It appears from the evidence of the witness Dnyanu (Exhibit 18) that the deceased had conveyed a takid through him to the villagers to assist him in removing weeds from the forest plantation, and on the day of the murder he had asked the witness to inform one Govinda Taral of Kolekarwadi that he was going to Kolekarwadi that very day and that the villagers were wanted for removing the weeds. The witness had conveyed the intimation. Thus it was probably known that he was going to the village that day, and the prospect of his presence for further work must have quickened the feelings against him in connection with the impounding of cattle. I do not see any particular force in the suggestion that the motive for the crime was probably the circumstance that the accused Nos. 1 and 2 had a special grievance against him in respect of the compensation which they along with two others had to pay to the Forest Department. But, however that may be, I do not see how accused No. 1 can be particularly singled out as having a special motive to commit this crime as distinguished from the witnesses or accused No. 2. The murder was committed in the field of the witness Laxman (Exhibit 23), whom the Judge suspects as being probably concerned in the murder. Such property as is identified is produced by the witness Laxman and accused No. 2. Laxman produced the umbrella with the broken end belonging to the deceased and accused No. 2 produced the axe and the pen-knife which belonged to the deceased. The explanation which the three witnesses who helped in the removal of the dead body have given as to how they came to be called by accused No. 1 to help him is entirely unsatisfactory. There is nothing on the record beyond the fact that he is the son-in-law of the Patil to show that accused No. 1 is a man with any particular influence in the village. Under these circumstances the evidence of these witnesses must be viewed with great caution and suspicion, when they say that accused No. 1 alone murdered the deceased. It is needless to discuss this evidence in detail. I do not attach any importance to minor discrepancies in their evidence. I have considered this evidence with care, and I am not satisfied that they state the truth when they attribute the whole responsibility for the actual murder to accused No. 1; no doubt the Assessors have believed them as to accused No. 1; but they find on that evidence that accused No. 2 is not guilty. I am unable to accept that appreciation as either consistent or satisfactory.

The learned Judge was not prepared to rely upon this evidence and I cannot say that he was wrong in withholding his confidence from this evidence as regards accused No. 1.

I have no doubt in this case that the deceased was murdered on his way to Kolekarwadi by the villagers; and it is possible that the accused No. 1 may have been the murderer or one of the murderers. I have considered the theory that accused No. 1 is at least one of the murderers. But on the evidence which is led to show that he was the murderer, it is difficult to accept that theory. On this evidence it is as likely as not that he was concerned only in the removal of the dead body like some of the witnesses and not with the murder. I do not think that the evidence is sufficient to establish his guilt on the charge of murder.

The circumstance that he pointed out the scene of offence where the broken end of an umbrella, probably the umbrella of the deceased, was found at some distance does not carry the case against him any further. It shows his knowledge of the place of murder; but there are several witnesses who have that knowledge and if they can possess that knowledge without being guilty of murder, I do not see any reason why in the case of accused No. 1 any further inference should be drawn. This knowledge is consistent with his innocence on the charge of murder.

Lastly, the confession of the co accused made before the Magistrate at Karad is relied upon as showing the guilt of accused No. 1. Apart from the obvious infirmity of such a confession when it is retracted before the Committing Magistrate and at the trial, as in this case, I do not see how this confession can be any better evidence than the evidence of the witnesses which I have already dealt with. It would be rather anomalous that a confession made by a person which is not good enough to establish his own guilt, should be relied upon to establish the guilt of a co-accused. Even treating him as a witness, which he is not, I would not trust him as regards accused No. 1, having regard to his subsequent retractions and his suspicious conduct in going to Karad, and in making the confession there. I have dealt with these items of evidence separately. But taking them all together I am not satisfied that accused No. 1 is shown to be guilty of murder.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal. The bail bonds to be cancelled. It is to be regretted that the brutal murder of the Forest Officer remains unpunished. It may be possible, however, to initiate proceedings, if they have not been already initiated, against the persons concerned in the removal of the dead body under section 201, Indian Penal Code.

HAYWARD, J.—The accused Maruti Santu has been acquitted of the charge of the murder, on the 23rd November 1917, of the forest beat guard Aba Gudhan in Kolekarwadi, a forest village in the Taluka of Patan. The two Assessors were of opinion that the accused was guilty but a different view was taken by the Additional Sessions Judge of Satara. Hence this appeal by the Government of Bombay.

The accused Maruti had suffered together with other villagers for grazing cattle without permission in the forest of Kolekarwadi which was in the beat of Aba Gudhan, and no love was lost between the villagers and the forest guards as explained by witness No. 6, the forest round guard Laxman Dhondi, and witness No. 2, the Range Forest Officer, Mr. Lobo. On the 23rd November 1917 Aba Gudhan sent word through the witnesses Nos. 8 and 9, Dnyau and Govinda Mahars, that he wanted the villagers to help in weeding the forest plantation and the same day set out for Kolekarwadi. He carried his axe of office and his umbrella and was helped by the witness No. 10, Daji Mahar, on his way to Kolekarwadi. It is alleged that the accused Maruti Santu and another Maruti named Maruti Raoji met Aba Gudhan that same afternoon and that Maruti Santu struck him on the head with an axe while Maruti Raoji was struggling with him. This was seen from ninety yards off by witness No. 12, Aba Santu, and from a greater distance by witness No. 11, Babaji Baloo. The two Marutis were also seen standing besides the prostrate man by the other men who were attracted by their cries, namely, witnesses Nos. 13 and 14, Laxman and Daulata. This occurred in the Nagli fields in the hills of the village of Kolekarwadi. It is further alleged that the two Marutis that same night forced the witnesses Aba Santu and Laxman and witness No. 15, Dhondi, to help them take the dead body seven miles off into the forest of the village of Karale. It was there found on the 3rd December 1917 and showed three axe wounds on the head upon examination by the Sub-Assistant Surgeon. The two Marutis were implicated by an informer on the 30th December 1917. Maruti Santu pointed out the scene of the murder, on the 31st December 1917, where blood was found and the broken end of the umbrella of Aba Gudhan. He was arrested and admitted his guilt, but the admission was not recorded in writing on the 1st January 1918 by the Second Class Magistrate of Patan. The rest of the umbrella was produced the same day by the witness Laxman and a two anna piece removed from the dead body was also produced by the witness Dhondi. Maruti Raoji subsequently produced the pen-knife and axe of Aba Gudhan. He had admitted his guilt after surrender and the admission had been recorded in writing on the 2nd January 1918 by the First Class Magistrate of Karad. The Assessors were both satisfied on this evidence of the guilt of Maruti Santu but not of the guilt of Maruti Raoji. They were divided as to the guilt of Maruti Raoji of the minor offence of getting rid of evidence of the murder. The Additional Sessions Judge disagreed with them as to the guilt of Maruti Santu and agreed with one of them as to the guilt of Maruti Raoji of the minor offence of getting rid of evidence of the murder. This appeal relates to the acquittal of Maruti Santu of the murder. No appeal as regards Maruti Raoji has been made by the Government of Bombay.

It is clear on these facts that the decision depends mainly on the weight to be given to the evidence of the witnesses Aba, Babaji, Laxman, and Daulata. Aba was certainly a direct witness, and some of the criticisms in the judgment would hardly appear justified on the record, but at the same time he was himself implicated in the removal of the dead body and has given an improbable explanation of his help in that matter. Babaji was no doubt an unsatisfactory witness. He denied any direct knowledge of the matter until cross-examined as to what he had stated to the Committing Magistrate. Laxman and Daulata were again not entirely satisfactory. They both gave rather improbable explanations of their help being sought for the removal of the dead body, and it was Laxman who produced the umbrella while the witness Dhondu, who also assisted in the removal of the body, produced the two anna piece said to have belonged to the deceased. It ought not moreover to be forgotten that these witnesses did not relate their version of the matter till more than a month after the murder. The Assessors believed these witnesses and their statements have indeed left the impression on my own mind of substantial truth, but they no doubt laboured under the infirmities indicated and it would not be possible, therefore, profitably to press this view against those held both by the Additional Sessions Judge and my learned brother.

The confessions do not materially modify the position. The confession of Maruti Santu was oral and not entitled to great weight, in view of the fact that it was not thought worth while to take the usual steps to have it formally recorded in writing. It was, however, prima facie relevant under sections 21 and 24 to 26, though it had to be proved by oral testimony and not by the production of any writing duly recorded by any Magistrate under section 80 of the Indian Evidence Act. The confession of Maruti Raoji, on the other hand, though recorded in writing, was not one "affecting himself" as regards the murder. It really exonerated himself from the murder. It was, therefore, not relevant against any other person tried jointly for the murder under section 30, though it had been duly proved by the production of the writing recorded by the First Class Magistrate under section 80 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is not strictly necessary in this view to discuss whether the oral statement was not irrelevant as matter required by law to be reduced to writing within the meaning of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act by reason of the provisions of sections 164 and 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It seems desirable, however, to point out that oral statements during investigations have nowhere expressly been required to be reduced to writing. It was, therefore, held in Reg. v. Uttamchand Kapurchand (8) that oral statements were not rendered irrelevant under section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act by reason of the reference to the writing in section 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code; though it was assumed on the other hand in Reg. v. Bai Ratan (1) that oral statements were rendered irrelevant under section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act by the permission to record them in writing given to Magistrates under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code. The assumption though subsequently repeated, requires scrutiny, as the word used was 'may' record and not 'shall' as in the provision relating to record of evidence on enquiries and trials, and 'may' could never mean 'shall' so long as the English language should retain its meaning as declared in Baker, In re, Nichols v. Baker (9), by Cotton, L. J. If the statements should be recorded in writing under the permissive power, then no doubt they 'shall' be recorded in a particular manner and 'shall' have a memorandum at the foot as to the manner in which they were recorded, and no doubt the manner in which they were recorded would be matter required by law to be in writing and no other proof of that matter would have been relevant but for the exclusion of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act by section 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But if the statements should not be recorded in writing under the permissive power, then they would be unaffected either expressly or impliedly by reference to the provisions of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act in provisions relating to proof of the recorded writings under section 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If, moreover, it was intended to make oral statements, which would be relevant when made to private persons, irrelevant when made to Magistrates, then there would surely have been express provision that such statements should not be proved except by writings duly recorded by Magistrates. It would not have been left to mere implication from the provisions relating to the manner of proof of such writings when recorded by Magistrates under section 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This was no doubt urged without success in Emperor v. Gulabu (7) before a Bench of the Allahabad High Court. But it should, in my opinion, be given further reflection with due deference to those learned Judges, should the matter hereafter be brought up in this Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 145, 146, 435, 439—Preliminary order under s. 145, interference with, in revision, whether competent—Order under s. 145 during subsistence of another order under s. 144, legality of—Joint possession, applicability of s. 145 (6) to—'Evicted,' meaning of—Receiver, appointment of, under s. 145, powers of, extent of—Attachment, order of, scope of—Attachment of moveables, validity of—Enquiry when rival lessees claim under separate trustees—Revisional powers of High Court, when to be exercised—Government of India Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. V, C. 61), s. 107.

It is competent for a Divisional Magistrate to initiate proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, during the subsistence of an order passed by a Sub-Magistrate under section 144 of the Code. [p. 475, col. 1.]

The High Court will not ordinarily interfere with a preliminary order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code except where such order is manifestly illegal. [p. 476, col. 2.]

Mewa Lal v. Emperor, 44 Ind. Cas. 41; 3 P. L. J. 147; (1917) Pat. 363; 4 P. L. W. 359; 19 Cr. L. J. 249, not approved.

The word 'evicted' in section 145 (6) applies to cases where a person is found to be disentitled to the extent of possession which he claims as well as to cases where he is found not to be entitled to possession at all. [p. 476, col. 1.]

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable where the contesting parties are entitled to joint possession. [p. 475, col. 2.]

An attachment under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code connotes more than a Civil Court attachment and implies the taking and keeping possession of the property attached by the Magistrate. [p. 476, col. 1.]

Mewa Lal v. Emperor, 44 Ind. Cas. 41; 3 P. L. J. 147; (1917) Pat. 363; 4 P. L. W. 359; 19 Cr. L. J. 249, dissented from.

There is no objection to the appointment of a Receiver under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, though the powers of such Receiver are not those of a Receiver appointed under section 146 (2) of the Code but are limited to taking possession of the properties and submitting an inventory thereof. [p. 476, col. 2.]

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not give powers to a Court to attach moveables. [p. 476, col. 2; p. 477, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The High Court can interfere with orders under Chapter XII, Criminal Procedure Code, only by virtue of the powers vested in it by section 107 of the Government of India Act. [p. 476, col. 2.]

A Magistrate can take action under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code when rival lessees claiming under separate trustees to be in actual possession are likely to cause a breach of the peace. [p. 477, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the 1st Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kumbakonam, dated the 1st July 1919, in Miscellaneous Case No. 33 of 1919 (Miscellaneous Case No. 14 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the Stationary 3rd Class Magistrate, Kumbakonam).

FACTS.—A Magistrate, on a dispute between trustees as to the possession and management of the temple, dispossessed both and appointed a Receiver. The question was whether the Magistrate had jurisdiction to do so.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Petitioners.—A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, where the disputants are persons entitled to joint possession, even though there may be a fear of a breach of the peace. The proper section applicable in such a case is section 144: Nritta Gopal Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh (1). See also Radha Raman Ghose v. Baliram (2). A mere right of management is outside the scope of section 145: Akaloo Ohandra Das v. Mohesh Lall (3) (co-owners). Makhan Lal Roy v. Baroda Kanta Roy (4). The case of a Hindu manager is different as he is entitled to have exclusive possession: Bhaskaruni Kesavrayudu v. Bhaskaruni Ohalapati Rayadu (5). In the present case the dispute is only as regards the management. See Kandasami Asari v. Narayana Asari (6), Veerabhadra Pillai v. Shunmugam Pillai (7), Sunkara Kylasa Mudaliar v. Kuthalinga Mudaliar (8).

In any case, the Magistrate ought to have confirmed the persons whom he found to be in possession and not to have dispossessed both parties. The power to attach under section 145 is a temporary check to enable him to take a definite course. Once he acts under section 145, he has no power to appoint a Receiver under section 146. For a Receiver is appointed under section 146 after due enquiry. See Muhammad Koolayappa Rowthan v. Sheik Abdul Khaddir Rowther (9). The appointment of such a Receiver was set aside in Subadramma v. Satyam Swami (10). See also Srinivasa Pillay v. Sathayappa Pillay (11), Mewa Lal v. Emperor (12).

Under no circumstances can a Magistrate appoint a stranger as Receiver, for valuable evidence may be destroyed or lost.

Next, no order ex parte can be passed under section 145: Lachmi Singh v. Bhusi Singh (13).

Lastly, the Magistrate has removed the jewels of the temple to the Court. I submit that section 145 has no application to moveable property. They ought to be returned to the persons from whose possession they were taken.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Section 145 applies to this case, as here the real dispute is to exclusive possession between rival lessees from the conflicting trustees. So Nritta Gopal Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh (1) has no application.

Farther, one of the trustees in the present case has set up a right to exclusive possession in defiance of the other trustees. So also section 145 applies.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Even if the contention be frivolous?]

That is a matter for enquiry.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Is it your contention that the Magistrate can make the Pooja arrangements, etc.?]

Yes. That was the case in Sundara Pandaram v. Vallinayaka Nadan (14).

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The best way to punish the parties would be to close the temple.]

That would be punishing the public who are entitled to worship.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—But where is the provision by which the Magistrate can take up the rights and duties of a trustee on himself or confer it on a Receiver?]

The Magistrate is not a trustee but does the work on behalf of the trustees. See Sundara Pandaram v. Vallinayaka Nadan (14). I submit that the Receiver has all the powers of a Receiver in law. Where a word is used in an enactment, it is a fundamental rule of interpretation that the word is to have the same meaning throughout the enactment. There is, therefore, no principle underlying the distinction sought to be drawn between a Receiver appointed under section 145 and one under section 146.

Mr. T. V. Mutukrishna Aiyar, in reply.—The rule of interpretation contended for is too wide to be correct.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—You may add: "Provided that is the convenient meaning."]

ORDER.

BURN, J.—This is an application to revise an order made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kumbakonam under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, on 1st July 1919. There are in fact two orders, the first is the one contemplated by clause (1) of the section and the second is an order of attachment and the appointment of a Receiver, which purports to have been made under clause (4), proviso (2), of the section. Both orders are called in question.

The defendants are the four co-trustees of a temple. Three of them are on one side and one on the other. The former will be referred to as party No. 2 and the latter as party No. 1. The first move was made by party No. 2 by a petition for action under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code. This was disposed of by the Stationary Sub-Magistrate by orders passed on 23rd January 1919 and 27th June 1919. Party No. 1 was restrained from interfering with the temple and its properties. The hearing was adjourned to 10th July 1919 for production of evidence by him. On the 27th June 1919 party No. 1 presented an application to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for cancellation of the order under section 144 and for action under section 145. Thereupon the Sub-Divisional Magistrate stayed further proceedings by the Stationary Sub-Magistrate and made the orders now complained of.

The first objection is that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had no authority to pass such orders until the proceedings of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate had been cancelled. In the circumstances of the case section 145 was the appropriate provision under which action should be taken. The facts show that a personal order against party No. 1 would be ineffective to prevent a breach of the peace. I think the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had jurisdiction.

The second objection is that there was no material before the Magistrate on which he could come to a conclusion that a breach of the peace was probable. It is true that party No. 1 had alleged, for purposes of impugning the order of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, that there was no evidence that a breach of the peace was likely to occur. The Magistrate has, however, to consider all the information before him and it cannot be said that this was not sufficient to justify his action. It is enough to refer to the allegations of party No. 2 in paragraph 5 of the petition of 19th June 1919 and of the fact that each party averred that it had let out the temple lands. The cultivation season was at hand and it was very probable that the rival lessees would come to blows. The third objection is that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction "to initiate proceedings or pass any order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in the present case, where admittedly all the trustees were entitled to joint possession and management of the temple and its properties." It is important to note that the proceedings have not got beyond the issue of the preliminary order. The inquiry contemplated by the section as to the actual possession has not yet been made. A Magistrate acting under section 145 is not directly concerned with the title or rights of the parties. He may have to secure the possession of a person who has not merely got no title but who has obtained his possession by force, provided he has been able to maintain it for two months preceding the preliminary order.

As I read the contentions of the contesting parties, each is setting up exclusive possession. This is a matter which must be inquired into. The legal position of the parties may be of importance in judging of the weight to be given to the evidence as to actual possession. Circumstances which in the case of a stranger would indicate exclusive possession in himself may, in the case of co-owners or co-trustees, be quite consistent with actual possession remaining in all of them. If the contesting parties are in joint possession, then it is clear that no order can be made under section 145, clause (6). These are matters which have to be considered by the Magistrate before arriving at his decision. Interference at this stage is uncalled for and would in fact amount to prejudging the issue which has to be determined [cf. Srinivasa Pillay v. Sathayappa Pillay (11)]. A number of rulings have been cited on behalf of the petitioners before this Court. I think it is unnecessary to refer to them in detail. They all relate to cases when the inquiry as to possession had been completed and all the facts and the findings were before the High Court. There are observations in Makhan Lal Roy v. Baroda Kanta Roy (4), which are so wide as to lend support to the contention advanced before us, but this decision is in conflict with the decision of a bench of this Court in Narayana Asari v. Kandasami Asari (15) and the remarks have been explained as obiter dicta in a latter ruling of the Calcutta High Court itself: vide Basanta Kumari Dasi v. Mohesh Chandra Laha (16).

An argument has been based on the wording of clause 6 of section 145, i. e., that when the dispute is between persons who are admittedly entitled to joint possession, neither can be "evicted" at the instance of the other and that, therefore, section 145 must be held to be wholly inapplicable to such cases. In my opinion this is putting too narrow a construction on the clause. I think "evicted" may be taken to apply to cases where a person is found to be disentitled to the extent of possession which he claims as well as to cases where he is found not to be entitled to possession at all.

The fourth objection is as to the attachment and appointment of a Receiver. It was argued that the Magistrate had no authority to take possession of the properties in dispute. When an attachment is made under section 146, the taking and keeping of possession is contemplated. I see no reason to suppose that attachment under section 145 has any other meaning. One object of the provision appears to be to keep effective control of the subject in dispute so as to prevent the contesting parties from creating a breach of the peace in their attempts to obtain physical possession. With all respect I am unable to agree with the view expressed by Mullick, J., in Mewa Lal v. Emperor (12) that such action has no greater force than any Civil Court attachment.

A mere restraint on alienation would generally be of no use in preventing a breach of the peace, and this is the object with which section 145 is enacted. In order to keep possession a Magistrate must ordinarily act through some agent appointed by him in this behalf. In this case he has been designated a "Receiver." It may be that another name would be more appropriate and that a person appointed with reference to an attachment under section 145 has not the powers which a Receiver appointed under section 146 (2) can exercise. It is unnecessary to consider this question, as the record does not disclose that the individual appointed was authorised to do more than take possession of the properties in dispute and submit an inventory of them or that there is anything in the particular circumstances of this case which made it improper for the Magistrate to authorize him to do so. In my opinion the order does not call for modification.

The last objection is that the order is bad in so far as it directs the attachment of moveables. This objection must be upheld, as section 145 is inapplicable to such articles. In certain circumstances it may be the duty of a person entering into possession of immoveable property under the orders of a Magistrate to take proper steps to secure the movables which are on the property at the time: Kochunny v. Manavikrama Rajah Amyal (17), but the order of attachment is unsustainable and must be set aside.

The order of the Magistrate will be modified as indicated above. In other respects the petition is dismissed.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The Court has no power to interfere with orders passed under Chapters XI and XII of the Criminal Procedure Code except by the use of section 107 of the Government of India Act, because section 435 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code precludes the use of the powers of revision contemplated in clause (1) of section 435. I need not say that interference under section 107 of the Government of India Act should only be made in exceptional cases.

GOPALA AIYAR v. KRISHNASWAMY IYER.

As my learned brother has pointed out, no final order has been made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Hence it is undesirable to interfere at this stage except with such portions of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order as are clearly against law. The attachment of movables under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is clearly such an illegal order and I agree with my learned brother that that portion of the lower Court's order should be reversed. As to what should follow the removal of the attachment it is for the Deputy Magistrate to look into and I am not prepared to give advice on the matter at this stage.

Whether there is a likelihood of the commission of a breach of the peace by the four trustees themselves may be a doubtful point, and the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate says merely that the rival lessees on both sides "are likely to break each other's heads very soon as the cultivation season has commenced." These rival lessees have not been made parties to this revision case and though the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate may not have passed any express order directing the names of the lessees to be entered in the record as parties to the proceedings before him, his proceedings have virtually made them such parties and whatever may be the law on the question—whether one co-trustee in actual physical exclusive possession or in actual exclusive possession by receipt of rents could invoke section 145 for the protection of such exclusive possession against his co-trustees who are entitled to revoke his authority to be in such exclusive possession—no case has been cited in which it has been held that the Magistrate could not take action under section 145, when rival lessees claiming under separate trustees to be in actual possession are likely to cause a breach of the peace.

It seems to me that in such a case, the Magistrate has ample jurisdiction to pass order after inquiring which of the two sets of rival lessees are in actual possession and to secure them in such possession. It may be that in the final order passed under clause 6 after the enquiry under clause 4 of section 145 the Magistrate may ignore the trustees and confine his order so as to affect the rival lessees alone. The jurisdiction of the Magistrate thus being established, I am not inclined at this stage to consider the conflicting rulings quoted before us and I shall only note them below for the information of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate: Nritta Gopal Singh v. Ohandi Oharan Singh (1), Makhan Lal Roy v. Baroda Kanta Roy (4), Radha Raman Ghose v. Baliram (2), Akalu Ohandra Das v. Mohesh Lal (3), Gurudas Kundu Chowdhury v. Rai Kedar Nath Kundu Chowdhury (18), *Basanta Kumari Dasi v. My decision in Kandasami Asari v. Narayana Asari (6) was reversed by a bench of this Court in Narayana Asari v. Kandasami Asari (15) but was followed by single Judges of this Court in two later decisions. But I have no stronger view either way and I shall not be sorry if it be held that actual physical possession of even a confessed agent can be protected as against his admitted principal by the Magistrate in order to preserve the peace. As regards the cancellation of the Sub-Magistrate's order before taking action under section 145, I think that such order may be taken as having been impliedly passed, even if it is necessary to do so, and the order passed by the Sub-Magistrate has become spent even if it has not been cancelled. I might finally state, with great respect, that I have grave doubts as regards the correctness of the opinion expressed in two of the cases cited to the effect that the power to appoint a Receiver of attached property is given under clause (2) of section 146, only when the attachment is made under section 146 (1), but not when it is made under section 145. It may be fairly argued that the fact that clause (2) is a part of section 146 is not sufficient to narrow the scope Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 36—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 21—Deposition of insolvent under s. 36, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, admissibility of, against insolvent in criminal proceedings.

The deposition of an insolvent reduced into writing taken under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act may be put in evidence against him in a criminal proceeding. [p. 478, col. 1.]

The general principle of law is that any statement made by a man on oath may be used as evidence against him as an admission. The only principle on which an exception can really be founded, is the principle that a man is not to incriminate himself. But this is a principle which is not open to an insolvent who, once he has been adjudicated, is bound, because he has been adjudicated, to give information touching his conduct, dealings and affairs, even though he incriminate himself thereby. [p. 479, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. J. Camell (with him Mr. B. O. Ghose), for the Insolvent.

Mr. A. A. Avetoom (with him Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri), for the Official Assignee.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned Counsel for the accused has taken objection to the admissibility in evidence of the deposition reduced into writing taken under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. That is a deposition made by the accused himself, the insolvent in the case, and it is tendered against him in this enquiry on the principle that what a man says himself may be put in evidence against him as an admission. Objection has been taken to that, and if I may say so, very properly taken from the point of view of Counsel for the accused, that, whereas by Statute the public examination of a debtor is, under certain precautions, expressly said to be capable of being used in evidence against him, there is no such careful provision in section 36 and that on principle the deposition taken under section 36 ought not to be allowed.

Now what is the objection to allowing anything that the accused may have said to be put in evidence against him? The first objection that I can see is that it may be said that the deposition was not voluntary but was one that the accused was compelled and obliged to make by the order of the Bankruptcy Court. The authorities which I shall refer to in a moment show that in the case of judicial proceedings taken before the Court that is not an objection. The case of a judicial proceeding taken before the Court is one in which the principle of voluntariness does not really apply at all. All that voluntariness for this purpose really means is that it shall not be under threat or under promise of reward, and when it is a judicial proceeding these considerations do not apply.

The next principle on which it can be objected to is this, that it is a maxim of the law of England and I hope and believe of the law of India, that nobody shall be obliged to incriminate himself, and that is certainly a very valuable maxim. The only thing that is necessary to say about it is that both in England and in India it is just one of the penalties or disabilities of becoming a bankrupt that that principle does not apply. A bankrupt, under section 36, cannot refuse to answer a question on the ground that he may incriminate himself. Any witness other than the insolvent may refuse to answer a question upon that ground, if that ground is really applicable. These really are the objections in principle.

From the point of view of authority the position is this. The English equivalent of the last sub-section of section 27 of our Act lays it down that the notes of public examination shall be read over either to or by the insolvent and signed by him, and may thereafter be used in evidence against him and shall be open to inspection of any creditor for a reasonable time. It was expressly held in the case of Reg. v. Erdheim (1) that that method of proving the answers, in public examination is not the only method. It is the best method to produce the notes signed by the debtor himself; but it was one of the matters decided in the case of Reg. v. Erdheim (1) by a Court, which is of great authority, that even when that has not been done, and the notes are taken but not signed by the debtor, if the person who took the notes gives his evidence, that is quite allowable; in other words that while the Statute points to one way of putting notes in evidence it does not say that that is to be the only way. That being so, the ground of the distinction between public examination and private examination for this purpose has not got very much in it. I find that there is an express authority, namely, the case of Reg. v. Widdop (2), where the principle of Reg. v. Scott (3), Reg. v. Skeen (4) and Reg. v. Robinson (5), was applied to a private examination. Reg. v. Widdop (2) was a case where a man had been made bankrupt under the English Bankruptcy Act of 1869, and the question that arose there was a question as to the admissibility in evidence against him of the depositions taken under sections 96 and 97 of the English Act of 1869. Sections 96 and 97 of that Act are the precise lineal ancestors of our section 26; they are the private examination sections and not the public examination sections. There can be no doubt, therefore, that there is authority, and the best authority, for holding that there is no difference for this purpose between a public examination and a private examination of the debtor. I base my decision both upon that authority and also upon this, that the particular method of putting in evidence, which is contemplated by sub-section (6) of section 27, is not the only method, and the moment this is found, there is really very little difference between them. The general principle of law remains. It is the general principle of law which is found stated, and correctly stated, in the case of Hall, Ex parte, Cooper, In re (6), by Jessel, M. R.—the principle, though subject to exceptions, but after all the main principle, that "Any statement

That is a principle which is not open to an insolvent who, once he has been adjudicated, is bound, because he has been adjudicated to give information touching his conduct, dealings and affairs, even though he incriminates himself thereby.

Under these circumstances, I shall not rule out the evidence that it is proposed to tender, and I overrule the objection.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 27—Confession leading to discovery of property, admissibility of—Confession, retracted, value of—Corroboration, whether necessary.

The information that leads to the discovery of property under section 27 of the Evidence Act, to be admissible, must be the direct cause of the discovery and not merely introductory to further investigation. [p 480, col. 2.]

Queen-Empress v. Commer Sahib, 12 M. 153; 2 Weir 738, followed.

A confession that is afterwards retracted should not be made the basis of a conviction, unless it is corroborated in material particulars and by independent testimony. [p. 481, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the North Arcot Division in Calendar Case No. 34 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The circumstances relied on by the Sessions Judge should not have been made the basis for the conviction of the accused. The discovery of the ear rings was not the direct result of information given by the 1st accused. The 1st accused said that the 2nd accused had the ear-rings and the 2nd accused voluntarily produced them. The information should not have been admitted under section 27 of the Evidence Act.

RAMASAMI BOYAN v. EMPEROR.

The evidence of the Police Inspector in regard to this matter was discrepant in material particulars.

The confession, Exhibit L, should not have been used as evidence. The confession was retracted in the Sessions Court. It was not corroborated by independent evidence. See Queen-Empress v. Rangi (1), Queen-Empress v. Bharmappa (2), Queen-Empress v. Raru Nair (3).

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The information given by the 1st accused as to the ear rings led the Police to question the 2nd accused, who thereupon produced the jewels. It was in consequence of the 1st accused's information that the ear-rings were discovered. It was clearly admissible under section 27 of the Evidence Act.

As to the confession, Exhibit L, there was material corroboration in the evidence of P. W. No. 12.

JUDGMENT.—We are unable to uphold the conviction in this case. The murder is said to have been committed on the 3rd February 1919. The learned Sessions Judge, who has written a very clear judgment, relies mainly on four circumstances as incriminating the 1st accused. He first of all refers to the fact that certain ear-rings were recovered in consequence of the information given by the 1st accused. In order to bring that information within section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act, the information must have had the direct effect of leading to the recovery of the jewels. As was pointed out in Queen Empress v. Commer Sahib (4) if the information is only introductory to further investigation, it will not be evidence under section 27. Assuming that the prosecution evidence is accepted in its entirety, what happened is that the 1st accused, on being questioned, informed the Police Officer that the ear-rings were in the possession of the 2nd accused. Thereupon the 2nd accused was questioned and he produced the ear-rings from his box. In our opinion the information given by the 1st accused was not the direct cause of the production of the ear-rings and consequently it does not come within section 27 of the Evidence Act. Moreover, as pointed out by Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar, the evidence in regard to this matter is inconclusive. The Police Inspector says in one place that the 1st accused gave information about the 2nd accused having the ear-rings. In another place he says that the 1st accused refused to give information and, therefore, recourse was had to questioning the 2nd accused. The other witnesses who speak to this matter, namely, P. Ws. Nos. 2, 3 and 4, do not support the Police Inspector as regards the 1st accused having given the information. Therefore, we are not prepared to accept the evidence of the Police Inspector on this part of the case. We are unable to agree with the Sessions Judge that the statement of 1st accused was admissible under section 27 as it led to the discovery of the jewel. Therefore, we must put aside this evidence.

The second circumstance referred to by the learned Sessions Judge is that there was enmity between the 1st accused and the deceased on account of the woman Sita (P. W. No. 12). The learned Judge has overlooked the fact that among Wadders divorce is common and by the removal of the thali, the man and the woman became entitled to re-marriage. Such being the case we are not prepared to attach much weight to this circumstance, although we agree with the learned Judge in thinking that there probably was ill-feeling between the accused and the deceased.

The third circumstance mentioned by the learned Judge is the ownership of the spade (Material Object No. 2). The Judge points out that it was produced by the 2nd accused that it is an ordinary kind of spade, and beyond the evidence of P. W. No. 12 there is nothing to show that it belonged to the deceased. The last and the most important circumstance on which the learned Judge relies is the confession, Exhibit L, made to the Committing Magistrate. This confession was retracted in the Sessions Court. The law in regard to the relevancy and materiality of a retracted confession has been well established in this Court. In Queen-Empress v. Rangi (1), Kernan, J., points out the qualifications under which a retracted confession can be admitted in evidence. Undoubtedly since then the invariable rule in this Court has been that unless a confession is corroborated in material particulars and by independent testimony, it should not be the basis of a conviction. Queen-Empress v. Bharmappa (2) and Queen-Empress v. Raru Nair (3) accepted this principle. In other High Courts the same view has been taken, vide Emperor v. Lalit Mohan Chakravarti (5) and Emperor v. Kehri (6).

(4) 12 M. 153; 2 Weir 738.

NASIR WAZIR v. EMPEROR.

The learned Public Prosecutor contended that there is corroboration in material particulars in regard to the confession. The circumstances to which he has referred us only touch, so to say, the fringe of the confession and not the important matter in respect of which it was made. The fact that Sita was being kept by the deceased is not a matter which would corroborate the confession; nor is the production of the ear-rings any corroboration because the confession itself was made long after. What is almost destructive of the confessional statement is the fact that P. W. No. 12, Sita, at no time admitted that she and the deceased were seen together and that her husband inflicted the injuries which ultimately resulted in the death of Hanuman. Even before the Sessions Judge she did not say anything about their meeting and their being discovered by her husband. If there was any truth in the confession of P. W. No. 12 who bore no good will towards her husband, she would have complained at once to the Village Munsif and to the father of the deceased. In these circumstances we are unable to place any reliance upon the confessional statement which was retracted in the Sessions Court and of the truth of which there is really no corroboration. For these reasons we are unable to uphold the conviction. We set it aside and direct the prisoner to be set at liberty.

Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act (XI of 1890), s. 3 (a)—Abandonment of animal, whether ill-treatment.

An owner who abandons an animal, with the result that the animal is left to starve in the streets, is not guilty of an offence under section 3 (a) of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act. Such abandonment does not amount to "ill-treatment" within the meaning of the section. [p. 482, col. 2; p. 483, col. 2.]

Criminal application for revision from conviction and sentence passed by a Bench of Honorary Presidency Magistrates.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The accused in this case has been convicted by a Bench of Honorary Presidency Magistrates of ill-treating his horse on the 21st of May last, under section 3, clause (a) of Act XI of 1890. His plea of guilty is recorded in these terms: "I admit having turned my horse out to starve. It was on the road for twenty-five days." The question in this application is whether the conviction under section 3 (a) is right.

In substance what the accused did was that he abandoned his horse. After he turned his horse out, he apparently exercised no control over the animal and the horse was practically left uncared for in the public streets. The section provides among other things that "if any person in any street or in any other place, whether open or closed, to which the public have access, or within sight of any person in any street or in any such other place cruelly and unnecessarily beats, overdrives, overloads or otherwise ill-treats any animal," he shall be liable to punishment by way of fine or imprisonment. All the acts of cruelty mentioned in this clause, viz., beating, overdriving and overloading suggest that the person concerned exercises an immediate control over the animal at the time. In the present case the accused is said to have ill-treated the horse by turning it out to starve.

It was suggested, on behalf of the accused in the course of the argument, that it would not be ill-treating the animal within the meaning of section 3 (a) to let it starve. I am, however, not prepared to accept this argument. It may be that where the person is in a position to exercise control over the animal and to prevent starvation, he may effectively ill-treat an animal by starving it.

But it seems to me that in the present case the accused ceased to exercise any control over the animal when he turned it out in the streets. In order that he can ill-treat his horse under section 3 (a), it seems to me essential that in fact he must be in a position to exercise control over the animal at the time of the alleged ill-treatment. The statement of the accused is consistent with his having abandoned the animal altogether. The Act does not prohibit in terms a total abandonment of the animal by the owner; and the scheme of the Act does not suggest any such prohibition. It is apparently open to the owner under the Act to get rid of an animal, if so minded, by killing it or by abandoning it. It is clear from section 5 that the Act does not prohibit the killing of an animal; it prohibits the killing of an animal in an unnecessarily cruel manner. There is no express provision relating to the abandonment of an animal by its owner.

It may be that in the case of animals thus abandoned by their owners in the City of Bombay the provisions of sections 52 and 53 of the Bombay City Police Act, IV of 1902, may afford some remedy. For under those provisions it is the duty of every Police Officer and it is lawful for any other person to seize and to take to any public pound for confinement therein any cattle found straying in any street, and if the owner does not come forward to claim the animal, the procedure laid down in section 53 can be followed. Outside the Presidency Towns, the provisions of the Cattle Trespass Act may serve the purpose more or less to the same extent as the provisions of the City of Bombay Police Act just referred to. I do not suggest that the provisions relating to the impounding of cattle afford an adequate remedy for an evil arising in consequence of the abandonment of animals by their owners. But I feel clear that such an abandonment is not prohibited by the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act; and the starvation of the animal after it is abandoned is not any ill-treatment of the animal by a person who has ceased to exercise any control over it. In the present case there is nothing to show, and it is not suggested in the argument before us, that the subsequent conduct of the accused indicated any attempt or intention on his part to resume control over the horse after he turned it out on or about the 1st May. I do not think, therefore, that the conviction under section 3 (a) can be sustained.

If the evil resulting from the animals being thus abandoned in the streets assumes any appreciable proportion, it would be a matter for the Legislature to consider whether the Act should not be suitably amended.

I would, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

HAYWARD, J.—The accused Nasir Wazir is a hack victoria driver and some time in May last turned his horse out into the street, where it was subsequently found wandering by an agent of the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals. He admitted at his trial that he had turned the horse out to starve and on that plea he was found guilty under section 3 (a) of Act XL of 1890.

The accused's act in turning out his horse to starve in the streets of a large town would no doubt be ill-treatment, in the ordinary meaning of the term. But the question to be decided here is whether it is ill-treatment which has been made punishable by law. It has been argued that his act amounted to mere abandonment and at most to a passive ill-treatment, similar to that of the man who left an injured horse to die and was held to have committed no offence in the case of Everitt v. Davies (1) in England. It has been urged that this passive ill-treatment is distinguishable from the wilful leaving of a horse standing without food in a cab in a street, which was held to have been an offence in the case of Anderson v. Wood (2) in Scotland. It has been argued, on the other hand, that the abandonment of the horse to starve comes within the words "cruelly beats, overdrives, overloads or otherwise ill-treats" in clause (a), as the words "has in his possession for sale any animal suffering pain by reason of starvation or other ill-treatment" occur in clause (c) and as the starvation here resulted in a street, which would be a public place within the meaning of section 3 of Act XI of 1890.

(1) (1878) 38 L. T. 360; 26 W. R. 332.

It seems to me, however, that abandonment of a horse in this manner, however morally reprehensible, has not been made expressly punishable by law. Abandonment has not been forbidden and alone would not amount to ill-treatment. It is not akin to cruelly beating, overdriving, or overloading, and could not without strain of language be brought within the connected words "otherwise ill-treats." It cannot, moreover, be said without loose speaking that an abandoned horse is starved by the man who was previously its owner, any more than it could strictly speaking be said that a dismissed workman was being starved by his former master. It might, on the other hand, properly be said that a horse kept standing in a cab without food was being starved by its driver, just as it might truly be said that a workman who was being sweated was being starved by his employer. It has also to be noticed that starving a horse has not been made per se an offence. It is no offence under the enactment to starve a horse in a stable. It would at most be an offence to starve a horse on a cab-stand when it might be punishable as ill-treatment in a public place under clause (a), or to offer it when suffering pain from starvation for sale in a street when it would be punishable as an offence in a public place under clause (b) of section 3 of the Act. It would also be an offence to use a horse which had become unfit to work through starvation under section 6 and it might also be an offence to let an animal, disabled by starvation, die in a street or other public place under section 7 of the Act. But it would, in my opinion, be an abuse of our authority to hold that abandonment of a horse was an offence because starvation might result, when no express provision has been made to that effect in the Act and when that Act—XI of 1890—has, as indicated, been strictly limited in its operation by the Legislature. It should be observed that starvation ought not to result in the town of Bombay, if it were recognized practically that any person might and every Police Officer ought to take any horse found straying in any public place to be found under section 52 of the Bombay City Police Act, IV of 1902. It must also be presumed that there were good reasons for the restrictions imposed in the operation of the law, which was to have force not merely in presidency towns but throughout the rural districts of India.

Where in a case before a Court of Session the attention of the Court is invited to the fact that by reason of unsoundness of mind the accused is incapable of making his defence, the provisions of section 465, Criminal Procedure Code, make it obligatory on the Sessions Judge, as a preliminary to the hearing of evidence on the charge, to try the issue whether or not the accused, as he stands before the Court, is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence. JHABBU v. EMPEROR.

Dr. J. N. Misra, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Jhabbu, blacksmith, has been found guilty under section 302, Indian Penal Code, of the murder of Musammam Resham, the wife of his own brother Jhamman. In his petition of appeal to this Court, Jhabbu says that he did not kill his brother's wife; that he was not in his proper senses at the time when the woman was killed, or for some time previously, and that he does not know who killed her. In the Sessions Court Jhabbu refused to answer any of the questions put to him by the Sessions Judge. In the Court of the Committing Magistrate he was asked whether he had struck his sister-in-law Musammam Resham with a hammer, causing her such bodily injury as led to her death. To this he replied, "I do not remember if I did so." Only one further question was asked of him and in reply to that he said that he did not know why he was being accused of the crime. The case for Jhabbu has been very satisfactorily argued before us by Counsel, and as so laid before us that case involves two distinct points. There is of course the question whether the learned Sessions Judge was or was not right in holding that the accused was not entitled to an acquittal under the general exception of insanity as defined by section 84, Indian Penal Code. This question, however, can only arise after the Court is satisfied that the accused was properly and legally tried, in other words, that the procedure laid down in sections 464 and 465 of the Criminal Procedure Code was duly followed by the Committing Magistrate and by the Sessions Judge respectively. The vernacular record shows that, when the case was first brought before the Committing Magistrate, the latter undoubtedly found reason to believe that the man was of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence. He so far complied with the provisions of the law that he caused enquiry to be made into the fact of such unsoundness and caused the accused's person to be examined by an officer who is described as the Civil Assistant Surgeon of Bareilly. So far as the record goes, it is not quite clear whether the officer in question was the proper officer to perform this duty under the provisions of the section in question, but in any case the Committing Magistrate failed to follow up his action by examining the Civil Assistant Surgeon and reducing his examination to writing, as required by law. In saying this we are not overlooking the fact that, when the Civil Assistant Surgeon was examined by the Magistrate on the 7th of August 1919, that is almost a month and a half after the accused Jhabbu had first been brought before the Magistrate, he did depose that during the period between the 4th July and the 22nd July 1919 he had kept Jhabbu under observation and had come to the conclusion that he was sane and could understand what he was doing. This, however, is unsatisfactory for two reasons. In the first place, section 464 of the Criminal Procedure Code clearly contemplates that a Magistrate who has once found reason to doubt the soundness of mind of an accused person brought before him shall examine the medical expert whose opinion has been taken as a preliminary to the holding of the enquiry and not, as was done in this case, at the very close. In fact the Committing Magistrate was bound to enquire, before he began to record evidence in this case, whether the accused Jhabbu was or was not incapacitated by unsoundness of mind from making his defence. He did not record any finding to that effect before entering upon the enquiry, and his subsequent examination of the Civil Assistant Surgeon does not really cover the defect. Moreover, the evidence of the medical expert, as it stands, is directed to the state of the accused's mind between the 4th and the 22nd July 1919; what the Magistrate had to find was that the accused person before him was capable of making his defence when the enquiry commenced, that is to say, on the 2nd of August. This we might have passed over as an irregularity not material to the case, if we could have felt satisfied that the Sessions Judge himself had fully complied with the provisions of section 465 of the Criminal Procedure Code. So far as the record goes, it would seem that the learned Sessions Judge was satisfied from the Committing Magistrate's record, and perhaps from the appearance of the accused person before him, that there was no reason to doubt Jhabbu's soundness of mind or his capacity of making his defence. In our opinion, however, the record discloses strong reasons for casting doubt on this point. There is evidence on the record that the accused had been in custody at Budaun, not long before the commission of the alleged offence, as a dangerous lunatic. We notice that Counsel who represented the accused at the Sessions trial particularly asked that evidence might be taken as to these proceedings at Budaun and invited the attention of the Court to the fact that the accused seemed to be incapable of making a proper defence, at any rate to this extent that the learned Counsel was unable to obtain any instructions from him. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the provisions of section 465, Criminal Procedure Code, were obligatory on the Court and that, as a preliminary to the hearing of evidence on the charge, the learned Sessions Judge should first of all have tried the plain issue whether or not the accused person, as he stood before him, was of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence. The proof of the fact of the soundness or unsoundness of mind of the accused is to be deemed part of his trial before the Court, and in the absence of a clear finding on this point, we are of opinion that the entire proceedings in the Sessions Court are vitiated and ought to be set aside. We accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence in this case, but we do not acquit the accused of the offence charged. We order that he be placed on his trial again before the Sessions Court of Bareilly and that the trial do commence with the proceedings required by section 465, Criminal Procedure Code, leading up to a formal finding as to the capacity of the accused for making a defence. If the accused is now found to be capable of making a defence, the trial will proceed, and the onus will be laid on the accused of satisfying the Court that, on the date on which he committed the crime, he was by reason of unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing the nature of his act, or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law. There has been some argument before us as to the law on this point. We are content to refer to the case of Muhammad Husain v. Emperor (1), partly because one of us was a party to that decision, and also because it contains a complete discussion, from three different points of view, of the law on the subject of criminal, as distinguished from medical, insanity, and a review of a number of previous authorities. In conclusion we may say that in our opinion it is important, both as bearing on the enquiry under section 465, Criminal Procedure Code, and on the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused, that the evidence of the medical expert who examined Jhabbu at Budaun should, if possible, be brought upon the record. With these directions we return the case to the Court of Session at Bareilly for a new trial as ordered. Pending his re-trial the accused should be detained in custody as an undertrial prisoner.

Case returned.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 304, 323, 325—Death of child caused accidentally in scuffle—Offence.

A woman who was holding a child in her arms intervened unexpectedly in a scuffle between the accused and her husband on a dark night. The accused aimed a blow at the husband with his stick, but it accidentally struck the child and caused his death:

Held, that the accused was guilty only of the offence of causing simple hurt, inasmuch as he could not have intended to cause or to have known that he was likely to cause either death or grievous hurt. [p. 486, col. 2.]

CHATUR NATHA v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case in spite of the argument to the contrary, we are satisfied that accused No. 2 did cause injury to the baby, which resulted in its death. There is clear evidence in the case that accused No. 2 dealt the blow and there is no reason to distrust the evidence which has been believed by the trial Judge and the Assessors. The question, however, as to what offence has been committed by the appellant is one of some difficulty. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that it was not likely that the blow would have caused the death of an adult, but it might well have caused grievous hurt. On that basis, he found that the accused No. 2 was guilty of causing grievous hurt. The circumstances under which this blow came to be inflicted are briefly these. The woman with the child in her hand intervened, apparently unexpectedly, in the course of a scuffle between accused No. 2 and his party on the one hand and her husband and his brother on the other hand. It was about the middle of a dark night that this took place and the blow which was aimed by accused No. 2 at the husband of the woman, whom he intended to attack, fell unknowingly on the child. It is clear that the accused No. 2 had the intention of thereby causing hurt to a person, and, therefore, he would be guilty of causing simple hurt. The learned Judge has expressed his opinion, and I agree with him, that the blow could not have caused the death of an adult and such a blow could not be treated as evidencing any intention on the part of the accused to cause the death of the person against whom he aimed it. There is equal difficulty, in my opinion, in treating this as a case of grievous hurt. It is difficult under the circumstances of the case to hold that the accused intended to cause or knew himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. There is no doubt that he had a stick in his hand. But we do not know anything about the size and nature of the stick. It is not established on the evidence that the stick with the iron rings produced in the case was the stick used on the occasion. Taking it to be an ordinary stick which the accused No. 2 used at the time, there is a reasonable doubt in my mind as to whether under the circumstances he could be said to have intended to cause or to have known himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. He did not know that he was hitting a baby and the nature of the blow, taken with reference to the person against whom it was aimed, cannot be taken to indicate the necessary intention or knowledge as to causing grievous hurt. The conviction under section 325 does not appear to me to be justified. The proper conviction under the circumstances would be under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code.

I would accordingly alter the conviction to one under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and reduce the sentence to rigorous imprisonment for one year.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. The accused has not, in my opinion, been proved to have intended to cause or to have known that he was likely to cause grievous hurt. It is true that he went armed with a stick with others to assault his enemies in the middle of the night. But it has not been proved what was the nature of the stick which he took, and it cannot be presumed that it was a dangerous weapon in default of any evidence of serious injuries having been given to the men whom he went to assault. The only injury apparently was the injury to the child and that on the evidence was accidental. It was no doubt in the result grievous, but he could not properly be held in the circumstances guilty of voluntarily having caused that grievous hurt. He would, therefore, be liable to conviction under section 323 and not under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code.

Conviction altered; Sentence reduced.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 133—
Claim based on substantial grounds—Order directing party to establish claim in Civil Court, legality of.*

Where in a proceeding under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Magistrate finds that the claim of right set up is based on substantial grounds, he has no jurisdiction to make an order directing that party to establish his claim in a Civil Court. [p. 488, col. 2.]

Rule against an order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Barrackpore, dated 1. th May 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, with him Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee) for the Petitioner.—The petitioner before your Lordships is the second party in a proceeding under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It was alleged that I had obstructed a public pathway leading to a Ghat which I claimed as my private property. The learned Magistrate took evidence and found that my claim was bona fide and in consequence he dropped the proceedings against me, but at the same time ordered me to go to the Civil Court within three months to establish my claim. It is against this latter order that a rule was issued by this Hon'ble Court.

The learned Magistrate has found that the claim of right set up by me cannot be summarily dismissed as mala fide. He is, therefore, justified in dropping the proceedings against me under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code. But I submit that the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct me to go to the Civil Court within three months to establish my claim. When my claim of right was found to be bona fide and not a mere pretence to oust the jurisdiction of the Court, the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order complained of. Refers to Manipur Dey v. Bidhu Bhushan Sarkar ().

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with him Babus Nanda Gopal Banerjee, Kanaidhan Dutt and Hari Oharan Banerjee) for the Opposite Party.—The mere raising of the question of bona fides is not sufficient. There must be strong reasons for the bona fides of the claim. I have shown that there was an uninterrupted user of the Ghat by the public for over 30 years, that there was a kabuliyat to the effect that the Ghat will be used by the public for religious rites and that the Ghat was repaired by the public from public funds.

[SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The main question is, whether the Magistrate can say to one of the parties to go to the Civil Court first?]

Under the circumstances of the case the Magistrate was justified in making the order.

It is open to the Magistrate to order the second party to go to the Civil Court to establish his claim within a reasonable time: Luckhee Narain v. Ram Kumar (2), Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (3). If the claim of the second party is bona fide, it is reasonable to expect that he will not hesitate to go to a Civil Court to have his right declared.

The claim of the second party must also be a well founded claim: Luckhee Narain v. Ram Kumar (2).

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee in reply.—I submit that the decision in Luckhee Narain v. Ram Kumar (2) is erroneous and subsequent decisions based on it have only perpetuated the error.

Refers to arguments of Counsel (Mr. Dutt's) in Luckhee Narain v. Ram Kumar (2).

When there is a bona fide claim of right, the parties are to be referred to the Civil Court and the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court will be ousted. Refers to Basaruddin Bhuiyah v. Bahar Ali (4) and Askar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (5).]

There is no authority for the proposition that where my claim is found to be bona fide, I have further to show that my claim is well founded, [Refers to Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu (6)] The question of well-founded or ill-founded claims does not arise. Moreover, the learned Magistrate had nowhere found that my claim was not well founded.

SORAB MERWANJI ALPAIVALLA v. EMPEROR.

[SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—If you do not go to the Civil Court within three months under the order of the Magistrate, can fresh proceedings be taken against you?]

If the order of the Magistrate stand, then of course fresh proceedings may be taken. It is open to the Magistrate to refer both the parties to the Civil Court, but not one of them: Sarojbasini Devi v. Sripati Oharan (7).

JUDGMENT.—In this matter a Rule has been issued calling upon the District Magistrate and the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barrackpore, dated the 19th May 1919, referred to in the petition herein should not be set aside or such other order passed in the matter as to this Court may seem fit, on the first ground mentioned in the petition which runs as follows:—“For that having found your petitioner’s claim to be bona fide the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct your petitioner to go to the Civil Court within three months to establish his claim.”

It appears that on the 5th November 1918, an application was made by the opposite party before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, alleging that the Ghat referred to in the petition together with the way leading to it was a public one and that the same had been obstructed by the petitioner and praying for an order under section 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On this application a conditional order was passed by the Magistrate on the 23rd November 1918 ordering the removal of the obstruction complained of within 20 days, or show cause against the same. Certain proceedings thereafter followed and on the 9th December 1918 the learned Magistrate found that the claim of right, as made by the petitioner, was made in good faith and he accordingly set aside the conditional order and dropped the proceedings. The petitioner was, however, directed to go to the Civil Court within a period of three months, and against this portion of the order this Court was moved and the matter finally came on before this Court on the 14th February 1919, when it was ruled that inasmuch as the learned Magistrate had made the order of the 9th December 1918 without taking evidence that might be adduced by the parties, the order should be set aside and the case remitted to the Magistrate to be taken up from the point at which it stood before the order was made. The learned Magistrate has now taken evidence and he finds that the claim of right set up by the petitioner cannot be dismissed summarily as mala fide. He has, however, while dropping proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, directed the petitioner to go to the Civil Court. Against this portion of the order the present Rule has been obtained.

We have now heard the learned Vakils for the petitioner and the opposite party at length and have considered the authorities cited before us, and in particular the cases in Luckhee Narain v. Ram Kumar (2) and Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (3). As we read the judgment of the learned Magistrate, he nowhere found that the claim of the petitioner was not well founded; in fact taking the judgment as a whole the conclusion is irresistible that the Magistrate was of opinion that the claim of right set up by the petitioner was based on substantial grounds. In this view of the matter, we think the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order complained of and we accordingly make the Rule absolute. We do not think it necessary to consider whether, if and when a claim is found to be bona fide and not a mere pretence to oust the jurisdiction of the Court, it is necessary to consider further, as appears to have been laid down in Luckhee Narain v. Ram Kumar (2), whether the claim is well founded and if not well founded, whether the Magistrate has a right to direct one of the parties to go to the Civil Court within a reasonable time and on his failure to do so to resume the proceedings.

Rule made absolute.

framed by tramways company—Notice modifying bye-laws not sanctioned by Governor in Council, validity of.

A notice issued by the Bombay Tramway Company modifying a bye-law framed by the Company under section 24 of the Bombay Tramways Act and duly sanctioned by the Governor in Council, has no legal effect unless it is sanctioned by the Governor in Council. [p. 490, col. 2; p. 491, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal application for revision from the conviction and sentence passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Campbell and Vicaji, for the Company.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The petitioner before us was charged before the Chief Presidency Magistrate with the breach of two bye-laws under the Bombay Tramways Act (Bombay Act I of 1874). It was alleged against him that he did not leave a tram car when asked to do so, even though the interior of the car contained the full number of passengers, and, secondly, that he travelled on the rear platform of the tram car contrary to the provisions of bye-law No. 6.

The trial Magistrate has found the accused guilty of both the charges, and sentenced him to pay fines in respect of those charges.

The facts are not in dispute. On the 4th March last the petitioner was found standing on the rear platform of a tram car near Bori Bunder when, it may be taken for the purposes of the present petition, the tram car was full. He was asked to leave the car, but he refused to do so, and hence the prosecution. The bye-laws in question have been framed under section 24 of the Bombay Tramways Act. The Bombay Electric Supply and Tramway Company, Ltd., who are in the position of grantees under the Act in virtue of the provisions of section 31 of the Act, have power to make regulations from time to time under section 24 of the Act, among other things, for regulating the travelling in or upon any carriage belonging to them; and for better enforcing the observance of all or any such regulations it is lawful to the grantees, subject to confirmation thereof by the Governor in Council, to make bye-laws for any of the purposes mentioned in the section and from time to time repeal or alter such bye laws,

The bye-laws, including bye-laws Nos. 6 and 7, were duly confirmed by the Governor in Council, and published as required by the section. Subsequently in February 1917, a notice to passengers was issued by the Traffic Manager of the Company allowing until further notice three passengers, who may wish to do so, to stand on the rear platform of all cars excluding the front car of a two-car tram. In February 1919, however, this notice was in effect cancelled and a new notice to passengers was issued by the Managing Director under which only three persons (in addition to any Conductor or Inspector on duty there) belonging to any of the four classes of persons mentioned in the notice were to be permitted to stand on the rear platform of a tram car, and passengers other than those mentioned in the first clause of the notice or in excess of the prescribed number were prohibited from standing on the rear platform and were told that any passenger acting contrary to the terms of the notice would render himself liable to removal and to prosecution under the Company's bye-laws. Both these notices have been quoted in the judgment of the lower Court. It is an admitted fact that neither the first notice of February 1917 nor the second notice of February 1919 was confirmed by the Governor in Council. It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that the first notice must be assumed for the purpose of this application to have been validly issued and must be taken to have effected a modification of bye-law No. 6; and that the second notice issued by the Tramway Company is illegal so far as it modifies the first notice. On the other hand it is argued that neither notice has any legal validity so far as it modifies bye-law No. 6 and that any person offending against bye-law No. 6 can be proceeded against according to law. It is further argued on behalf of the Company that under section 24, apart from the bye laws, the Company has the power to make regulations for travelling in or upon any carriage and that though these notices may not have the force of bye laws any breach of which is punishable under the Act, in so far as neither notice is restrictive of any right of a passenger travelling by a tram car, they were properly issued by the Tramway Company in order to regulate the traffic. The terms of bye-law No. 6 providing that no person shall travel on the platform of any car are clear, and the act of the accused is clearly contrary to the terms of this bye-law. His action is not contrary to the terms of the notice of February 1917, but that notice was cancelled in February 1919, and as a matter of fact the petitioner has acted in contravention of the terms of the second notice. In the view I take of these notices it is unnecessary to consider whether the accused would be justified in standing on the rear platform as he did either under the first notice or under the second notice. In my opinion both these notices within certain limits involve a modification of bye-law No. 6 and to that extent require the confirmation of the Governor in Council under section 24 to have any legal effect. As the modifications of the bye-laws involved in these notices have not been confirmed by the Governor in Council, for the purposes of this case it must be taken that neither the first notice nor the second notice existed. The propriety of the act of the accused under the Tramways Act must be judged with reference to the terms of bye-law No. 6; and it is clear on the facts that he acted contrary to the terms of that bye-law.

As these two notices to passengers have been discussed before us, I think it is right to point out that when a rule in the terms of bye-law No. 6 is framed and when any modification of that rule is contemplated, it is but right that it should be made in the manner provided by law, that is it should be duly confirmed by the Governor in Council and published as required by section 24. In practice such notices involving modification of any bye-law without such confirmation are apt to mislead the travelling public. For instance under the first notice the passengers would naturally be under the impression that so long as the number mentioned in the notice is not exceeded, any person can stand on the rear platform, though even then every one of the three persons other than the servants or officers of the Company would be offending against bye-law No. 6; and under the second notice so far as it refers to classes of persons other than the servants or officers of the Company in the first clause, the result would be the same, i. e., any such person not being a servant or officer of the Company would be offending against bye-law No. 6, even though he may be permitted to stand on the rear platform under the notice. That is a state of things brought about by these notices, which is not desirable as it in effect involves a differential treatment of persons offending against bye-law No. 6.

The other two points raised on behalf of the petitioner may be briefly dealt with. The first is that these rules were not put up in a conspicuous place inside the tram car as required by section 17 of the Act and bye-law No. 28. It is clear, however, that the consequence of not properly complying with these provisions is not specified, and I do not think that any non-compliance by the Company with this provision can afford any valid answer to the charge against the petitioner. I do not express any opinion as to whether the bye laws were put up in a conspicuous place inside this particular car as required by the Act. The Magistrate's finding on this point is rather halting; but for the purpose of this petition it is not necessary to examine that finding.

The second point urged on behalf of the petitioner is that the terms of the second notice are unreasonable. I do not think that the question really arises for our consideration, as bye-law No. 6 remains unaffected thereby. In so far as the notice purports to modify the operation of bye-law No. 6, it requires the confirmation of the Governor in Council, which has not been obtained.

The last point urged on behalf of the petitioner is that in any case the conviction under bye-law No. 7 is not justified under the circumstances. Taking the bye-laws Nos. 6 and 7 together, it seems to me that the bye-law No. 7 contemplates a person remaining in the interior of a car, when the car contains the full number of passengers for which accommodation is provided in such interior. No doubt it provides that the person, when asked to leave the car, shall do so. But it seems to me that in the present case the accused never got into the interior of the car and was throughout standing on the rear platform. His action, therefore, properly falls within the scope of bye-law No. 6 and is outside the scope of bye-law No. 7. In any case his act amounted to a breach of bye-law No. 6 and he could not be properly convicted in respect of the same act under the following bye-law.

I would, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence in respect of the charge under bye-law No. 7 and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded. I would confirm the other conviction and sentence.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. The accused has, in my opinion, been rightly convicted of the offence of refusing to get down from the platform of the car when so requested under bye-law No. 6, but he has, in my opinion, been wrongly convicted of remaining in the interior of the car when requested to go out under bye-law No. 7 of the bye-laws under section 24 and 25 of the Bombay Tramways Act, I of 1874.

The accused was admittedly travelling on the platform which has been treated, it seems to me, as outside the car by bye-law No. 6. He never entered the interior of the car, which would seem to me not to include the platform according to the ordinary meaning of the words used in bye-law No. 7. The conviction was, therefore, in my opinion, right under bye-law No. 6 but wrong under bye-law No. 7 of the bye-laws confirmed by the Governor in Council under sections 24 and 25 of the Bombay Tramways Act, I of 1874.

It has, however, been urged that the prosecution was invalid, because notice had been issued in February 1917 by the Tramway Company, stating that owing to shortage of cars they did not intend to enforce the bye-law prohibiting passengers from travelling on the platform pending further orders during the war, and it has been urged that it was not open to them, after having once issued that notice, to modify it by the subsequent notice of February 1919, in which they intimated that they intended in future to enforce the bye-law more strictly and only to permit the privilege to some specified persons, mainly officials of the Police and the Company, as they had obtained a further supply of cars since the end of war. It has, however, not been disputed that neither of these notices could have had the legal effect of modifying the bye-law, because neither of these notices had been confirmed by the Governor in Council as required under sections 24 and 25 of the Bombay Tramways Act, I of 1874. It is not necessary to discuss what the position would have been if contrary to their notices an unsuspecting passenger had been prosecuted for travelling on the platform by the Tramway Company, because that is not the case here, and it would be exceedingly improbable that any such prosecution would be instituted by a responsible body like the Tramway Company. The case here is a perfectly simple one. The offender had full intimation of the withdrawal of the previous privilege, he was shown the notice intimating that the bye-law would in future have to be more strictly enforced, he nevertheless deliberately with full knowledge of the position refused to comply with the perfectly reasonable and legitimate demands of the officers of the Tramway Company. This, therefore, in my opinion, is not a case in which the offender is entitled to any sympathy. It was entirely his own fault. He acted with full knowledge that he was liable, if he disobeyed the request of the officers, to prosecution under the bye-laws that had been sanctioned and never modified by the Governor in Council under sections 24 and 25 of the Bombay Tramways Act I of 1874.

It seems to me, therefore, that it is incumbent on us to confirm the conviction and sentence of Rs. 20 for the offence against the bye-law No. 6, but on the other hand to reverse the conviction and direct the re-payment of the fine of Rs. 15 inflicted under bye-law No. 7 of the bye-laws as confirmed by the Governor in Council under sections 24 and 25 of Bombay Tramways Act I of 1874.

147, 304—Enquiry by Magistrate—Petition by complainant to District Magistrate for commitment to Sessions, rejection of—Accused acquitted in respect of offence under s. 147 and discharged in respect of offence under s. 304—Sessions Judge, order by, directing commitment, legality of.

The Police charged the accused before a Sub-Magistrate under sections 147, 323 and 325 of the Penal Code. During the course of the enquiry P. W. No. 1, who had initiated proceedings before the Police, applied to the District Magistrate to commit the case to the Sessions Court. The District Magistrate rejected the petition, holding that the petition was incompetent and that the Police alone had a locus standi to move in the matter. The Sub-Magistrate acquitted the accused of the offence under section 147 of the Penal Code. After the termination of the trial P. W. No. 1 applied to the Sessions Judge under section 436, who ordered the committal of the accused under sections 147 and 304 of the Penal Code:

Held, (1) that the committal under section 147, Indian Penal Code, was illegal as the accused had been acquitted in respect of the charge under that section; [p. 492, col. 2]

(2) that the commitment under section 304 was valid as the Sub-Magistrate, who had evidence of facts pointing to an offence under that section, must be deemed to have impliedly discharged the accused of that offence and it was competent for the Sessions Judge to set aside that order suo motu. [p. 492, col. 2; p. 493, col. 1.]

Kalimuthu v. Emperor, 26 M. 477; 2 Weir 542, distinguished.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Sessions Judge, Godavari at Rajahmundry, dated the 29th January 1919, in Criminal Revision Case No. 1 of 1919 (C. C. No. 13 of 1918) on the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Cocanada, and Revision Case No. 2 of 1918, on the file of the Court of the Sub-Magistrate at Coringa.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Richmond, for the Petitioner.—The Sessions Judge acted without jurisdiction in ordering committal under sections 147 and 304, Indian Penal Code. In respect of the charge under section 147, there is the additional fact that the accused were acquitted by the Magistrate. Section 403 is a bar to the taking of further action.

A similar application at a prior stage was rejected by the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge, who is a co ordinate authority with the District Magistrate, cannot revive the matter and pass an order opposed to the order of the District Magistrate; see Kalimuthu v. Emperor (1).

(1) 26 M. 477; 2 Weir 542.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor.—The application to the District Magistrate was at a stage of the proceeding when no final order was passed by the Magistrate. The District Magistrate held that the petition itself did not lie, as it was a Police charge-sheet and the application for commitment should have been made by the Police. The ruling in Kalimuthu v. Emperor (1) does not apply. The facts in that case were different. In this case the trial had come to a close and, with all the facts before him, the Magistrate refused to frame a charge under section 304, Indian Penal Code, though he did not, in so many words, record an order of discharge under that section. It was quite open to the Sessions Court to take action suo motu and set aside that implied order of discharge.

ORDER.—It is contended on behalf of the petitioner, the 1st accused, that the learned Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to order his committal to the Sessions on charges under sections 147 and 304, Indian Penal Code, and that his order to that effect must be set aside.

As regards the charge under section 147, Indian Penal Code, we think the contention is well-founded as the accused was acquitted by the Sub-Magistrate on that charge under section 258, Criminal Procedure Code. So long as that order of acquittal stands, he cannot be again charged and tried for that offence on the same facts. Section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, is a bar to it. It was not open to the Sessions Judge to set aside that acquittal or to treat it merely as an order of discharge, as he seems to have done. His order, so far as it refers to section 147, Indian Penal Code, must, therefore, be set aside.

But the charge under section 304, Indian Penal Code, stands on a different footing. Though the complaint alleged facts against this accused constituting an offence under section 302, Indian Penal Code, the Sub-Magistrate disbelieved the evidence on the point and did not frame any charge under section 302 or 304, Indian Penal Code. His action amounted in law to an order of discharge on those counts, even though no express order of discharge was recorded by him. See Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma (2). That being so, it was open to the Sessions Judge under sections 436,

(2) 24 M. 136; 2 Weir 544.

GANDI APPARAZU v. EMPEROR.

Criminal Procedure Code, to act suo motu and set aside the implied discharge and direct the committal of the accused to the Sessions on being satisfied that he had been improperly discharged, as the offence under section 304, Indian Penal Code, is one exclusively triable by the Sessions Court.

But it is argued that the District Magistrate had passed a previous order on an application by the complainant refusing to set aside that discharge and that that order prevents the Sessions Judge, who is a co-ordinate authority with the District Magistrate, from re-opening the matter and reliance is placed on the ruling in Kalimuthu v. Emperor (1). It was ruled in that case that under clause (4) of section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, it was not competent to the District Magistrate to entertain an application to commit when the Sessions Judge had already refused to pass such an order and that the reason of the prohibition applied equally to cases in which the authorities acted suo motu. It would not, of course, matter whether the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge acted in the first instance, as they are co-ordinate authorities under the section.

It seems to us, however, that this ruling is not applicable to the facts of the present case. What happened here was that, as soon as the Sub-Magistrate framed charges under sections 147, 323 and 325, Indian Penal Code, against the 1st accused and while the case was still pending before him, the 1st prosecution witness put in an application to the District Magistrate under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, asking him to call for the records and direct a committal of the case to the Sessions. The prosecution was a Police prosecution, though it was on the information of P. W. No. 1. The District Magistrate sent the petition to the District Superintendent of Police, recording on it that he was not inclined to stay proceedings or to call for the records; finally he rejected the petition on the ground that the Police, in whose hands the case was, were satisfied with the procedure of the Magistrate. Now it will be noticed that at the time the application was made, there was no express order of discharge as to section 304, Indian Penal Code, nor could an order of discharge be implied under the authority of Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma (2), above referred to, as the trial had not come to a close, as in that case, and it was still open to the Sub-Magistrate to frame further charges and commit under section 347, Criminal Procedure Code, if he thought fit to do so. There was thus no order of discharge to revise and the application cannot be looked upon as one for that purpose. The District Magistrate also seems to have treated it as an incompetent application, as he declined jurisdiction under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, and refused to call for the records on the ground that the Police were the proper parties to apply and not P. W. No. 1. This case is, therefore, clearly distinguishable from the case quoted. Neither the application nor the order of the District Magistrate, who refused to entertain it and to consider it on the merits, can thus properly be treated in our opinion as a bar to the action taken suo motu by the Sessions Judge in this case. We may observe that if we considered that there was any difficulty in upholding the Sessions Judge's order, we should have ourselves given notice to the accused and directed his committal to the Sessions under our revisional powers, if we considered it necessary in the ends of justice to do so, as the objection taken cannot apply in any case to our exercise of the powers vested in us. But as the objection to the Sessions Judge's order, so far as it refers to section 304, Indian Penal Code, fails, it is not necessary to do so.

On the merits there seems to be good reason for directing a trial of this accused in the Sessions Court. Both the Deputy Magistrate to whom the case of the other accused was sent up for enhanced punishment by the Sub-Magistrate and the Sessions Judge consider that the way in which the Sub-Magistrate dealt with the case was quite improper. There was a considerable body of evidence against this accused, and the Sub-Magistrate should have properly committed him to the Sessions and not taken upon himself to discredit the case against him on the ground of alibi by giving him 'the benefit of the doubt,' as he did.

The order of committal by the Sessions Judge will, therefore, be confirmed subject to section 147, Indian Penal Code, being struck out of it.

SOHAN SINGH—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Burma Municipal Act (III of 1898), Ch. VI, s. 180
(1)—Order directing disposal of surface water, legality of—Disobedience of order, whether offence.

There is nothing in Chapter VI of the Burma Municipal Act which empowers a Town Committee to pass general orders or directions regarding the disposal of sullage or surface water. The neglect to comply with such an order, therefore, is not an offence under section 180 (1) of the Act.

Mr. J. C. Chatterjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—Sohan Singh has been convicted by the Headquarters Magistrate, Meiktila, under section 180 (1) of the Municipal Act of disobeying a lawful direction given by the Committee under the powers conferred by the previous Chapter (Chapter VI).

The direction was passed at a meeting of the Committee in July 1918 and was as follows:—

"No house-owner shall allow sullage or other water to be discharged from his house on any Municipal road or property but must carry out a connection with the nearest drain or dispose of such refuse water in some other way as may be approved by the President or Vice-President of the Town Committee."

This direction of the Committee is obviously a bye-law, even if it is called by another name, and has not been confirmed by the Local Government.

It is, therefore, not valid as a bye-law.

I can find nothing in Chapter VI of the Municipal Act, which empowers a Town Committee to pass general orders or directions of this nature regarding the disposal of sullage or surface water.

Sections 114, 115 and kindred sections provide for special notices regarding drainage, sewage and water-supply.

The notice in question, however, was based on a general order for which there is, so far as I can find, no legal authority.

I remanded the case for evidence as to the section or rule of law under which the order in question purported to be passed.

LACHMI NARAIN v. EMPEROR.

The evidence of the Vice-President does not answer the problem but explains that the resolution dated 31st July 1918 is really a direction to the officials of the Town Committee as regards their duties under section 115 of the Municipal Act.

This is not the obvious interpretation of the resolution, but, assuming its correctness argumenti causa, it is clear that a house-owner cannot be convicted under section 180 because he disobeys a direction issued to officials of the Town Committee regarding their duties. The notice issued by the Vice-President called attention to the order of the Town Committee, pointed out that it was infringed by the applicant and requested him to take steps to carry out the order within a month.

As the Committee had no power to pass such a general order, the neglect to comply with it on receipt of a notice was no offence.

I set aside the conviction and sentence.

Sentence set aside.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 76 (1)—General meeting, what is—Default in holding general meeting—Offence.

Section 76 of the Companies Act, 1913, does not differentiate between a general meeting and an extraordinary general meeting of a company. Where, therefore, an extraordinary general meeting of a company was held within fifteen months of the last general meeting, it was held that no offence had been committed under section 76 (1) of the Act. [p. 495, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Magistrate, First Class, Cawnpore dated the 25th July 1919.

Messrs. K. N. Katju and R. K. Malaviya, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

EMPEROR V. VISHVANATHA VISHNU JOSHI.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a number of directors of the Kharidar Kapra Company, Limited, Cawnpore, were tried for an offence under section 76 of the Indian Companies Act, and convicted and ordered to pay a fine. Under that section a general meeting of every company shall be held once at the least in every year, and not more than 15 months after the holding of the last preceding meeting, and, if not so held, the Company and every officer of the Company who is knowingly a party to the default shall be liable to a fine. The last ordinary general meeting of the Company was held on the 6th of February 1919. There was no other general meeting of the Company within 15 months from that date. A written statement was shown to the Court but returned on the ground that it was not necessary to file it. Referring, however, to that written statement the Magistrate holds that the directors admit that technically an offence under section 76 (1) of the Companies Act has been committed. He, therefore, apparently has not gone into the other facts of the case. Reading the written statement it seems to me that there was no admission of any offence under section 76. I find as a matter of fact that an extraordinary general meeting of the Company was held on the 10th of April 1919. This was within 15 months of the last general meeting. There is nothing in section 76 which differentiates an extraordinary general meeting from a general meeting. It seems to me, therefore, that no offence under section 76 has been made out. I, therefore, allow the application, set aside the conviction and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded. I order the book to be returned.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898, ss. 4 (o), 190—Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871), s. 20—Magistrate empowered to take cognisance of offences, whether can take cognisance of offence under s. 20, Cattle Trespass Act.

A Magistrate of the Second Class, who is authorised under section 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code to take cognisance of offences upon receiving complaints, has power to take cognisance of complaints under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Satara.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the Second Class Magistrate had jurisdiction to deal with the complaint. The only ground upon which the District Magistrate has suggested that he had no jurisdiction is that he was not specially authorized by the District Magistrate to deal with complaints under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act. There is no suggestion, however, that this Second Class Magistrate was not authorized under section 190 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to take cognisance of offences upon receiving complaints, and it must be taken for the purposes of this reference that he was so authorised. No further special authority to take cognisance of complaints under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act is needed in view of the definition of the word "offence" in section 4, clause (o), which includes any act in respect of which a complaint may be made under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act. It is clear from the Second Schedule of the Code of Criminal Procedure that offences under special Acts punishable with imprisonment for less than one year or with fine only are triable by any Magistrate. We think, therefore, that the Second Class Magistrate had jurisdiction to deal with the complaint. This conclusion derives support from the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 192, 439, 529—Revision—Point not urged before trial Magistrate or Sessions Judge, whether can be taken in revision—Transfer of case by Magistrate not authorised to transfer—Irregularity.

Where a point is not urged in the Court of first instance or before the Sessions Judge on appeal, the High Court will not interfere in revision unless there has been a miscarriage of justice.

The transfer by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate of a case under section 192, Criminal Procedure Code, when the case has already been transferred to him by the District Magistrate, is a mere irregularity covered by section 529 of the Code.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge of Cuttack, dated the 6th November 1919, dismissing an appeal of the petitioner from the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Cuttack, dated the 25th October 1919, convicting the petitioner.

Messrs. Yunus and Hasan Jan, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—The facts of this case are shortly as follows:—

The District Magistrate of Cuttack directed the prosecution of one Yusuf Ali under section 161, Indian Penal Code, and transferred the case to the Sadar Sub-Divisional Magistrate for disposal. After keeping the case for some time on his file the Sadar Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferred it to another Magistrate, who heard the case and disposed of it convicting the accused.

An appeal was preferred and the conviction and sentence was upheld by the Sessions Judge.

Now this application in revision is made on three grounds: first, that the conviction is bad because the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had no power to transfer the case under section 192, Criminal Procedure Code, secondly, that there has been no consideration of the defence case and thirdly, that there is no independent evidence.

With regard to the first point it appears that it was never taken either in the Court of first instance or before the Sessions Judge, and it has been the rule of this Court that it will not interfere in such cases unless there has been a miscarriage of justice. Moreover, in any case, it appears to us that the case is one which is covered by section 529, Criminal Procedure Code, and if there was any irregularity, it is cured by the provisions of that section.

We find no substance in either of the other contentions. The case has been very carefully considered both in the Court of first instance and by the learned Sessions Judge on appeal. In both Courts the whole evidence was carefully examined and we can see no reason to interfere.

The application is dismissed.

Per Krishnan, J.—A trustee who tries to set right a wrong he has done should not be prevented from doing so by any estoppel based on a former breach of trust by him, at any rate where he derives no personal benefit from his later action. [p. 50, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 6 of 1918 (Appeal Suit No. 223 of 1917 on the file of the District Court, Chingleput), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 51 of 1916 (Original Suit No. 16 of 1915 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Conjeevaram.)

FACTS.—The trustee of certain properties alienated certain items (of which he was in possession as Kudivaramdar) by way of mortgage to the defendants for Rs. 400 required for his daughter's marriage. In the present suit he claimed to recover the properties on behalf of the trust. The defendants' contention was that the mortgage was of both the Melvaram and the Kudivaram and that the plaintiff was estopped from contending that the Melvaram was not included. The plea of estoppel was overruled in the Court below and the suit decreed.

Mr. N. Rajagopalan (with him Mr. M.

Govindarajulu Naidu), for the Appellants.—Juggutmohini Dossee v. Sokheemoneey Dossee (1), on which the lower Court has relied, has been discussed elaborately in Sidhu Sahu v. Gopi Charan Das (2) and Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (3). Though the trust will not be prejudiced by any act of the trustee, it is necessary, in order to check frauds by trustees, that they should be prevented from recovering the properties, so as to act as a warning to the beneficiaries that it is time for them to remove the trustee. Hence also why succeeding trustees are allowed to sue. It is the malefactor that is estopped. See Gulzar Ali v. Fida Ali (4). Estoppel is purely personal.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondent.—Public policy should be vindicated by protection being afforded to trusts. Where a trustee seeks to recover trust properties, there is nothing personal in the action. It is the trust that sues and the decree, though only in the name of the trustee, is for the trust. An exact case is reported as Subbiah Chetty v. Mandaleswara Katari (5). See also Juggutmohini Dossee v. Sokheemoneey Dossee (1), Syed Gulam Nabi Sahib v. Nagammal (6). The question has been elaborately discussed in Srimati Mallika Dasi v. Ratanmani Ohakervarti (7). The principle is enunciated also in Higgs v. Northern Assam Tea Company, Limited (8), Webb v. Commissioners of Herne Bay (9), Doe d Levy v. Horne (10).

Bona fides on the part of appellants has not been proved but presumed. It should not be presumed. See Piruvengkatachariar v. Venkatachariar (11) and Venkatarama Aiyar v. Venkatarama Aiyer (12).

SENA YASIM SAHIB v. KADUR EKAMBARA IYER.

The discussion on the point now in dispute in Sidhu Sahu v. Gopi Oharan Das (2) and Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (3) was totally unnecessary. I submit that in view of the express ruling in Subbiah Ohetty v. Mandaleswara Katari (5) the Calcutta cases are not binding. Further, those cases follow American decisions which the Privy Council have expressly dis-countenanced.

Mr. Rajagopalan, in reply.—Bona fides is a question of fact and the finding cannot be challenged in second appeal.

The law on the question of estoppel is unsettled. See Ghose on Mortgage, Volume I, page 301. In Subbiah Ohetty v. Mandaleswara Katari (5) the sale of the properties was in execution of a decree against the trustee. There is a great distinction between a sale forced upon a trustee and a deliberate alienation by the trustee himself.

[KRISHNA, J.—In Subbiah Ohetty v. Mandaleswara Katari (5) the trustee stated that the property was his and yet he was held not to be estopped.]

The estoppel is personal and will not act on the trust. The statement of the trustee was relied on only as a last resort.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The point of law argued in this second appeal is whether the trustee of a temple, who himself mortgaged land which was afterwards sold in Court auction at the instance of the mortgagee, can sue, on behalf of the temple, to recover the landlord's interest, which was dedicated to the temple by the trustee's father, or whether he is estopped from setting up a claim against a bona fide purchaser for value that it is trust property. The District Munsif found that he was estopped and dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge, in appeal, reversed the District Munsif's decree and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of the Melvaram interest.

Estoppel in pais creates a personal disability attaching to an individual and his representative of denying the truth of a thing which he has led others by his acts or representations to believe to be true.

If a trustee alienates trust property for his own purposes he acts, not as trustee, but in breach or repudiation of his trust. Therefore, as Telang, J., in Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar Maharajdev v. Keshavray Govind Kulgavkar (13) points out, the estoppel arising out of the conduct of the mortgagor in representing the trust property to be his own property works not against succeeding trustees, but against the heirs of the alienor in his personal capacity. In Syed Gulam Nabi Sahib v. Nagammal (6) it was recognized that the right of suing for the recovery of possession of trust property wrongfully alienated was not confined to succeeding trustees, but might be exercised by the same trustee who made the alienation in order to set right the wrong done to the trust.

That a man can act in one capacity when he makes a representation that a village is his private property and in another capacity when he claims as trustee to recover the village as trust property of the idol, is well illustrated by Subbiah Ohetty v. Mandaleswara Katari (5).

I think that we should follow that decision and pronounce against the plea of estoppel in this case. As regards the decision in Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (3) it seems to me that, if a legal custom is found to exist whereby a sebait may transfer his turn of worship, the act of mortgaging his turn is not an act done by virtue of his trusteeship but one which he does in exercise of his private right of worship. In that way estoppel may arise in such cases, although it is noticeable that Beachcroft, J., who sat with Mookerjee, J., preferred to reserve his opinion on the question of estoppel and to base his decision on the existence of a valid custom of transferability.

At page 468,* Mookerjee, J., first lays down the principle that a mortgagor cannot set up against his mortgagee the title of another person. He then extends this even to a case where the mortgagor is a trustee, acting in a public capacity and not for his own benefit, and he quotes an English decision as an authority for this proposition, Doe d Levy v. Horne (10). The learned Judge in the next step proceeds on the strength of some American decisions to apply the same principle to cases (13) 15 B. 625.

where the trustee mortgages the trust property which he has no right to mortgage. With due respect I am not prepared on the strength of the American authorities to follow him in the application of estoppel to cases where the trustee acts to the prejudice of the trust, especially after the recent warning expressed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council against the danger of Courts in India allowing themselves to be guided by the rulings of foreign Courts. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

KRISHNAN J.—The only question raised in this second appeal is one of estoppel and it is raised on the following facts as found by the lower Appellate Court.

The plaint land originally belonged to plaintiff's father, Sellam Battar. He dedicated the Melvaram right in it to the Ekambaranathar Swami idol in the big Conjeevaram temple for the performance of certain religious ceremonies and charities in that temple and directed that the eldest member of his family should be the trustee for the time being of the trust he created. He retained the Kudivaram himself. On his death the property as well as the trusteeship passed to the plaintiff. Some time thereafter plaintiff mortgaged the plaint land for his own private purposes to meet the expenses of his daughter's marriage. In doing so, he did not make any mention of the trust or reserve the Melavaram right. Indeed, it was his case in the lower Courts that he mortgaged only the Kudivaram right, but the language of the mortgage deed being against that contention, the lower Courts have decided that he mortgaged the whole land, and that finding is not now disputed. The mortgagee sued for sale of the land and got a decree, and the land was sold in due course in Court auction and was purchased by one Umamaheswara Mudelly. The defendants are transferees for value from that purchaser. Plaintiff now sues, as the trustee of the aforesaid trust, for a declaration that he is entitled to the Melvaram right in the land as such trustee and for the recovery on behalf of the trust of the Melavaram due for three years before suit. The learned Subordinate Judge, finding the dedication proved, held that the mortgage and the Court sale did not affect the rights of the idol and overruling the plea that plaintiff was estopped from suing for the Melavaram right by his conduct in mortgaging the whole property as his own, gave a decree as sued for.

It is argued for the appellants that the question of estoppel has been wrongly decided by the lower Appellate Court for, it is contended, the estoppel arising against a mortgagor disputing the title he has himself granted will apply against the plaintiff in whatever capacity he may sue.

Plaintiff is now suing solely as the trustee of the trust in favour of the idol for property in which he has no personal interest whatever. The suit is in effect on behalf of the idol by its trustee or manager, the plaintiff. That by dedication of the Melvaram right to the idol it became the property of the idol is clear from the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maharanee Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath Achorjo (14). It is then difficult to see how a personal estoppel in pais arising against the plaintiff from his conduct can be pleaded in this suit, or why the idol should be made to suffer for anything done by the plaintiff in his private capacity because he happens to be the trustee at the time of the suit. It is conceded before us that in making the mortgage the plaintiff did not act in any way as the trustee of the endowment. He did not even mention the existence of the trust. It is also conceded that the plea of estoppel will not avail if the trust were represented by any other trustee. Should we then uphold the plea of estoppel in this case, a plea which is really more against the cestui que trust than against the plaintiff, as he is claiming no beneficial interest for himself in the suit Melvaram, merely on account of what one may call the accident of plaintiff being the trustee? I think the answer should be in the negative.

A very similar plea of estoppel was raised before a Bench of this Court in Subbiah Ohetty v. Mandaleswara Katari (5) with only this difference that whereas here the plea is based on the act or conduct of the trustee, there it was based on a representation made by the trustee, a difference which is not material regarding the applicability of the rule of estoppel under section 115 of the Evidence Act, and the learned Judges rejected the plea. Their observations on page 307 are very instructive on the question and seem to me to apply exactly to the facts of this case.

A similar view was taken by another Bench of this Court in an earlier case in Syed Gulam Nabi Sahib v. Nagammal (6), where the right of a trustee who wrongfully alienated trust property to set right the wrong done by him to the trust by himself suing the alienee for recovering possession was recognised. It is true, as the learned Counsel for appellants points out, that the view taken in that case on another point, namely, that the alienee's possession did not become adverse to the trust during the time the trustee who made the alienation continued in office, has since been departed from: see Raja of Palghat v. Raman Unni (15), but this, instead of weakening the force of the decision on the first point, has rather enhanced it; for it will be an anomaly if limitation by adverse possession is allowed to run against the trust when the person representing the trust is held to be estopped from suing for possession. The trust may thus lose the property by adverse possession without the trustee being able to prevent it.

Our attention was also drawn to certain observations of the Privy Council in the case of Juggatmohini Dossee v. Sokheemoney Dossee (1) "that a former abuse of trust, in another instance, cannot be pleaded against a trustee who seeks to prevent a repetition of abuse * * * and that the Court could not with any propriety say we will decline to protect the property and leave it exposed to further loss and decline to make a declaration that it is trust property, merely because they would not trust the plaintiff with its administration." Though, as pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in Sidhu Sahu v. Gopi Oharan Das (2), this observation in terms applies only to a repetition of an abuse of trust, I think it, in effect, supports the view that a trustee who is trying to set right a wrong he has done, should not be prevented from doing so by any estoppel based on a former breach of trust by him, at any rate where he derives no personal benefit from his later action. Following the above rulings and, particularly the reasoning adopted in the case in Subbiah Chetty v. Mandaleswara Katari (5), I would hold that the defendant's plea of estoppel was rightly disallowed.

The Counsel for the appellants has, however, drawn our attention to the cases reported as Gulzar Ali v. Fida Ali (4), Sidhu Sahu v. Gopi Oharan Das (2) and Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (3) which, he contends, support his argument that his plea of estoppel is good in spite of the fact that this suit is brought by the plaintiff as trustee. These cases will, on examination, be found to be clearly distinguishable from the present case.

In the case in Gulzar Ali v. Fida Ali (4) the facts show that the plaintiff Fida Ali had a very considerable beneficial interest in the suit property and that though he sued as a trustee, he was trying to recover the property for himself. The learned Judges say in the opening sentence of their judgment: "Fida Ali virtually asks us to allow him to take advantage of his own wrong and to recover the land, in suit," and they again remark later, "we make no remark with regard to the beneficiaries under the trust as they, having made no effort to figure in the suit, do not appear to be interesting themselves in the matter." It is in these circumstances that the plea of estoppel was held good against the plaintiff and we cannot, therefore, take that judgment as laying down generally, as the appellants' Counsel urges, that a trustee suing for trust property which he has mortgaged for his own private purpose is estopped from doing so, irrespective of whether he has a beneficial interest in it or not. In the case before us as the trustee is suing entirely for the benefit of the trust and he is not attempting to take any advantage for himself, it is clearly distinguishable from the case cited, which is thus of no help to the appellants.

The two Calcutta cases cited as Sidhu Sahu v. Gopi Oharan Das (2) and Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (3) were both decided by the same Bench. In the former the question was whether a trustee can ignore an ekrarnamah entered into by him as trustee with the defendants, by which he recognised the right of certain others to intervene in the appointment and removal of the Adhikari or trustee of the endowment. No question of estoppel like the one before us was raised in the case at all. The learned Judges were of opinion that the ekrarnamah would be binding on the plaintiff trustee if it really bore the character of a deed executed for the settlement of a dispute, even though his successor and the beneficiaries might not be bound thereby. The case has clearly no bearing on the case before us.

The next case cited, Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (3), seems at first sight to have some bearing on the question before us, for Mr. Justice Mookerjee says in his judgment that the plea of estoppel against the mortgagor disputing the title he has himself granted is a good plea, even though the property mortgaged was trust property which he had no right to mortgage. This opinion must, however, I think, be taken with the facts of the case before the learned Judge. The property mortgaged there was the right of the mortgagor to perform certain turns of worship or "Palas" in a certain temple and to take the emoluments attached and the offerings made. The property was thus property belonging to the sebait or trustee personally, and the beneficial enjoyment of it was in him and the mortgage was by him as sebait. In these particulars the case differs materially from the case before us and could, I think, therefore, be distinguished from it. It was also found in that case that the mortgage objected to was really a valid one according to custom, as it was made to a member of the family of *sebait*s and Mr. Justice Beachcroft based his judgment entirely on that ground. The question of estoppel, therefore, really did not arise in the case and as Mr. Justice Mookerjee's opinion on that question does not affect the present case, it is unnecessary to examine it fully or to consider whether it should be followed. The real question in such cases as those in Calcutta is whether the rule that a man should not be allowed to plead against his own deed and to deny the truth of a declaration, act or omission of his which another man has believed and acted upon to his disadvantage, should prevail against the rule that a trustee cannot transfer his office of trusteeship or vary the terms of it. There is a conflict of opinion in that High Court as to the answer to that question. See Srimati Mallika Dasi v. Ratanmani Ohakervarti (7) and the two cases quoted above. I reserve my opinion on it in the circumstances.

The authorities quoted for the appellants, therefore, do not affect the view I have already expressed. The plea of estoppel must thus be disallowed in the circumstances of this case and as that is the only plea raised before us, the second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

BY THE COURT.—The memorandum of objections is not pressed and is dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 115 OF 1919.

MA E KO—APPLICANT

MA PWA HMI AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, scope of—Revision, interference in, when permissible—Jurisdiction, question of.

The application of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code is very limited and its provisions must be construed strictly. [p. 503, col. 1.]

A material irregularity or illegality is not in itself a sufficient ground for revision under clause (c) of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. There must have been at the same time a wrong or irregular exercise of jurisdiction. [p. 503, col. 2.]

Mr. Maung Su, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the decree of the District Court, Shwebo, under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The two main grounds on which the application is based are, first, that there was an illegality or material irregularity in not duly considering the point as to whether under Buddhist Law, husband and wife should be regarded as partners in business; and, secondly, that the lower Court was wrong in law in holding that the husband was not responsible for his wife's debts.

As a matter of fact the Judge considered the law on the point and came to the conclusion that there was no partnership between the husband and wife in the case in question.

This Court is, therefore, simply asked to revise the finding of the District Court on the ground that it was wrong in law.

It seems clear that this is a quite insufficient ground for interference on revision.

The law as to the scope of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, is explicitly laid down by the Lords of the Privy Council in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1).

In the course of the judgment in that case it is remarked: "The 115th section of the Civil Procedure Code enables the High Court, in a case in which no appeal lies, to call for the record of any case, if the Court by which the case was decided appears to have acted in the exercise of a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to have exercised a jurisdiction vested in it, or to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and further enables it to pass such an order in the case as the Court may think fit.

"It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

In the present instance the ground on which the Court is asked to interfere is solely that certain conclusions of law on the part of the District Court are wrong.

There is no question of jurisdiction involved.

Counsel for applicant relies upon a recent ruling of the Chief Court of Lower Burma in Goridut Bagla v. Rookman (2).

In that case Ormond, J., referring to the judgment of the Privy Council cited above, remarked: "The judgment does not deal with clause (c) of section 115 beyond paraphrasing it as the irregular exercise of jurisdiction." I can find nothing in this judgment which is inconsistent with the decision in Zeya v. Mi On Kra Zan (3).

The ruling in Zeya's case (3), it should be noted, was to the effect that if the lower Court has failed to take into account some proposition of law or some material fact in evidence, it has acted illegally and its decision may be revised.

Towards the end of the judgment in Goridut Bagla v. Rookman (2) Ormond, J., sums up his view of the meaning of the third clause of section 115 as follows:—"The question, I think, resolves itself into this: was the method irregular by which the conclusion of fact or of law was arrived at? If the Judge arrives at a conclusion of law or of fact without having considered the law or a material part of the evidence or by misunderstanding or erroneously recording the statements of Pleaders or witnesses, the method of arriving at such conclusion is illegal and irregular, and is a good ground for revision, provided that the irregularity is material and the petitioner has suffered an injustice thereby."

The language used is very guarded, but with all due deference to the authority of the learned Judge, it seems to me he has travelled beyond the limits of interference under section 115 as interpreted by the Privy Council. He practically holds that, if the method by which a conclusion of law or fact is arrived at is irregular, this is in itself a sufficient ground for revision, provided that the irregularity is material and the petitioner has suffered an injustice. This view seems in effect to ignore the question of jurisdiction altogether and treats clause (c) of section 115 as if the words "in the exercise of its jurisdiction" were not present.

In the Privy Council judgment referred to it was definitely laid down that section 115 refers to jurisdiction alone, and is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved.

There is no suggestion that this exposition of its meaning is confined to the first two clauses of the section.

Clause (c) of the section is paraphrased "to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity." (The actual wording of the clause is to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.)

It appears to my mind perfectly clear, therefore, that clause (c) must be held to refer to jurisdiction equally with clauses (a) and (b) of section 115.

It is not permissible to construe the words "in the exercise of its jurisdiction" as though they meant no more than "in its capacity as a Court." If that is all they mean, the words are superfluous and could be dispensed with, since in one sense a Court always passes orders in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

Clause (c) cannot be divorced from the other two clauses of the section, but must be read in its relation to them.

It is impossible to escape from the conclusion that acting illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction connotes an illegality or irregularity in a matter touching jurisdiction. In other words, there must be a question of jurisdiction involved. A mere illegality or material irregularity, in which no question of jurisdiction is involved, does not justify interference.

There must have been a misuse or abuse of its jurisdiction by the Court to warrant interference on revision.

This is in accordance with the view taken by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Chandra Kishore Roy v. Basat Ali (4), where the facts were much stronger than in the present instance, since the decree, which it was sought to revise, was admittedly based on a wrong assumption of fact.

The application of section 115 is very limited and its provisions must be construed strictly.

It is not intended that it should take the place of a second appeal, which would be the practical effect, if it were held that a mistake of law or a wrong view of the law justified the interference of the High Court on revision, even though the question of jurisdiction was not involved.

It may be desirable, especially in Upper Burma, that the power of revision should be extensive, but that does not make it permissible to construe the section in a manner which I hold to be clearly opposed to the interpretation of its meaning given in Balakrishna's case (1).

To summarise my view of the position, a material irregularity or illegality is not in itself a sufficient ground for revision under clause (c) of section 115. There must have been at the same time a wrong or irregular exercise of jurisdiction.

The application is dismissed.

Application dismissed.

Vendor and purchaser—Mortgage bond, unregistered,

Where an unpaid vendor takes an unregistered mortgage bond from the vendee to secure the payment of the purchase-money, the bond, being inadmissible in evidence as affecting the property sold, is not a contract to the contrary within the meaning of section 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act and does not operate to extinguish the vendor's lien [p 504, col. .]

Such a bond may be treated as a simple money bond and a suit would be maintainable on its basis as such bond. [p. 504, col. 1.]

preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Arni, in Original Suit No. 1218 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Appellants.—The suit is not maintainable. The plaintiff, having chosen to take a mortgage for the balance of the purchase-money, can only sue on the mortgage. As the mortgage has not been registered, he cannot sue on it. The vendor's lien cannot also be enforced, as it became extinguished by the execution of the mortgage.

Mr. R. N. Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—In the plaint the bond is treated as a simple money bond, and the plaintiff has also prayed for enforcement of the vendor's lien. The suit is, therefore, having regard to these specific prayers, maintainable.

There is no legal objection to treating the mortgage as a simple money bond when there is a technical defect in the mortgage. It does not form a contract to the contrary within the meaning of section 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act.

As the mortgage cannot legally be enforced, no inference can be deduced of the intention of the parties to extinguish the vendor's lien.

JUDGMENT.—It is contended for appellants that plaintiff's suit is not maintainable, as it is based on a mortgage deed Exhibit A which has not been registered and it is inadmissible in evidence. Plaintiff, however, recognised his difficulty and has treated Exhibit A in his plaint as a simple bond and has further asked for the enforcement of his vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money which formed the consideration for Exhibit A. There being these specific prayers in the plaint, the suit is certainly maintainable.

It is further urged that plaintiff gave up his vendor's lien by taking the bond Exhibit A. It must, however, be treated merely as a simple money bond not affecting immoveable property and as such does not in itself form a contract to the contrary within the meaning of section 55 (4), Transfer of Property Act. If Exhibit A could take effect as a mortgage as intended by the parties to it, it might well be that it constitutes a contract to the contrary; but inasmuch as it cannot take effect as such, there arises no inference that the parties extinguished the vendor's lien.

Exhibit A was executed only to 1st defendant, but the Subordinate Judge has made both her and her husband 2nd defendant liable, and it is sought to support his order by reason of section 233 of the Contract Act. That section would only be applicable if 1st defendant were the agent of 2nd defendant, but she is not. The Subordinate Judge appears to find that Exhibit A was executed benami in 1st defendant's name for 2nd defendant but there was no issue on this point, and Mr. Sesha Charriar, who appeared for both 1st and 2nd defendants, objects to the finding and states that the plaint property belongs to 1st defendant and not to 2nd defendant, and we accept this statement and find the 1st defendant alone liable to plaintiff for the purchase-money. The lower Court's decree is, therefore, confirmed except that 2nd defendant must be exonerated. First defendant will pay plaintiff's costs in this second appeal and 2nd defendant will bear his own costs.

MUHAMMAD SAJJAD ALI KHAN v. MUHAMMAD ISHAQ KHAN.

Mr. S. O. Mukerjee, for the Applicants.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the parties who were defendants in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a decision of this Court, dated January 9th, 1918. It appears that an action was commenced on July 3rd, 1915, for the recovery of mesne profits and when that action came on, the defendants took as their first point that this action was barred by reason of there having been a previous action between the same parties, and they relied upon section 11, Explanation V, of the Code of Civil Procedure. They succeeded in persuading the learned Subordinate Judge that he ought to regard the claim as falling within the principle of res judicata. In that way the plaintiffs' action came to a sudden termination. Thereupon the plaintiffs moved the High Court, and on the appeal it was held that the claim was not barred by reason of the previous action and the case was remanded for the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The result of the High Court decision was, of course, to place the parties exactly as they were when first the case was opened before the lower Court, with the exception that the issue of res judicata was settled in the plaintiffs' favour. The defendants now apply for leave to take this point on appeal to the Privy Council. Now, a reference to the pleadings shows that res judicata was only one of several issues put forward by the defendants. They contend, for instance, that the claim for mesne profits for the years 1912 and 1913 is barred by lapse of time, that the suit is not cognizable by the learned Subordinate Judge but is a matter within the province of the Revenue Court. There are other matters of substance which must be dealt with, involving much more than mere arithmetical calculations or perfunctory apportionment of liability amongst the defendants. In these circumstances it remains to be seen what are the principles which should govern an application of this kind. The application is based upon section 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure and turns upon the meaning to be given to a "final decree" in that section. Now this question, under varying circumstances, has been frequently litigated and, if ever a point of law can fairly be said to be crystallised, it would seem that the time has arrived when it can be said that this matter is demonstrated clearly and definitely in a consistent series of decisions.

The defendants' Counsel quite naturally drew our attention to Saiyid Muzhar Rossein v. Musammatt Bodha Ribi (1) and if he could have shown us that a decision on the res judicata point would in any event have settled the rights of the parties except as to mere mechanical workings out of the decree, we should have granted the defendants a certificate and allowed the appeal to go to the Privy Council. A decision of the Privy Council affirming that of the High Court would, however, leave the various issues, above referred to, still in contention between the parties. The plaintiffs' Counsel, who opposed the application, referred us to several cases beginning with that of Kaus-lla v. Ram Sarup (2), Ahmad Husain v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3), Nuri Mian v. Ganges Sugar Works Limited, Cawnpore (4) and finally the case of Danby v. Tafazul Hussain (5). Now in each of those authorities there was a decision on some one point, just as in the case now under consideration there was a decision that the claim was barred but there were also outstanding points of considerable importance and of such a character that it could not be said that in whichever way the decision of the Privy Council went, the matter would be concluded. All of these cases are conveniently grouped up in the Patna decision [Danby v. Tafazul Hussain (5)] and there is thus a uniform consensus of opinion that appeals on matters interlocutory in their nature should be allowed to be preferred to His Majesty in Council only when their decision will practically put an end to the litigation and finally decide the rights of the parties. In this view it follows that the appeal must be rejected. We accordingly dismiss the application with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Venkatachalam), for the Appellants.—I admit the appeal does not lie but the respondent should not be heard on his memorandum of objections, as the appeal has not been withdrawn or dismissed for default. Order XLI, rule 22 (4), Civil Procedure Code. The appeal is not for hearing before the Court.

Mr. T. Narasimha Iyengar, for the Respondent.—Virtually the intimation by the appellant's Vakil amounts to a withdrawal of the appeal. The case is for hearing before the Court and I am entitled to urge my cross-objections. As conceded by the appellant's Vakil the lower Appellate Court has based its decision on a matter not covered by the issues.

JUDGMENT.—Vakil for appellants admits that the appeal is incompetent since it is based on a matter not before the lower Appellate Court. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

MEMORANDUM OF OBJECTIONS.

Upon the appeal being called on for hearing, the appellants' Vakil stated that the appeal did not lie because the matter to which it relates was not the subject of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, and he has argued that the respondent cannot proceed with his memorandum of objections because the appeal has not been withdrawn or dismissed for default within the meaning of Order XLI, rule 22 (4), Civil Procedure Code. Rule 22 is contained in the rules grouped under the sub-heading "procedure on hearing," and sub-rule (1) applies to the hearing before the Court, as is shown by the expressions "any respondent may not only support the decree but take any cross-objections to the decree." The latter privilege depends upon his having adopted a certain procedure before the case comes on for hearing.

Sub-rule (4) applies to cases in which through some action or negligence of the appellant, the case does not come before the Court for hearing and the respondent might, therefore, without some express provision be deprived of his right to take cross-objections.

The decision in Alagappa Chettiar v. Chockalingam Chetty (1) deals with the case of an appeal barred by limitation, which, therefore, never comes before the Court for hearing. In the present case the appellants' Vakil in effect wishes to withdraw from the appeal because it is incompetent.

We think that since the case is before us for hearing, the respondent has the right to take his cross-objections under rule 22 (1).

The District Judge has based his decision on a case which was not raised by the issues or included in the grounds of appeal. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the District Munsif is restored with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 7, 8—Mortgage—Redemption, decree for—Preliminary decree, whether can be executed—Payment after expiry of period fixed but before final decree, effect of—Final decree, whether must be passed—Procedure.

The preliminary decree in a suit for redemption is provisional and until it is made final, redemption cannot be permitted. [p. 507, col. 2.]

Order XXXIV, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code provides for an extension of time for good cause shown, and ordinarily where a mortgagor decree-holder wishes to pay in the redemption money after the time specified but before the final decree, the correct course for him is to apply for an extension of time. The Court may, however, treat an application to pay in the money as tantamount to an application for extension of time. But the Court is not absolved from the necessity for passing a final decree and there is no provision for the execution of the preliminary decree before it has been made final. [p. 508, col. 1.]

Mr. O. G. S. Pillay, for the Appellants.

Mr. Maung Su, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Appellants were defendants in Civil Regular Case No. 88 of 1917 of the Township Court of Sale.

Plaintiffs sued for redemption under a usufructuary mortgage and were granted a decree in Civil Appeal No. 10 of 1918 of the District Court of Magwe.

In accordance with the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 7 (d), the decree ought to have contained a direction that if the money was not paid on or before the date fixed, the mortgaged property be sold.

In the appeal decree a date was rightly fixed for the payment of the money into Court under Order XXXIV, rule 7, sub rule (c), and I do not understand the remark of the learned Additional Judge of this Court on second appeal that it is unnecessary to fix a date for redemption in usufructuary mortgages.

Rule 7 is quite clear and applies to usufructuary mortgages. The first Appellate Court fixed the 9th of September 1918 as the date on or before which the money was to be paid into Court.

On the 4th of October 1918, the decree-holders paid the money into Court and applied for the land to be attached and made over to them. Although the time specified in the decree for the payment of the money into Court had elapsed, the Court ordered the land to be attached and made over to the decree-holders, and this was done.

The judgment-debtors were given no notice of the application nor were they given any opportunity to show cause against the order being made.

The judgment-debtors appealed against the order in execution without success, the Court holding that respondent could redeem at any time he was in a position to pay the money into Court.

The Judge appears to have been led to state the case in such unqualified terms by the remark as to the absence of necessity to fix a date already referred to.

He saw that under the circumstances it was inequitable that the decree-holders should reap a crop, which they had not sown, without paying compensation, but could think of no remedy.

An appeal has now been preferred to this Court against the order in execution, on the ground that as the time specified for redemption had elapsed and no extension had been applied for or granted, the Court was in error in holding that the decree-holders could pay the money into Court at any time they could afford to do so.

It was also contended that appellants ought to be allowed to reap their crop or an order made to that effect before redemption was allowed.

There are numerous authorities for holding that the first decree in a mortgage suit is provisional and that until it is made final, redemption cannot be permitted.

The subject was discussed exhaustively in Maung Lu Tha v. Maung Hman (1) and it was held that until an order has been made under section 93 of the Transfer of Property Act, the decree-holder may redeem at any time subject to the law of limitation. It was further pointed out that a decree under section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act is of the nature of a decree nisi and that it does not foreclose the decree holder until an order to that effect has been passed under section 93.

(1) U. B. R. (1897-1901) II, 582.

JAGANNADHA CHARYULU v. BOMMADEVARA SATYANARAYANA VARAPRASADA.

The latest Calcutta ruling cited is in 1908, Bepin Behary Shaha v. Mokunda Lal Ghosh (2), in which it was held that a person, who does not deposit the redemption money within the time allowed, can redeem afterwards before a final order is made under section 93 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The foreclosure adopted in that case was different to the present, as the plaintiff applied to have the decree made absolute, whereas in the present case there was no application for a final decree but an application was made for execution of the decree by attachment and delivery of possession.

Rules 7 and 8 of Order XXXIV have replaced sections 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act and provision is made for preliminary and final decrees in redemption suits. The principles involved remain the same.

Both section 93 of the Transfer of Property Act and rule 8 of Order XXXIV provide for an extension of time on good cause shown.

Ordinarily, therefore, where the decree-holder wishes to pay in the redemption money after the time specified but before the final decree, the correct course would seem to be for him to apply for an extension.

Apparently, however, in view of the array of authorities on the subject, the Court would be justified in treating an application to pay in the money as tantamount to an application for extension of the time.

The Court, however, is not absolved from the necessity for passing a final decree and there is no provision for the execution of the preliminary decree before it has been made final.

The position, therefore, is that the decree-holders were entitled to redeem, but that the Court was bound to pass a final decree before allowing redemption and must pass a final decree in the terms specified in rule 8.

This has not been done and the procedure adopted by the Court was wholly irregular, in consequence of which it seems certain an injustice has been done to the mortgagees, who have been deprived of their crop.

As the money was not paid into Court until after the date fixed in the preliminary decree, I consider the Court ought to have issued a notice to the judgment-debtors to show cause why a final decree should not be passed.

(2) 1 Ind. Cas. 780, 36 C. L. J. 2; 8 C. L. J. 547.

It would then have been able to put the decree-holders on terms as to the disposal of the crop before passing the final decree, having regard to the provisions of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act.

I accordingly set aside the decree of the District Court on appeal and the order of the Township Court in execution.

There is as yet no final decree but the money has been paid into Court.

Payment must be entered in the original mortgage proceedings and the Township Court will call upon the judgment-debtors to show cause why a final decree should not be passed under Order XXXIV, rule 8. Orders must then be passed according to law, after hearing both parties, in the light of the remarks made in this judgment.

Appellants will be granted costs throughout.

Decree set aside.

Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code applies only to cases where immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, and it cannot be applied except to such sales inasmuch as its language precludes its application to sales in general, even though made through Court officers. FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. Nagabushanam, for the Appellant.

—The Courts below erred in dismissing the plaintiff's suit as not maintainable. The order of the Collector cancelling the sale is ultra vires. The sale was not held in execution of a decree to attract the provisions of Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code. It is only when the sale follows on a decree that it can be set aside for irregularity or fraud. Here there was no decree. The proceedings were summary and a sale held under section 111 of the Madras Estates Land Act is altogether independent of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. So unless the sale is set aside under section 131 of that Act, the Collector is bound to grant to the purchaser a certificate under section 124. The purchaser is entitled to have it declared that the order cancelling the sale was ultra vires and void. Sections 111 to 134 of the Madras Estates Land Act are summary and do not require an adjudication by the Collector of the rights of the parties. The sale of a holding cannot be said to be in execution of a decree. The Madras Estates Land Act, which is a self-contained enactment, does not itself provide for the setting aside of such sales for irregularity.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents.—Section 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act makes Order XXI, rules 90 and 92, Civil Procedure Code, applicable to proceedings under the Madras Estates Land Act. Though there is no express provision in the Madras Estates

Land Act for the setting aside of sales under the summary procedure, resort must be had to rules 90 and 92, Civil Procedure Code, otherwise there will be hardship to the aggrieved party who will be left without a remedy. Any other view would nullify the effect of the application of rule 90 to proceedings under the Madras Estates Land Act. The order cancelling the sale being valid, plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain this suit.

In any event plaintiff cannot sue for a declaration of his title before getting a certificate under section 124 of the Estates Land Act.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The appellant, who purchased the holding of a ryot at a sale held under the provisions of Chapter VI of the Madras Estates Land Act (Mad. Act I of 1908), brought this suit to have it declared that the order of the Deputy Collector setting aside the sale for irregularities in the issues of notice, on a motion made by the land-holder who brought the holding to sale, was ultra vires and void. The suit was instituted in an ordinary Civil Court. The District Munsif who tried the suit held that as a Judge of a Civil Court he had jurisdiction to entertain it, but that no suit lay in consequence of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 92 (3), Civil Procedure Code. The Sub-Judge, who heard the appeal, agreed with him on the point that the suit was not maintainable, and held that it was also barred by the rule of res judicata. I have no doubt that they were both wrong on this point.

If the Deputy Collector had held a sale of the ryot's property in execution of a decree for rent passed by himself or by some other Collector in a suit instituted under Article 8 of Part A of the Schedule to the Act, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the execution of decrees, including rules 90 and 92 of Order XXI, would by the force of section 192 of Act I of 1908 have become applicable to this case, so far as section 132 allowed it. But when summary proceedings are taken for the recovery of rent by the sale of the ryot's interest in the land under the provisions of section 141 and the following sections, the Collector has only to follow strictly the specific procedure laid down in the Act for the recovery of arrears without having recourse to a suit. Under that procedure it is not provided that a Collector may set aside a sale on account of irregularities. A sale may be postponed under section 131 or stopped by offering the amount due for arrears under section 122; but when once it is knocked down, the sale becomes final, and unless the defaulting ryot or some one else interested deposits the amount of the arrears and the costs of the sale together with 5 per cent. of the price within 30 days and so gets the sale set aside under section 131, it is imperative for the Collector to grant the purchaser a certificate of sale under section 124. The same was the case under the former Rent Act (see section 35 of Act VIII of 1865). There is no provision in either Act for sales being confirmed. Under the former Rent Act it was expressly declared in section 36 that no irregularity in publishing or conducting a sale of moveable property would vitiate such a sale, but this was not the case with sales of defaulters' holdings although the same rules for conducting such sales were made applicable by section 40, as it was held in Nattu Achalai Ayyangar v. Parthasaradi Pillai (1) that a suit would lie in the Civil Courts to question the propriety of a sale of immoveable property under the Act and to have it set aside for irregularities. Doraisamy Pillai v. Muthusamy Mooppan (2) was an instance of such a suit brought in a Civil Court.

Since the passing of the present Act it has been held that a defaulter can sue in the Civil Courts to have it declared that the sale of his holding was void for fraud or irregularity in the conduct of the sale. See Ohidambaram Pillai v. Muthammal (3) and Gouse Moideen Sahib v. Muthialu Ohettiar (4).

When the prevailing law was that enacted by Act VIII of 1865, a purchaser could have brought a suit such as the present to declare that the Deputy Collector had no power to set aside a sale once completed [see Velli Periya Mira v. Moidin Padsha (5)] and in this respect too the enactment of Act I of 1908 has not effected any alteration in the law.

There being no other substantial objection to the plaintiff succeeding in this suit, the decrees of the lower Courts are reversed and the plaintiff will be given a declaratory decree as prayed for with costs throughout from 1st defendant.

KRISHNAN, J.—The lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's suit as barred by Order XXI, rule 92, clause (3), Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), and hence this second appeal by him.

He purchased the 2nd defendant's father's holding at a rent sale held under section 118 of the Estates Land Act, when sold in public auction for arrears of rent due by the latter as a ryot to his land-holder, the 1st defendant, who is the proprietor of the Southvallur Estate. The Revenue Inspector, who was appointed as the selling officer under section 116 of that Act, accepted the plaintiff's bid and knocked down the property to him and received payment of the sale price as provided for in section 123. No application was made for setting aside the sale under section 131. Nevertheless the Deputy Collector, acting on a petition put in by the 1st defendant's manager which alleged certain irregularities in the conduct of the sale and consequent loss by the holding being sold for a grossly inadequate price, set aside the sale and directed a re-sale. A review petition by the plaintiff was rejected after hearing the parties and the original order was confirmed.

Plaintiff has brought the present suit to have it declared that his purchase was a valid one and that the order setting it aside and directing a re-sale was without jurisdiction and null and void and not binding on him.

In making his order the Deputy Collector purported to act under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, read with section 192 of the Estates Land Act. The lower Courts have supported this view, and it is thus necessary to examine these provisions to see if that view is correct.

makes rules 90 and 92 applicable to proceedings under the Act, for the corresponding sections 311, 312 and 314 of the old Code are not excepted sections in section 192, clause (a). To decide the question as to what proceedings in particular they apply to and whether they apply to the rent sale proceedings before us, we must examine the language of those rules themselves. Now if we turn to rule 90, we find that it applies only to cases where immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree; the rule, therefore, cannot be applied except to such sales, as its language precludes its application to sales in general even though made through Court officers. The difficulty in applying this rule to the rent sale before us is that it was not made in execution of any decree at all. An examination of sections 111 to 134 of the Estates Land Act, which deal with such rent sales, does not disclose anything in the nature of a decree being passed; there is no adjudication by the Collector of any rights of the parties. Neither the sale of a holding nor that of property distrained under section 93, Estates Land Act, can with any justification be held to be a sale in execution of a decree. It seems, therefore, to be clear that rule 90 cannot be applied to such sales.

It was suggested that this view would nullify the effect of the application of rule 90 to proceedings under the Estates Land Act. That is not so, because the rule would apply to sales in execution, for example, of rent decrees passed by the Revenue Courts.

If rule 90 does apply, rule 92 also cannot apply and the bar pleaded to the present suit under clause (3) of the latter section fails.

It is conceded that no section of the Estates Land Act taken by itself gives the Deputy Collector power to set aside the sale of a holding for any irregularity. In the case of sale of distrained property sections 103 and 104 make some provision for ordering a resale for certain irregularities mentioned in the latter section. But no such provision exists in the case of sales of holdings. In fact the language of section 124 seems to preclude the idea of the sale of a holding being set aside for irregularity, for under clause (2) thereof the Collector is bound to grant a certificate of sale to the purchaser when the purchase-money is paid under section 123 save in the sole instance of an application under section 131 having been made and granted. Section 131 deals only with an application to set aside the sale of a holding on payment of the amount specified in the proclamation of sale and costs to the land-holder less any amount paid to him subsequently, and 5 per cent. of the purchase-money to the purchaser; it is similar in character to rule 89 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. That section has nothing to do with cases of irregularity in publishing and conducting sales. If we turn to Schedule B to the Estates Land Act which mentions the various applications that can be made under the Act, we find that it makes no mention of any application to set aside the sale of a holding for any irregularity, the only applications referred to therein in this connection being applications under sections 114, 131 and 133; see Nos. 18, 19 and 20 of that Schedule. It seems, therefore, that the Legislature did not contemplate applications based on irregularities to set aside rent sales of holdings.

It cannot be argued that the sale remained incomplete till the Deputy Collector decided whether the bid of the highest bidder should be accepted or not, for under sections 118 to 123 of the Estates Land Act that duty seems to be cast on the selling officer.

It seems, therefore, impossible to avoid the conclusion that the Deputy Collector had no power to set aside the sale to the plaintiff as he did, and his action in doing so was ultra vires. In these circumstances it is conceded that the Civil Court has jurisdiction to give a declaration declaring the invalidity of the order and the validity of the plaintiff's purchase. See Chidambaram Pillai v. Muthammal (3), where also the order was found to be without jurisdiction. The suggestion that on the above view a person who has suffered loss on account of irregularity or fraud in the conduct of a rent sale of a holding will be left without a suitable remedy is, even if it is correct about which I express no opinion, not one we can take into consideration in deciding the question before us as our decision must depend entirely on the provisions of the law as we find it.

RALIA RAM V. MULK RAJ.

It was finally argued that, without getting a sale certificate under section 124 of the Estates Land Act, plaintiff is not entitled to a declaration of his title to the land. But that is not the declaration he is claiming. His prayer is to declare that his purchase is valid and that the order setting it aside is invalid. Such a declaration cannot be treated as a futile one, as the Revenue Authorities will no doubt act according to it, when produced to them, and give plaintiff a sale certificate and possession of the land as required by section 124.

No objection having been raised in this suit to the validity of the plaintiff's purchase on the merits and it not being explained how plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation, though an issue was raised on the point as additional issue No. 5, and the Deputy Collector's order setting aside his purchase being found to be ultra vires, we must give him the declaration he has asked for in the plaint.

The decrees of the lower Courts must, therefore, be reversed and plaintiff's suit decreed as prayed for with costs throughout against the 1st defendant.

Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that alienations made by their father and uncles were without consideration and legal necessity and did not affect their reversionary rights. The land had been mortgaged on various occasions and eventually sold and all the mortgagees as well as the vendee were impleaded as defendants. A preliminary objection that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties having been taken and upheld, the plaintiffs proceeded in their case against the vendee only. Their suit was dismissed. On appeal the District Judge held that there was no misjoinder of parties or causes of action and reversed the decree of the first Court. Defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court:

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case sued for a declaration that alienations made by their father and uncles were without consideration or legal necessity and did not affect their reversionary rights. The land had been mortgaged on various occasions and was eventually sold, the consideration consisting mainly of these previous mortgages. A preliminary objection was taken that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties. This objection was upheld by the first Court on the authority of Musammatt Gopal Devi v. Jai Narain (1). The plaintiffs, therefore, proceeded in their case against the vendee only. Their suit was dismissed, and in their appeal to the District Judge they attacked the decision of the first Court on the question of misjoinder. The District Judge accepted the appeal, on the ground that the Privy Council judgment in Rup Narain v. Musammatt Gopal

Devi (2) had overruled the decision of this Court in Musammatt Gopal Devi v. Jai Narain (1) and the learned Judge held that there was, therefore, no misjoinder of parties or causes of action. Against this decision an appeal has been preferred to this Court, and the same contentions which were raised before the District Judge have been repeated before us. It is also urged that under section 99, Civil Procedure Code, the lower Appellate Court should not have reversed the decree of the first Court on account of misjoinder of parties or of causes of action. We consider that there is no doubt that their Lordships of the Privy Council disagreed with the view of this Court expressed in Musammatt Gopal Devi v. Jai Narain (1) and laid down the law applicable to such cases. There does not appear to have been any subsequent judgment of this Court upon the subject, but the Calcutta High Court in two cases reported as Provabati Debi v. Rameswar Mandal (3) and Rameswar Mandal v. Provabati Debi (4) has followed the Privy Council judgment in question. The position is also now clearer than it was in 1905 owing to the amendments introduced into the Civil Procedure Code. Rule 3 of Order I is now on much broader lines than the old section and gives the plaintiff the right to join as defendants all persons against whom there exists any right to relief in respect of a series of acts or transactions. We may also note that the words "Where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise" were not contained in the old Code. In this case common questions both of law and fact did arise. We, therefore, hold that in such a case one suit can be brought against the vendee and the prior mortgagees.

As for the objection that the District Judge acted against the provisions of section 99 in accepting the appeal and remanding the suit for the trial of the original plaint, we have no doubt that the order of the first Court on the subject vitally affected the merits of the case; this is clear, as it was most improbable that the plaintiff could succeed against the vendee alone, who could shelter himself behind the prior mortgagees.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. L. K. Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT—This was one of three suits brought by the plaintiffs-respondents upon three separate promissory notes executed by one Ma Zon. The plaintiffs made Ma Zon and her husband, Maung Taw, defendants, claiming against Maung Taw on the ground that he was a partner with his wife Ma Zon, and, therefore, liable, although he had not executed the note.

The Judge of the Small Cause Court held that the husband and wife were partners and gave the plaintiffs a decree. The husband now comes to this Court in revision under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

The question whether a member of a partnership firm who has not signed a promissory note is liable in a suit upon that note signed by one of the partners for money lent upon the security of the note for the purposes of the partnership business has been decided by authority see the case of Karmali Abdulla v. Bora Karimji (1), a (1) 26 Ind. Cas. 915; 39 B. 261; 17 M. L. T. 35; 2 L. W. 133; 17 Bom. L. R. 103; 19 C. W. N. 337; 13 A. L. J. 121; 12 O. L. J. 122; 28 M. L. J. 515; (1915) M. W. N. 606; 42 I. decision which was referred to and commented on in Shanmuganatha Ohettiar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (2). There can now be no doubt that under these circumstances each of the partners is liable, although he did not sign the note for money borrowed for the purposes of the partnership business.

The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court decided that the defendants were partners, upon the ground that Burmese Buddhists who are husband and wife are ordinarily to be presumed to be partners in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and that the evidence in this case did not show that they were not partners. As the Judge puts it, the union as husband and wife constitutes under the Buddhist Law a partnership, unless it is shown that the wife lives and has a separate establishment of her own and takes no share in the management of her husband's house. As authority for this view a quotation from the notes by Sir John Jardine given in a Selection of Leading Cases, Part I, Matrimonial Law, page 50, by U Me Aung, is referred to. Under the head "Incidents of Marriage" the learned author says: "With respect to the management and acquisition of property the Buddhist Law, in distinctly recognising the status, treats the husband and wife as if they were partners in the profits, unless perhaps the woman lives and has an establishment separate from her husband and takes no share either in the management of his business or in his household affairs." In the case of U Guna v. U Kyaw Gaung (3) the Judicial Commisicner (Mr. Burgess) said: "It might have far-reaching and inconvenient consequences to hold that such a union, that is to say, the union of a husband and wife, invariably constitutes a partnership, but there is no doubt that it very commonly does so in effect to many intents and purposes," and in that case it was pointed out that the husband and wife had been carrying on a business very much after the character of a partnership.

But to say that the union of a husband and wife very commonly constitutes a partnership to many intents and purposes is by no means the same as laying down the principle that it generally does so, and should be presumed to do so unless the contrary is proved, and it is clear that Mr. Burgess was not willing to lay down the broader proposition. Nor do I think that the note by Sir John Jardine can be interpreted as meaning more than this, that where a husband and wife live together and carry on business they ordinarily share the profits as partners. Here it appears that the wife kept a shop in the bazaar for the sale of dried prawns and the like. The husband was a clerk in Whiteaway Laidlaw's. The husband gave the wife Rs. 500 to start business, but she already had a stall, when he married her, with her mother, and it was only a year after her marriage because she wanted to have a separate shop of her own, according to the husband, that he provided her with this sum as capital.

The plaintiff in his evidence said that the defendants lived together and carried on business jointly, but he did not explain what he meant by this. He said he had made a demand for settlement of accounts from both the defendants and both the defendants asked him to give them time. He admitted that the wife had alone come and bought goods.

Ismail, an employee of the plaintiff, said that he collected outstandings and the wife paid money; sometimes she did not pay and said that she would pay on receipt of her husband's salary. He saw Maung Taw about the money due but Maung Taw said that he had anything (nothing) to do with the money.

I am of opinion that it would be introducing an entirely new principle, for which there is no justification either in the Buddhist Law or in the published rulings, to hold that in every case in which a husband and wife borrow money it must be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that there is a partnership between the two and that the money is borrowed for the purposes of that partnership. Every case must be decided on its merits. In the present case there is nothing to show that the husband took any part whatever in the wife's business beyond the supply of the capital of Rs. 500 with which to set her up in a stall. He has been shown to have a separate and entirely distinct source of income in a shop in which apparently his services are fully employed. The mere fact, if it is a fact, that profits from one or other business are used for the maintenance of both husband and wife certainly cannot constitute the business a partnership. It would be as reasonable in the present case to hold that the wife was a partner in the husband's business as a clerk in the firm of Whiteaway Laidlaw as to hold that the husband was a partner in the wife's business of selling dried comestibles in the bazaar.

The application must be allowed and the decree, as far as the applicant is concerned, must be set aside with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Purchase of co-parcener's share in specific items of family property in Court auction—Partition—Allocation of other properties to co-parcener—Purchaser, right of, against substituted properties.

Plaintiff's vendor purchased certain properties in execution of a money decree against first defendant and obtained a certificate of sale. At the time of attachment a partition suit was pending between the first defendant and his co-parceners. The decree in the partition suit allotted certain properties to first defendant which included some only of the items included in the sale certificate. Plaintiff now sued for the allotment of the full extent of the area purchased by him out of the items allotted to the first defendant under the partition decree:

Held, that the plaintiff had no right or equity to compel the first defendant to give properties in substitution of those which had been sold at the Court auction. [p. 517, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the District Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 400 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the District Munsif of Tiruvadi, in Original Suit No. 192 of 1916.

FACTS.—In pursuance of a money decree against A, an undivided member of a Hindu joint family, certain joint family properties were attached and A's share in them was purchased by B. A partition suit which was pending before the attachment ended after the sale, with the result that some of the attached properties were allotted to members other than the judgment-debtor. The present suit was brought for substitution in respect of A's share in these latter items from the other items which had been allotted to A. The lower Appellate Court decreed the suit.

Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Appellant.—The doctrine of substitution of security can be availed of only where there is a warranty of title. It is clear law that in a Court sale there is no warranty of title. A Court sale differs from a private alienation in that in the former there is no privity of contract between the parties; the purchaser can recover back the money when he finds that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest. The implied warranty of title in respect of sales by private contract cannot, therefore, be extended to Court sales. See Vitla Butten v. Yamenamma (1), Sundara Gopalan v. Venkatavarada Ayyangar (2), Byjnath Lall v. Ramooddeen (3), Aiyyagari Venkataramayya v. Aiyyagari Ramayya (4), Parvathi Ammal v. Govindasami Pillai (5) and Rangaya Reddy v. Subraymanya Aiyar (6). A suit to recover the purchase-money is maintainable in spite of the provisions of Order XXI, rules 91 and 93. See Tirumalaisami Naidu v. Subramaniam Chettiar (7).

warranty of title. It is a question of equity based on "fundamental principles of jurisprudence" as laid down in Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen (3). The law is clearly stated in Manjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (8), which has been adopted with approval in Rangaya Beddy v. Subramanya Aiyar (6). See also Venumeta Subbaraju v. Veejesena Seetharamaraju (9) (Court sale). There is no distinction in this respect between a private alienation and a Court sale on principle.

Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri, in reply.—Manjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (8) lays down that what the purchaser gets is a mere right in personam and not a right in rem. The observation at page 689 is purely obiter.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's vendor purchased certain properties in execution of a money decree against the first defendant and obtained a certificate of sale, Exhibit A. At the time of attachment, a partition suit between the first defendant and his co-parceners was pending. The decree in the partition suit allotted certain properties to the first defendant. On comparing the sale certificate, Exhibit A, with the list of the properties which the first defendant obtained under the partition decree, it is found that the sale certificate included items which did not all of them correspond to the items in the partition decree. Plaintiff obtained 283 cents under the sale certificate. His suit was for the allotment of this extent from the items given under the partition decree.

Some of the items being common to both, there will be no difficulty in decreeing them to the plaintiff. As regards those which do not correspond to the partition decree, the question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to have their equivalent from out of the properties which fell to the 1st defendant's share in the partition.

It was first argued that whatever may be the plaintiff's rights, he is not entitled to claim that the exact extent minus the extent of the items which are common should be carved out of the other items. There is much to be said for this argument, because the properties that were allotted on the partition might be more valuable than the properties purchased at the auction. The latter might be unproductive punja lands. But the point was not put in issue in the Courts below or even here specifically. The consideration of the question would necessitate the taking of evidence; we have, therefore, refused to hear the question argued.

The more important question is, has the plaintiff any right or equity against the first defendant to compel him to give properties in substitution of those which were purchased at the Court auction. It was contended by Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri that as there is no warranty in a Court sale, as the principle of caveat emptor applies to it, and as the plaintiff has chosen to bid for and purchase specific properties, he is not entitled to claim their equivalent from other properties of his judgment-debtor. There is no direct authority on the question, Raja Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwari (10) only lays down that there is no warranty in a judicial sale.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar drew our attention to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen (3). That was a case of a mortgage of specific properties belonging to an undivided family. The case arose before the Transfer of Property Act came into force. Their Lordships say: "It is, therefore, clear that the mortgagor had power to pledge his own undivided share in these villages, but it is also clear that he could not, by so doing, affect the interest of the other sharers in them, and that the persons who took the security took it subject to the right of those sharers to enforce a partition, and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty." This principle was apparently enunciated as arising from first principles of jurisprudence and was not based upon any statutory recognition of warranty. No doubt by the Transfer of Property Act, the Legislature has provided for a warranty in favour of the mortgagor: vide section 65; but the decision above quoted was wholly independent of legislative warranties. In Manjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (8) Sankaran Nair, J., applied this principle to cases of private sales by a co-parcener of specific properties. Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri contended that that decision is opposed to principle and to the judgment of Bashyam Aiyangar, J., in Aiyyagari Venkataramayya v. Aiyyagari Ramayya (4). In this latter case what the learned Judge decided was that where a sale is made of specific items before partition, the proper remedy of the purchaser is to sue for partition and to claim the allotment to his vendor of the specific items sold to him. It was also held that if this cannot conveniently be done, the right to compensation for selling properties without title can be enforced against the vendor. This does not affect either Sankaran Nair, J.'s dictum in Manjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (8) or the present case. Further Sankaran Nair, J.'s dictum has been accepted as correct by Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, J.J., in the order of reference in Rangayya Reddy v. Subramanya Aiyar (6).

The further question is whether these rulings are applicable to adjustment of rights dependent upon Court sales. The point was thrice argued, as we had doubts on the question and as it is res integra. The learned Vakils on both sides have placed all the available authorities before us, but none of them really touches the question we have to decide. There are some general principles on which alone we can rest our decision. (1) There is no warranty in a Court sale: see Raja Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwari (10). (2) There is no privity of contract between an auction purchaser and a judgment-debtor. Under the old Code of Civil Procedure if the purchaser had reason to believe that there was no saleable interest at all in the property sold, he had a right of action against the decree-holder for refund of money. The new Code has taken away that remedy and limits the purchaser's right to an application for refund. There is no indication in the Code that the purchaser has any remedy against the judgment-debtor. (3) It must be remembered that it is the decree holder that brings the property to sale; he prepares the proclamation and to the best of his knowledge places before the public all the available information in respect of the property to be sold. Although the judgment-debtor is expected to assist the Court in settling the proclamation and although his failure to do so may entail some consequences, there is no provision of law which brings him into contact with the bidders at a sale. These persons are bound by the principle of caveat emptor. They take the risk of the property corresponding to the description given. If that fails, they can have no remedy against the judgment-debtor, because there was no act or representation by him which has contributed to the result.

Having regard to the principles above indicated, it seems to us that there is no justification for extending the theory of substitution, which has been enunciated in respect of persons standing in the relation of promisor and promisee, to persons who are strangers to each other. In this view, we must hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to any property against the defendant other than those which his vendor purchased in the Court sale. As the parties cannot agree in this Court regarding the identity of properties, we must reverse the decree of both the Courts below and remand the suit to the Court of first instance for ascertaining what the properties are in the possession of the defendant which are identifiable with the items purchased at the Court auction.

Plaintiff is entitled to a decree to the share of the judgment-debtor which his vendor purchased at the Court auction. There will be a preliminary decree as above indicated and the Court of first instance will pass the final decree in the usual course. Each party must bear his own costs hitherto incurred. Further costs will be provided for in the revised decree.

Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Absolute dedication, whether can be revoked.

Where there is an absolute dedication of property to a deity, a subsequent deed cannot affect the right of the Thakur to the property, nor can the donor, as owner of the property, revoke the dedication. [p. 519, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Burdwan, dated the 27th of July 1916, reversing the decree of the Munsif, Additional Court, Asansol, dated the 29th of June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Baranashibashi Mookherjee, for the Appellant.—The defendant No. 1 is the appellant. This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain properties alleged to belong to the plaintiffs as *shebait*s of certain deity. The property admittedly belonged to a lady named Dhan Kumari, who executed on 12th Falgun 1315 a document called arpannama but which is really a charge for the maintenance of the deity. The lady said there that she would maintain the sheba at present and after her death her relatives would do so. After six months she executed another deed in favour of the relatives, subject to a charge for the maintenance of the sheba, on 7th Assin 1316. She revoked the first deed on the 12th Falgun. Plaintiffs are the persons who were appointed to maintain the sheba after her death.

[Babu Bankim Chandra Mookherjee, for the Respondents, pointed out that the suit went on a different footing assuming that the arpannama was not valid as it was not properly executed.]

My first submission is that the deed of 12th Falgun created only a charge upon the property and did not make full dedication and on that footing the lady made the bequest.

Secondly, even supposing there was a complete dedication, the donor would have a right to change the course of management by a subsequent deed.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—With regard to the first point the other side raises an objection that it was not pressed in the Courts below.]

I submit it was argued in the lower Court.

The lady simply created a charge upon the property by her first document and the second document creates the right subject to the charge.

A distinction between a private and public endowment under Hindu Law must be taken into consideration. The character of the property may be changed by the consensus of the family. There is no case directly to the point. Refers to Govinda Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Debendra Kumar Chowdhury (1) and Khetter Ohunder Ghose v. Hari Das Bundopadhyaya (2).

Ganapat Iyer's book and Govinda Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Debendra Kumar Chowdhury (1) referred to.

Babu Bankim Chandra Mookherjee, for the Respondents—My first point is that if it is established that by a deed of the 12th Falgun there was an absolute dedication out and out in favour of the deity of which there is no doubt, the subsequent dedication by which, he revoked the deed is inoperative.

The ownership vested in the deity and she could deal with the property as a shebait and by no other process.

In the subsequent deed she makes a bequest in my clients' favour subject to the charge. She does not make any substitution of shebait.

If the trustee does anything prejudicial to the interest of the property she must institute a suit unless she has reserved any power of revocation.

Here she has reserved no power of revocation in the deed. My friend's clients are also insolvents.

Krishna Pillai v. Arunachala Ohettiar (3) referred to.

Babu Baranashibashi Mookherjee, in reply.—I would ask your Lordships to give effect to that part of the deed which is valid, viz., the power of nomination.

Dedication remains and if the revocation stands, the plaintiff is out of Court.

SASI BHUSAN BHADOR V. BASANTA LAL BHAR.

The case referred to does not apply because it is a case of a public endowment.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of $7\frac{1}{2}$ bighas of land, on the allegation that the land was dedicated to the deity "Ganesh Janani", and that the plaintiffs were appointed *shebait*s under an arpannama dated 12th Falgun 1315 B. S. executed by one Dhan-kumari. It is further alleged that they had been in possession thereof until they were dispossessed in 1319.

The defence was that by a subsequent deed dated the 26th Bhadra 1316, Dhan-kumari Dasi made a gift of the property in favour of the defendant subject to a charge in favour of the Thakur, and that by a still later deed dated 7th Assin 1316, she revoked the first deed of dedication dated 12th Falgun 1315 altogether.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal the decree of the Court of first instance was reversed and the plaintiffs' suit decreed.

Two questions have been raised in appeal before us. The first is whether there was an absolute dedication of the property under the arpannama dated the 13th Falgun 1315 or whether there was merely a charge in favour of the Thakur on the property.

The arpannama has been placed before us and we agree with the Court below in holding that there was an absolute dedication in favour of the Thakur.

Our attention has been drawn to a passage towards the end of the document which might indicate that she had some beneficial interest in the property so long as she was alive. But reading the document as a whole, we think that there was an absolute dedication of the property. By that document she appointed the plaintiffs and their heirs as the *shebait*s of the Thakur after her death. Now, there being an absolute dedication of the property, the subsequent deed dated 26th Bhadra 1316 could not affect the right of the Thakur to the property nor of the plaintiffs as *shebait*s under that deed.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the founder has the right of substituting one shebait in the place of another and it is pointed out that by the deed of 20th Bhadra 1316, the lady purported to substitute the defendant as shebait in the place of the plaintiffs. It appears, however, that by this deed the lady purported to make a gift of the property to the defendant as if it was secular property and there was merely a charge in favour of the Thakur. That being so, it cannot be said that the defendant was substituted as shebait in the place of the plaintiffs.

The second contention is that even if there was a complete dedication, the donor had a right to change the course of management by a subsequent deed and reliance is placed upon the third deed dated 7th Assin 1316. But under the last deed there was a revocation of the dedication altogether, and we think, therefore, that the statement in the document to the effect that the plaintiffs would not be the *shebait*s cannot affect their right.

In the first place, the lady purported to revoke the gift and shebaitship in her right as owner of the property and not in her right as founder and first shebait of the Thakur. In the next place, the right of the plaintiff as shebait depended upon the dedication made in the deed dated 12th Falgun 1315. There having been an absolute dedication, as stated above, it could not be revoked. We cannot divide the terms of the deed and hold that one part of it, namely, that relating to the dedication was invalid, but that the statement contained in the document with regard to the shebaitship of the plaintiff was valid. The question might have been different, had she purported to act in her capacity as a trustee or as founder of the trust. As it is, we do not think that she had any power as owner of the property to set aside the deed dated the 12th Falgun 1315 in any respect.

In this view it is unnecessary to consider whether a founder of a trust can in his lifetime alter the course of succession of *shebait*s even if he does not reserve any power to do so in the deed of trust.

We may mention that the appellant before us is an insolvent and has prosecuted this appeal with the permission of the Insolvency Court.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XL, r. 1, O XLIII, r. 1 (s)—Order allowing application for appointment of Receiver—Appeal, whether lies.

An order allowing an application for the appointment of a Receiver, without actually appointing any one to that office, is not appealable. Rule 1 of Order XL of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates an order appointing a Receiver.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 15th March 1919.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies from the order of the Court below. In the suit in question an application was made by the plaintiffs for the appointment of a Receiver. The defendants objected and after hearing arguments the Court passed an order to the following effect:—"I would, therefore, allow the application for appointment of a Receiver. Plaintiffs to suggest names for selection with particulars regarding security, remuneration and property to be taken possession of within a month." The present appeal has been preferred from that order. It is an admitted fact that no Receiver has, up to the present time, been appointed. So there is no order by the Court below actually appointing a Receiver but merely an expression by the Court of its intention to appoint. Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (s), grants a right of appeal against an order under rule 1 of Order XL. Order XL, rule 1, says where it appears to the Court to be just and convenient, the Court may by order appoint a Receiver; and it is, therefore, clear that the law gives a right of appeal only against an order appointing a Receiver, and not against an expression by the Court below of its intention to appoint. The matter is covered by many decisions. It was decided by the Calcutta High Court in Upendra Nath Nag Chowdhry v. Bhupendra Nath Nag Chowdhry (1) and also (1) 9 Ind. Cas. 582; 13 C. L. J. 157, by the Bombay High Court in the case of Narbadashankar Mugatram Vyas v. Kevaldas Raghunathdas (2) and also by our own Court in the case of Ramji v. Koman Das (3). The only decision in favour of the present appellant is one of the Madras High Court in the case of Palaniappa Chetty v. Paluniappa Chetty (4). That was a decision of three Judges in which two held that an appeal would lie from an order such as the one now before us, but the third Judge disagreed. Moreover, an examination of the report shows that the third Judge fully agreed with the two Judges of the same Court who had referred the matter for the decision of a Full Bench, with a view to the upsetting of a previous decision of the Madras High Court with which they did not agree. The decision in the case of Ramji v. Koman Das (3) is one which to our own knowledge has been followed more than once in this Court. We see no reason whatsoever to differ from the mass of opinion which is all against the appellant. We must, therefore, accept the preliminary objection. We hold that no appeal lies. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed. We make no order as to costs as no certificate has been filed.

Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), Ch. II.

HANUMAN SINGH v. ADIYA PRASAD.

Where in a pre-emption suit estoppel by acquiescence, as distinct from estoppel by the prescribed notice, is pleaded, it is necessary to show that the pre-emptor had full knowledge of what was going on and not merely the knowledge that there was a proposal to sell the property to some one or another for a certain price [p. 523, col. 2.]

A formal offer to the pre-emptor, however, is not necessary where it is obvious from the attendant circumstances that the pre-emptor is neither willing nor able to pay the purchase-money. [p. 523, col. 2.]

Chapter II of the Oudh Laws Act does not allow any discretion to a Court in a pre-emption suit to go into the question of the good faith of the plaintiff in asking for pre-emption [p. 524, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption brought by the plaintiff-respondent against the three defendants. One Ladli Prasad had died in 1910 leaving behind him three sons, Adiya Prasad (plaintiff) by his first wife (deceased) and Ajudhia Prasad and Narba'a Prasad (vendors) by his second wife Musammatt Chhatardei. To pay off an ancestral debt a mortgage was executed by one Sankata Prasad, who was guardian of all three minors, on the 20th of December 1910 in favour of a Bank in Gorakhpur, the entire family property being included in the mortgage. On 11th November 1914 the Bank at Gorakhpur transferred their rights as mortgagees to one Bhagwati Prasad. These facts are all set forth in the sale deed (Exhibit A 5) which has given rise to this suit and which is printed at page 9 of the appellants' book. When Adiya Prasad came to the age of majority, the guardianship of Sankata Prasad ceased and Musammatt Chhatardei was appointed guardian of her two children by the District Judge of Gorakhpur. The District Judge of Gorakhpur, being anxious to pay off the debt, at first asked Adiya Prasad to arrange for the payment. He made some attempts to do so but was unsuccessful, as is shown by an application of his dated the 23rd March 1917, which appears as Exhibit No. A1 on page 5 of the appellants' book. This application runs as follows:—

'The applicant begs to state as follows:—

"1. That the applicant and Musammatt Chhatardei Kunwar (opposite party) were ordered by the Court to provide for payment of the debt, by sale of the property.

"2. That the applicant made repeated endeavours and negotiations are going on with Bindeshri Prasad, resident of Mohalla Hanspur, Gorakhpur city, with respect to purchase of the villages situate in Gorakhpur, but as he has, as yet, given no clear reply and further delay is calculated to injure the other side, the applicant has no objections to the arrangements of Musammatt Chhatardei Kunwar.

"Although the debt is not paid off by that money, yet the applicant has no objections to comply with such orders as might be passed by the Court."

Musammatt Chhatardei then managed to get an offer for the property, which was submitted to the District Judge and sanctioned by his order of the 20th of June 1917. This sanction, which is Exhibit A 3, printed at page 6 of the appellants' book, runs as follows:—

"Mr. Mohammad Ismail and M. Abdul Rahman for Musammatt Chhatardei. Notice issued to Adiya Prasad who refused it. It was served by affixation. Applicants suggest that Musammatt Chhatardei and the minors should sell 9 annas out of their two-third share and should then sue for contribution. The creditor, B. Bhagwati Prasad, remits two hundred rupees of the debt. I sanction the sale of 9 annas share for Rs. 90,124. Out of this Rs. 87,145 will be paid to B. Bhagwati Prasad. The balance Rs. 2,979 should be retained for bringing the suit, if necessary, otherwise it will be invested in postal cash certificates or some good security. A draft deed should be filed for approval. Evidence should be given within a month of the payment of the debt."

The next proceedings took place on the 8th September 1917, which is the important date in this case. Between the 2nd of June 1917 and the 8th September 1917 Musammatt Chhatardei had received a higher offer for the property and in Exhibit A2, printed on pages 7 and 8 of the appellants' book, she asked permission to accept it. The person who had made the first offer named Gobind Prasad, defendant No. 3, was also present in Court and put in an application, Exhibit A4, printed on pages 6 and 7 of the appellants' book, asking that he should at least be offered the property for the higher price. The District Judge passed the following order, which is Exhibit No. 2 and is printed at page 8 of the appellants' book:—

"Musammât Chhatardei..... Applicant.

"M. Abdul Rahman has now obtained an offer for ninety-three thousand rupees. Babu Adiya Prasad has no objection. The Court has already sanctioned the sale for a smaller sum. It is not concerned with the question who is the purchaser. That is a matter for the vendors. A draft deed is put in and is approved. Evidence should be given on November 2nd of payment of the debts."

It will be seen from this order that the plaintiff Adiya Prasad was present in Court and it can be inferred beyond all doubt that he was aware of the previous offer by Gobind Prasad inasmuch as Gobind Prasad was himself in Court. It will also be noted that a draft deed was put in and approved by the District Judge. This draft deed was in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. On the 19th September Gobind Prasad prevailed on Musammât Chhatardei and the two vendees to allow him one-third share of the property. Consequently the deed before registration (which took place on the 20th September) was altered by the addition of the following endorsement printed at page 12 of the appellants' book:—

"N. B. —This deed was prepared on 16th September 1917, but this 19th day, Lala Gobind Prasad purchaser has been, with consent of parties, added. Now Thakur Hanuman Singh, Babu Chhote Lal named in the sale-deed, and Lala Gobind Prasad, son of Lachhman Das, Banker, resident of Thomsonganj Market, Pargana Khairabad, Tahsil and District Sitapur, have become purchasers of annas 3 and this note-writing to be taken as part of the sale-deed and the sale-deed to be read subject to this amendment."

The case of the plaintiff originally was that, although present in Court on the 8th September and aware of Musammât Chhatardei putting in her application to be allowed to sell to Hanuman Singh and B. Chhote Lal, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, he had on that date expressed a desire to himself purchase the property but that the Judge had remarked that he was not concerned with the question as to who would be the purchaser. This case, however, was given up by the plaintiff during the hearing of the suit, as is clearly stated in the following passage from the judgment:—

"Issues Nos. 1 and 2.—It has since been conceded by Babu Ram Prasad, Pleader for the plaintiff, that his client was aware of the contents of the application, dated 8th September 1917, and that he did not inform the District Judge, on the 8th September 1917, that he was willing to purchase the property (vide pleadings, dated 17th May 1918).

"The main fact is, therefore, admitted, i.e., the plaintiff consented on the 8th of September 1917 to the sale being effected in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for Rs. 93,000."

Notwithstanding this the lower Court has held that the plaintiff was not estopped from bringing the suit on the following grounds:—It was held that, although the plaintiff must be considered to have assented to the sale for Rs. 93,000 in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, he never consented to defendant No. 3 being joined as a vendee. The learned Subordinate Judge has also held that there is no evidence that the vendees were induced to purchase the property by any acquiescence or conduct on the part of the plaintiff. This finding is based on the failure of the defendants themselves to come into the witness-box and also on the fact that on the 17th September 1917 the plaintiff sent to B. Chhote Lal, defendant No. 2, a telegram as follows:—

"Do not purchase share Kosila. I shall purchase. If you shall purchase, I will pre-empt. Inform Hanuman also."

To which he never received an answer. The lower Court has also relied on the ruling in 5 Oudh Cases, to which we shall subsequently refer, as authority for holding that before estoppel can be pleaded the pre-emptor must have expressly consented to the purchase of the property by the ultimate vendees.

There is no question of any written notice having been given in this case. It will clear the ground if we state that we cannot concur with the learned Subordinate Judge in finding that the defendants were bound to prove, by direct evidence, that the conduct of the plaintiff induced them to conclude the purchase. If it can be proved that the plaintiff had assented to the sale to the three defendants, then it may be presumed that the defendants were relying on his acquiescence and were induced by it to complete the purchase. We cannot presume that they would, apart from any acquiescence by the plaintiff, have purchased the property and incurred the risk of a pre-emption suit. The fact that the plaintiff sent a telegram on the 17th forbidding the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to purchase does not indicate that the defendants were willing to purchase without his consent. Knowing that they had already received his consent—a fact which is noted in the District Judge's order of the 8th September—their failure to pay attention to the telegram cannot bear any such construction. The Subordinate Judge relied on Bhagwat Singh v. Saiyad Nazir Husain (1) and Bank of Upper India v. M. Alopī Prasad (2). These rulings are quoted as authority for the proposition that, in order that a pre-emptor be held to be estopped by his conduct, it is necessary that the plaintiff must establish that the property was offered to the pre-emptor at a certain price, that he refused to purchase it at that price, and that he expressly consented to the purchase of the property by the defendants-vendees. It is urged that, even if we admit that the plaintiff was present in Court on the 8th September and consented to the sale of the property either to defendant No. 3 at a lesser price or to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 at a higher price, these conditions are not fulfilled. In our opinion these rulings, in so far as they lay down these three conditions, are not applicable to the facts of the present case. The general principle of these rulings appears to us correct, namely, that if acquiescence is pleaded, it must be an intelligent acquiescence by a person who is cognizant of all the material facts, which of course will include the person to whom the vendor proposes to sell. We are not prepared to dissent from the view that, where estoppel by acquiescence, as distinct from estoppel by the prescribed notice, is pleaded, it will be necessary to show that the pre-emptor had full knowledge of what was going on and not merely the knowledge that there was a proposal to sell the property to some one or another for a certain price. We do not, however, think that a formal offer to the pre-emptor is necessary when it is obvious from the attendant circumstances, as in this case, that the pre-emptor is neither willing nor able to pay the purchase price. Nor do we consider that it is necessary for the pre-emptor to have been aware of the precise persons in whose favour the sale deed was ultimately executed, when he had already shown that he did not mind if the sale-deed was executed in their favour. The respondent had agreed to a sale in favour of the defendant No. 1 alone or in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. All three defendants were in these circumstances entitled to assume that he would assent to the purchase by themselves in conjunction. It is to be noted that the plaintiff had, as early as the 23rd March 1917, by the application of that date (already quoted) signified that he left the matter of getting a purchaser for the family property entirely in the hands of Musammāt Chhatardei. The last sentence of the application shows that he felt quite safe as she was a guardian under the Court. We cannot concur with the plaintiff's Counsel that this application can be construed to mean that he only agreed to the payment of debt by Musammāt Chhatardei and not to the sale of any property. Nor again can it be construed to mean that he only assented to the sale of property in Gorakhpur and not to the sale of property in Sitapur. It should also be remembered that the mortgage debt for which the property was being sold was binding on the plaintiff as well as on the minors. The whole case of the plaintiff, as set up for him by the Subordinate Judge, rested on his being able to prove that he would not have consented to Gobind Prasad being a purchaser. As we have pointed out, he had already shown that he would assent to any purchaser. Moreover, the order of the District Judge of the 8th September 1917, quoted above, coupled with the fact that Gobind Prasad and the plaintiff were both present in Court on the 8th (Gobind Prasad's presence being proved beyond all doubt by his application of that date and plaintiff's presence proved by the District Judge's order), goes to show that the plaintiff had consented to the sale to defendant No. 3, and also that he was willing to consent to the sale to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. His plea, therefore, that he was not willing to assent to the sale to the three defendants appears to us baseless.

(2) 10 O. C. 257.

CHIDAMBARANATHA GOUNDAN v. SELLAPPA REDDI.

Another argument taken up by the plaintiff's Counsel is that a pre-emptor must, if offered the property when the proposal is to sell to one person, be again offered it if the first proposal falls through and is replaced by a proposal to sell to another person. Every case must be judged on its merits. We quite agree that, where the transactions are separate in time, the property should be again offered to the pre-emptor as the circumstances of the pre-emptor, may have changed in the interval. The argument will not apply to a case like this, where the proceedings as to the sale of property form a single transaction and the pre-emptor must be deemed to have assented to the sale to any or all of certain persons proposed.

The respondents' Counsel urges that, even if we allow the appeal of the appellants (who are defendants Nos. 1 and 2), the judgment of the lower Court will hold good as regards the third share of the defendant No. 3 who has not appealed. The defendant No. 3 has, however, been made a respondent and his Counsel appears to urge that, in the event of the plaintiff being found estopped, he should have the benefit of that finding as well as the appellants. He relies on Order XLI, rule 33. In our opinion that Order gives us full powers in a case like this, and we consider that the judgment of the lower Court should be upset as a whole. There being no force in the plaintiff's case, we do not think that he should be allowed to take advantage merely of the fact that defendant No. 3 has not appealed.

We do not consider it necessary to go into the question raised by ground No. 3 of the appeal, namely, that this is not a bona fide suit for pre-emption. Chapter II of the Oudh Laws Act does not allow any discretion to a Court in a pre-emption suit to go into the question of the good faith of the plaintiff in asking for pre-emption.

For the above reasons we allow this appeal with costs in both Courts to the appellants. The plaintiff respondent and the defendant-respondent will bear their own costs.

Appeal allowed.

Second appeals against the decree, of the District Court, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suits Nos. 286, 287 and 288 of 1917, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Kulitalai, in Original Suits Nos. 1098, 1100 and 1099 of 1916 respectively.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellants.—On a proper reading of the Will it must be held that the legatees, i. e., the mother and sister of the testator took an absolute and not merely a life-estate. There is, first, the usual expression that the legatees are to enjoy Sarva Swathanthrathudan, which means with full proprietary rights. In Muthuvenkatanarayanan Chetti v. Athipandurenga Naidu (1) Sadasiva Aiyar, J., held that that expression was the strongest that could be used to confer an absolute estate. No doubt Ayling, J., took the opposite view in Manika Mudali v. Muthachi Kavandan (2), but that has not been followed in later cases. If only a life-interest was intended, the testator would have said so and provided for the vesting of the remainder in his Dayathis.

Recent decisions have laid down that, so far, at any rate, as this Presidency is concerned, there is no general presumption that legacies to women confer only a life-estate. On the other hand, the rule is that, unless a contrary intention is clear, a transfer of property confers all the rights of the transferor. Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (3). It is distinctly mentioned in the Will that only the testator's mother and sister are entitled to all that is comprised in the Will, and none else. That indicates very clearly that the testator intended to give them all his rights in the properties.

The bequest to Dayathis does not have the effect of cutting down the absolute estate. It is only a contingent estate which is not inconsistent with the absolute nature of the earlier estate. It could take effect only after the death of the testator's sister without issue. The sister's children are not expressly made the direct objects of the gift.

The provision for the discharge of debts with the consent of the testator's Dayathis does not militate against the absolute nature of the gift. The debts have any way to be discharged and their advice was to enable the legatees to discharge the real debts of the testator.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopala Chariar, for the Respondents.—The bequests in this case are to Hindu females. They must be held to take a life estate unless a contrary intention is patent in the Will.

The provision for the Dayathis taking the property on the death of Sundarammal without issue shows that the prior estate was a life estate and that there was a gift over to the Dayathis. At any rate what was intended, was only a life estate to the sister, a full estate to her children and a contingent interest to the Dayathis.

The condition that the debts were to be paid with the consent of the Dayathis shows that their interest as reversioners was reserved.

The legatees are, under the terms of the Will only 'to enjoy,' i. e., to take the income from the properties.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The only thing we have to concern ourselves with in deciding this second appeal is to ascertain as far as possible what were the intentions of the testator, and that is not an easy matter because there are some expressions in the Will which are not easy to be reconciled with others. In the first part of the Will there is a provision that the testator's mother and sister are both to enjoy his properties with full proprietary rights after his death, and this is followed by an expression of intention to exclude all others. Then at the end it is provided that if the sister should die without issue, the Dayathis of the testator are to get the property and that their consent should be obtained in the matter of discharging debts. There is no distinct provision that the two women are to have powers to alienate the property beyond the use of the words Sarva Swathanthrathudan, which may be translated "with full proprietary rights" and have been regarded by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., as the "strongest expression that an alienor can employ to confer an absolute estate on the alienee" in Muthuvenkatanarayanan Ohetti v. Athipandurenga Naidu (1), and by Ayling, J., as not conferring a full title on the donee in Manika Mudali v. Muthachi Kavandan (2). Again in Sambasiva Ayyar v. Visam Ayyar (4) Wallis, J., (now C. J.) observed that the words: "You shall enjoy the suit lands with the rights of gift, sale, etc.," where words of common form borrowed from Regulation No. XXV of 1802 denoting the act of the donor in divesting himself of ownership rather than the nature of the interest taken by the donee. As pointed out by the learned District Judge, there is no provision in this Will as to what is to happen with the mother's interest. Probably the reason for this is that the testator did not contemplate his mother outliving her daughter. I am of opinion, after careful consideration, that the bequest in favour of the testator's Dayathis was contingent on the sister dying without issue (not without heirs, as has been translated, the word used being santhathi) and that they did not take a vested interest. The testator evidently wished to exclude his sister's husband, but not her children if any should be born. As a matter of fact, the sister Sundarammal died between the appeal to the District Court and the second appeal to this Court and left no issue. The estate vested in her heirs on the testator's death. The contingency upon the happening of which the Dayathis would have succeeded to the property, namely, the death of Sundarammal without issue during the testator's lifetime, never happened. That is the only construction to be put on the words "if there be no issue to the above Sundarammal, my sister, the property should go to my Dayathis after her death" no time being specified for the occurrence of the event of her death—vide 2 Jarman (6th Edition) 2144. The event (Sundarammal's death) no doubt was certain to happen but it was uncertain whether she would die childless. If the testator had intended his mother and sister to take life-estates, he would have declared his wish that they should enjoy his property after his death and that after they died, the remainder, should go to the sister's issue, or failing such issue, to the testator's Dayathis. But there are no words to that effect. The provision that the debts should be paid off upon the consent of the testator's Dayathis may have been inserted as a measure of precaution and in any case no inference can be drawn from these words so as to override the words of the bequest in the preceding parts of the Will. These words of bequest are sufficient to authorise the alienations at the time that they were made. I agree that the appeals must be allowed and the District Munsif's decree restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

KRISHNAN, J.—The main question that arises for decision in this case is whether the mother and the sister of the testator took an absolute estate or only a life-estate under his Will, Exhibit A. If they took an absolute estate, plaintiff's suit as reversioner to have it declared that an alienation by them is not binding beyond their lifetime fails. The question depends on the intention of the testator as expressed in his Will and to be gathered from its language taken as a whole.

Before considering the language of Exhibit A, it may be observed that the rule enunciated by the Privy Council in the case of Moulvi Mohamed Shamsul Hooda v. Shewukram (5) and again referred to and followed in Radha Prasad Mullick v. Rane Mani Dassee (6), that when a Hindu gives property to a Hindu woman and more particularly to a Hindu widow there is a presumption that the estate meant to be given is only a life-estate, has been held in recent cases not to apply now in this Presidency. See Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (3) and the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Muthuvenkatanarayanan Ohetti v. Athipandurenga Naidu (1). On the other hand, the general rule that a transfer of property should be taken to convey all the rights of the transferor unless a contrary intention appears clear, is applied. In construing the present Will we are not, therefore, trammelled in any way by the fact that the legatees are two Hindu women.

I shall now turn to the language of the Will. The words of bequest are "my mother Periammal and my own sister Sundarammal shall both enjoy with all proprietary rights (Sarvaswathantharathudan in Tamil) after my death the immoveable properties belonging to my family, cattle and all the debts I have incurred by means of document." The testator then directs them to pay Rs. 1,000 to his wife for her maintenance and Rs. 300 to a temple for a religious festival. He then reiterates that it is only his mother and sister that shall be entitled to the whole of the "matters" mentioned in the Will and none else shall be entitled to them. If the Will ended there, there can be no doubt, as the learned District Judge observes, that the testator intended to give the ladies all the rights he had in the properties or, in other words, an absolute estate. The import of the words ("Sarvaswathantharathudan") was considered by Salasiva Aiyar, J., in Muthurenkattanarayanan Chetti v. Athipandurenga Naidu (1) above referred to. On page 106* the learned Judge lays down as his view that that expression is the strongest that an alienor can employ to confer an absolute estate and that the addition of other expressions is superfluous. Without going so far, I consider that the expression is wide enough to convey an absolute estate with powers of alienation, and effect must be given to it unless we can gather from other words in the Will that the testator meant to use it in a restricted sense. That is the principle recognized in section 70 of the Indian Succession Act. In Manika Mudali v. Muthachi Kavandan (2) Ayling, J., took a somewhat narrower view of the import of the expression. His view was not fully adopted by Tyatji, J., who was sitting with him and has been dissented from by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Muthurenkattanarayanan Chetti v. Athipandurenga Naidu (1). It seems to me that Ayling, J., failed to give full effect to the words as he considered the presumption that an estate given to a Hindu female is a life-estate outweighed their effect. That presumption, as I have already observed is now hardly recognised in this Presidency and, therefore, the ruling in question loses its authority. It may also be observed, that here we have a further indication that the testator meant to give a full estate, as he says again that the ladies alone and none else shall be entitled to the properties. In this respect the present case is similar to the unreported case, Appeal No. 26 of 1896 referred to in Manika Mudali

v. Muthachi Kavandan (2), and is thus distinguishable from that case on the very point on which the unreported case was distinguished in it.

In this connection one argument for the respondent has to be considered, viz., that the use of the word "enjoy" indicates that the properties were not to be alienated and thus restricts the scope of the words "Swathantharathudan," for it is said that after alienation the alienees and not the legatees will "enjoy" the properties. I think this argument puts too restricted a construction on that word. We often find it used in conjunction with words giving express powers of sale, gift, etc., in Tamil documents. If the meaning suggested for the respondent is accepted, there will be a contradiction in terms in such cases. It would thus appear that the word does not necessarily imply that the legatees should keep possession of the properties and should take only the income from them; it is used in a general way to mean "to take the benefit of the ownership of the property." The facts that the sum of Rs. 1,300, which the testator directed the ladies to pay, could not be raised without alienating some of the immoveable properties and that he also directed them to pay his debts are clearly in favour of the view that he meant to give them powers of alienation.

So far the words of the Will are distinctly in favour of the contention that an absolute estate was given. We have now to consider the effect of two further provisions in the Will, for the testator goes on to say that "if there be no issue to the above Sundarammal, my sister, that property should go to my Dayathis after her death" and that "the debts should be discharged with the consent of my Dayathis." To take the 2nd clause first, I do not think it has any bearing on the question as to the nature of the estate given. It is suggested that it was put in for the benefit of the Dayathis and that it indicates that their interest as reversioners was reserved and that only life-estates were given to the ladies. It seems to me that this is all very far-fetched and untenable. It might equally well be suggested that the clause was put in because the testator considered that without the concurrence of the Dayathis the ladies might be misled into paying fictitious debts. I think that is the more natural suggestion. The direction is not really binding on the ladies, as they will have to pay the just debts of the testator whether the Dayathis consent or not.

I shall now consider the effect of the first clause above quoted. In the first place, it will be noticed that it is confined to the sister's share and has no effect on the mother's share. It could not, therefore, be relied on to cut down the mother's estate in any way.

Now if we consider the clause carefully, it seems to me to strengthen the inference that an absolute estate was meant to be given to the sister rather than the contrary. It distinctly contemplates the sister's estate was to go to her issue if she were to get any. That indicates that she was to have an estate of inheritance and not merely a life-estate. It was suggested that we should construe the clause as giving a life-estate first to the sister and then a full estate to her children, if any, and then a contingent estate to the Dayathis. But there are no words in the Will to justify this. There are no words denoting the children as the direct objects of the distinct and independent bequest and in their absence, the bequest to the sister and her children must be taken as giving an estate of inheritance to the sister, as no contrary intention appears from any other part of the Will. That is a well-recognised rule and it is embodied in section 84 of the Indian Succession Act and though the Act does not apply in the present case, the principle is one of general application.

The bequest in favour of the Dayathis is purely a contingent one dependent on the uncertain event of the sister having no issue till her death. The fact that after the decree in appeal in this case that event has actually happened, is immaterial in this connection. Being a purely contingent bequest, it is difficult to see how it can be used to show that the earlier bequest was of a life estate only. Such a contingent bequest may clearly be added to a Will giving an absolute estate without any inconsistency and, therefore, its addition is really of no importance in considering the nature of the estate first given. If, as in the case in Lallu v. Jagmohan (7), there was a bequest of a vested remainder, it would necessarily follow that the prior estate was a limited one whatever be the words used to describe the powers given to the prior legatee. But that is not the case here at all. The contingent bequest was entirely ineffective against the prior legacy to the sister and could take effect, if at all, only on her death without issue. It cannot, therefore, be relied on to cut down the absolute estate given to her by the words of the bequest in her favour in the Will. It is not necessary, besides, for the purposes of this case whether the contingent bequest failed entirely on the death of the testator leaving his sister alive, or whether it became effective in favour of the Dayathis against the sister's heirs when she died without issue. I express no opinion on that point.

I have, for the above reasons, come to the conclusion that the mother and the sister of the testator took an absolute estate in the testator's properties under his Will. Plaintiff's suit, therefore, fails. The second appeal must be allowed and the decree of the District Judge reversed and that of the District Munsif restored with costs here and in the Court below.

An appeal does not lie to the Privy Council as of right against an order of remand by the High Court, unless it is a final order within the meaning of section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code and the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council involving a substantial question of law of general interest. DIRGPAI SINGH V. PAHLADI LAL.

The question whether the fraud of a mortgagor alone in procuring the registration of the mortgage-deed in a particular registration office, by representing that some portion of the mortgaged property was within the jurisdiction of that office, would vitiate the mortgage and disentitle the mortgagee, who was ignorant of the fraud, to enforce it, is a substantial question of law of general importance to satisfy the requirements of rule 3, Order XLV, of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 530, c 1. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The suit was one to enforce two simple mortgages. The present applicant, who is the purchaser of a part of the mortgaged property, contested the suit on the ground that the registration of the mortgages was invalid inasmuch as a part of the property comprised in the mortgage, which lay within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar in whose office the mortgage-deeds were registered, did not belong to the mortgagor and was never intended to be included in the mortgage. The Court below held that the registration of the document was invalid by reason of the fraud perpetrated on the registering officer. It relied for its decision upon the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dasi Debi (1). Upon appeal to this Court the learned Judges of this Court found that the mortgagor obtained registration of the document in the office of the Sub-Registrar of Budaun by perpetrating this fraud, that he got the Sub-Registrar to register the document whereas he had no interest in the property and he had not intended to mortgage it but had included it in the mortgage simply with the object of obtaining registration of it in the office of the Sub-Registrar of Budaun. They, however, found that in this fraud the mortgagee did not participate, inasmuch as the property was recorded in the revenue papers in the name of the mortgagor although under an arbitration award it had been allotted to the share of other members of the family to which the mortgagor belonged. The learned

Judges held that as the mortgagee did not join in the fraud, the registration was not vitiated by reason of the fraud of the mortgagor. They accordingly remanded the case to the Court below for trial of the other issues which arose in the case. From this order of remand the present application for leave to appeal to His Majesty has been preferred on two grounds. The first is that the order of remand was incorrect and the decision of the learned Judges of this Court was erroneous upon the question of fraud. The second ground is that even if no appeal lies from the order of remand, the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council within the meaning of rule 3, Order XLV, of the Code of Civil Procedure. We have recently held in the case of Muhammad Sajjad Ali Khan v. Muhammad Ishaq Khan (2) that an order of remand made under circumstances similar to those of the present case is not a final order within the meaning of section 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that an appeal does not lie as of right from that decision. We may mention that the value of the subject-matter of the suit and of the proposed appeal exceeds Rs. 10,000. The decision to which we have just now referred follows a long series of rulings of this Court and, therefore, we must hold that an appeal does not lie to His Majesty in Council in the present case from the order of remand to the Court below. We have next to consider whether the case is "otherwise a fit one" for appeal to His Majesty in Council. In order to justify us in certifying the case to be a fit one for appeal, we have to see whether the case involves a substantial question of law and whether that question of law is one of general importance. In the Privy Council case to which the learned Judges of this Court have referred, it was held that if the property of which registration was obtained did not exist, or if it existed, and the mortgagor and the mortgagee joined together for the purpose of committing a fraud in the registration department and getting the property registered by a Sub-Registrar who should not have registered it, the registration would not be valid and the mortgagee would not be entitled to take the benefit of the document so registered as a valid document. That is not the case here. The question in the present case, as already pointed out, is whether the fraud of the mortgagor alone would vitiate registration and disentitle the mortgagee (who was ignorant of the mortgagor's fraud) to enforce the mortgage. This is clearly a substantial question of law. It does not appear to have been decided in any other case so far as we are aware and so far as cases have been cited to us. The question is one of first impression and, being a substantial question of law, we should be justified in granting the application for leave to appeal if it is one of general importance. We are of opinion that the question is also one of general importance, as it frequently arises in cases similar to the present. We are, therefore, of opinion that this case is "otherwise a fit one" for appeal to His Majesty in Council and we so certify.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, rr. 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, scope of—Claim proceedings—Order regarding possession only and not adjudicating on title, effect of—Order on claim petition, when and how far binds judgment-debtor—Payment of decretal amount after one year from date of order, effect of—"Possession", "conclusive", meanings of.

A judgment-debtor will not be bound by an order on a claim petition unless he has been a party to it and also unless the order in terms adjudicates on his title. Where the only matter adjudicated on by the claim order is as to who is in possession and the conclusive effect predicated by Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, only affects possession and not the title, the order does not bind the judgment-debtor even though he is a party and actively contests the claimant's right, and the judgment-debtor or his heirs are not bound to sue to establish their title within a year of the date of the order. [p. 534, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The scope of Order XXI, rules 58 to 61, Civil Procedure Code, should be restricted to concluding the parties regarding the right to attach the property in execution, and not to finally determine the rights of the parties to the property itself [p. 533, col. 1.]

The term "possession" in Order XXI, rule 60, of the Civil Procedure Code signifies bare possession and not possession indicative of title. [p. 534, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether a payment of the decree amount after a year from the date of the adverse order has the same effect as payment within a year and makes the order spend itself out.

Per Bakewell, J.—The meaning of the word 'conclusive' in Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, is that the realization of the attached property shall proceed or be stayed as directed by the order of Court and that there shall be no appeal therefrom except as prescribed by the rule. If the attached property be sold in pursuance of the order, then the purchaser will take it free from or subject to the rights asserted by the claimant or objector as determined by the Court. [p. 535, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether if the attachment be raised the execution proceedings simply come to an end or there is an adjudication as to the title of the judgment-debtor.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 683 of 1917, against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruthurai-pundi, in Original Suit No. 109 of 1915.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and N. S. Srinivasa Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The judgment-debtor, having been a party to the claim proceedings, is bound by the order thereon to the same extent as the decree-holders. All that is required is that notice should go out to him. See Second Appeal No. 975 of 1918. So that if he does not bring a suit to set aside the order within a year under Order XXI, rule 63, he is barred from agitating the matter by a fresh suit. See also *Muthusami Mudaly v. special right to a defeated claimant. In Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (5) referred to in Sadaya Pillay v. Amurthachari (4) and in other cases, the effect of an order like the present on a judgment-debtor was never considered. It cannot be said that a judgment-debtor is not a person interested in defending against the claim. The property is attached as the judgment-debtor's property. The judgment-debtor is, therefore a person against whom an order is made and who is to bring a suit within a year of the date of the order to establish his right to the property within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 63. Secondly, the contention is that the order adjudicates only as to possession and not as to title. The words "attachment is raised" clearly refer to an act done on recognition of the claimant's objection that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest at all. See Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vadrevu Ranganayakamma (6), Nagendra Lal Ohawdhury v. Fani Bhusan Das (7), Ramu Aiyar v. Palaniappu Chetty (8), Badri Prasad v. Muhammad Yusuf (9), Amrata v. Pandharinath (10). Possession by itself may be heritable, or attachable in which case there may be an adjudication as to possession alone. But a possession available against a person who subsequently comes forward as owner is possession based on title.

Lastly, plaintiff's case is one of possession and dispossession. So Article 142 and not Article 144 will apply.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar and with him Mr. S. Varadachariar, for the Respondents.—The order in question is a step in the execution of the decree and so is an adjudication, if at all, only for the purpose of executing the decree. The order is "attachment is raised." Those words import no adjudication as to the title of any party. The one year rule was intended solely to obtain a finality in execution proceedings and the executing Court has no power to pass orders which will continue to have effect for all time to come. It has been repeatedly held that such orders cannot operate as res judicata. They continue to be in force until the work of executing the decree is completed or until the decree is paid off when, eo instanti, the order ceases to have any force.

Rule 5 of Order XXI contains the words "had some interest in or was possessed of, the property attached." It is plain, therefore, that the order need not be an adjudication on title and that it may be only as to base physical possession.

Even though the Court may have jurisdiction to execute the decree, it may often happen that the property attached is of a value exceeding its jurisdiction. So it cannot be said to adjudicate on title finally.

See also Koyyana Ohittemma v. Dossy Gavaramma (11).

The judgment debtor is not a necessary party. He may have no interest in the fight between the claimant and the decree-holder. None of the rules refer to the judgment-debtor as a party to these proceedings. Rule 47 regulates the rights as between parties to a suit and a defeated claimant has always a right of suit against the judgment-debtor.

Farther no order could be made against the judgment-debtor. For it is the decree-holder who attaches whatsoever properties in which he thinks a judgment debtor has a saleable interest, and the order is that such attachment be raised.

Mr. S. Varadachariar, continuing the argument for the Respondents, cited Gurur v. Subbarayudu (12), Moidin Kutti v. Kunhi Kutti (13) and other cases in support of the argument that an order in claim proceedings is not an order 'against' a judgment debtor.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, in reply.—The contention for the respondents, if allowed, would bring about many anomalies in the law. The whole series of decisions in the High Courts which proceed on the basis that the adjudication is final for all time to come, must fall to the ground. It will also be a direct travesty of the policy underlying section 47, Civil Procedure Code, which bars a separate suit.

The only question that can be decided by an order on a claim petition is whether the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest in the disputed property or not. It could never have been contemplated by the Legislature that the owners of properties wrongly attached were liable for all time to be harassed by regular suits brought by persons who were parties to the proceedings whereby the wrong attachment was got raised. The Courts also have from 4 Madras High Court Reports [Netietom Perengaryprom v. Tayan-larry Parameshwaren Nambudry (14)] downwards taken a consistent view in my favour.

The raising of the attachment is only the necessary corollary to a finding as to title.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—One Amirthammal had two sons, Vythilinga, the 1st defendant, Dakshinamoorthy, the father of defendants Nos. 3 to 5, and at least one daughter. There was some dispute about the property belonging to the daughter's husband and a suit was pending in respect of it. A compromise was come to and by Exhibits A and B the property in suit was given to Amirtham in 1882. Subsequent to this arrangement, disputes arose between the mother and the sons regarding the right to this property, which is of considerable value. The mother gave leases to enable the lessee to eject the sons. There was some litigation based on these leases. Ultimately in Suit No. 228 of 1908, a decree was obtained for money by a creditor against Amirtham and Vythilinga. In execution, the property in suit was attached, as belonging to the judgment-debtors. Dakshinamoorthy intervened with a claim petition. Exhibit XVIII (c) is the order thereon, dated the 4th February 1910. The exact interpretation of this order will be dealt with later on. In June 1910, the share of Vythilingam in certain items of the property was sold. It is alleged for the respondents that the sale-proceeds were utilised to pay off the decree and that the decree has been fully satisfied. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar for the appellants does not admit this and contends that as this point was not argued in the Court below, it is not open for the respondents to rely on it and to base a legal argument on it. The suit was brought by the daughters of Amirthammal claiming the property as their mother's Stridhanam (14) 4 M. H. C. R. 472.

and praying for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with their enjoyment. The Court of first instance held that the property was taken by Amirthammal under Exhibits A and B benami for her sons and dismissed the suit. In appeal the District Judge has reversed the decree. He has held that the benami character of Exhibits A and B has not been established and that it has not been proved that the sons were holding adversely to their mother. On the question whether the failure to sue within a year of the order on the claim petition barred the plaintiff, he held that the title of Amirthammal was not adjudicated upon in the claim petition and that neither she nor her heirs were bound to sue within a year (Article 11 of the Limitation Act) to establish their title.

The second appeal is against that decree. The second appeal has been very fully and ably argued before us, as was to be expected from the learned Vakils engaged in the case, and as the matter may not rest here and as the decision affects considerable property, I think it desirable to deal with the questions at some length.

As regards the findings that Exhibits A and B were not executed benami for the sons, Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar rightly stated that the finding was not open to attack in second appeal. Whatever may be the powers of the Judicial Committee to examine the evidence where two Indian Courts differ, it has been held that the Civil Procedure Code does not give the second Appellate Court that power. The same observations apply to the finding as to the adverse possession.

I shall now proceed to consider the question very elaborately argued at the Bar. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for the respondents addressed us on the scope and effect of Order XXI, rules 58 to 61. The question may be considered from two standpoints; (1) Is the order an adjudication which affects title to the property for all purposes; and (2) Is the order effective against all the parties interested in it, namely, the judgment debtor, the defendant and the claimant? For the limited scope which the learned Vakil suggested for the rules there are some weighty considerations: (a) It is now well recognised that, notwithstanding an adverse order, if the money due under the decree is paid off within a year, the order spends itself out and the party affected by the order need not seek to have it set aside. See Koyyana Ohittemma v. Doosy Gavaramma (11). Whether a payment after the year should have the same effect is open to argument. But it is unnecessary to consider the point now. Speaking for myself, I am unable to see why the payment after the period fixed in Article 11 of the Limitation Act should have a different effect. (b) It is equally well established that the result of the litigation started in consequence of an order on a claim petition is to place the parties in status quo ante, that is, to the position they occupied at the time of the attachment objected to. If that is the result, it is suggested that the adjudication in the claim petition should be restricted in its scope to the matter arising in execution under the decree and not to concluding the rights of parties which are not within the purview of the execution order. There is much force in this contention. (c) Again, if the decree holder is unable to establish the title of the judgment debtor in answer to a claim, it would not preclude him, in execution of another decree, from proving that the property did really belong to the judgment-debtor. This would go to show that the adjudication has not the force of res judicata, but it is only operative to conclude rights in execution. (d) The nature of the inquiry is a summary one. Rights relating to property far beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of a tribunal in regard to suits cannot be disposed of on the claim petition. Can the Legislature have contemplated such far-reaching consequences to an order made under such circumstances as to conclude the right and title of the parties for all time to come? I must say that I have been very much impressed by these considerations and I am inclined to think that the scope of the rules should be restricted to concluding the parties regarding the right to attach the property in execution, and not to finally determine the rights of the parties to the property itself.

However, I do not want to rest my judgment on this point alone, because there are decisions and observations in the judgments of this Court which clothe such an order with wider attributes than I am prepared to invest them with.

In my opinion, the order in question was not intended to and did not adjudicate upon the right of Amirtham. I shall shortly review the history of the question as to how far and to what extent a judgment debtor is bound by an adverse order in a claim petition. There are three possible views: (a) He is not a necessary party and is not bound by the order, although it was passed in his presence and after hearing him; (b) he is bound by the order, whether he appeared and contested the claim or not; and (c) the extent to which he is affected will depend upon what was considered and decided in the enquiry. The first view has been taken by some of the Judges in the other High Courts. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar argued in support of that view. Mr. S. Varadachariar elaborated it by pointing to the language of rule 60 and to the final effect the order has. Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, on the other hand, referred to the concluding portion of rule 61 and to the language of Article 11 of the Limitation Act as pointing to the opposite conclusion. Having regard to the course of decisions in this Presidency, I do not feel myself at liberty to hold that the order would under no circumstances be binding on the judgment debtor. Nor am I prepared to agree with Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar that the order would bind the judgment-debtor whatever may be the nature of the adjudication on the claim petition. The intermediate view is what has consistently been acted on in this Court. The view in Netietom Perengaryprom v. Tayanbary Parameshwaren Nambudry (14) was very soon after limited in its operation by stating that the nature of the relief should be considered in appraising the effect of the order. See Arakel Kunhi Kuttiyali v. Imbichi Amnah (15). In Guruvu v. Subbarayudu (12), to which Mr. S. Varadachariar drew our attention, it was distinctly stated that even if the judgment-debtor had notice, the order will not bind him. The order must be against him in effect. In Muthusami Mulaly v. Ayyulu Bathadu (1) evidence was given against the claimant by the judgment-debtor. The learned Judges held that his having notice of the claim and of the adjudication will not bind him, if his rights were not adjudicated upon. The same view was taken in Moidin Kutti

v. Kunhi Kutti (13). To all these judgments Sir Arnold White was a party; and I think I am justified in deducing the rule from them, that a judgment debtor will not be bound by the order on a claim petition, unless he has been a party to it and also unless the order in terms adjudicates upon his title. That was the very view pointedly enunciated in Sadaya Pillay v. Amurthachari (4), after referring to the narrow view held in Calcutta. Sabella Appanna v. Mallidi Appanna (3), to which I was a party, only held that if there is an adverse order against the judgment-debtor, he can sue within a year. It negated the contention that the decree-holder alone can sue and not the judgment-debtor. Second Appeal No. 975 of 1918 was a suit by the claimant and there is nothing in that judgment which is opposed to the authorities I have reviewed. Now comes the question regarding the nature and effect of the order in the summary enquiry in the present case. In considering this point, the observations in Ramu Aiyar v. Palaniappa Chetty (8) should be borne in mind. It was there pointed out that if the order in terms leaves the question of title open, it cannot be contended that observations as to possession conclude title as well. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar rather insistently argued that possession spoken of in rule 60 is possession indicative of title and not bare possession, e. g., that of a trespasser. I find nothing in the rule to warrant this interpretation. Bearing these considerations in mind, I proceed to examine the order passed on the claim petition. It starts by saying that only the question of possession will be considered. The discussion is all about possession. The conclusion relates to possession. I am unable to read in such an order an intention on the part of the Court to deal with the title of the parties. It is true that Amirtham put in a statement and claimed the property. But the Court wisely did not embark upon the enquiry claimed by her.

My conclusion is that notwithstanding that Amirtham was a party, notwithstanding that she actively contested the claimant's right, the only matter adjudicated upon was as to who was in possession; and that, therefore, the conclusive effect predicated by the section only affects possession and not the title being litigated in this suit.

In this view, I am of opinion, the District Judge is right and I would dismiss the second appeal with costs.

BAKEWELL, J.—I do not propose to deal with the cases which have been cited and discussed by my learned brother, but intend only to examine the scope of rules 58 to 63 of Order XXI of the Code and the effect of the order made upon the claim petition in this case. The ground of an application under these rules is that property attached in execution of a decree is not liable to that attachment. Section 60 of the Code declares that certain things "belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf," are liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, and that certain other things are not so liable. A judgment-debtor may, therefore, object to any attachment on the ground that the property attached is exempted from attachment and sale and an objection by him falls within rule 58. A third party may claim that he has some interest in or is possessed of the property attached (rule 59) and since the judgment-debtor is interested in the discharge of the decree by means of the attached property and in any surplus sale proceeds after such discharge, he should be made a party to the proceedings. The enquiry under rule 58 is termed an 'investigation,' not a trial of issues between the parties, and the Court is directed not to make it when the claim or objection has been designedly or unnecessarily delayed. The policy of the Legislature is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised at execution sales: Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (5), and the finding of a Court is a summary decision from which the suit allowed by rule 63 is simply a form of appeal: Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (16). The object of the Legislature in prescribing a suit by way of appeal appears to be to give the parties an opportunity of placing their respective cases fully before a Court, because a summary investigation might not have furnished sufficient material for a decision by an Appellate Court. From these considerations, I am of opinion that the meaning of the word 'conclusive' in rule 63 is that the realisation of the attached property shall proceed or be stayed as directed by the order of the Court and that there shall be no appeal therefrom except as prescribed by the rule. If the attached property be sold in pursuance of the order, then the purchaser will take it free from or subject to the rights asserted by the claimant or objector as determined by the Court; but if the attachment be raised, the question arises whether the execution proceedings simply come to an end or there is an adjudication as to the title of the judgment-debtor. This question does not arise in the present case and I express no opinion upon it.

I agree that the order in this case is not made against the judgment-debtor Amir-thammal, because the Court did not decide the title to the property as between her and her co-defendant and the claimant. I think that the Court only decided that the sale should not include any possessory right to a moiety of the property to which the claimant might be entitled. I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Where mortgaged property is acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, the mortgage cannot be redeemed as the mortgaged property has ceased to exist. [p. 535, col. 2.]

A suit by a mortgagor against his mortgagee to recover his share of the compensation awarded to the latter in respect of the mortgaged land under the Land Acquisition Act is governed by Article 120 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 536, col. 1.]

Where the Secretary of State is wrongly impleaded as a defendant in a suit, the period of notice given to the Secretary of State cannot be excluded under section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act in computing the period of limitation applicable to the suit. [p. 536, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 3rd February 1919, upholding the decree of the Munsif, North Lucknow, dated the 11th May 1918.

Messrs. Makund Behari Lal and Rajeshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant is the successor-in-interest of Piara Lal Risaldar, the proprietor of two groves in Lucknow City. Piara Lal Risaldar mortgaged the two groves by deeds of usufructuary mortgage. The defendant-respondent Nizam-ud-Din Khan is the successor-in-interest of the mortgagee. The groves were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. Compensation was paid to Nizam-ud-Din Khan. The plaintiff then sued for redemption of the mortgage. The Courts held that the mortgage could not be redeemed because the mortgaged property had been destroyed. Their view was that the mortgage had ceased to exist and that there was nothing to redeem. The District Judge held that the plaintiff would ordinarily have been entitled to a share of the amount paid by Government by way of compensation for the acquisition of the groves, but that such relief was time barred. The present second appeal is preferred by the plaintiff.

In support of the view that the mortgaged property was destroyed and that no redemption can take place, the Courts below relied on the decision in Sajjadi Begam v. Musammatt Janki Bibi (1). That was my decision. I see no reason to differ from the view I took in it. I, therefore, hold that there can be no question of redemption because there is nothing to redeem.

The next point for determination is whether the plaintiff should obtain a decree against Nizam-ud-Din Khan for a portion of the money that Nizam-ud-Din Khan received in compensation. That money was paid to Nizam-ud-Din Khan on the 1st March 1911. The plaintiff could have instituted a suit against him at once. There was no necessity for him to have delayed one moment after Nizam-ud-Din Khan received the money. I agree with the learned Counsel for the appellant that limitation is not governed by Article 62, First Schedule, Act IX of 1908, but that limitation is governed by Article 120. The money was paid to Nizam-ud-Din Khan on 1st March 1911. The suit was not instituted till the 20th March 1917. So the claim was not within six years. The learned Counsel for the appellant meets the point in the following way:—He says that he sued the Secretary of State and the Lucknow Municipality in the plaint and that he had to give them two months' notice under the provisions of the law. He invokes the assistance of section 15 (2), Act IX of 1908. But looking into the facts, I find that he had no good cause to sue the Secretary of State or the Municipality. He had no cause of action against them. Section 15 (2) reads: "In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit of which notice has been given in accordance with the requirements of any enactment for the time being in force, the period of such notice shall be excluded." It has application only to instances in which notice has been given in accordance with the requirements of any enactment for the time being in force. No enactment required the plaintiff to give notice to the Secretary of State or the Municipality in this particular matter, for he had no cause of action against them. The learned Counsel is really arguing for the proposition that where a plaintiff under a mistake of law or fact conceives that he has a cause of action against the Secretary of State or a public body in addition to his cause of action against a private person and joins without reason the Secretary of State or the public body, he shall be entitled to extend the period of limitation ordinarily allowed by law against the private person by two months. The proposition cannot be accepted. The section has only application in cases in which the plaintiff has a good cause of action against such a body. The law forbids him to institute a case against such a body until he has given them notice. So the law says very reasonably as you are not allowed to bring a case until two months have elapsed from the date of the notice, that period of two months shall not count against you in the way of limitation. But the law nowhere says to a plaintiff that when he is under no disability but erroneously imagines himself to be under a disability, he will obtain any relaxation of the ordinary law of limitation. I hold that Article 120 applies and I hold that the suit is barred under the provisions of Article 120. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

(1) 42 Ind. Cas. 793; 20 O. C. 255.

VENKATACHELLA REDDY v. MUTHIALU REDDY.

MUTHIALU REDDY AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 5—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, scope of—Claim petition by party exonerated, dismissal of—Order, finality of—Claimant, whether can plead title in defence to suit by auction-purchaser.

The meaning of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, is that the parties to the proceedings shall be concluded by the order made thereon, and that the purchaser at a Court sale shall take the property purchased by him free from any claims negatived by that order, subject to any right of appeal or of suit to which the claimant may be entitled. [p. 538, col 2.]

Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, may possibly be construed, where the aggrieved claimant or objector is a party to the suit, as substituting a right of suit for the right of appeal. [p. 538, col 2.]

As section 47, Civil Procedure Code, does not prescribe the procedure to be followed in claim proceedings, regard must be had to the provisions of Order XXI, which deals with "execution of decrees and orders," and rules 58 to 63 of that Order, which are grouped under the sub-heading "investigation of claims and objections," regulate applications made on the ground that any property attached in execution is not liable to such attachment. [p. 537, col 2; p. 538, col 1.]

The concluding words of the first paragraph of rule 58 (1) of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code must be held to apply only to the case where the claimant or objector is not a party. [p. 538, col 1.]

Where a party exonerated from a suit preferred a claim to property attached in execution of the decree against the other defendants, alleging that it was his self-acquisition, and the property was subsequently sold and the auction-purchaser sued for partition as against all the defendants who were members of a joint family:

VENKATACHELLA REDDY v. MUTHIALU REDDY.

Held, that the exonerated defendant was precluded from raising the plea of self-acquisition as a defence, inasmuch as he had neither appealed against the order on his petition nor filed a separate suit to establish his title. [p. 538, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vellore, in Appeal Suit No. 691 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 380 of 1916 on the file of the District Court, North Arcot), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Vellore, in Original Suit No. 759 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar (with him Messrs. P. S. Narasami Aiyar and S. Rangachari), for the Appellant.—The lower Court should not have allowed the 2nd defendant to plead in the partition suit that any item of the property was his self-acquisition. That plea was negatived by the order on his claim petition. He has not appealed, nor filed a separate suit as contemplated in Order XXI, rules 58 to 63. Parties to suits are as much bound by these rules as strangers. Section 47, Civil Procedure Code, does not prescribe the procedure to be followed. The procedure must, therefore, be taken from rules 58 to 63, where the question is whether property attached is not liable to attachment. The body of the Code deal with substantive law. The procedure portion is relegated to the First Schedule, which must be adopted wherever possible.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar (with him Mr. A. Viswanatha Aiyar), for the Respondents.—Order XXI, rules 58 to 63, Civil Procedure Code, do not apply to parties to suits. They are governed by section 47. Applications under that section are independent of the rules. A party exonerated who is defeated in his claim petition is not bound to sue within a year of the order. He may urge the same ground in resistance of an action brought against him.

JUDGMENT—The 5th defendant obtained a money decree against the 1st and 4th defendants in a suit in which the 2nd and 3rd defendants were parties but were exonerated from liability. The decree holder attached the undivided half share of the judgment-debtors in certain property, alleged to belong to the undivided family of which the four defendants were members, and thereupon the 2nd defendant applied by a petition under Order XXI, rule 58, of the Code of Civil Procedure that the attachment of portion of the property might be raised on the ground that it had been assigned to him upon a partition and was his separate property. The petition was dismissed on the ground that it was too late. The appellant bought the attached property at the Court sale and then sued the defendants for partition, and an issue was raised whether the portion of the property previously claimed by the 2nd defendant belonged to him.

The appellant was not a party to the previous suit and is not a representative of any party [Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (1)] and the provisions of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply to his suit. The question, therefore, is whether under Order XXI, rule 63 the order made upon the 2nd defendant's petition in the proceedings in execution precludes him from raising this defence.

The argument on behalf of the 2nd defendant appears to be that rules 58 to 63, of that Order do not apply to parties to suits, who are governed by section 47, and that applications under that section are in some manner independent of the rules.

Section 47 (1) contains two provisions, of which the first is positive and prescribes the Court which shall determine certain questions, and, therefore, relates to jurisdiction; the second is negative and declares that the application to the Court shall not be initiated by a plaint. If a plaint raising any of these questions be presented to the Court executing the decree it may be treated as a proceeding in execution but if it be presented to another Court it should be rejected. In the former case the Court may treat a statement of defence as an application for relief under the section, Thatu Naick v. Kondu Reddi (2).

Since the section does not prescribe the procedure to be followed, regard must be had to the provisions of Order XXI, which deals with "execution of decrees and orders" and rules 58 to 63 of that Order which are grouped under the sub-heading "Investigation of claims and objections," regulate applications made on the ground that any property attached in execution is not liable to such attachment. Section 60 of the Code declares what things are liable to and what exempt from attachment and a party to a suit may raise a claim or objection in the executing Court under that section, and in the absence of any specific provisions those headed "Investigation of claims and objections" will apply.

It has been decided by the Calcutta High Court in Punchanun Bundopadhyaya v. Rabia Bibi (3), upon the words of section 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 "and in all other respects, as if he was a party to the suit," that that and the following sections, which correspond to rules 58 to 63, do not apply to parties to suits.

No doubt if the claimant be a party these words do not apply, but they do not expressly exclude him from the operation of the rule or limit the very general words with which the rule begins "where any claim is preferred to, or any objection is made"; moreover these words occur in a sentence defining the powers of the Court, which has already been given jurisdiction over any claim or objection by the preceding words "the Court shall proceed to investigate." We are of opinion that the concluding words of the first paragraph of rule 58 (1) may be taken as applying only to the case where the claimant or objector is not a party. We may also point out that the general arrangement of the present Code differs from the Code of 1882, in that the body of the Code deals with matters of substantive law and jurisdiction and the rules of procedure are relegated to the First Schedule and we must, therefore, consult the latter to discover the manner in which the principle laid down in section 47 is to be carried out.

The question as to the remedy of a party to a suit who is aggrieved by an order made upon a claim or objection does not arise in the present case, but we may point out that section 96 of the Code, which gives a right of appeal from a decree, commences with the words "save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code", and that section 121 enacts that "the rules in the First Schedule shall have effect as if enacted in the body of this Code" and that rule 63 may possibly be construed as substituting a right of suit for a right of appeal.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council have described a suit under section 283 of the Code of 1882, which corresponds to rule 63, as "simply a form of appeal [Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (4)].

The policy of the Legislature is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised at execution sales [Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (5)] and the principle applies whether the claimant be a party or a stranger to the suit. We are of opinion that the meaning of rule 63 is that the parties to the proceedings shall be concluded by the order made thereon, and that the purchaser at a Court sale shall take the property purchased by him free from any claims negatived by that order, subject to any right of appeal or of suit to which the claimant may be entitled.

In the present case the 2nd defendant did not appeal or bring a suit and is, therefore, precluded from asserting his title under a partition.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the District Munsif is restored with plaintiff's costs in this and the lower Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Jessore, dated the 18th of January 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Jhenidah, dated the 27th of February 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Porosh Nath Mookerjee, for the Appellants.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession. The predecessors of the plaintiff and the defendant were brothers. In a previous money suit one of the brothers entered into a compromise, which was not registered, and gave up his right to the immoveable property in favour of the other brother suing. The money suit was valued at Rs. 44. It is also alleged in the plaint that the defendant took a kabuliyat from the plaintiff. My points are that the compromise, which was not registered, cannot be enforced and that the decree for Khas possession is bad in law. The plaint itself states that the defendants gave a registered kabuliyat in respect of some lands in their possession. The compromise was effected in a money suit and being extraneous to the subject-matter of the suit, cannot be relied upon: Birbhadra Rath v. Kalpotaru Panda (1), Kali Charan Ghosal v. Ram Ohandra Mandal (2). The suit was for money due on account of rent paid by one brother to the landlord. The compromise ought to have been registered, as the consideration for what was given up according to the compromise was more than Rs. 100. The case in Gobinda Ohandra Paul v. Dwarka Nath Paul (3) relied on by the learned Munsif is distinguishable. Refers to Natesan Ohetty v. Vengunachiar (4).

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants from the appellate judgment of the Additional District Judge, and the matter depended upon the question whether the document to which reference is made required registration.

Taking the statement of facts in the learned Judge's judgment, it appears that the plaintiffs and the defendants are respectively the representatives of Telam and Kinn, who admittedly were previously the sole proprietors of the suit Jama. The plaintiffs' case was that in 1838 Telam sued Kinn for contribution, he having defaulted in payment of rent. I understand from what the learned Vakil has said that Telam had paid rent to the landlord and Kinn had failed to pay his half share. Consequently Telam sued Kinn for contribution. A compromise in this suit was effected and was incorporated in a decree, under which Kinn gave up his rights in the land and Telam gave up his claim for rent. The learned Vakil has translated the material parts of the decree for us; and, it appears that the amount of rent which was claimed was Rs. 44 odd, as being the contribution which the defendant was liable to make to the plaintiff and it was alleged to be due in respect of certain properties which were mentioned in the decree; and it was then stated that the defendant gave up his right to the half share in the properties mentioned in the decree and that the plaintiff gave up his claim for the money and he, the plaintiff, agreed to pay rent to the landlord after he had taken possession. On the face of that decree, it would appear that the consideration for the defendant giving up his title to his half share was the Rs. 44 which the plaintiff was claiming in that suit. But the learned Judge in his judgment said: "Telam by this solenamah in effect paid Kinn some Rs. 100 as consideration." The learned Vakil who appeared for the appellant has submitted that this Court must take that as a finding of fact.

Now the learned Munsif said in his judgment: "In the present case the plaintiff got his claim for money dismissed on condition that he would get the lands in lieu of it." There again, it looks as if the consideration for the giving up of the title was Rs. 44. If the consideration was only Rs. 44 then there would have been no necessity for registration, because the amount would be less than Rs. 100 which is the amount specified in section 17 (b) of the Registration Act of 1908. But on the assumption that we must take the learned Judge's statement to be a finding of fact that the consideration was Rs. 100, the further question arises whether the document would require registration. I think the test which should be applied to this case may be stated in the words of Mr. Justice Mitter in Gobinda Chandra Paul v. Dwarka Nath Paul (3) as follows:—"The question whether any particular term of a petition of compromise incorporated in a decree made under the power given by section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure" (which corresponds to rule 3, Order XXIII, of the present Code), "relates to the suit or is covered by its subject-matter must be decided from the frame of the suit, the relief claimed, and the relief allowed by the decree on adjustment by lawful agreement. The mutual connection of the different parts of the relief granted by a consent decree is an important element for consideration in each case in deciding whether any portion of the relief is within the scope of the suit. No hard and fast rule can be laid down, each case being governed by its own facts." As far as I can judge from the translation which the learned Vakil was good enough to give us of the decree, I am of opinion that it cannot be said that in the compromise which is under consideration, there were any matters which did not relate to the suit or which were not covered by its subject-matter. As I have already said, the claim was for a share of rent in respect of certain lands which were held by the then plaintiff and the then defendant in an equal interest and the plaintiff on the one hand agreed to give up his claim for the rent and the defendant agreed to give up his title to his share in the lands in respect of which the rent was claimed. Consequently, in my judgment, the terms of the compromise did relate to the suit, or at all events were covered by the subject-matter thereof. It is conceded by the learned Vakil that if that be so and inasmuch as the compromise was embodied in the decree, the document would not require registration even though the transaction did amount to a conveyance and the consideration for it was Rs. 100. That point, therefore, fails.

The learned Vakil's further point is that the plaintiffs should not get a decree for Khas possession, on the ground that the defendants are in possession by reason of a kabuliyat as tenants of the plaintiffs. It appears that in their written statement the defendants denied that the kabuliyat related to any of the lands in suit, and, the learned Judge has said, "it appears to be the case of neither party that the plots in suit are covered by the kabuliyat. The plaint and the written statement do not allege any such identity." In my judgment, that being so, the defendants cannot now turn round and say that they are in possession as tenants under the kabuliyat. For these reasons I think that the decree must be upheld and this appeal dismissed with costs.

DCVAL, J.—I agree.

*Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 131—
Suit to establish right to offerings of temple—Arrears, claim for—Limitation applicable.*

A suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to a certain share in the offerings of a temple is a suit to establish a periodically recurring right and is governed by Article 131 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, and limitation begins to run from the date on which the plaintiff is first refused the enjoyment of the right. This Article, however, has no application to a suit for the recovery of arrears of the plaintiff's share in the offerings. [p. 541, col. 1; p. 542, col. 1.]

JAGDEO V. MATHURA PRASAD.

Appeal against the decree of the 2nd Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated 27th August 1918, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki, dated 22nd January 1918.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point for decision in this appeal is whether the decree—which is in effect a decree for a declaration that 5/6ths out of a two-pies share in the offerings at the temple of Ludheswar Mahadeo are payable to the respondents and for the payment of the amount of such offerings calculated in that manner from the 12th February 1914—can be permitted to stand. The facts, in so far as they are necessary for the decision of this appeal, are as follows:—

A joint Hindu family, consisting of two brothers, Ganeshi and Ram Adhin Brahmans was entitled as Pandas to a two-pies share of the offerings at that temple. Ganeshi died in 1905. By the ordinary rule of survivorship his interest in the offerings would have descended to Ram Adhin. But before his death he executed a deed by which he assigned his interest in these offerings to Jagdeo, the son of a daughter of Ram Adhin. The collateral heirs of Ganeshi and Ram Adhin have now claimed these offerings. There can be no question as to the fact that a suit for a declaration that the successful respondents are entitled to 5/6ths of the two pies share of the offerings is maintainable. Such a suit is not barred by limitation, as it is a suit to establish a periodically recurring right and has been brought within twelve years of the date, when the successful respondents were first refused the enjoyment of the right. The case is covered by Article 131 of the First Schedule of Act IX of 1908. It is unnecessary to discuss the point at any length, for the point is clearly covered by a decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Sheikh Ohedi v. Deputy Commissioner, Bahraich (1). The passage having bearing will be found at page 357. I am bound by that decision and need not discuss how far the view enunciated therein has found favour in other Courts. So, in so far as that portion of the decree is concerned which deals with the declaration, the appeal must fail.

The appellant's case rests, however, on stronger ground with regard to the remaining points raised in the appeal. The decree, in so far as it awards payment of the share of the offerings, cannot stand as the relief is barred by time. The view that I take is the view taken in Lachhmi Narain v. Turab-un-nissa (2). The view taken by the learned Judges who decided that appeal is not the view taken in the Madras High Court. The last pronouncement of the Madras High Court upon the subject will be found in the report of the case Manavikrama Zamorin Raja Avergal of Oalicut v. Achutha Menon (3). But it is noticeable that in the last decision in which the Madras High Court took the view that a suit to recover sums due under a periodically recurring right was governed by Article 131, the Judges expressed grave doubts as to the legality of the view which they accepted. Ayling, J., stated that on a consideration of the various Articles in the Schedule he was disposed to hold the Article 131 to be inapplicable. Tyabji, J., who was the other referring Judge, said that he considered that Article 131 appeared to be meant to apply only to cases where the plaintiff wished to establish a right and was not appropriate to a suit for recovering sums that had become due under, or as a consequence of, such a right. These two learned Judges however, were of opinion that, as there was a mass of previous decisions of the Madras High Court which took the contrary view, they were debarred from adopting the interpretation of the Article which it would seem that they preferred, and when the question came before the Full Bench the Chief Justice stated that, if the matter had been res integra, he would have been disposed to hold that Article 131 should be construed as applying to a suit brought for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication as to the existence of an alleged periodically recurring right, and not to a suit in which it was sought to recover moneys alleged to be due by reason of the alleged right. Sankaran Nair, J., remarked that the question was not free from doubt. This was also the view taken by the third Judge composing the Full Bench, but all agreed that they must follow the principle of stare decisis and not interfere with the view taken previously by the Court. Apart from the question of authority it appears to me that the wording of the Article itself precludes the view that its provisions can apply to a suit for recovery of money. The law, as I understand it, lays down that in such a case as this, where a man claims to share in the offerings made to a temple, he can invoke the provisions of Article 131 and bring a suit at any time within twelve years from the date when he first asserted his right, and did not have it recognised, even although his right originated on a previous date, but that the Article has nothing whatever to do with a suit to recover arrears. We have it that the successful respondents had never collected their share of the offerings since the death of Ganeshi. They are not entitled thus to collect any arrears. They will be permitted to collect their share in the future.

I, therefore, partly allow and partly dismiss this appeal. I direct that the decree stand simply as a decree for a declaration that the successful respondents are entitled to 5/6ths out of the two-pies share in the offerings to the temple in question, and that no other relief be given to them. As the appellant has partly succeeded and partly failed, I direct that the parties bear their own costs of this appeal.

Appeal partly allowed.

RESPONDENT.

Muhammadan Law—Gift imposing obligation on donee to maintain donor—Hiba-bil-ewaz—Resumption whether permissible.

A gift by a Muhammadan widow imposing an obligation, without making it a condition precedent, on the donee to nurse and maintain her for the rest of her life cannot, on the donee ceasing to maintain her, be avoided by her on the ground that the obligation was a condition precedent to the gift; nor can such gift be resumed under the Muhammadan Law, as the obligation placed on the donee deprives the gift of being one purely voluntary and makes it a hiba-bil-ewaz. [p. 543, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Mymensingh, dated the 14th of July 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, Iswarganj, dated the 15th of June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Birendra Kumar Dey, for the Appellants.—Refers to Mariam Bibee v. Muhammad Ibrahim (1). The Court must satisfy that she had full knowledge of the deed. There is no finding that she had full understanding as to what she was going to do. There is no finding either if she had any independent advice. Moreover here the defendant occupies a position of trust—fiduciary relationship. She is entitled to avoid the transaction whenever the defendant ceases to maintain her.

Babu Kalinkar Chackerburtty (with him Babu Pasupati Nath Chackerburtty), for the Respondent.—Refers to section 39 of the Specific Relief Act under which the powers of the Court are discretionary. No manner of fraud has been found. The case cited by my learned friend has no application to the facts and circumstances of the present case as set out in the plaint.

Babu Birendra Kumar Dey, in reply.—In certain cases, under the Muhammadan Law, a heba can be revoked, and this case is eminently one of such cases. The gift can be revoked by the donor through proceedings in Court.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Officiating Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 14th July 1916, reversing the decision of the Munsif of Iswarganj. The plaintiff, a Muhammadan widow, brought the suit against the defendant, who is her deceased husband's nephew, first, for a declaration that the bil ewaz hebanama in respect of one ara of land

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 561; 28 C. L. J. 306.

MADUKURI ANKAMMA v. MUVVALA SUBBAYYA.

mentioned in the plaint was without any consideration, null and void, ineffectual, fraudulent and spurious, and, secondly, for a declaration that the plaintiff having revoked the conditional gift in respect of the one ara comprised in the schedule to the plaint covered by the said hebanama, the defendant acquired no right thereto. The case as set out in the plaint is not open to doubt. The plaintiff's case is this, that she had executed and intended to execute a deed of gift in favour of the defendant—her deceased husband's nephew, but the gift was to be subject to the condition, and a condition precedent, that the nephew was to be bound to nurse and maintain her during her life. The case has got to be dealt with clearly on the allegation made by the plaintiff in her plaint, and no such case arises on the present plaint as is referred to by Mr. Justice Mookerjee in his judgment in the case of Mariam Bibee v. Muhammad Ibrahim (1). In the present instance the case of the plaintiff was that she made a gift and intended to make a gift, but the gift was subject to a condition precedent. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has negatived any case of fraud. He has found that the lady was in full possession of her senses, that she dictated the terms on which the gift was to be made, that the scribe and witnesses witnessed her signature and that the document having been written on her own instructions the lady, the plaintiff, subsequently registered it. The document contained an obligation on the defendant to nurse and maintain the plaintiff during the rest of her life, but, according to the terms of the document, that obligation was not stated to be a condition precedent to the gift. The view put forward on behalf of the lady is this, that instead of relying on the terms of the deed and enforcing the obligation as against the defendant to maintain her she is entitled to avoid the transaction whenever the defendant ceases to maintain her, notwithstanding that it be twenty years after the execution and registration of the deed. The learned Judge declined to accept that story and he has found as a fact that there was no condition precedent in this case and that the document represented what was in fact the intention of the lady when she gave instructions to her own people to register the document.

Another argument was urged at the close of the case that under the terms of the Muhammadan Law a gift might be resumed by the donor by proceedings in Court, but I am clearly of opinion that the document in the present case is not a heba pure and simple but a heba bil-ewaz, i. e., a gift made on consideration, and it is important to see that in the plaint the lady's own advisers called it a bil-ewaz hebanama, which quite clearly shows that the document is not a simple gift. Whether the story about the gift of the Koran to the lady, which she directed the defendant to deliver to a Fakir, is true or not, there was a clear obligation in this case placed on the defendant by the terms of the deed to maintain the lady, which deprived the gift from being one purely voluntary. In my opinion on the facts found by the learned Judge of the Court of Appeal below, we must dismiss the present appeal. The appellant must pay to the respondent his costs of this appeal.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

Appeal against the order, dated the 28th November 1916, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwađa, in Appeal Suit No. 47 of 1916, preferred against the order of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Bezwađa, in Original Suit No. 478 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. G. Sarangaraja Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—The Subordinate Judge's view of the principle of valuation is wrong. The question is, whether the plaintiff's mortgage right is affected by the attachment against the 1st defendant. The mortgage itself is not in dispute. The property need not be valued. The proper valuation is the amount for which execution was prayed.

Krishnasami Naidu v. Somasundaram Chettiar (1), Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (2).

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondents.—The valuation must be made on the value of the property.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates solely to the question of the correct valuation of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction. The general principle is laid down by the Privy Council in Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (2) and is to the effect that the value of the action is its value to the plaintiff. If this principle be applied to the present case, the Subordinate Judge's order is clearly wrong. The validity and subsistence of plaintiff's mortgage are not disputed by the mortgagors (defendants Nos. 2 to 7), and what is in dispute is whether this mortgage right should be affected by the attachment in execution of 1st defendant's decree, vide the prayer in the plaint.

This is the view taken by the Full Bench in Krishnasami Naidu v. Somasundaram Chettiar (1) and with due respect to the learned Judges, who in their judgment in Narayan Singh v. Aiyasami Reddi (3) suggested some doubt on the point, we can see nothing in the judgment of the Privy Council above referred to which is incompatible with it. We may also refer to the judgment of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Khetra Pal v. Mumtaz Begam (4), which considers the Privy Council judgment and comes to the same conclusion to which we are inclined.

The case dealt with in Fisher v. Arunachallam Chettiar (5) is easily distinguishable, as there was in that case a dispute between a mortgagor and mortgagee as to whether the plaintiff's mortgage had been discharged.

We must, therefore, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and direct him to restore the appeal to file and dispose of it according to law.

We may point out that the decree of the District Munsif, in so far as it declares that plaintiff is entitled to enforce his mortgage on certain items of property, appears to go beyond the plaint prayer, and requires amendment.

The first respondent will bear appellant's costs in this Court.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Mr. P. O. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Mumtaz Husain and Farzand Ali, for the Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order disallowing an application for the execution of a decree. The decree in question was passed for the sale of the mortgaged property on the 31st May 1911. It was made absolute on the 6th July 1912. One of the properties mortgaged was a 1/20th share in what was known as the Chaulakhi buildings. From time to time the decree-holder took steps to proceed with the sale of the other property mortgaged.

Before the decree-holder could proceed with the sale of the said property, another decree-holder, Kashi Nath, applied for the sale of the same in execution of a decree obtained by him on foot of a subsequent encumbrance. The present decree-holder thereupon applied to the Court which was executing that decree, stating that she had already obtained a decree for sale of the said property on foot of a prior mortgage and that she might be allowed to have a first charge on the sale-proceeds of the said property in case it was sold.

The order passed on that application was that out of the sale-proceeds of that property the decree obtained by the present decree-holder should be first satisfied and that the amount due to her should be settled after the sale had taken place, that is, at the time of payment. The property in question was thereafter sold by auction and purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 3,000, the said amount being insufficient to satisfy her prior charge, which according to her then was over Rs. 12,932.

The judgment debtor had meanwhile sold what he described as two trees in the Chaulakhi buildings to Musammam Afzal Khanam. Musammam Afzal Khanam thought that she had purchased a 1/20th share in the Chaulakhi buildings belonging to the judgment debtor by virtue of that sale. She filed a suit for the partition of that share, making the present decree holder a party to that suit. She obtained an ex parte decree, the validity of which the present decree-holder challenged but without success. The present decree-holder sued for a partition of the 1/20th share she had purchased at auction, but that share was not allowed to her on the ground that she was a party to the decree for partition which Musammam Afzal Khanam had obtained and was bound by it. She then filed a suit, seeking to set aside the decree for partition obtained by Musammam Afzal Khanam on the ground of fraud committed by her in misdescribing the property which she had purchased. That suit was also dismissed. The present application was thereupon filed by her to execute her original decree for sale, which was opposed by Musammam Afzal Khanam, whose objection was allowed by the Court below.

There can be no question that so far as the proprietary rights acquired by the present decree-holder in the 1/20th share of the Chaulakhi buildings by purchase at auction in execution of a decree obtained by Kashi Nath go, they were lost by her by virtue of the decree for partition which, rightly or wrongly, was obtained by Musammam Afzal Khanam, to which the present decree-holder was a party. It is, however, open to the present decree-holder to fall back on her title as mortgagee and to execute her decree for sale, if it is otherwise within time, for a decree for partition between proprietors purports to divide the proprietary rights of the persons seeking partition as against the other co-owners of the said property and does not affect the right of persons holding simple mortgages over the same. In Balwant Singh v. Sardar Singh (1) it was held that a partition of proprietary rights leaves the rights of mortgagees in the property partitioned unaffected, even though the mortgagees may be parties to the partition, unless the rights of the mortgagees as such are attacked and a relief is granted in respect of the same by the decree allowing the partition. There was no such relief granted in the present instance, affecting the rights of the mortgagee.

(1) 29 Ind. Cas. 613; 20 O. C. 115.

SOHAN LAL-CHIMAN LAL v. JAI NARAIN-BABU LAL.

The learned Counsel for Musammatt Afzal Khanam urges that the rights of the present decree-holder as mortgagee had merged in the proprietary rights, which she had acquired by the purchase at auction; but the purchase having failed, the present decree-holder is entitled to fall back on her mortgage. It is not open to Musammatt Afzal Khanam to plead that the present decree-holder had lost the proprietary right she had acquired by reason of her laches. Her purchase was subsequent to the mortgage held by the present decree-holder, and the mortgage revived as soon as the proprietary rights acquired by the mortgagee were wiped out. In Ganga Sahai v. Tulshi Ram (2) the acceptance by the mortgagee of the surplus sale-proceeds, under an erroneous belief that the purchaser was somebody other than the judgment-debtor, was held not to debar him from falling back on his mortgage and seeking to enforce it by the sale of the property mortgaged. In Har Chandi Lal v. Sheoraj Singh (3) the renewal of a mortgage which was subsequently described to be invalid was held to debar the mortgagee from enforcing his rights under the previous mortgage which was the subject of renewal.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the execution case sent back to the Court below, with a direction to re-admit it under its original number and to proceed with it in accordance with law. The costs incurred by the decree holder appellant here and hitherto will be paid by the objector-respondent.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 2—Temporary injunction, grant of, principles governing—Remedy, other, available, effect of—Contract, breach of—Arbitration, reference to—Injunction restraining arbitration proceedings, when should be granted.

A temporary injunction should not be granted unless the applicant satisfies the Court that its interference is necessary to protect him from irreparable or at least serious injury before the legal right can be established at the trial. [p. 547, col. 2.]

If there is any other remedy open to the applicant by which he can protect himself from the consequences of the injury apprehended, a temporary injunction will not be granted. [p. 547, col. 2.]

Where one party to a contract alleges a breach of the contract and refers the matter to arbitration and the other party brings a suit for a declaration that it is not liable upon the contract, then if the existence of the contract itself is denied, no temporary injunction should be granted restraining the arbitration proceedings, but if the contract is impeached on grounds of equity, such as fraud or misrepresentation, a temporary injunction should ordinarily be granted. [p. 548, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 9th October 1919, granting a temporary injunction.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order granting temporary injunction in favour of the appellant Firm Sohan Lal-Chiman Lal, on condition that the plaintiff-appellant should give security to the extent of the damages claimed by the defendant firm within ten days of the order. The facts which gave rise to the proceedings are briefly these.

The plaintiff firm entered into a commercial contract with the defendant firm to purchase piece goods of various kinds. The goods were to be imported from Europe and to be delivered at Delhi. The contract between the parties contained a clause providing for a reference to arbitration of two European merchants at Karachi in case of any dispute arising under the contract. It appears that the defendant firm offered to deliver goods to the plaintiff firm under the contract, but the latter refused to take delivery. Thereupon the defendant firm proceeded to sell the goods in the market at the plaintiff's risk, then appointed an arbitrator and called upon the plaintiff to appoint another arbitrator under the terms of the contract. This the plaintiff refused to do. In default of the nomination of a second arbitrator by the plaintiff the defendant firm nominated the second one also and chose an umpire to refer the matter for decision to them. The plaintiff firm has instituted a suit at Delhi where the parties carry on business. The case for the plaintiff, as stated before me by Rai Sahib Moti Sagar, briefly put, is as follows:—

The plaintiff made the proposal to the defendant and it was agreed that the acceptance of the offer would be communicated to the plaintiff by the defendant; the defendant communicated a qualified acceptance, making the acceptance subject to any terms that might be imposed by Messrs. Graham and Company. The acceptance, it is alleged, being qualified, no binding contract came into existence between the parties. It is further alleged that the qualified acceptance must be treated as a fresh offer by the defendant and as it was not accepted by the plaintiff firm, no contract was entered into between the parties so as to be binding upon them. It is also alleged that the defendant fraudulently represented to the plaintiff that the goods would be imported from outside and it is suggested that as a matter of fact they were not imported; fraud was imputed to the defendant in this respect also. On these allegations the plaintiff firm asked the Court to pass a decree declaring that no contract had taken place. A further relief was claimed asking the Court to grant a perpetual injunction against the defendants prohibiting them from proceeding with the arbitration. After instituting the suit the plaintiff made an application under Order XXXIX for the grant of a temporary injunction. The application apparently was made under rule 2. The Court made an order granting temporary injunction. Thereupon the defendant firm made an application supported by an affidavit objecting to the temporary injunction and asking the Court to order the plaintiff to give security for the payment of damages which the defendant had incurred in consequence of the refusal by the plaintiff firm to take delivery of goods. The Court below by an order, dated the 9th of October 1919, granted the prayer of the defendant and made the grant of the temporary injunction to be conditional on the plaintiff firm furnishing security to the extent of the damages claimed by the defendant firm. The plaintiff firm has filed an appeal objecting to the condition requiring the plaintiff to give security, while the defendant firm has filed objections taking exception to the grant of a temporary injunction in the present case. On the above pleadings two questions arise for decision, namely,

(1) whether a temporary injunction should have been granted in this case?

(2) if so, whether an order for furnishing security should have been made?

On general principles a temporary injunction should not be granted unless the applicant satisfies the Court that its interference is necessary to protect him from irreparable or at least serious injury before the legal right can be established at the trial. Again, if there is any other remedy open to the applicant by which he can protect himself from the consequences of the injury apprehended, a temporary injunction will not be granted. If the arbitrators in this case give an award in favour of the defendant firm, it will simply entitle the firm to come to Court and ask it to pass a decree on the award. This will give to the plaintiff sufficient opportunity to contest the award on the various grounds which are now set up. Thus there is another remedy open to the plaintiff.

The following cases have been relied upon by the parties in the argument addressed to me:—

(1) (1895) 1 Q. B. 253; 64 L. J. Ch. 152; 12 R. 43;
71 L. T. 676; 43 W. R. 84.

ASANULLA MOLLA V. SANKAR DAS SANYAL.

Taleb Jalal ud-din (2), Baij Nath v. Mansukirai Panna Lal (3) and Sardarmull Jessraj v. Agar Ohand Mahata & Co. (4).

The rule deducible from these cases is (1) that where in such a case as this the existence of the contract itself is denied and accordingly a suit is brought for a declaration, no temporary injunction should be granted and (2) where the contract is impeached on grounds of equity, such as fraud or misrepresentation, a temporary injunction should ordinarily be granted. The reason for the rule is apparent. Where there is no contract, the proceedings of the arbitration would be a nullity and futile and the plaintiff need not apprehend any injurious consequences. As observed by the learned Judge who decided the last mentioned case, there is no means of preventing parties bringing unfounded actions but the Court would not interfere with such an arbitration. Now in this case the main ground on which the plaintiff's suit is brought is that there was no contract between the parties. It is true that certain allegations of fraud and misrepresentation are also made, but having regard to the fact that the existence of the contract, as a matter of fact, is denied, those allegations cannot have any material bearing. It is only in the case where the existence of a contract is admitted and a suit is brought asking the Court to relieve the plaintiff from the consequences of the contract, that there may be any apprehension of injury and it may be necessary to stay the arbitration proceedings. Having regard to the above observations I must hold that a temporary injunction should not have been granted in this case. In this view it is not necessary to decide the second question whether an order for security should have been made or not. I, therefore, allow the objection of the respondent and set aside the order granting injunction with costs. The appeal necessarily fails and is dismissed with costs.

The provisions of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are not exhaustive and do not prescribe the only mode in which a holding can be abandoned. [p. 550, col. 1.]

In order to entitle a landlord to eject a transferee of the whole of a non-transferable raiya holding it is not necessary for him to prove as a fact that the raiya has left the holding and disclaims any interest in it. This is a direct inference from the fact that he has sold the entire holding and given possession of it to the purchaser and distinct repudiation or refusal to pay rent need not be proved. FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose (Jr.) (with him Babu Satindranath Mukerjee), for the Appellants.—The defendants are appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment on the ground that the defendants had purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding from pro forma defendant No. 10. The sale took place in Chait 1317 B. S. Our defence was that we paid salami to the landlord after purchase and he gave receipts to us. The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that rent was received from us by the landlord. The lower Appellate Court did not believe the receipts as genuine and decreed the suit. I submit that when the landlord had been receiving rents, there could not have been any abandonment under section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. When a landlord accepts rents from a purchaser as a Marfatdar, that amounts to recognition. See

ASANULLA MOLLA v. SANKAR DAS SANYAL.

Probbabati Dasi v. Taibatunnessa (1). If I simply go and say "landlord, here is your rent," I am only the bearer: that does not amount to recognition. But if the landlord knowing me as the actual purchaser accepts rent, pending the payment of Nazar, as Marfatdar, that I submit amounts to recognition. The learned Judge has not at all taken into account the fact that we have been possessing the holding, paying rents and Nazar. My next submission is that sale does not work forfeiture. The landlord is entitled to re-enter only in case of abandonment. Mere leaving the land would not amount to abandonment unless the tenant repudiates the liability to pay rent. My last point is that there is no proper finding regarding the Marfatdari payment. The case ought to go back.

Babu Krishna Kamal Moitra (with him Babu Bireswar Bagchi), for the Respondents.—It does not appear anywhere that the landlord had knowledge of the transfer. As regards the Marfatdari receipts, the learned Judge holds them to be not genuine. Nowhere in the written statement does the defendant rely upon the receipts as amounting to recognition by the landlord. The mere fact that the transferee paid rent to the landlord who knew of the transfer, would not amount to recognition. See Samujan Roy v. Munshi Mahaton (2), Digbijoy Roy v. Ata Rahaman (3) and Sekh Ohand v. Romoni Mohan Roy (4). The landlord by not re-entering for a certain period cannot be said to have waived his right to re-enter.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghosh replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding and the plaintiff as landlord brought the present suit for recovery of khas possession of the land. Defendant's case is that after his purchase he obtained possession, paid rent in the name of the old tenant and obtained Marfatdari receipts for four years and that subsequently the landlord on taking Nazar from him recognized him as tenant and granted a Dakhila in his own name as tenant. The Court of first instance found in favour of the defendant, but, on appeal, the learned District Judge reversed that finding. The learned District Judge disbelieved the story of recognition on payment of Nazar and the granting of Dakhila in the name of the defendant. So far as that question goes, the finding cannot be interfered with.

It has been contended before us that the learned District Judge has not considered the effect of the Marfatdari receipts. In one portion of his judgment the learned Judge says: "Whether the defendant paid rent and got Marfatdari receipts is immaterial in the suit". It appears, however, that in a previous part of his judgment the learned Judge disbelieved these receipts and differed from the view taken by the Munsif with regard to these documents. He said: "The learned Munsif seems not to have had his attention directed to certain very significant features of the documents on which the respondents rely. The first of these features is that there are distinct differences between the printing of their receipts and that of the receipts in the appellants' counterfoils (amongst which are some unissued tenant's portions). In the respondents' Marfatdari receipts there is no bottom line such as appears in the tenants' portions in the counterfoil books, the spacing of the lines of print is different and in one word the impression of the letter J (on every page of the counterfoil book of one year at least) is blurred in a peculiar way which does not appear in the respondents' receipts for that year". Then he deals with the receipts for 1321, by which the plaintiff is alleged to have recognized the defendant as purchaser on receipt of Nazar. But the previous portion which we have quoted above clearly refers to the Marfatdari receipts, and the remark in the concluding portion of the judgment, where he says that the question whether the defendant paid rent and got Marfatdari receipts is immaterial, must be taken to mean that even if they were genuine they would be immaterial. It should be observed that the defendant did not rely upon the Marfatdari receipts as recognition of him as a tenant and set up a case of express recognition on receipt of Nazar and the grant of the receipt in his own name in the year 1321. The Court of first instance also did not rely upon these Marfatdari receipts as constituting recognition. In all these circumstances, we do not think that we should remand the case for considering the question whether the Marfatdari receipts in the circumstances of the case amounted to a recognition.

The learned Pleader for the appellant also contended that the mere fact that there was a transfer by a Kobala executed by the tenant in favour of the purchaser or that the purchaser was in possession, was not sufficient to constitute abandonment unless it was found that the tenant had repudiated the tenancy, and relied upon section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But it was pointed out in the case of Samujan Roy v. Munshi Mahaton (2) that the provisions of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are not exhaustive and "do not prescribe the only mode in which a holding can be abandoned", and in the case of Sekh Chand v. Homoni Mohan Roy (3) it was observed that "in order to entitle a landlord to eject a transferee of the whole of a non-transferable raiya holding it is not necessary for him to prove as a fact that the raiya has left the holding and disclaims any interest in it. It is a direct inference from the fact that he has sold the entire holding and given possession of it to the purchaser and distinct repudiation or refusal to pay rent need not be proved". We may also refer to the observations made in the case of Digbijoy Roy v. Ata Rahaman (3), where the learned Judges said: "It is not disputed that at the time when the present action was commenced, the original tenant was not in occupation, and the person in possession was the defendant. It is also not disputed that the defendant came into occupation on the assumption that he had acquired a valid title by purchase, and that his transferor had severed his connection with the holding. Under these circumstances, the legitimate inference is that there had been an abandonment of the tenancy by the original tenant".

We are of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is correct and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Plaintiffs, merchants in Negapatam, offered to purchase timber from the defendant trading at Mandalay. Plaintiffs' offer was accepted by the defendant at Mandalay. The course of dealings was that defendant prepared scantlings and then put them on board a ship which was neither the plaintiffs' nor the defendant's. He then made out a bill of lading in his own name and drew on it the money due to him according to his estimate from the National Bank. The National Bank transmitted the bills to the Bank of Madras, which in its turn passed them on to the plaintiffs. As the defendant failed to supply the timber according to the contract, the plaintiffs sued defendant in the Negapatam Sub-Judge's Court for damages:

Held, that the cause of action did not arise wholly or in part at Negapatam and that, therefore, the Negapatam Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. [p. 558, col. 2.]

Incidents of a C. I. F. contract discussed.

An offer of a proposal is distinct from, and should not be confused with, either an invitation to offer or quotations given indicating the value of the articles to be supplied. [p. 554, col. 2.]

Where a contract depends on correspondence, the whole correspondence should be considered and not particular portions of the series. [p. 555, col. 1.]

Where everything essential to make a completed contract has been settled, the mere fact that a formal document has to be drawn up will not render the contract incomplete. [p. 555, col. 2.]

Where both the plaintiff and the defendant reside in the same place, the offer can be communicated at once and would be received at the place from which it emanates. But where the acceptor resides in a different place, it is when the offer reaches him that there can be a complete offer. Until a proposal is received, therefore, there is no offer. The place from which the offer is sent does not furnish a venue for a suit when the acceptor resides elsewhere. [p. 556, col. 1.]

FIRM OF A. M. MYLAPPA CHETTIAR V. AGA MIRZA MAHOMED SHIRAZEE.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge at Tanjore, dated the 31st October 1918, in Original Suit No. 9 of 1917.

FACTS.—The plaintiff at Negapatam inquired of the defendant at Mandalay, whether he would supply them with 600 tons of timber and asked for price. The defendant replied asking for the size required. On the plaintiff's reply, the defendant quoted a price subject to immediate acceptance by the plaintiff. The plaintiff ordered 600 tons on the quotation. The defendant stipulated that payment should be arranged at Mandalay. The contract was C. I. F. (cost, freight, insurance). The plaintiff gave an indemnity to the Bank of Madras to their getting endorsed drafts on the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 12,000 in respect of shipping documents tendered by the defendant. The Bank of Madras arranged with the National Bank at Mandalay to the same effect. On short delivery, the plaintiff brought the present suit for damages in the Negapatam Court. That Court held that it had no jurisdiction. The plaintiff preferred this civil miscellaneous appeal.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri and S. Subramania Aiyar, for the Appellant.—It was held under section 17 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 that the place where the contract was made was the place where the letter of acceptance was posted and that a suit for breach of such contract must be brought at such place and not whence the offer was made, Kamiseti Subbiah v. Katha Venkatasawmy (1). That part of section 17 is no longer part of the corresponding section 20 of the new Code of 1908, which says simply "where the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises." The change has been considered recently in this Court in Kuthiravattam Appu Thamban v. Foulkes (2).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—That case can have no application here, as there both offer and acceptance were outside jurisdiction.]

The principle of English Law is well stated in Green v. Beach (3).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J., cited Olarke v. Knowles (4) as drawing a distinction between offers by post and offers in person.]

The real question in this case is which is the offer and which the acceptance. There can be no offer until one party proposes something definite which is capable of acceptance by the other party, e. g., goods at a specified price; so that the real offer was made when the defendant stated that he was ready to sell timber of a specific description at a certain quotation. This offer was accepted by the plaintiff at Negapatam. Hence in law the contract was concluded at Negapatam. See also 7 Halsbury's Laws of England, pages 350, 351. The fact that the plaintiff asked the defendant for the formality of an 'acceptance' form won't affect the substantial part of the transaction. Whympere v. Buckle (5).

Secondly, the contract being a C. I. F. contract, the significant part of it is the tender of shipping documents by the defendant to the plaintiff at the place specified in the contract as the destination of the goods consigned. This tender has, therefore, to be at Negapatam. See 26 Halsbury's Laws of England, page 160; Soorthingjee Sakalchand v. Mahomed Nasurudeen (6), Marshall & Co. v. Naginchand Phulchand (7).

Thirdly, payment under a C. I. F. contract is on tender of documents and also, therefore, at Negapatam.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Are not the Bank of Madras and through it the National Bank at Mandalay, the agents of the plaintiff?

There is no agency. The plaintiff has simply promised to indemnify the Bank of Madras in case it undertakes certain responsibilities. The same is the relationship between the two Banks.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Payment is arranged to be made at Mandalay.]

Yes. The defendant pledges the shipping documents with the National Bank by endorsing it in their favour and draws money. That Bank in turn re-indorses it to the Bank of Madras, who in their turn endorse it over to the plaintiff. It is only at the last stage that plaintiff's indemnity to the Bank of Madras comes into prominence. So the real payment is at Negapatam on the documents being tendered.

For these reasons, the Negapatam Court has jurisdiction.

Messrs. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar and T. N. Seshachalam Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The forum of an action on a contract or for breach of it was determined by the three tests in Explanation III to section 17 under the old Code. And it has been held that under the new Code, the law on this point is none the more nor less. The law is the same as to what is the cause of action in suits on contracts. Salig Ram v. Chuha Mal (8). But see Manepalli Mangamma v. Manepalli Sathiraju (9), where Krishnan, J., seems to take a different view.

A mere quotation of prices cannot constitute an offer. Harvey v. Facey (10), Boyers v. Duke (11), Hardundoss v. Rani Mohori Bibi (12). A quotation invites an offer and the offer follows the quotation which is the information required by the offeror. The offer is made from Negapatam. Its postal destination is Mandalay. So the offer is to be deemed to be made at Mandalay. See Clarke v. Knowles (4). See also Perry v. Suffields (13). Hence the Negapatam Court can have no jurisdiction.

As the contract is a C. I. F. contract, it does not matter that the goods were destined for Negapatam. In such a contract, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the responsibility of the shipper ends at the port of shipment in whatever part of the world the goods may be delivered. He has only to tender the documents at the place appointed by the parties. Crozier Stephens & Co. v. Auerbach (14), Biddell Brothers v. Clemens Horst Co. (15), Biddell Brothers v.

Clemens Horst Co. (16), Olemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers (17).

The defendant stipulated that the plaintiff should pay at Mandalay, so that defendant may tender the documents and draw out the money at Mandalay. That is also clear from the fact that the Bank of Madras authorised the National Bank at Mandalay to purchase the documents, and it was done. Further, as it is the plaintiff that arranges the payment at Mandalay, the Madras Bank and the National Bank must be deemed to be the agents of the plaintiff.

I submit, therefore, that no part of the cause of action arose at Negapatam to give jurisdiction to the Court there.

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri, in reply.—The question of jurisdiction is considered in the English cases on the basis of whether or not title passes at the foreign port of shipment to the buyer. A C. I. F. contract is in essence a contract for the sale of shipping documents, so that the failure to tender even a single document would constitute a breach even though non-delivery of goods shipped may not. Biddell Brothers v. Clemens Horst Co. (16), Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe Green Jourdain & Co., Theodor Schneider & Co. v. Burgett Newsam (18), Mambre Saccharine Co. v. Corn Products Co. (19). The destination of the goods shipped is the place for the tender of the documents. The port of delivery is not material otherwise.

The consignor takes the bill of lading in his own name, thereby reserving a jus disponendi in himself in the event of non-payment. On delivery of the papers, this right ceases to exist and the performance is complete even if the ship be foundered in mid-ocean.

There is no agency as contended for. The plaintiff becomes entitled to the documents only when the Bank of Madras hand it over to him.

JUDGMENT.—The questions argued before us have practically no Indian authority behind them. Even the English authorities are not quite consistent with each other, as we shall presently show. Before dealing with the points of law the facts should be briefly stated. The suit was by the consignee of timber in Negapatam against the consignor residing in Mandalay. The plaint in paragraph 9 says:—"As the prices of goods contracted for were rising and ruled very high at the end of 1913 and also during 1914, defendant has wantonly withheld supplying the balance." The cause of action is said to have arisen on the date of the breach of contract on the 1st January 1914. It might, therefore, be taken that the suit in terms is one for non-delivery of goods agreed to be supplied. The contract was a C. I. F. contract. The first negotiation began with a letter from the agent of the Bank of Madras in Negapatam to the plaintiff, in which the agent says that the defendant has asked him the names of reliable firms in Negapatam with whom timber dealings can be carried on. This is Exhibit N, dated the 29th of August 1912. Thereupon the plaintiff put himself in direct communication with the defendant. He wrote Exhibit I on the 20th of August 1912, in which he made certain enquiries. He asked for samples and promised "If your quality be suitable for us, we shall order a large quantity." As regards finance, this is the note in the letter, "Please take Bank draft to Madras Bank on seven days sight," to which the defendant replied by Exhibit XXXII, dated the 15th of September 1912. He gives the quotation per ton and states: "payment to be arranged in Mandalay, that is, on production of bills of lading and bill the amount to be paid to me here without deduction and this can be arranged through the Bank of Madras." This letter makes it clear that the defendant demurred to the presentation of the bill in Madras and to receiving payment here. The plaintiff answered that letter on the 23rd of September 1912 by Exhibit II. He says that he accepts the quotation and adds: "Wire us as soon as your shipment be ready and we shall arrange for Mandalay National Bank for money through Madras Bank." By this letter the plaintiff accepted the condition of the defendant that the money should be paid in Mandalay and agreed to constitute the National Bank to be the agent of the Madras Bank for payment of that money. On the 7th of October 1912 defendant wrote to plaintiff that it is unnecessary to send any sample and concluded in these words: "I shall, therefore, be obliged if you will kindly send me an order for, say, one hundred tons which I shall be very pleased to execute promptly." This letter shows that after quotations and after preliminary discussion it was agreed that the order should come from the plaintiff. Thereupon plaintiff wrote Exhibit III on the 16th of October 1912, in which he asked for further information. Exhibit IV is a telegram making further enquiries in which reference is made to Exhibit III. Exhibit V is a telegram from the defendant in which the information sought for in Exhibit IV is given. Then comes Exhibit XXXV, dated the 28th October 1912, in which the defendant wires to plaintiff: "Yours 25th. I quote Rs. 63 per ton subject immediately reply letter follows." To this, plaintiff replied on the same day by wire: "Accepted your 28th telegram." The contention of Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar for the plaintiff is that Exhibit A concluded the contract and was an acceptance by the plaintiff of an offer made by the defendant from Mandalay. We might at once say that, having regard to the apparent educational qualifications of the draftsmen of the letters and of the telegrams between the parties and to the imperfect knowledge which these men possessed of the value of technical and legal language, no importance should be attached to the words "offer" and "acceptance" which are to be found in the various letters and telegrams which passed between the parties. Both the learned Vakils at one time or other laid stress on these words. We are clear that what we have to see is, not the use of these words, but who in substance made the offer and who accepted the offer. So far, in our opinion, Exhibit XXXV from the defendant must simply be regarded as a quotation and that the offer was what was contained in Exhibit A. The correspondence that followed these two telegrams makes that position fairly clear. By Exhibit VI, dated the 20th of October 1912, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant:—"We are in receipt of your telegram of the 20th instant, our telegram of yesterday might have reached you..... We request you to send us acceptance form for 600 tons Mandalay scantlings." This was after Exhibit A. Then there was Exhibit G from the defendant to the plaintiff in which reference is made to the various correspondence that passed and which says: "I shall be obliged if you will kindly arrange with your Bankers to open a credit with the National Bank of India, Limited, in my favour so that I may draw on you demand drafts with shipping documents attached and receive payment without any deduction on presentation of my bills as is being done now." Towards the end the letter says:—"I shall be glad to have your order as to the particular size required so that I may start cutting as soon as I hear from you." So notwithstanding Exhibits XXXV and A, the plaintiff wanted to have the acceptance form and the defendant wanted to have the order from the plaintiff. This was on the 6th November 1912. This letter apparently was written before Exhibit XXXVI had reached the defendant. For we find in Exhibit XXXVI the defendant wrote again on the 21st of November in which he says: "I subjoin an acceptance for six hundred tons as desired by you" Then the form of acceptance was enclosed. As regards this letter there is one thing to be said. It refers to a telegram from the defendant to the plaintiff which apparently has not been produced. Then the plaintiff wrote to the defendant Exhibit XLIX, dated the 30th of November 1912, in which he acknowledges the acceptance form and gives the measurement of the scantlings for 300 tons. This is followed by another letter from plaintiff to the defendant, dated the 13th of March 1912, in which he says: "As soon as the shipments of the sizes be ready, please wire us and we shall arrange for the Bank advice." Another letter of the 31st gives further particulars and asks for a telegram from the defendant. This is Exhibit X, dated the 31st of December 1912. On the 12th of January 1913 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff Exhibit XLVII: "My shipments will be made in time according to my arrangements with you and I am waiting to hear from the Bank that a credit has been opened by you in my favour." On this the plaintiff gave a bond of indemnity, Exhibit J, dated the 20th of January 1913, to the Bank of Madras for Rs. 12,000. Exhibit B is the telegram of the 21st January 1913 from the plaintiff to the defendant informing the latter that an account for Rs. 12,000 has been opened in the National Bank. Exhibit XLVII, dated the 29th of January 1913, is an intimation by the National Bank to the defendant that the Bank has been authorised "to purchase your 3 days sight drafts on A. M. Malayappa Chetty with full shipping and insurance documents in respect of timber to the extent of Rs. 12,000. The credit shall remain in force till 20th of April 1913." These documents practically conclude what is known as the first of the three contracts entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant. The documents relating to the second contract are Exhibits XX, XXI and V and those relating to the third contract Exhibits 28, 45, 29, 46 and 30. They do not differ materially from the documents discussed. The questions in this state of correspondence are:— (1) Who was the proposer and who was the acceptor? (2) Where did the cause of action arise? In Mandalay or in Negapatam? and (3) Did any portion of the cause of action arise in Negapatam?

We shall now proceed to answer these questions with reference to the correspondence above set out and with special reference to the principles laid down as to the construction of C. I. F. contracts. On the facts our conclusion is that the plaintiff was the person who made the offer and that the defendant was the acceptor. This conclusion is supported by Boyers v. Duke (11) cited by the learned Vakil for the respondent. That case is practically on all fours with the present case. Lord O'Brien, L. C. J., and Madden, J., point out that an invitation to offer should not be confused with the offer itself and that quotations given indicating the value of articles to be supplied should not be regarded as offer. Lord O'Brien, L. C. J., at page 622 referring to the reply from the consignee says: "In my opinion it is not the acceptance of an offer, because the letter to which it was a reply was a quotation and not an offer." Mr. Justice Madden puts the matter very clearly. He says: "A quotation might be so expressed as to amount to an offer to provide a definite article, or to do a certain work, at a defined price. But the ideas of a quotation and of an offer to sell are radically different. The difference is well illustrated by the case of Harvey v. Facey (10).* * * The principle on which this case was decided applies with a greater force to mercantile transactions than to an application for a statement of the price of a single parcel of land. It is a matter of common knowledge that quotations of prices are scattered broadcast among possible customers * * * The catalogue has probably reached many collectors. The order of only one can be honoured. * * * Wholesale dealers have not in stock an unlimited supply of the articles the prices of which they quote to the public at large * * * Transactions of the kind under consideration are intelligible and businesslike, if we bear in mind the distinction between a quotation, submitted as the basis of a possible order, and an offer to sell which, if accepted, creates a contract for the breach of which damages may be recovered. * * *

In my opinion, ... a dealer or manufacturer by furnishing a quotation invites an offer which will be honoured or not according to the exigencies of his business.' In Harvey v. Facey (10) Lord Morris in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee said:— "Their Lordships are of opinion that the mere statement of the lowest price at which the vendor would sell contains no implied contract to sell at the price to the persons making the enquiry." The learned Vakil for the appellant contended that a contract is concluded when all the essential terms are settled, and not when the formal document is executed. We accept this proposition. The decision in Perry v. Suffields (13) is a direct authority in favour of it, and we see no reason to think that the decision in Hussey v. Horne-Payne (20) is in any way inconsistent with that decision. In this latter case it was laid down that for a contract depending upon correspondence the whole correspondence should be read and not particular portions of the series. It was an action for specific performance of a contract for sale of land. Some letters passed between the parties and it was contended that the first two letters had settled the terms and there was a concluded bargain. Lord Selborne said in that case: "it appears to me that no such contract ought to be held established, even by letters which would otherwise be sufficient for the purpose, if it is clear, upon the facts, that there were other conditions of the intended contract beyond and besides those expressed in the letters, which were still in a state of negotiation only, and without the settlement of which the parties had no idea of concluding any agreement." What was said in Perry v. Suffields (13) is that where everything essential has been settled, the mere fact that a formal document had to be drawn up would not render the contract incomplete. Referring to Hussey v. Horne-Payne (20) Lord Cozens-Hardy, M. R., says: "In those circumstances the House of Lords held that it was a fallacy to say that the letters concluded the whole agreement, because it appeared from the allegations in the statement of claim itself that there were terms, namely, that the purchase-money should be paid by instalments, the amount of such instalments and the periods at which they should be payable, which had not been settled between the parties at that date." Then the learned Master of the Rolls says: "Mere arrangements, which in the ordinary course of business are left to the legal advisers to settle, such as the date for completion, are subsequent matters which do not prevent the two letters constituting a concluded agreement." The other two learned Lord Justices expressed the same opinion. Therefore, if we are persuaded on the date of Exhibit A all the main terms of the contract were settled, we would have held that that document concluded the contract. But the acceptance form was only sent later on. The place of payment, which is a very important item and which had been a subject of difference of opinion between the parties, was settled only subsequently and the exact offer itself and the exact quantity required were only settled later on. Therefore, we are of opinion that the plaintiff was the person who made the offer and that the contract was not concluded when Exhibit A was sent.

Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar contended that even if the plaintiff should be regarded as the proposer, the cause of action must be taken to have arisen at the place where the offer was made, namely, in Negapatam and relied upon the recent judgment of the learned Chief Justice and Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Kuthiravattam Appu Thamban v. Foulkes (2). The facts of that case are different from the present. Further the decisions relied on in that case were considered and distinguished in Olarks v. Knowles (4), which was not referred to in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. In this latter case Lush, J., says: "The material question is not where the offer was sent from but where it was made, and the making of the offer is proved by showing that it was received." No doubt where the plaintiff and the defendant are in the same place, the offer could be communicated at once and would be received at the place from which it emanates. That was what happened in Green v. Beach (3). But where the acceptor resides in a different place, it is when the offer reaches him that there can be a complete offer. The Indian Contract Act by section 4 makes that position clear. It says: "The communication of a proposal is complete when it comes to the knowledge of the person to whom it is made." Therefore, until a proposal is received there is no offer. We do not think that the learned Chief Justice, in the unreported case relied on, intended to lay down that the place from which the offer is sent furnishes a venue for a suit, even though the acceptor resides elsewhere.

The next point for consideration is whether any part of the cause of action arose in Negapatam. The course of dealing was this. The plaintiff in Negapatam made the offer. The defendant in Mandalay accepted it. He prepared scantlings and put them on board ship, which was property of neither the plaintiff nor the defendant. He then made out a bill of lading in his own name. By presenting that bill of lading he drew from the National Bank the sum of money which was due to him according to his estimate. The National Bank transmitted the bill of lading to the Bank of Madras, which in its turn passed it on to the plaintiff. Very learned arguments were addressed to us on both the sides on the question whether in these circumstances a part of the cause of action did not arise in Negapatam. Mr. Muthukrishna Iyer for the respondent strongly relied upon Orozier Stephens & Co. v. Auerbach (14) for the position that the whole cause of action arose in Mandalay. That undoubtedly is a direct decision. In that case some goods were sold under a C. I. F. contract by a foreigner to a purchaser in England, who paid the price in exchange for the bill of lading. But on the goods arriving in England the purchaser after examination refused to accept them on the ground that they were not according to contract. He brought a suit for breach of contract in England against the foreigner. The Court of Appeal held that no part of the cause of action arose in England. Vaughan Williams, L. J., said: "For myself I cannot see that it makes any difference whether the action is for non-delivery or for delivering goods not according to the quality stipulated for in the contract; in either case the time and place of delivery are the time when and the place where the vendor delivers the goods on board ship, it being admitted that the property in the goods passes to the purchaser at the moment of delivery on board and that they are at the purchaser's risk throughout the voyage." Farwell, L. J., said: "In the present case, the alleged breach was in Hamburg, where the defendant shipped the wrong sort of aluminium and the issue of the writ and the leave to serve notice of the writ out of the jurisdiction must be discharged." If this case stood alone, it would be conclusive of the present case. But the decision in Biddell Brothers v. Olemens Horst Co. (15), which went up in appeal and is reported in the same Volume at page 934 [Biddell Brothers v. Olemens Horst Co. (16)] which was ultimately concluded in the House of Lords in Olemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers (17), appears on its face to be not quite consistent with the view taken by Vaughan Williams, L. J., and Farwell, L. J. In Biddell Brothers v. Olemens Horst Co. (15) the contract was for the sale of hops "to be shipped to Sunderland, provided that the buyer shall pay for the said hops at the rate of 90 s. per 121 lbs. C. I. F. to London, Liverpool or Hull, terms net cash." Justice Hamilton held: "that the seller was entitled to payment against shipping documents upon the delivery of the hops on board ship at the port of shipment, and that the buyer had the right of rejection, if they were found upon examination not to be in conformity with the contract." Crozier Stephens & Co. v. Auerbach (14) was quoted in argument. But we do not find the learned Judge making any reference to it in his judgment. In appeal the judgment of Hamilton, J., was reversed by Vaughan Williams, L. J., and Farwell, L. J. But Kennedy, L. J., was for affirming it. It must be remembered that the first two Lord Justices decided Crozier Stephens & Co. v. Auerbach (14). Before the Court of Appeal also that case was quoted, although in the judgment of the learned Lord Justice there is no reference to it. We must refer to a sentence or two in the judgment of Kennedy, L. J., because it was that judgment that was ultimately upheld by the House of Lords. He says in page 956: "The bill of lading in law and in fact represents the goods. Possession of the bill of lading places the goods at the disposal of the purchaser. 'A cargo at sea,' says Bowen, L. J., in Sanders v. Maclean (21), 'while in the hands of the carrier, is necessarily incapable of physical delivery. During this period of transit and voyage, the bill of lading, by the law merchant, is universally recognised as its symbol and the indorsement and the delivery of the bill of lading operates as a symbolical delivery of the cargo. Property in the goods passes by such indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading, whenever it is the intention of the parties that the property should pass, just as under similar circumstances the property would pass by an actual delivery of the goods.'" It is not necessary to quote further from this judgment. The House of Lords confirmed it. In Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers (17), Lord Chancellor Earl Loreburn says: "Now, section 28 of the Sale of Goods Act says in effect that payment is to be against delivery. Accordingly we are supplied by general law an answer to the question where this cash is to be paid. But when is there delivery of goods which are on board ship? That may be quite a different thing from delivery of goods on shore. The answer is that delivery of the bill of lading, when the goods are at sea, can be treated as delivery of the goods themselves, this law being so old that, I think, it is quite unnecessary to refer to authority for it." This case establishes this proposition, that a mere delivery at the port to the shipping company is not sufficient to pass the goods. It is the delivery of the bill of lading that has that effect. On that proposition it may be said that the performance of the contract is to be in the place where the bill of lading is delivered. Under the Indian law that would be a place where the cause of action in part arises, because section 17 of Act XIV of 1852, Explanation III, clause (3), states:—"The cause of action would arise in the place where in performance of the contract any money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable." Section 20, clause (c), of the new Code says: "Every suit shall be instituted in a Court where the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises." Whether one agrees with the suggestion that section 20 of the Act of 1908 gives extended jurisdiction and is wider than section 17 of the old Code or not, there can be no doubt that the new section is not restrictive of the right of the suit. Therefore, if it is held that the place where money is payable on the bill of lading is the place where the contract is to be performed and if we come to the conclusion on this case that it was in Negapatam that the bill of lading was really tendered for payment, following Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers (17) we would hold that the cause of action arose in Negapatam. Before expressing our final view upon that question we may as well deal with a decision quoted by Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar, namely, Arnhold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe Green Jourdain & Co.; Theodor Schneider & Co. v. Burgett Newsam (18), which is also a case dealing with C. I. F. contracts. Scrutton, J., says: "I understand the effect of those judgments [referring to Mirabitta v. Imperial Ottoman Bank (22) and some other cases] to be that where the seller, by taking the bills of lading in his own name or to his own order, has reserved the jus disponendi or power of dealing with the goods, the pro-party does not pass on shipment, but is vested in the vendor until he receives payment from the buyer in exchange for the documents of title." On appeal from the judgment of Scrutton, J., it was held in Arnhold Karberg & Co., v. Blythe Green Jourdain & Co.; Theodor Schneider & Co. v. Burgett & Newsam (23) that a C. I. F. contract is a contract for the sale of goods to be performed by the delivery of documents. The view of Scrutton, J., that the contract itself is a sale of documents relating to goods and not a sale of goods, did not find favour with the Court of Appeal. In a subsequent case, Mambre Saccharine Co. v. Corn Products Co. (19), McCardie, J., in referring to the judgment of Scrutton, J., and of the Court of Appeal says: "For in reality, as I have said, the obligation of the vendor is to deliver documents rather than goods, to transfer symbols rather than physical property represented thereby. If the vendor fulfils his contract by shipping the appropriate goods in the appropriate manner under a proper contract of carriage and if he also obtains the proper documents for tender to the purchaser, I am unable to see how the rights or duties of either party are affected by the loss of ship or goods, or by knowledge of such loss by the vendor, prior to actual tender of the documents." In the opinion of the learned Judge in the last mentioned case the loss of goods or the loss of the ship would not in the least affect the obligations of the parties. Therefore, it seems to us if we may say so with respect that the decision in Orozier Stephens & Co. v. Auerbach (14) is not quite reconcilable with all these subsequent cases.

Now the question is, was the plaintiff entitled to a tender of the bill of lading at Negapatam and did defendant's rights to money arise in Negapatam on such tender? It seems to us that, upon this matter, the correspondence to which we have already referred and the course of business agreed to between the parties make it clear that the plaintiff did not stipulate for a tender of the bill of lading at Negapatam. The bill of lading was made in the consignor's name and was according to arrangement deliverable to the National Bank, Mandalay.

(23) (1916) 1 K. B. 495; 85 L. J. K. B. 665; 114 L. T. 152; 21 Com. Cas. 174; 13 Asp. M. C. 235; 60 S. J. 156; 32 T. L. R. 186.

Vide Exhibit XXXI. As we pointed out early in our judgment, the National Bank were simply the agents of the Madras Bank. The whole money was paid to the consignor in Mandalay. The Bank of Madras and the National Bank were respectively the agents of the plaintiff for the receipt of the bill of lading and for the payment of the money in Mandalay. Through their agency the defendants received the money at Mandalay. That was the stipulation which the defendant insisted upon and that was the stipulation which was finally acceded to. Therefore, it seems to us that the cases beginning with Biddell Brothers v. Olemens Horst Co. (15) do not cover the present case. We base our judgment not upon the decision of Orozier Stephens & Co. v. Auerbach (14) but on the observations in subsequent cases, wherein it is pointed out that the delivery of the bill of lading is delivery of the goods. According to our construction of the correspondence that delivery was to be made to the plaintiff's agent at Mandalay and the duty of paying for the bill of lading was entrusted to the plaintiff's agent at Mandalay. Consequently the performance of the contract did not become due in Negapatam. For these reasons we are of opinion that no part of the cause of action arose in Negapatam and that the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge is right. This appeal should be dismissed with costs.

undue influence on the part of the creditor, or that he had unduly taken advantage of his position in the matter, he cannot be deprived of the compound interest stipulated to be paid. The fact that the borrower failed to realise what the rate of compound interest would work out to in a few years or that he entered into an improvident bargain (unless it is an unconscionable one, would not entitle him to relief from a Court of Justice on the ground of hardship. [p. 559, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Backergunj, dated the 14th of September 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of that district, dated the 7th of February 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Sarat Chandra Datta), for the Appellants.—Our claim for compound interest has been disallowed by the Court below, which has given a decree for simple interest at 15 per cent. The lower Court has not been able to find any coercion or undue influence on our part, still it would not allow us our claimed interest. The contract to pay compound interest cannot be assailed and holds good and must be held operative. The learned Judge says that the debtors "did not realise" the effect of their contract. Surely that is a most flimsy argument. Refers to Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1). It is absurd to hold that the interest of 15 per cent. per annum with annual rests is in the nature of a penalty.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Trailokyanath Ghosh), for the Respondents.—It is certainly a case of great hardship. The contract, it cannot be gainsaid, is a highly improvident one and as such unconscionable. The stipulated compound interest is penal and so the Court was quite justified in granting me relief. Refers to Abdul Majid v. Ksheroode Chandra Pal (2). Even anything over ten per cent. in case of good security is exorbitant. Cites Krishna Charan Barman v. Sarat Kumar Das (3).

Dr. S. O. Basak replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit upon a mortgage.

The amount advanced on the mortgage (on the 31st Bhadra 1304) was Rs. 700. The interest agreed upon to be paid was at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum with annual rests. In Sraban 1305 the mortgagors paid Rs. 300, which satisfied the interest up to that date and reduced the mortgage debt by Rs. 210; some further payments were subsequently made, and the debt of Rs. 489 and odd, which was due in August 1898, swelled to Rs. 4,727 at the date of the suit.

The Court below has disallowed compound interest, and has given a decree for simple interest at 15 per cent. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

It is not found that the contract to pay compound interest was brought about by any undue influence on the part of the creditors or that they had unduly taken advantage of their position in the matter. The Court below has disallowed compound interest, mainly on the ground that the mortgagors did not realise that the interest would be so much when they entered into the bargain. The learned District Judge observes:—When the rate of interest is stated as a monthly rate, the borrower does not realize what that rate works out at per annum. Far less does a borrower realize at what compound interest works out after a few years. If the mortgagors could have understood that, in spite of the payments they had made, they would have been paying interest at the rate of nearly 150 per cent. on the principal money due at the date of the suit, or that at the present time they would have been paying interest at the rate of 200 per cent, it is certain that they would never have entered into the bargain."

But the mere fact that the borrower did not at the time of borrowing realize what the rate of compound interest would work out after a few years or that he entered into an improvident bargain (unless it is an unconscionable one), cannot deprive the lender of the compound interest stipulated to be paid. In the recent case of Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1) the Judicial Committee observed: "The transaction was undoubtedly improvident, but in the absence of any evidence to show that the money-lender had unduly taken advantage of his position, it is difficult for a Court of Justice to give relief on grounds of hardship".

The learned District Judge relied upon certain decisions of this Court in support of the position that the Court is competent to grant relief whenever the rate of interest appears to be of a penal character, that is, so unconscionable and extravagant that no Court should allow it. He seems to be of opinion that any compound interest is penal, at any rate the rate of interest (15 per cent. compound interest) in the present case was of a penal character, that it is so unconscionable and extravagant that no Court should allow it. But compound interest is not necessarily penal. What constitutes a stipulation by way of penalty must be determined in each individual case upon its own special circumstances. In Khogaram Das v. Ram Sankar Das (4) there was a stipulation for payment of interest on default at 75 per cent. and the creditors were in a position to take advantage of the embarrassment of their debtors. In Challaphroo v. Bangi Behary Sen (5) the interest was 48 per cent. per mensem with six monthly rests, the amount advanced, viz., Rs. 400 swelled to 3 lacs and 75 thousand rupees at the date of suit, though the claim was laid at Rs. 3,000. The result of the contract was the plaintiff had become entitled to interest at the rate of 5,858 per cent. which no Court of Justice would enforce. In Abdul Majid v. Ksheroke Ohandra Pal (2) the rate of interest was 5 per cent per mensem (compound interest) and the Court took into its consideration the ignorance and want of knowledge of the defendant and the conduct of the parties. Lastly in the case of Krishna Charan Barman v. Sarat Kumar Das (3) the interest was at the rate of 75 per cent. and the defendants were poor and ignorant men.

(1) 43 Ind. Cas. 933; 23 C. W. N. 130; 101 P. R. 1918; 16 P. W. R. 1918 (P. C.).

HIRENDRA KUMAR ROY v. DEBENDRA KUMAR DAS.

In the present case the interest stipulated to be paid was 15 per cent. per annum with annual rests, and we are unable to hold that it was a penal rate. It is true in the case of Abdul Majid v. Ksheroke Ohandra Pal (2), cited above, there is an observation of the learned Judges (Holmwood and Chapman, JJ.) that "where there is ample security, an excessive rate of interest has been held to be anything over ten per cent". We do not find, however, any authority for such a proposition; on the other hand in the case of Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1) before the Privy Council the interest was 25 per cent. compound interest. In Lala Balla Mal v. Akhal Shah (6) the Judicial Committee observed:—"2 rupees per mensem is by no means an unusual rate of interest in cases from India coming before this Board", and in Gopewar Saha v. Jadab Ohandra (7) interest at the rate of 22 per cent (simple) was held not to be exorbitant. We have referred only to the recent cases, in other cases interest at even higher rates was allowed.

As stated above, the question whether the rate of interest stipulated to be paid is or is not penal, must depend on the circumstances of each particular case, and we are unable to hold that 15 per cent. compound interest is of such a highly exorbitant character that no Court should allow interest at such rate.

The learned District Judge observes that "Every time the mortgagors made a payment, they asked that the compound interest should be remitted and though no definite promise was made to them, they were led to hope that some substantial remission would be given. In this way, the debt was allowed to drag on for 17 years for the benefit of the creditors, each year the compound interest increasing more and more rapidly".

The matter has been discussed before us on the evidence and ultimately the learned Pleader for the appellant has agreed on behalf of his client to accept the sum of Rs. 4,000 in full satisfaction of his claim in the suit under the mortgage, provided the amount is paid within three months from this day, and if the said amount is not paid within the time specified, this appeal will stand decreed with costs, i. e., the plaintiff will get a decree for the full amount claimed with compound interest as stipulated in the bond, the amount whereof will be determined by the Court below.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), O. XLV, r. 13—Partition suit—Preliminary decree—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Proceedings for final decree, whether can be stayed—Execution proceedings, when should be stayed.

Inasmuch as proceedings under a preliminary decree are not proceedings in execution of a decree, but are proceedings in the suit for a final decree, an application to stay such proceedings cannot be entertained under the provisions of Order XLV, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 56, col. 2]

Where an appellant is pursuing his appeal expeditiously, the Courts should be very chary of removing property from his possession and placing it in the hands of another who may ultimately be found never to have been entitled to it. [p. 56, col. 2.]

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MEARS, C. J.—In this case the appellant is appealing to the Privy Council in respect of proceedings brought and which have up to the present resulted in a preliminary decree of this Court, which decides that the property in dispute in the action is joint property and is liable to partition. Proceedings to ascertain the respective shares are pending or in process of taking place in the Court below, and the appellant has applied to this Court with a view to our staying such proceedings. He has filed an affidavit in which he gives reasons which prima facie are good reasons for assenting to that application if, in fact, we have the power to grant it. But our attention has been called to the provisions of Order XLV, rule 13, and to the case of Laliteswar Singh v. Bhabeswar Singh (1) from which it appears clear that as the matter now stands we have no power to stay these proceedings. Now at one stage of the matter I thought it extremely desirable that an application should be made to the Court below so that if possible the Judge should make an order adjourning the partition proceedings until the decision of the Privy Council was known. But it has been pointed out that the property consists of a few houses and that the moveable part of it is in cash and shares—things whose value is easily ascertainable. Farther it has been pointed out that when the respondent to the appeal, the present holder of the decree, applies to execute the decree, it will then be open to the appellant to urge before the Judge of the lower Court, reasons why execution should be stayed. I think generally that it would be desirable and I have no doubt that it is the practice for Judges in the lower Courts to be very cautious in these cases, and where they find an appellant pursuing an appeal expeditiously, to be very chary of removing property from the possession of one litigant and placing it in the hands of another who may ultimately be found by the Privy Council never to have been entitled to it. Therefore, if an application is made to execute this decree, I hope that the learned Judge in the Court below will give due consideration to all the circumstances and will do his best to prevent the property already in the possession of the appellant from passing into the hands of the respondent until the decision of the Privy Council is made known.

1) 1 Ind. Cas. 812; 9 C. L. J. 561; 13 C. W. N. 690; 9 M. L. T. 11.

BANERJEE, J.—I also am of opinion that this application cannot be entertained under the provisions of Order XLV, rule 13. The proceedings in the Court below are not proceedings in execution of a decree but are proceedings in the suit for a final decree for partition. The decree which has already been made is a preliminary decree and this decree has to be made absolute before execution can be taken out. At present the case has not proceeded beyond the stage of a suit in which a preliminary decree has been passed and in which further proceedings are to be taken for the making of a final decree. Order XLV, rule 13, only empowers this Court to direct stay of execution in certain cases where sufficient reason is shown. In the present case no final decree has been passed and no proceedings have been taken for execution of a decree. Therefore, the present application is not justified by the provisions of the rule to which

I have referred and it seems to me to be premature. When an application for execution is made after the passing of the final decree it will then be time for the present applicant to make such application as may be proper. In my opinion this application should be dismissed with costs.

By THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 16th of February 1917, affirming that of the Officiating Munsif, 2nd Court at Manikgunj, dated the 14th of June 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Probodh Chandra Rai, for the Appellant.—The appeal arises out of a suit for the enforcement of registration of a deed of relinquishment (muktipatra). The deed was executed on 30th January 1914 by the defendant-respondent in favour of the plaintiff relinquishing all claims to certain properties. Between 11th May 1914 and 10th June 1914, the document was an exhibit in a criminal case and was tendered for registration on 29th June 1914, by the plaintiff. Under section 23 of the Indian Registration Act the time for registration is four months and another period of four months is allowed under section 25 on showing of reasonable cause for delay and payment of a penalty fee. The Sub-Registrar refused to register and forwarded it to the District Registrar. On 21st September 1914 the latter held that the deed may be accepted for registration on payment of penalty under section 25. In January 1915, the plaintiff applied for registration. The Sub-Registrar again refused on the ground of its being out of time. On 23rd February 1915, an appeal was preferred to District Registrar which was rejected on 1st June 1915. On 3rd June 1915, the present suit was filed. Both Courts have held that the suit is not maintainable; my submission is that there was a refusal to register within section 77. The suit is quite competent and I come in under section 77 inasmuch as the appeal was dismissed by the District Registrar.

Moulvi Fazlul Haq, for the Respondent.—There is a difference between refusal to register and refusal to accept. Acceptance does not amount to refusal. Section 77 provides a remedy for a party who has got over the preliminary stages. Here the matter did not reach the stage of registration at all. Section 77 is in part XII under the heading, 'On Refusal to Register.'

Going back to sections 23 and 25 they relate to initial stages after which part VI comes and then part XII. The question before the Registrar was whether the document was to be accepted for registration or not. The document was not presented within the time prescribed by section 23. Then the District Registrar rejected the appeal on the ground that no case was made out for registering the document. The Act does not contemplate that the parties should wait for a long time before taking the necessary action. The wording of section 72 is apparently against me. Under that section appeal is allowed to the District Registrar on various grounds. My submission is that the Courts below were perfectly justified in dismissing the suit on the ground of its not being maintainable.

UMESH CHANDRA GHOSH v. NISTARINI BESU.

Babu Probodh Chandra Rai replied briefly.
JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Dacca, who held that the suit which was brought by the plaintiff under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act for the registration of a Muktipatra was not maintainable. The facts stated to us to-day by the learned Vakil are as follows:—

The deed is alleged to have been executed on the 30th of January 1914; it was tendered to the Sub Registrar for registration on the 29th of June 1914 which was more than four months from the date of execution, the period prescribed by section 23 of the Registration Act. But it was alleged that the document had been kept in the possession of the Criminal Court for the best part of a month, and for that and other reasons the present plaintiff alleged that the delay ought not to be allowed to prevent the registration. On the 1st of July the Sub-Registrar sent the matter to the Registrar. More than two months and a half elapsed, and then on the 21st of September 1914, the Registrar held that the deed might be accepted for registration, on the payment of a penalty. No time was mentioned in the order as to when the penalty of Rs. 25 was to be paid. The plaintiff alleged that no notice of this order was given to him, but that on an enquiry by the plaintiff himself at the office he ascertained that the order had been made, and, therefore, on the 25th of January 1915, he applied to the Sub Registrar to accept the fee and the penalty and to have the document registered. The Sub-Registrar made an order to this effect; "Eight months have passed; the deed cannot be accepted for registration." I think that this order shows some misconception of the sections of the Statute. A period of four months is allowed by section 23 for presentation for the purpose of registration, and section 25 empowers the Registrar to direct that the document shall be accepted for registration in certain circumstances and on certain conditions in cases where the delay in presenting does not exceed four months. The words in section 25 are these: "If owing to urgent necessity or unavoidable accident, any document executed..... in British India is not presented for registration, till after the expiration of the time hereinbefore prescribed in that behalf" (that is to say, four months mentioned in section 23) "the Registrar, in cases where the delay in presentation does not exceed four months, may direct that, on payment of a fine not exceeding ten times the amount of the proper registration fee, such document shall be accepted for registration." In this case there was delay in presentation but such delay did not exceed four months; the document was executed on the 30th January 1914, the four months specified by section 23 would expire on or about the 30th May 1914. The document was tendered on the 29th June 1914, so that there was about a month's delay only in presentation of the document, and the Registrar on the 21st September 1914 exercised the powers vested in him by section 25 and directed that the document should be accepted for registration. The next material date is the 23rd of February 1915, when the plaintiff made an application to the Registrar. On the 1st of June 1915 the Registrar made the following order: "No case has been made out for registration. The appeal is rejected." Then the suit was brought on the 3rd of June 1915.

The learned Judge has held that the aforesaid facts go to show that the registration was not refused under sections 72 and 76 of the Registration Act, but that the document was refused to be accepted for registration as the plaintiff failed to pay the penalty in due time.

The first matter, to which it is necessary to refer, is that section 72 applies to an order of the Sub-Registrar refusing to admit a document to registration, and provides for an appeal to the Registrar, if presented to him within thirty days from the date of the order and the Registrar may reverse or alter such order. In this case there was a refusal by the Sub Registrar to admit the document to registration within the meaning of section 72; and, consequently there was an appeal to the Registrar, and the order which the Registrar in fact made was, that he refused to register the document. Therefore, in my judgment, this case comes within the words of section 77 because the Registrar did refuse to order the document to be registered under section 72 or section 76 of the Registration Act. Consequently, the suit was maintainable.

This matter must go back to the Court of first instance, because other defences were raised, as for instance, the defendant denied that he executed the deed. That and any other matters which are open to the defendant will have to be decided before the Court can give a direction to the Registrar to register the document.

Therefore, this appeal is allowed and the matter remanded to the Court of first instance for determination on the other issues.

The appellant will have his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court, and also the costs of the hearing in the first Court which was limited to the question whether the suit could be maintained. These costs must be distinguished from the general costs of the suit.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), ss. 68, 71, O. XLVI, r. 1—Collector executing decree, whether "Court" —"Court" in O. XLVI, r. 1, meaning of—Reference by Collector, whether competent.

Only a Court has jurisdiction to make a reference under Order XLVI, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, and the word "Court" in the rule means a Court of civil judicature.

The functions of a Collector in executing a decree transferred to him for that purpose, though designated as judicial, are purely ministerial, and in the exercise of these functions he is not a Court of civil judicature. A Collector, therefore, to whom a decree is transferred for execution under section 68, Civil Procedure Code, has no jurisdiction to make a reference under Order XLVI, rule 1, of the Code.

Reference submitted by the Deputy Commissioner, Sultanpur, for orders of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

Mr. Niamat-ul lah, for the Applicant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, Ali Mohammad and Shambhu Nath, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken by the learned Counsel for Thakur Bisheshar Singh to the effect that the learned Collector had no jurisdiction to make a reference under Order XLVI, rule 1. We consider that this objection must prevail. The rule in question states amongst other things that where, in the execution any such decree, any question of law or usage having the force of law arises, on which the Court executing the decree entertains reasonable doubt, the Court may draw up a statement of the facts of the case and the point on which doubt is entertained and refer such statement with its own opinion on the point for the decision of the High Court. It is clear from the rule that only a Court has jurisdiction to make such a reference. What does the word "Court" mean in this connection. We have no hesitation in saying that the word "Court" in this connection must be taken to mean a Court of civil judicature. The Code of Civil Procedure is described in the preamble as an Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of civil judicature and the word "Court" used throughout the Code usually means a Court of civil judicature. We consider that the word bears this meaning in the rule in question. A Collector acting in execution of a decree transferred to him under section 68 is deemed to be acting judicially under the provisions of section 71 and in a case such as the present, where action has been taken under section 326 of the old Code which corresponds to section 72 of the new Code, it might be held that the provisions of section 71 have application. But it does not follow that, because the Collector is deemed to be acting judicially in execution of the decree, he, therefore, is a Court. His functions in the present instance are delegated functions of a ministerial character. While exercising those functions he may be acting judicially but he is not a Court of civil judicature. For the above reasons we find that the learned Collector has no authority to make the reference in the present case and that we have no authority to express an opinion upon it. We return the papers to him accordingly.

Papers returned.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r 9—Abatement of suit, effect of—Appeal, whether lies —Application to set aside abatement, rejection of—Right of judgment-creditor of deceased plaintiff, whether affected by abatement order.

An order of abatement is a judgment and should be followed up by a decree. It is also appealable as a decree [p 568, col. 1.]

An order of abatement operates as a judgment in favour of the defendant and the only course open to a legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to escape the effect of the abatement order is to apply to set aside the abatement. If he does not succeed in vacating the judgment and so long as the defendant continues in possession, the order of abatement is conclusive of the defendant's rights to the property. [p. 568, col. 1.]

Jaysingh v. Gopal, 6 Bom. L. R. 633, distinguished.

A person who has obtained a decree against the deceased plaintiff stands in no better position and is equally concluded by the abatement order. Though the principle of res judicata may not apply to him he has to displace a claim in the title of the defendant, and has to establish against a party in possession and in whose favour an order of Court has been passed that that party is not entitled to retain possession as owner of the property. [p. 567, col. 1.]

The prohibition against suit applies equally to execution and the decree holder cannot execute the decree against the property as if it belonged to the judgment-debtor. [p. 567, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Chingleput, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 423 of 1915, (Execution Petition No. 34 of 1915, and in Original Suit No. 43 of 1913).

Mr. O. Venkatasubbaramiah, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. Narasimha Aiyangar and N. S. Rangasawmi Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent obtained a money decree in Original Suit No. 43 of 1913, in the District Court of Chingleput against the assets of a Muhammadan lady named Rahimat-un-nissa Begam in the hands of the defendants, and in execution attached certain immovable properties belonging to the deceased judgment-debtor. Rahimat-un-nissa Begam's father Abdul Razak put in a claim petition alleging that the property belonged to him, exclusively, and that his daughter had no interest in it. Abdul Razak having died, the present appellants were brought on record as his legal representatives. The sale-deed for the property admittedly stands in the name of Abdul Razak, her father. The District Judge dismissed the claim petition and allowed execution to issue. Hence this appeal. In Original Suit No. 12 of 1909, in the District Court of Chingleput the judgment-debtor brought a suit against her father and his alienees for recovery of these properties on the allegation that the sale-deed was benami for her and that she was the real owner. She died during the pendency of the suit, and an order was made on the 16th of October 1912, declaring that the suit abated. The present respondent first applied to set aside the abatement on the ground that as a creditor he was entitled to the relief. That was dismissed. (Vide Exhibit D). Thereupon he obtained Letters of Administration to his judgment debtor's estate on the 31st of March 1915, and again applied for setting aside the abatement. That also was rejected. The question for decision is whether, having regard to the abatement of the suit and to the dismissal of the application for setting aside the abatement the respondent is precluded from attaching the property as that of his judgment-debtor. We are unable to agree with the appellant's Vakil on this question. The capacity in which he seeks to execute his decree is not that of a person who has obtained Letters of Administration or generally as the legal representatives of the judgment debtor, but in his capacity as decree-holder. We do not think that there is any estoppel against his being permitted to execute the decree.

The more difficult question is whether so long as the abatement stands the decree-holder can treat the property as that of his judgment-debtor. Two questions arise for consideration, (1) what is the effect of an order of abatement; and (2) how far does it affect persons who are not the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff? On neither of these questions is there any direct authority. But it seems to us that both the questions must be answered against the decree-holder. It has been consistently held in this Court that an order of abatement is appealable as a decree. It was first laid down in Subbayya v. Saminadayyar (1) and was followed in Meenatchi Achi v. Ananthanarayana Ayyar (2). In Suppu Nayakan v. Perumal Ohetty (3) all the earlier authorities were reviewed and it was pointed out that an order of abatement is a judgment and should be followed up by a decree. These decisions are supported by the dictum of the Judicial Committee in Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (4). Their Lordships say at page 109: "An order abating the suit, looking to the terms of section 371 already quoted, may be said to be really tantamount to a judgment in favour of the defendant." This observation was made with reference to the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Order XXII, rule 9, reproduces without any material alteration the language of the old Code. The dictum of the Judicial Committee that an order of abatement operates as a judgment in favour of the defendant shows that in effect no distinction is made between a judgment obtained on merits and a judgment obtained on failure to prosecute the suit. So long as the plaintiff is unable to vacate the judgment and so long as the defendant continues in possession he can plead against the plaintiff and those claiming under him that the order of abatement is conclusive of his rights to the property. Goda Coopuramier v. Sundarammal (5) lays down that the only course open to a legal representative if he wants to escape the effect of the abatement order is to apply for setting aside the abatement and that so long as it stands unreversed, it is binding on him. Thus far it is clear that the heirs of the plaintiff who are out of possession are concluded by the abatement orders.

Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the respondent drew our attention to Jayasing v. Gopal (6) wherein the learned Judges held that an order of abatement does not operate as res judicata. In that case, the legal representative of the plaintiff, on whose death the suit abated, got into possession of the property. It was decided that, being in possession, he was entitled to resist the suit brought to oust him from possession and that the previous order of abatement did not preclude him from setting up title. Accepting this judgment as rightly laying down the law, it does not affect the present case. In this case the heirs of the defendant in the first suit are still in possession. The learned Vakil for the respondent argued that the possession of the father of the defendant in the first suit, after the death of his debtor which event happened earlier, must be attributed in his right as the heir of the debtor and not a higher title; he relied upon this Court's decision in Velayutham Pillai v. Subbaroya Pillai (7). There is no force in this contention. The father had, in the language of the Judicial Committee, obtained a judgment declaring his rights to the property which stood in his name and which right was challenged by the plaintiff. It is impossible to suggest that he, either voluntarily or by a fiction of law, gave up this right and substituted for it a right to a share in that property. Velayutham Pillai v. Subbaroya Pillai (7) does not lay down any such proposition. Therefore, the right position is this, the decree-holder has to establish against a party in possession and in whose favour an order of Court has been passed that that party is not entitled to retain possession as owner of the property. In other words the effect of upholding the contention of the respondent will be to give a person who derives title from the alleged owner a larger right of attack against persons in possession than owner himself possessed. No authority has been cited for such a proposition. The decision in Ranee Chand Kour v.

RAM GOPAL v. BHOORAJ SINGH.

Partab Singh (8), in which the Judicial Committee held that a dismissal for default does not operate as res judicata has no bearing on this question.

Now comes the last point, whether the respondent who is not claiming title under his deceased judgment-debtor, is affected by the order in abatement. We have pointed out already that the legal representatives are barred. Is there any warrant for giving to a stranger a better title than to the alleged owner or his legal representative? The principle of res judicata may not apply to a stranger; but he has to displace what has been described in more than one judgment of this Court a chain in the title of the defendant. To repeat that attempt the defendant can plead the previous judgment. There are numerous cases in this Court which have held that a judgment as a chain of title is an exception to the rule as res inter alios acta. Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (9), Sayam Ramamoorthi v. The Secretary of State (10), Suppa Bhattar v. Suppu Sakkaya Bhattar (11) and Khaji Sayyid Yusuf Sahib v. Ediga Narasimhappa (12), all lay down this proposition. We see no reason for not following these decisions.

It was said that the cause of action for the execution is different from the cause of action for the suit brought by the judgment-debtor against her father. We fail to see the difference. The decree-holder is agitating the same right and is challenging the same infringement which formed the basis of suit in the previous litigation. We must, therefore, hold that the right and the infringement are the same on both the occasions. For these reasons we are of opinion that the decree is not executable against the property as if it belonged solely to the judgment-debtor. We must allow the appeal and set aside the order of the District Judge. Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

BHOORAJ SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 18 (c), 22 (b)—
Occupancy holding—Surrender by widow, effect of.

The surrender by a widow of an occupancy holding which she has inherited from her husband under section 22 (b) of the Agra Tenancy Act has the effect of completely extinguishing the occupancy right, and no rights, present or future, remain to persons who might otherwise have had a contingent right, if she had retained the holding till her death or re-marriage. [p. 568, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 11th of February 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—It is common ground that the holding used to be the occupancy holding of Sarabsukh who adopted Parasram brother of the respondent Bahore. Parasram succeeded to the holding and died 5 or 6 years ago and it passed to his widow Musammatt Kiwalia. She relinquished it in favour of the landlord, appellant, in 1917, and he gave the land to the respondent Bahore, whom he has now sought to eject as a year to year tenant. The Assistant Collector found that Musammatt Kiwalia's relinquishment was valid. The Commissioner finds that a widow having a limited interest only under section 22 (b) cannot relinquish in the presence of an heir, Bahore, under section 22 (c).

The Commissioner is wrong in thinking that Bahore is an heir of Parasram under section 22 (c). Parasram had gone by adoption into Sarabsukh's family. He was thus no longer brother of Bahore in Hindu Law, though they had been born true brothers. The landlord, however, has admitted that Bahore is the nephew of Sarabsukh, so he can inherit under section 22 (e) if he co-shared in cultivation with Parasram at the time of his death. The Assistant Collector found that he did not. The Commissioner has not touched the point. It does not arise if the Commissioner is wrong in his finding that Musammatt Kiwalia, a Hindu widow with a limited interest under section 22 (b), could not surrender the holding outright.

The appellant's Counsel quotes section 11 and section 87, Tenancy Act and a decision of Sir Duncan Baillie, Petition No. 17 of 1909-10, Uman Datt v. Janardhan Prasad Singh (1). Against this the respondent's Counsel quotes a decision of the High Court, Babu Jay Gopal Singh v. Kam Tahal, Second Appeal No. 522 of 1909 (2).

These cases refer to surrender by mortgagors of occupancy rights, and not to cases in which a widow tenant under section 22 (b) surrenders the holding under section 18 (c), Tenancy Act.

The Board has considered the point in a decision which is about to be published as a selected decision and has decided that when a widow surrenders the occupancy holding which she has inherited from her deceased husband under section 22 (b), the occupancy right is completely extinguished, no rights, present or future, remain to persons who might have otherwise had a contingent right if she had retained the holding till her death or re-marriage.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the Commissioner's appellate order and restore the decree of ejectment passed by the Assistant Collector.

Costs to the appellant throughout.

A Court is not competent to dismiss in default a suit in which a Commissioner is appointed and has not made his report, as such suit cannot be heard until the Commissioner has finished his work. [p. 569, col. 1.]

No appeal lies against such order of dismissal but the High Court can set it aside under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or under section 107 of the Government of India Act [p. 569, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Burdwan, dated the 9th of January 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Katwa, dated the 3rd of February 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Bihari Ghose (with him Babus Mahesh Ohandra Banerjee and Sib Prasanno Bhattacharjee), for the Appellants.—I submit that second appeal lies in the present case, the order being one for dismissal for default.

Order XVII, rule 3 Bandiram Mookerjee Purna Ohandra Roy (1).

Under Order IX, rule 8, the order of the Munsif was an order of dismissal for default. The 1st Court might have restored the case.

My submission is that the Judge had no jurisdiction to reverse an order for default and also he had no jurisdiction to remand the case.

The proper way would have been under Order IX, rule 9.

The order of remand made by the lower Court is absolutely without jurisdiction. The order could not be made under Order XVII, rule 3.

Babu Prodash Ohandra Mitra (with him Babu Kanai Dhan Dutt), for the Respondents.—In the Appellate Court an application was made and also an appeal was preferred. The lower Court admitted the appeal but rejected the application. The application may now be restored if the appeal was admitted wrongly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order of the District Judge of Burdwan, setting aside an order of the Munsif of Katwa, dismissing a suit for default and remanding the case for trial by the Munsif.

(1) 43 Ind. Cas. 758, 27 O. L. J. 115, 45 C. 926.

KUDAI KHAN V. JAGAT NARAIN DUBEY.

It is contended on behalf of the defendant-appellant that no appeal lay to the District Judge because the order was not one under Order XVII, rule 3 of the Code and that, therefore, the order of remand made by the District Judge was without jurisdiction.

It appears that the main question involved in the suit related to boundary disputes and two Commissioners were successively appointed for laying the boundary. On the 4th January 1916, the Court directed the defendant to deposit Rs. 150 as additional costs for the fee of the Commissioner and the latter was directed to proceed with the work as prayed for by the defendant. The 3rd February 1916 was fixed for the hearing of the case. On the 3rd February the following order was made:—"The Pleader takes no steps to-day, the defendant is present by his Pleader. Pleader is absent at repeated calls. It is, therefore, ordered that the suit be dismissed with costs. Let the Commissioner be informed."

It seems to us that the suit should not have been disposed of in the manner it has been done on the 3rd February 1916. The Commissioner had not finished his work then; and until that was done the suit could not be heard. We do not understand what the Court meant by saying 'The Pleader takes no steps to-day' (meaning thereby the plaintiff's Pleader) when as a matter of fact the Court had directed the defendant to deposit Rs. 150 being the additional fee of the Commissioner. The order dismissing the suit for default ought not to have been passed on the 3rd February.

The order, however, is not appealable, but the respondent before us has put in a petition under section 115 of the Code and under section 107 of the Government of India Act, asking us to exercise our powers of revision.

Under the circumstances we think we ought to interfere. The order of the Munsif, dated the 3rd February 1916 dismissing the suit for default is accordingly set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance. The suit will be taken up at the stage where it stood on the 3rd February 1916. The Commissioner's work must be proceeded with and finished, and the suit tried in due course of law.

This order is made by us in substitution of the order of the District Judge whose order is set aside.

Each party to bear his own costs in the proceedings from the 3rd February 1916 up to this date. The future costs will abide the result.

*Order set aside;
Case returned.*

KUDAI KHAN—APPELLANT

versus

JAGAT NARAIN DUBEY—

RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Thekadar, whether landlord—Ejectment suit by thekadar, maintainability of.

On the transfer by a proprietor of his proprietary rights to a thekadar the latter becomes the tenant's landlord, and unless the proprietor has reserved to himself the right of ejectment, he has the power to eject the tenant [p. 57, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Gorakhpur Division, dated the 27th of March 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—(November 22, 1919).—The respondent's Pleader has not raised the point that the Commissioner's decision does not amount to a preliminary decree but only to an order to which Chapter XLIII, Civil Procedure Code, is not applicable under section 93 (a), Tenancy Act. I need not, therefore, go into the debatable point as to whether the appeal is premature and should have been postponed till the further issues had been decided.

Kudai, defendant appellant, is a tenant. The plaintiff-respondent and proprietor sued to eject him. The plaintiff respondent's proprietary rights are admittedly under theka with one Bellar Singh pro forma defendant No. 2 (who has not appealed.) The defendant's case was throughout, and still is that the right to sue for ejectment lay with the thekadar Bellar Singh and not with the plaintiff respondent. The first Court in issue No. (1) placed the burden of proving on the plaintiff-respondent that he was entitled to sue, and found against him as he failed to prove that he reserved the right to sue tenants when he gave the theka to Bellar Singh. The Commissioner practically found that the onus was wrongly laid and found that the plaintiff-respondent was entitled to sue because the defendant did not produce the thekanama shewing that the thekadar has the right to eject tenants under the theka. I do not agree with this view. The person entitled to eject is the tenant's landlord, the person to whom his rent is payable. If a proprietor hands over his proprietary rights to a thekadar, the latter becomes the tenant's landlord, and has the power to eject unless as held by the Board in Petition No. 542 of 1914-15, Maharaja Bhagwati Prasad Singh v. Ajudhia Khatik (1) and Petition No. 78 of 1911-12, Jagan Nath v. Maharaja Balrampur (2), the proprietor has expressly reserved to himself the right of ejectment and not made it over to his thekadar. The onus was rightly placed on the superior proprietor in this case, to prove this reservation.

His Pleader offers, and I have allowed him to put in a registered copy of the thekanama. It shows that he made over to the thekadar the power to sue for arrears of rents, to distrain, to enhance rent, to settle rents, and to put in darkhast kharij kasht, i. e., application for striking off cultivation, a very ambiguous term which may either be interpreted or not as a power to remove non-occupancy tenants from their holdings.

The passage runs thus "wa thekadar ko ikhtiyar hoga ki misl hamare ke (sic) asaman par nalish baggaya lagan wa darkasht ikhra-kasht wa ezapha lagan wa tanqih logan ka hasil rahe."

It is probably owing to this ambiguity of expression that neither party has put in the thekanama till this late stage in the proceedings.

(1) 2 C. D. 393.

(2) 2 U. D. 508.

The plaintiff-respondent, proprietor, was responsible for using clear language if he intended to reserve to himself the right of ejectment when giving the theka. I would hold that he has not discharged the burden rightly laid on him by the Assistant Collector, of proving this reservation, and that, therefore, the power of ejectment rested with the thekadar and not with him. His suit for ejectment was, therefore, bad and I would allow the appeal. It follows that if the decision on the further issues has been given against the tenant and he has been ejected (which I am informed is the case) all those proceedings also are invalid and possession should be restored to him. I would order accordingly. I would give the appellant his costs throughout.

HARRISON, J. M.—(December 2, 1919.)—I agree.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 77—Registration of document—Application for registration, dismissal of, whether amounts to refusal to register—Suit to enforce registration, maintainability of.

The dismissal of an application for registration owing to the failure of the applicants to appear before the Sub-Registrar is, under the Registration Act, in the practice of the Court, equivalent to a refusal to register. Such dismissal does not take away the right of suit under section 77 of the Registration Act, to enforce registration. [p. 571, col. 2.]

ABIRJAN BIBI v. GOLB MAHAMED.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Mymensingh, dated the 31st of January 1917, reversing that of the Munsif 3rd Court at Kishoreganj, dated the 20th of December 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jaindra Mohan Chowdhury, for the Appellants.—There was no enquiry as is required by sections 73, 74 and 77 of the Registration Act. There was no adjudication. Refers to Nasiruddin Mridha v. Sidhoo Mia (1) which says there must be an enquiry.

In this case, the refusal was owing to the absence of the applicants at the time the Registrar was prepared to take up the case. The suit is not maintainable under the aforesaid circumstances. The plaintiffs have no right of suit. The effect of the order of refusal is equivalent to dismissal for default and so the plaintiffs cannot come again to the Civil Court under section 77.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mojumdar (with him Babu Hemendra Oommar Das), for the Respondents.—The plaintiffs' right of suit cannot be taken away. The order runs thus:—"Registration is refused," so I was bound to sue under section 77. Cites Sajibullah Sirkar v. Hazi Khosh Mohamed (2) and Surendra Nath Nag Chowdhury v. Gopal Chunder Ghosh (3).

Babu Jatindra Mohun Chowdhury replied and submitted that the observation in Surendra Nath Nag Chowdhury v. Gopal Chunder Ghosh (3) is in the nature of an obiter.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 31st of January 1917, reversing the decision of the Third Munsif at Kishoreganj. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs in the Court of the Munsif under the provisions of section 77 of the Indian Registration Act for the purpose of enforcing a release. The case made by the plaintiffs is this: The defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 executed in their favour a certain release. The defendant No. 3 admitted execution, but the other two defendants would not go to the Sub-Registrar. Under the provisions of the Registration Act or the practice of the Court that is deemed to be equivalent to refusal to registration and the document can only be registered in proceedings instituted under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act. The plaintiffs did institute these proceedings and they terminated in this way. That the application was refused by the District Sub-Registrar. That is what the Registrar says in his order. It is quite true that it was refused because the applicants were not present at the time the learned Registrar was prepared to take up the case. But that itself is not sufficient to preclude a suit under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act. The right of suit is given by section 77 where the Registrar refuses registration and the authorities in this Court are clear that the mere fact that the Registrar refuses the application because the applicant or his witnesses are not present is not itself sufficient for holding that the suit is not maintainable. In support of that it will be sufficient to refer to the decision of this Court in Sajibullah Sirkar v. Hazi Khosh Mohamed (2). That case has been approved of recently in the decision reported as Surendra Nath Nag Chowdhury v. Gopal Chunder Ghosh (3). So, the mere fact that the application was dismissed by the Registrar owing to the applicants not being in attendance is not sufficient to take away the plaintiffs' right of suit. If the plaintiffs have got a right of suit, there is nothing in this case to say because the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has found definitely that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 executed the release. In my opinion, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 18 (c), 22 (b), (e)
—Occupancy holding—Surrender by widow, effect of
—Reversioner, whether can revive holding.

A tenant under section 22 (b) of the Agra Tenancy Act is entitled to surrender her occupancy holding and this surrender absolutely extinguishes the occupancy rights. Possible reversioners under section 22 (e) of the Act cannot revive it later when the lady who has surrendered it dies or re-marries.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur, dated the 14th of December 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—(August 9, 1919).—The facts as found are that the holding in suit was the occupancy holding of Bihari Koeri, whose nephews, the respondents, Dipa, etc., helped him in cultivation. On the death of Bihari two years ago his occupancy right passed to his widow Musammatt Chaudharia till her death or re-marriage under section 22 (b), Tenancy Act. She has neither died nor re-married but has surrendered the holding to the superior landlord who seeks to eject Dipa, &c., respondents, as non occupancy tenants. The Assistant Collector decreed his suit but the Commissioner has taken a different view. He holds that the respondents have as much right to inherit under section 22 (e) on the extinction of Musammatt Chaudharia's interest by surrender as they would have on its extinction by her death or re marriage. He argues that if this were not so the Zemindar might put in another tenant who by 12 years' cultivation would acquire occupancy rights; that when the widow dies or re marries 12 years later, the respondents would still be entitled to come in under section 22 (e) but would find this other tenant already established, the result being two sets of occupancy tenants with separate but complete occupancy rights in the land. What this view amounts to is that a female tenant under section 22

(b) cannot surrender her holding in the presence of possible reversioners under section 22 (e); this involves a limitation of section 18 (c) to the case of tenants with complete rights. The Counsel can shew me no previous decisions of the Board of Revenue on this point, and the only precedent cited is Jhabbar Maslaman v. Surai Frasad, cited also in note 8, section 22 of Mr. Agarwalla's Commentary on the Agra Tenancy Act; in that case a single Judge of the High Court certainly found in the particular case before him that the widow could not surrender her occupancy rights to the prejudice of a co tenant, but that was a very different case from the present one in which the question is of collaterals only.

I would hold that, in view of the positive provision of section 18 (c) that a right of occupancy shall be extinguished in a holding which a tenant surrenders, a tenant under section 22 (b) is entitled to surrender her occupancy holding and that this surrender absolutely extinguishes the occupancy right. Possible reversioners under section 22 (c) cannot revive it later when the lady who has surrendered it dies or re-marries.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the Commissioner's appellate order and restore the finding of the Assistant Collector with costs to the appellant throughout.

HARRISON, J. M.—(September 1, 1919).—I concur. The case cited in the senior member's judgment dealt with the effect of a surrender on an existing co-tenant's right. Here we are concerned with a contingent right. If the argument which the respondent asks the Board to uphold were pushed to its logical conclusion then a tenant who had a son living could not surrender, and that seems to me absurd.

Appeal allowed.

In re RAJASAHB RASULSAHB.

Muhammadian Law—Divorce, mode of effecting—Presence of wife, whether necessary.

There is no provision of the Muhammadan Law requiring that a divorce should be pronounced in the presence of the wife or that it should be immediately communicated to her. All that is necessary is that the fact of the divorce having been effected should be brought to the notice of the wife [p. 573, col. 2; p. 574, col. 1.]

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Bijapur confirming the order of the City Magistrate, First Class, Bijapur, Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for the Applicant.

Mr. V. D. Limaye, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The parties to this application are Muhammadans. The wife applied to the Magistrate in the first instance for maintenance for herself and her daughter. An order was made by the Magistrate under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code, on the 22nd of July 1918, awarding her Rs. 10 per month for their maintenance. The husband executed a talaknama, on the 14th of August 1918, in the presence of witnesses and that document was registered. Subsequently, on the 4th of December 1918, he made an application to the Magistrate for the cancellation of the said order in favour of his wife on the ground that he was no longer bound to maintain her. The learned Magistrate was of opinion that the talaknama was not valid as it was not made in the presence of a Kazi and that there was no ground to cancel his previous order. The husband then applied to the Sessions Court. But that Court refused to take any action on his application, though it was of opinion that the talaknama was valid. He has now applied to this Court for the revision of the order made by the Magistrate on the ground that the talaknama is valid and that the amount of maintenance should be reduced proportionately.

I am of opinion that the talaknama is valid according to Muhammadan Law. It is true that it was not made before a Kazi, that it was not made in the presence of the wife, and that no attempt appears to have been made immediately on the execution of the talaknama to communicate it to her. It is clear, however, on these proceedings that this talaknama came to the notice of the wife at the latest when the husband made the present application for the cancellation of the previous order for maintenance.

Mr. Limaye appearing for the wife has contended that the talaknama is not valid, as no attempt was made immediately to communicate the same to the wife. He has not, however, been able to cite any authority in support of this proposition; and all that appears necessary is that the fact of the talak having been effected must come to the notice of the wife. There is nothing to show that it must be brought to the notice of the wife within a particular time from the date on which it is executed. In the present case the talaknama came to her knowledge within a reasonable time from the date of its execution; and that seems to be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Muhammadan Law. The observations in Sarubai v. Rabiabai (1), Ful Chand v. Nawab Ali Chowdhry (2) and Asha Bibi v. Kadir Ibrahim (3) bearing on the point support this view: I am, therefore, unable to agree with the Magistrate that the talaknama is invalid.

Taking the talaknama to be valid, the question is whether any case for the reduction of the amount of maintenance is made out. The talaknama states in terms that one of the reasons for the divorce was the fact that the wife had obtained an order for maintenance. The child whose maintenance is obligatory upon the present petitioner is said to be about three years old. The mother is entitled to the custody of the child and it is not disputed before us, and indeed it cannot be disputed, that the petitioner is bound to provide adequate maintenance for the child. No doubt at first sight it would appear that some reduction might fairly be made in favour of the petitioner. But having regard to the circumstances under which this talaknama came to be executed and to the necessity of keeping the child with the mother, I do not think that any reduction would be appropriate.

On these grounds, I would not reduce the amount of maintenance which was awarded in the first instance for the wife and the child, but would allow that order to stand making it clear that it is for the maintenance of the child only.

I would discharge the Rule.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur that no reason has been shown for reducing the maintenance granted by the Magistrate. It is true that that maintenance was granted both for the infant child and the wife, but it would, in my opinion, only be sufficient for the maintenance of the infant child even if supported by the opponent not as a wife but as a third party, as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge.

It has been argued that the wife has been duly divorced and is, therefore, in the position of a third party. It is not strictly necessary in the view taken of the sufficiency of the maintenance to decide the question. There is, however, a clear divorce in writing registered, which could leave no doubt whatever as to the intention to divorce the wife. It is also clear that knowledge of this intention was brought to the notice of the wife not many months afterwards by these very proceedings taken before the Magistrate. It seems to me that the divorce was wrongly held to be invalid by the Magistrate and that the correct view of the matter was taken by the learned Sessions Judge. It would appear that there is no provision requiring that the divorce should be pronounced in the presence of the wife or that it should be immediately communicated to her under Muhammadan Law, and these views find support in the recent decision in Sarabai v. Rabiabai (1) in this Court, which was approved by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Ful Chand v. Nawab Ali Chowdhry (2) and by the Madras High Court in the case of Asha Bibi v. Kadir Ibrahim (3).

The Rule, therefore, should, in my opinion, be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment suit—Lease held binding in previous suit not inter partes and not produced before Court, value of.

Where in a suit to contest a notice of ejectment the defendant relied upon a lease which was not produced and the only evidence of its existence was contained in an appellate judgment in a suit not inter partes:

Held, that the lease could not be held to be binding between the parties to the ejectment suit. [p. 575, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division, dated the 22nd of May 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit to contest a notice of ejectment. The village concerned is apparently one of the waqf villages of the Ajudhia Estate and was formerly recorded as held by Narsingh Narain Singh, natural father of the last Maharaja of Ajudhia, as muafidar. The plaintiff-appellant's case is that he holds the land in suit on a perpetual lease granted by Narsingh Narain Singh in 1874 to his predecessor Gudnu and others.

No lease has been produced in this case and the only evidence of its existence is contained in an appellate judgment of the Commissioner, delivered in 1880, which set aside a notice of ejectment regarding two plots, one of which was found by him to be held under a perpetual lease. In 1892 there was another decision by a Deputy Collector in a suit between Gudnu, the predecessor of the plaintiff here, and Ramdhari Thekadar, in an ejectment case covering all the plots now in suit. The land was then decided to be covered by the permanent lease referred to by the Commissioner in 1880 which was, however, not produced. The case before the Commissioner had been between Gudnu and Narsingh Narain himself.

The lower Courts held that the lease, even if held good against the Thekadar, could not be binding on the actual proprietor, but they both overlook the fact that apparently the same lease was held good against the former proprietor himself. The Deputy Collector's judgment, however, extended the Commissioner's finding to a number of plots certainly not covered by his judgment without ever seeing the lease and though he referred to a list of plots it is not apparent where it came from. On the whole I consider it too dangerous to assume that because a lease was held to be binding between the parties in respect of one plot without any indication of the extent of the whole lease it can be taken to be fully proved by a judgment in a suit not inter partes.

I must, therefore, uphold the decisions of the lower Courts and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MAUNG PO LAT—APPLICANT

versus

MA NGWE MA—RESPONDENT.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Divorce—Revival of marriage—Re-union, effect of.

Under Buddhist Law mere physical re-union with a divorced wife is not sufficient to revive the status of marriage. In order to have this result the re-union must be of such a nature that had there been no divorce it would have amounted to a valid marriage.

Mr. A. O. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Mr. L. Pillay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Ma Ngwe Ma obtained an order for maintenance against Maung Po Lat as his wife. The Magistrate found that there had been a divorce but that the parties had been re-united.

The respondent in the lower Court admitted a re-union after the first divorce but alleged that a second divorce took place a year ago after which there had been no re-union.

There was evidence of a second divorce about March 1918 and applicant herself had to admit the fact of a second divorce. There was some evidence that Maung Po Lat paid clandestine visits at night to his divorced wife after the second divorce.

He was at that time living with another wife and it is clear that after the second divorce he never again lived openly with Ma Ngwe Ma as his wife.

The mere fact that he paid clandestine visits to Ma Ngwe Ma after the divorce would not in my opinion be sufficient to constitute a valid re-marriage.

No authority is cited for the proposition that under Buddhist Law mere physical re-union with a divorced wife is sufficient to revive the status of marriage.

It seems clear that the re-union must be of such a nature that had there been no divorce it would have amounted to a valid marriage. On the facts it is not satisfactorily established that Ma Ngwe Ma re-gained the status of wife after her second divorce. This being so she was not entitled to maintenance.

I set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Applicant will be allowed costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, rr. 1, 4—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 63—Ejectment suit—Minor plaintiff—Next friend, wrong person named as—Substitution after expiry of limitation for suit, whether permissible.

Where in a suit for ejectment a minor is included among the plaintiffs under the guardianship of a person and there is a dispute between that person and another as to who is the minor's guardian resulting in the latter being substituted as the guardian, the suit as originally filed is not faulty in its citation of plaintiffs, even though the substitution is made after the period prescribed for the filing of the suit has expired.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Gorakhpur Division, dated the 1st of July 1919, in the case of ejection.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—(November 26, 1919).—In this suit filed on 24th September 1917 Sadho Saran, minor, was included among the plaintiffs under the guardianship of Ajudhia. The defendant objected on 29th October 1917, that Abhiraj and not Ajudhia was the guardian of Sadho Saran and an issue on this point was framed on 30th October. Abhiraj, on 3rd May, supported this with an application that he should be substituted for Ajudhia and the case proceeded. The Court accordingly the same day ordered that the plaint be amended. No alteration was actually made in the plaint but the application and order were placed on the record. The Assistant Collector decided the suit the same day in favour of the plaintiff; the first part of his judgment contains his finding that Abhiraj and not Ajudhia was the guardian—there was carelessness in the decree as Ajudhia's name and not Abhiraj's is contained in it. The defendant appealed to the Commissioner and cited Abhiraj and not Ajudhia as Sadho Saran's guardian. He made the original defect in the name of the guardian as one of his grounds of appeal. The Commissioner allowed the appeal on the preliminary ground that as Abhiraj's name was substituted for Ajudhia's after the period of limitation under section 63, Tenancy Act for filing the suit, (i. e., after the 1st day of October 1917) the suit as originally filed was faulty in its citation of the plaintiff and when corrected afterwards was barred by time. Against this the appellant's Counsel quotes Selected Decision No. 14 of 1891, Lala Janki Prasad v. Baladin (1) and refers to rule 17, Order VI, Civil Procedure Code, which allows a Court to amend the pleadings at any stage of the proceedings. He contends that this covers a change of plaintiff. He further refers to rules 1 and 4, Order XXXII as showing that Ajudhia's posing as the minor's next friend was not legally fatal especially as in this particular case Ajudhia's interests were not adverse to those of Sadho Saran, minor.

I cannot quite accept the argument that pleadings in rule 17, Order VI, Civil Procedure Code, include the name of the plaintiff but I do accept the argument based on rules 1 and 4, Order XXXII, Civil Procedure Code, and, even if I did not, I should call in section 151 for the equitable decision of this case. It would be absolutely inequitable that the suit of the minor Sadho Saran and the remaining plaintiffs should be invalidated because there was a quarrel between two persons as to which was the minor's guardian.

I would allow the appeal and return it to the Commissioner to decide on the merits which he has not touched. Costs to follow result.

HARRISON, J. M.—(December 2, 1919).—I agree. I am doubtful, moreover, whether the period fixed for filing ejection suits is subject to the rules of limitation, i. e., whether a plaint in such a suit cannot be corrected at any time. The time limit in such a case no doubt operates in much the same way as limitation but a suit brought in the next year would not be barred by limitation. It might have no chance of success but it would have to be tried out.

Appeal allowed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 99, 332, 333—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 46 (3)—Arrest of offender—Use of more force than is necessary—Right of private defence, extent of—Causing grievous hurt to public servant in discharge of duty.

Accused, who was in illegal possession of opium, was ordered by an Excise Inspector to stop, and the latter fired two shots to frighten him. The accused thereupon turned round and wounded the Excise Inspector with his sword. He was then caught and while a peon was proceeding to disarm him, the accused wounded the peon also with his sword:

Held, (1) that the Excise Inspector was entitled to arrest the accused and for that purpose to use all necessary means; [p. 577, col. 2.]

(2) that he was not, however, justified in causing death in effecting the arrest under section 46 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 577, col. 2.]

(3) that inasmuch as apprehension of death had been caused to the accused, he had a right of private defence against the Inspector which had not been exceeded; [p. 577, col. 2.]

(4) that the accused had no right of private defence against the peon after he had been caught and that, therefore, he was guilty of causing grievous hurt to a public servant in the discharge of his duty. [p. 578, col. 1.]

Mr. H. M. Lutter, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT. Excise Inspector Mahomed Wali laid a trap for a party of Shan opium smugglers.

He lay in wait in uniform with excise peon Maung Maung and others. When the smugglers, who were being detained in conversation as arranged, became restless, the Inspector gave orders for their arrest.

When one of their number was arrested, appellant Nan Da and his companions fled, pursued by the Inspector.

The Inspector according to his own account, and there is no other direct evidence, came up with Nan Da, ordered him to stop and fired his revolver twice to frighten him. When he was about to overtake Nan Da, the latter drew his Shan sword from its sheath and cut the Inspector on the thigh but did not cause a severe wound.

The Inspector caught hold of appellant by the top knot, and in response to his shouts for help, peon Maung Maung came to his assistance and tried to seize Nan Da by the wrist with the intention of disarming him. Before he could do so Nan Da slashed him on the forearm, severing his wrist and inflicting a wound, which might easily have proved fatal.

The Excise Inspector was entitled to arrest accused, who was armed and in possession of opium, and for that purpose to use all necessary means.

He was not justified in causing death in effecting the arrest under section 46 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It is clear that until the Inspector fired the shots, appellant did not unsheath his sword or make any show of resistance. All he did was to run away as fast as possible.

If the Shan had reasonable ground for believing that the Inspector intended to cause death or grievous hurt, he had a right of private defence against him (section 99, Penal Code).

Accepting the Inspector's statement that he fired into the air and not at the Shan, the fact remains that he did fire his revolver twice at close quarters, when chasing appellant. It may be remarked that the encomiums of the Magistrate on the Inspector's coolness seem hardly called for.

Appellant is a wild Shan and as the shots came from behind would not unnaturally conclude that the shots were fired at him with intent to kill or wound him, and that the only way to save his life was to stand at bay and fight.

Under the circumstances it must be held, in my opinion, that the act of the Inspector in firing the revolver twice at close quarters from behind appellant would reasonably cause the apprehension of death or grievous hurt.

Under this apprehension the Shan had a right of self-defence and it was not exceeded. In cutting the Inspector, therefore, I hold that he committed no offence.

As regards the injury to peon Maung Maung, the case is quite different.

He came up after appellant had been caught by the Inspector and under his instructions tried to disarm him. He was armed with a dahlu but made no attempt to use it. The appellant alleges that Maung Maung struck him with a stick and I see no reason to doubt that it is true.

The Shan undoubtedly received a contused wound on the head, and the probability is that Maung Maung would use force in his attempt to disarm him.

He was, however, entitled to do so to effect his arrest and did not use unnecessary force, so far as can be deduced from the evidence.

The Excise Inspector was holding appellant by the hair at the time and the latter still had a naked sword in his hand and was waving it to and fro.

I do not consider there is any justification for holding on the facts that at the time he cut the excise peon, appellant had a reasonable apprehension of death or grievous hurt. It is clear the Inspector made no further attempt to use his revolver.

What really seems to have happened is that when he found himself caught, appellant lost his head completely and when the peon closed with him, struck at him with his sword with the intention of disabling him. In doing so he had no right of private defence and has been correctly convicted of causing grievous hurt to a public servant in the discharge of his duty.

At the same time it is necessary to take into consideration that he is a wild Shan and was probably terrified at having had a revolver fired twice within close proximity to his back. When assistance came, he may have thought he would be still further ill-treated and that any measures were justifiable in a frantic last attempt to escape.

He had a cut on his leg and I am very sceptical as to its having been the result of an accident, though it is not quite clear when he received it.

Possibly it was after his arrest. It is unfortunate that the evidence is all on one side.

In any case it is certainly a legitimate inference that appellant was struck on the head before he slashed at Maung Maung.

On the evidence the conviction under section 333 was justified and is confirmed.

The question of sentence is not easy.

Appellant is an elderly man. He no doubt was under the influence of terror when he wounded the excise peon, but it is impossible to overlook the fact that he was a member of an armed gang of smugglers.

Taking the whole of the circumstances into consideration, I am of opinion substantial justice will be done if the sentence is reduced to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

The conviction and sentence under section 332 are set aside.

Sentence reduced.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT. SPECIAL BENCH.

IN THE MATTER OF AN APPLICATION UNDER SECTION 17 OF ACT 1 OF 1910.

July 28, 1919.

Present:—Justice Sir John Woodroffe, Kt., Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt., and Justice Sir Ernest Fletcher, Kt.

In the matter of THE AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA PRESS, LIMITED.

Press Act (I of 1910), ss. 4, 17, 22—Forfeiture of security—Application to set aside forfeiture High Court, duty of—Construction of documents—Intention of author, whether material—Object of Act.

In dealing with an application under section 17 of the Press Act to set aside an order directing the forfeiture of security, the Court has to see that the matter which is the subject of the order is not obnoxious to the provisions of section 4 (1) of the Act, as if it contains words of the nature described in sub-section (1) of the section, the Court cannot, under section 22, set aside the forfeiture. [p. 593, col. 2; p. 602, col. 1.]

In considering whether a document offends against clauses (a) to (f) of section 4 (1) of the Press Act, the Court has nothing to do with the intention of the author: it has to look at the document and after a fair reading ascertain what is its meaning and then say whether the words were of the nature or tendency mentioned in the clauses. [p. 594, col. 2; p. 603, col. 2.]

The intention of the author is material only where the Court has to deal with comments on the measures or actions of Government, or the administration of justice: such comments are protected if they are made with a view to obtain an alteration by lawful means of the measures of Government, or if they are made on the actions of Government or administration of justice, and there is no attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection. [p. 595, col. 1; p. 604, col. 2.]

The Press Act is essentially a preventive measure with a view to prevent crime, that is, crime imperilling the existence of the State, the safety of its officers, public order and the like. [p. 596, col. 1.]

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

In distinguishing between the meaning of an article and the intention of its author, the article must be construed by grammar and logic, the primary organs of interpretation, and, when necessary, by evidence to make the words which are used fit the external things to which the words are appropriate. [p. 599, col. 2.]

Application by the keeper of the Amrita Bazar Patrika Press and of the Amrita Bazar Patrika Company, Limited, under section 17 of the Press Act I of 1910, FACTS appear from the judgment and arguments.

Mr. C. R. Das (with him Messrs. A. N. Roy Chaudhuri, I. B. Sen Gupta, B. K. Lahiri, S. O. Roy, B. K. Chowdhury and D. N. Sen), for the Petitioners, said that that was an application under section 17 of the Press Act, 1910, an "Act for the better control of the Press." It appeared that on the 29th of May 1913, there was an order of the Government of Bengal by which a security of Rs. 5,000 was required to be deposited by the Amrita Bazar Patrika Press. The articles in the Amrita Bazar Patrika with regard to the present matter appeared, one on the 10th of April 1919, and another on the 12th April 1919. On the 15th April by an order of the Government of Bengal the security of Rs. 5,000 and all the issues of the Amrita Bazar Patrika of those two dates were ordered to be forfeited under section 4, clause 1, of the Act. Counsel then read section 4, clause 1, of the Press Act and said that he would presently submit to their Lordships that the law contained in that clause was the law of sedition which was to be found in the Indian Penal Code, and it was exactly the law of sedition which prevailed in England at present. Counsel then dealt with the two articles and said that the article of the 10th April last dealt with the question that the officers of the Government had been entrusted with very large powers and that, in spite of the declarations made in that behalf from time to time by the Sovereign and statesmen, India was not ruled by England but practically ruled by those officers, and they had set themselves against all reforms which had been proposed from time to time; in fact that they were the real proprietors of India. The article suggested that the time had come when there should be a radical change in the system of Government and that this country should not be ruled any longer as an estate. The article of the 12th April referred to what happened in the Panjab, which appeared in the different telegrams and in different newspapers, and the Amrita Bazar Patrika criticised the action of the Executive Government in respect of those events and it ended up by saying that the people had by those unconstitutional activities of the Executive Government been roused to believe that there was an end of the reign of law. Counsel said that he had given their Lordships the strongest comments which appeared in those two articles. By reason of those two articles,—the Local Government did not say whether one of those articles was sufficient reason which induced them to pass the order of the 15th April—the order of forfeiture was made. The order was the combined effect of those two articles. Mr. Das then read the order of forfeiture and section 17 of the Press Act, under which he applied to the High Court, and section 19 of the Act, under which their Lordships could set aside the order of the Government. Section 19 gave their Lordships power to set the order aside, if they came to the conclusion that the words employed were not such as were described in section 4, clause 1.

Mr. Das said that he was asked to read section 22 and he would do so. He then read the section and said that there was a conflict of judicial opinion in this country as to what that meant. There was a decision of the Calcutta High Court, according to which section 22 meant that they must take it that the forfeiture was a legal order. There was another decision of the Madras High Court, which held that all that section 22 meant was that they could not call into question the fact of forfeiture, but as to whether it was a legal forfeiture or not depended on the construction of sections 17 and 19. If it was contended that, because section 22 said that the forfeiture referred to had taken place, the order of forfeiture was a legal order then it seemed to him that there was nothing for their Lordships to try, that the provision of appeal was merely a sham. If their Lordships were to entertain that application, as the Act clearly implied, and if the Act was not illusory—he would certainly ask their Lordships to hold that it was not illusory and that it was real—he would submit that it could be hardly contended that under section 22 they must at once take it for granted that the order of forfeiture was legal. If it was legal, what was there to try?

FLETCHER, J.—Will you, Mr. Das, give us those two references?

Mahomed Ali, In re (1) and Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2). The last case went up in appeal to the Privy Council and there is a recent decision of the Privy Council which is reported in the Times of the 14th of May [Mrs. Annie Besant v. Advocate General of the Government of Madras (3)].

Mr. Das then read the articles which appeared in the Amrita Bazar Patrika. The first article was headed: "To whom does India belong?" and the second was headed: "The arrest of Mr. Gandhi—More outrages." Counsel did not desire to comment on those articles at present but he would do so after he had made his submission on the law. The first thing that he would point out to their Lordships was that a portion of the Government order was not in accordance with the section and that it was clearly wrong. It was stated in the article "and the officers of the Government recruited in England." That portion, Counsel submitted, was not in accordance with section 4 under which the order was made. Section 4 referred to "bringing into hatred or contempt His Majesty's Government or Government established by law in British India," etc. That referred to a class in British India, whereas those words in the articles were absolute. In passing that order, therefore, so far as that portion was concerned, the Government of Bengal had not applied section 4, clause (c), but was trying to establish a crime which was not to be found in the section.

[The Advocate-General.—I submit that this matter is not open to my learned friend because of sections 23 and 17 read together.]

WOODROFFE, J.—We will take note of your objection, Mr. Advocate-General.

Mr. Das, continuing, said that he was entitled to apply to their Lordships under section 17 to set aside the order, on the ground that the newspaper did not contain any word of the nature described in section 4. He was now pointing out to their Lordships that the order which was passed by the Government was not in accordance with the terms of section 4. Their Lordships could not look into the policy of the Government. How did their Lordships know, sitting there, as to whether the Government of Bengal was not thinking of the officers of that Government resident in England? They could not judge that. It was for the Bengal Government to do that. All that was necessary was that the Government of Bengal must exercise their discretion in terms of section 4 (c). They had not done so and that was apparent from the words that they had employed. It was a statutory requirement and it must be strictly followed. It was their Lordships' duty to see that the Government did act according to the terms of the section under which they purported to act. In fact that was the only check on the action of the Bengal Government which the Act provided. Their Lordships, Counsel submitted, were not to construe whether some other order of the same nature might or might not have been passed. They were precluded from going into such questions. What their Lordships had to consider was whether the words complained of came under the section and whether the articles came within the purview of that section.

The next point that Counsel desired to submit was that the law as contained in section 4, clause (1), was exactly the same as it was in section 124 of the Penal Code, and exactly the same as the English Law. This was a point of great importance in this application. Counsel then read section 124 of the Penal Code and section 4 of the Press Act. He said that in order to apply the section an inference as to sedition, whether direct or indirect, must arise and it must be a question of intention. It had sometimes been said that in section 4 there was no question of intention at all; they had got the words and if the words were likely to or had a tendency to bring into hatred, that was quite enough. He submitted that such a view was entirely wrong, because the explanation added to the section showed the meaning of the section, and the Privy Coun-oil had stated that even without Explanation (2) the meaning of section 4 (c) was exactly the same. In order to apply section 4 (c) there must be what was called in the English Law a seditious intention, and they gathered that intent from words used and other circumstances. It was absolutely essential that they must have seditious intent. Their Lordships had held in the Calcutta case that section 4 was very wide. He hoped that they would not come to that conclusion again for the benefit of society. He then read section 511 of the Penal Code to see what "attempt" meant and submitted that it was impossible to construe "attempt" without considering the question of intent. There could not be an unconscious attempt to do a thing. If one attempted to do a thing, one must intend to do it. The mere attempt was not an indictment but something more than an attempt was necessary.

[FLETCHER, J.—Do you mean that tendency means attempt?]

Tendency alone is not sufficient without there being an attempt. In considering whether there was a seditious intent you must consider the tendency of the words used. The use of the word "tendency" shows that what is aimed at is the mentality of the thing. When you use the word "tendency" you are looking at the effects which are produced in other people's mind.

Continuing Mr. Das said that his defence was that the first article at any rate was an article which suggested an alteration in the system of Government and what went before were the reasons which were put forward. If that was so, then Explanation (2) of section 4 applied. Then they had to consider whether in suggesting the alteration in the system of Government they had not also excited or attempted to excite hatred, and they had got to see whether as a matter of fact excitement had resulted. This needed evidence. He then submitted to their Lordships that it was absolutely the same principle laid down in the English Law, and read authorities.

Mr. Das then referred to the cases of Reg. v. Sullivan (4), Reg. v. Burns (5), Rex v. Aldred (6) and Reg. v. M'Hugh (7) and said that what was laid down in those cases was that seditious intent was absolutely necessary. If their Lordships came to the conclusion that these articles in the Amrita Bazar Patrika were intended for the alteration of the existing system of administration, then there was no seditious intent. Their Lordships had to construe these articles not taking one or two strong words here and there but the whole of them fairly and generously and also look at the surrounding circumstances. If their Lordships looked at these articles from the point of view of the actual politics of the present day, it was only then that they could judge whether the intention was a seditious intention or merely an intention of reformation or alteration of the existing system. Here strong language did not create sedition; there must be a seditious intention. Having regard to all the circumstances, and considering the class of persons who were likely to read the Amrita Bazar Patrika, the whole question was whether the words used came within the meaning of section 4, clause (c), of the Press Act. Mr. Das then referred to the case of Mahomed Ali, In re (1) and said that in the interests of justice their Lordships should investigate this matter. He was not asking their Lordships to express any opinion on the propriety or otherwise of the order of the Government. What he was asking their Lordships was to look at the matter from a judicial point of view and see whether these articles came within the provision of clause (c), section 4.

Mr. C. R. Das, continuing his argument on behalf of the appellants the following day, referred to the case reported as Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2). Dealing with the question of intention Mr. Justice Ayling referred to clause 4, Explanation 2, and said how could a comment attempt to excite. His Lordship was not able to accept the Advocate-General's argument in this respect, and at page 1144* he said: "As I have already stated, I have nothing to do with the intention of the writer. We have merely to consider the effect of his writing." Counsel was pointing that out to show that phrases were sometimes very loosely used. He then dealt with the judgment of Justice Seshagiri Aiyar, and said that at page 1147* his Lordship was discussing section 22 and at page 1151* he was dealing with the question of intention. On the question of intention their Lordships had it that all the three Judges of the Madras High Court, the Officiating Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Ayling and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Iyer were of the same opinion.

In the matter of AMBITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

[The Advocate-General.—Under Explanation 2.]

Yes, I am confining my remarks to clause (c). The order against us was passed under clause (c).

Mr. Das continued that he did not know whether the other side preferred to bring the case under hatred. That was not covered by the Explanation. All other things were covered by Explanation 2. There were Government measures, there were administrative actions, and so forth. If a man attacked Government simply for the purpose of attacking it, then it stood on a different footing. When a man attacked Government without intending to alter any law, without attempting to point out to the Government what administrative measure should be altered, he merely attacked for the purpose of attacking. There the seditious intent was obvious, and it must follow that the intention was simply to abuse and libel Government. Supposing they had not got Explanation 2, they had still got to consider the question of seditious intent. But where the man was really asking Government to alter a particular measure or to alter the administration in a particular way, it might be that even then he had a seditious intent, but prima facie he had no such seditious intent at all. The next point which Mr. Justice Iyer took up was the question of hatred. In that case Mr. Justice Iyer held that he was unable to see that the article was covered by any of the clauses of section 4. The net result in this case was this that although their Lordships said that the section was wider and that they were not prepared to go to the length of 45 Calcutta, they were all agreed, at any rate, that wherever Explanation 2 applied their Lordships had to consider the question of seditious intent. And in regard to the question whether the article came under section 4, they had applied the same principles which were applied here in the prosecution under section 124 A of the Penal Code and under the English Law. Counsel, therefore, submitted that the authority in that case was in his favour. In so far as it drew a distinction between the section and the Explanation, he submitted that it was overruled by the Privy Council, which laid down that the Explanation did not add to or detract from the section. He then cited Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (8) and said that if the case of a journalist was that the interest of India required that a particular machinery, which was at present in the hands of the Europeans, should be in the hands of the Indians, he had got to deal with the foreign character of it. He had to point out that it was ineffective. Such criticism according to Mr. Justice Iyer would not be seditious. If the case of the journalist was—and that was his conviction—that it was because the administrative machinery was left in the hands of a particular set of people they did not look to the well-being of the people, he had to point that out, saying that such an evil might not follow in the future. In such a case, Counsel submitted, it was not seditious, because otherwise they could not reason, they could not argue. Counsel then extracted the following passage from Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (8): "A journalist is not expected to write with the accuracy of a lawyer or with the precision of a man of science." That passage was very important and Mr. Justice Fletcher, Counsel found, quoted that passage in Manmohan Ghose v. Emperor (9). Counsel said that at p. 259* the point was whether the other articles in the paper were admissible in evidence under section 15, and their Lordships held that unless the identity of the writer was established, it was not admissible in evidence. He then referred to the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher and said that there was no difference between the Indian Law and the English Law of sedition, and, therefore, if he could satisfy their Lordships that section 4 of the Press Act, taken with the Explanation where the Explanation applied, brought in the law which was contained in section 124A, it came to this that so far as those matters were concerned, sections 4 (c) of the Press Act and 124A of the Penal Code and the English Law were all the same. After reading the judgment, Counsell said that Mr. Justice Fletcher there was following the principle laid down by Justice Fisher in the Sullivan's case (1), namely, that they must acquit the accused if they could. If they could put the necessary meaning on those words, they must do so. It was only when they could not do so that the question of seditious intent arose. In this case their Lordships in effect had accepted the interpretation which was put in the Tilak's case (8) upon it and quoted the words: "A journalist is not expected to write with the accuracy of a lawyer or with the precision of a man of science," and that the general tone was to be considered and not isolated passages from here and there.

(8) 22 B. 112.

(9) 8 Ind. Cas 531; 38 C. 253; 15 C. W. N. 141; 11 Cr. L. J. 66.

There were various questions of law that arose in this case. The first was that section 4 was to be construed as laying down the same law of sedition found in section 124A and the English Act. So far as that was concerned, the view taken in 41 Calcutta [Mahomed Ali's case (1)] was not the same as that taken in the Madras case [Mrs. Besant's case (2)]. The next was that in order that any article might come under section 4, clause (c), there must be what was called seditious intent.

[WOODROFFE, J.—I suppose your argument is this. If we take into account intention then the tendency of the articles to bring into hatred and contempt the Government will not bring them within the operation of section 4, if there is no seditious intent.]

If there is no other evidence and your Lordships come to the conclusion that the articles have that tendency, there would be that intention.

[WOODROFFE, J.—You mean the seditious intent will be implied from the tendency?]

Yes.

[WOODROFFE, J.—If the Court came to a positive conclusion upon your arguments that there was no seditious intent, then the fact that the articles had a particular tendency would not bring them under this section?]

That is so.

[WOODROFFE, J.—There might be words which, taken by themselves, have the tendency mentioned in section 4. If the Court comes to the conclusion that though they had a tendency they had no seditious intent, then they do not come within the operation of section 4?]

Exactly.

Continuing, Mr. Das said that the next point was that in considering these articles their Lordships must take the whole of them and not attach any importance to isolated phrases or instances of strong language. Unless their Lordships found in them absolute hostility to Government, they ought not to find that these articles came under section 4. The next point was, what was "the Government by law established" in British India? With one exception all the other authorities agreed that it was the political system such as it was. Under the Government of India Act, the "Government of India by law established" was the Crown, the Secretary of State and his Council, the Governor General in India and his Council, and then the Provincial Governments. The last point was as to the remedy given to the people by the Press Act of 1910. To hold that that relief, or power that could give one that relief, was illusory, was the most scathing condemnation of the Government of this country. This Government order was a sort of decree, which he wanted their Lordships to set aside because it was not under section 4.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—You are drawing our attention to the terms of the order. You take exception to these words "officers of such Government recruited in England." Suppose the order had said this:—"To bring into hatred and contempt the Government established by law in British India and a section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, namely, the officers of the said Government recruited in England." That would have been quite all right?]

Yes.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Assume for the moment that this is defective. When we come to section 19, is not the Special Bench bound to consider, irrespective of the form of the order, whether the words, signs or visible representations contained in the newspaper, book, or other documents in respect of which the order was made, are not of the nature prescribed in section 4, sub-section 1?]

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

What has been described in the order is not provided for by section 4.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—The order may be defective. I am not expressing an opinion on the point. The Court is bound to examine the words and determine, irrespective of what the Government order may say, whether the words used are of the nature described in section 4, sub-section 1. Therefore, whatever the form of the order may be, when you come before the Special Bench, is not the Special Bench called upon to determine whether the words in the newspaper are or are not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section 1?]

Your Lordships have to take sections 17 and 19 together.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Apparently the responsibility thrown upon the Special Bench is wider than that assumed by the Government. Before the order can be set aside, the Special Bench must be satisfied that the words used in the newspaper are not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section 1, and not the words in the order itself.]

I submit that if your Lordships leave out the order altogether and merely consider whether or not the words employed come under section 4, sub-section 1, that will not be correct. You see that no reference whatever is made to section 4 in the order. The Government of Bengal has there laid down a crime or offence which is not to be found in section 4 so far as the words are concerned. Section 4 is invoked as giving the Government power to forfeit the security.

Counsel then said that the only other question which remained was the question of onus, which might be considered from two points. The first was the point of view of the right or duty of a party to begin. Looked at from that point of view, undoubtedly the onus was upon him to begin. The question here was not so much of onus as their Lordships' duty. What their Lordships had to investigate was whether these articles did or did not come under section 4. He cited the cases of Protap Chunder Mukerji v. Empress (10), Rohimuddi v. Queen Empress (11) and Milan Khan v. Sagai Bepari (12) and said the question was whether these articles disclosed an intent to excite hatred or contempt. Later he would refer to the evidence he relied on.

[WOODRUFFE, J., remarked that it would be more convenient at this stage both to the Court and the other side if Mr. Das indicated what evidence he relied on.]

Mr. Das said that he relied on the general policy of the paper. He would put in certain articles to show the general policy and also other articles which were connected in subject to these. Then he would give documentary evidence of these facts, namely, of their rights contained in charters, proclamations, official despatches and statements made by Ministers of the Crown. That would be from 1833 down to the present year. Next he would give documentary evidence of different reforms which were proposed by the Government from time to time and which were defeated by the activity of the Government officials. He would also give evidence of reforms inaugurated or attempted to be inaugurated by Lord Ripon which failed and the Morley-Minto Reforms, which were substantial reforms when they left England but which proved futile when they got into the hands of the committee here. He would give evidence of the Public Services Commission and the Industrial Commission, the latter to show how the industries of the country were not allowed to be developed by the officials here and how the industrial interest of this country was sacrificed to Manchester. From the Public Services Commission Report which was published in 1917, he would show how the promises made in the various proclamations of sovereigns beginning from 1858 downwards were not allowed to be fulfilled and the question remained practically in the same condition as when that Commission sat. Then he would deal with the present Reform Scheme and show what the proposal was and how it was sought to be killed by the officials here. In constitution the responsibility of Government was to Parliament through the Secretary of State, but in reality Parliament had never exercised any practical control and the Government officials in this country were responsible to nobody. The Provincial officials here were responsible to the Government of Bengal, which was responsible to the Government of India, which was responsible to the Secretary of State, which meant nothing, and the Secretary of State was responsible to no one. That was the practical working, although in theory it sounded well. Further he would give evidence of the different political questions agitating the minds of the people now and the state of public feeling.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Is that oral?]

Documentary and oral. I shall give evidence of the events which have happened in the Panjab, and the state of feeling of the people in general with reference to that.

[WOODROFFE, J.—With a view to show what?]

To show that it is to the interest of Government that the state of such feeling should be brought to its notice. Further to show that it was with the object of ventilating a real grievance, which negatives any seditious intent. I want also to give evidence by calling several gentlemen to state what effect these articles had on their minds and which is the class of persons who read the Amrita Bazar Patrika.

Counsel then dealt with the articles from the point of view of the law questions he had raised and had not concluded when the Court rose for the day.

Mr. Das, on behalf of the Petitioners, continuing his argument the day following, said that in reply to a question asked by Mr. Justice Fletcher the other day with regard to the word "tendency" he would cite before their Lordships the case of Reg. v. Burns (5).

[WOODROFFE, J.—Mr. Advocate-General, do you rely upon the decision in Mahomed Ali's case (1).]

[The Advocate-General.—I rely upon it so far as clause (c) is concerned.]

[WOODROFFE, J.—Will you develop that argument?]

The Hon'ble Mr. T. O. P. Gibbons, Advocate General (with him Messrs. S. R. Das and B. O. Sen), for the Crown.—What I say shortly on that is this. So far as clause 4, coupled with (c), is concerned, no question of intention arises at all. And to that extent, I rely on Mahomed Ali, In re (1).

WOODROFFE, J.—What about the other clauses? In order to get a comprehensive view of the section, we should like to know how those stand.]

I shall submit the same argument with regard to the clauses from (a) to (f). You have got to look at those words and you have got to see whether there is an offence under clause 4.

[WOODROFFE, J.—And the question of intention is quite immaterial?]

Yes.

[WOODROFFE, J.—We wish to consider if that is your view on the Privy Council case [Mrs. Besant's case (3)], whether it can be said that the Privy Council decision in any respect affects the decision in 41 Calcutta [Mahomed Ali, In re (1)] or whether the matter should go before a Full Bench.]

With regard to the Privy Council decision, what I say is this. We have no proper record of the Privy Council decision before us. We have obviously an incomplete extract of what the Privy Council is alleged to have said.

[WOODROFFE, J.—What do you say so far as the record of the Privy Council decision is before us? Does it seem to assume that the intention is immaterial? The record is not before us. Taking the report before us as it goes, does it show that the decision in Mahomed Ali, In re (1) is defective?]

It looks like that. But I submit that it will be extremely unsatisfactory to act upon that report. Until we get a detailed copy of the judgment of the Privy Council I submit your Lordships should leave out that extract altogether, and we should argue it on the cases of which we have got authoritative reports. We wired to Madras. They have not got a copy of the Privy Council decision. We wired to Simla and they have not got any report there.

[FLETCHER, J.—The Times Law Report comes out in weekly parts. The last mail we have of the 18th June. It ought to be there.]

It is not there.

[Mr. S. R. Das.—I don't think it is reported until it is actually signed by His Majesty.]

FLETCHER, J.—Yes. That is true.]
The Advocate-General.—I don't know how your Lordships are going to deal with this matter at all unless you get a full report of the Privy Council judgment?

[MOOKERJI, J.—How soon can we get a copy? We cannot very well ignore what has appeared. Suppose we give a decision and the matter is taken up to the Privy Council, it will be said that our decision is quite contrary to the Privy Council decision.]

I am now told that the Madras High Court has got a copy.

[FLETCHER, J.—Is that official or semi-official?]

The Government Solicitor, Madras, has sent us a wire saying that the High Court has got a copy. We will send a telegram to-day to the Registrar of the Madras High Court. I do not know whether the Court should send a telegram to the Court itself. If we apply, we have got to apply to the Solicitor and he will have to apply to the Court for permission to supply us with a copy.

[WOODROFFE, J.—We will send for the Registrar and see if it is not possible for the Registrar of our Court to communicate with the Registrar of the Madras High Court.]

[FLETCHER, J.—It is Mrs. Annie Besant v. Advocate General of the Government of Madras (3). That is how it appears in the Times.]

The report is headed in the matter of the Indian Press Act, 1910, section 4 (1), and in the matter of the New India Printing Works.

At this stage the Registrar came and their Lordships communicated to him what he was to do.]

[Mr. Lahiri, who appeared with Mr. Das, said.—The case, I see, is already reported in the Times Law Report which came yesterday. It is the last case. Volume 35, page 500.

[FLETCHER, J.—The Weekly Reports and the Solicitors' Journal come every week. The Times Law Report comes out every week too. It may be reported in one of them.]

[WOODROFFE, J.—Would you read us that? We have not got another copy. If that decision of the Privy Council does affect 41 Calcutta [Mahomed Ali, In re (1)], I suppose we will have to refer the case to the Full Bench.]

The Advocate-General.—The Full Bench will probably have no jurisdiction. We will consider that point afterwards. (The Advocate-General then read the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Mrs. Annie Besant v. Advocate General of the Government of Madras (3) which appeared in the Times Law Report, Volume 35, page 506.) The last line of the case runs thus:—"Upon careful perusal of the several judgments, their Lordships found that weight has been properly given to the several sections. They did not find that the section has been misconstrued."

No. It is an attempt to balance the two cases.

[FLETCHER, J.—We must have several copies of the judgment. I think that a few copies of the judgment must be taken by a typewriter. A duplicator machine will make us as many copies as we want.]

But there is the question of copyright.

[FLETCHER, J.—I do not think so.]

I should think that is the best thing. One has not had the opportunity of reading that judgment carefully, but at first blush it comes to this that the view taken by the Madras High Court is the proper view. In so far as section 4 (c) is concerned, there is no question of intention and the only question of intention comes in under Explanation 2, and then my submission is only on the question of attempt—not inciting, but an attempt to incite.

[FLETCHER, J.—Copies of this judgment must have to be made at least for ourselves. We cannot follow without this judgment.]

The Advocate-General said that it was quite clear that when this article came before the Government in the first instance, there was no question of intention there, because the words of section 4 were "whenever it appears to the Local Government." Mr. Das had only dealt with the first article but not with the second. The Advocate-General submitted that the first article came under section 4 (c) and not under the Explanation. All the complaint was with regard to section 4 (c) and the Government had followed strictly the wording of that section and said that this article, when carefully read, was brought under those words. Government went further and said that it did not come under the Explanation, which was in two parts, (a) and (b). In both cases the article must consist of comments. As regards (a) comments expressing disapproval of the measures of Government with a view to their alteration by lawful means, that was the only view that must be put forward. Then there was (b), comments, again, expressing disapproval of the administrative or other action of Government without in either case exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection. On a careful reading of that Explanation the words "without exciting or attempting to excite" governed the whole section.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Do I understand you to say that intention is not material because we have not here to deal with measures or administrative action?]

I do.

[WOODROFFE, J.—What we are dealing with is an attack on the Government and on a class?]

Yes. An attack on that class is clearly not covered by the Explanation at all. They are neither a comment on measures of Government nor on the administrative or other action of Government. That is a sine qua non. Unless that is shown, this section does not come into play at all. There is this further difficulty in their way, that if they are comments on the measures of Government, they can only make comments with a view to their alteration by lawful means.

[FLETCHER, J.—Measures clearly means legislation as distinct from administration?]

Yes. As I understand this Explanation, even suppose they are comments expressing disapproval of the measures of Government with a view to their alteration by lawful means or suppose they are comments expressing disapproval of the administrative or other action of Government, they neither of them come under this section if there is an attempt to excite hatred or contempt or disaffection in either case.

[FLETCHER, J.—Your argument is that comments which do not express disapproval of the measures of Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means and comments which are not upon the administration or other action of Government, do not come within the Explanation at all?]

Yes.

[FLETCHER, J.—All other comments are included in clause (c)?]

Yes. If the question of onus arises the onus surely is on the person who relies on the exception.

The Advocate-General then referred to the other sections of the Act. It must not be forgotten that the proceedings under the Act were against, not the writer of the articles as they would be probably under section 124A of the Penal Code, but the person who was called the keeper of the Press. He quoted section 124A of the Penal Code and said that the word "whoever" there made it personal. If the Government were of opinion that the Press was kept in contravention of the Act, the keeper of the Press was responsible. He then cited sections 17, 18 and 20 of the Press Act and said that the wording of the Act and the sections of the Act themselves seemed to exclude evidence. The whole scope of the Act was that evidence was not permissible. If this Act was like section 124A of the Penal Code—an Act dealing with sedition—there would be no need for this section at all. He had authority to support that proposition, namely, Queen Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (8). The case in Manmohan Ghose v. Emperor (9) did not in any way contradict 22 Bombay [Queen Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (8)]. He then read section 21 of the Act and said that in accordance with that section rules had been framed which would be found in Hebble's book, page 424. The whole scheme of the Act showed that it was never intended that evidence should be gone into, except such evidence as was especially admitted under section 20. In none of the reported cases had any evidence been given or attempted to be given.]

[WOODROFFE, J., enquired whether the other side would not be at liberty to put in other issues of the paper to show that there was no such tendency as was alleged?]

That was not contemplated by section 20 at all. The other side must rely on argument, on the construction of the written document.

[MOOKERJI, J., remarked that then the Crown was at liberty to supplement that by putting in other issues of the paper.]

According to these rules that was so. Did not section 20, if one read it carefully, seem to apply to the Government only? What had the defendant got to prove? He had got to prove that the words were not of the nature described in section 4.

[MOOKERJI, J., observed that the Crown said that the tendency was so and so, while the applicant said that it was just the reverse. There was only one matter to be proved, namely, the nature or tendency of the words.]

Supposing there is a sign which to the ordinary man in the street means nothing. May not the Government put in other issues of the paper to show how the paper described that sign?

[MOOKERJI, J.—Quite so. Would not the applicant be at liberty to put in other issues of the paper to contradict the evidence given?]

The Advocate General said that there seemed to be two views about the matter and it was difficult to say which was the correct one.

The Advocate-General handed up to the Bench three typed copies of the Privy Council judgment in Mrs. Besant's case (3) and cited Purusottam Narayan Nande v. Chief Secretary to Government of Bihar & Orissa (13) which followed the judgment in Mahomed Ali, In re (1). The Judges there said they were not concerned with what the intention of the writer might have been or what the reasonable interpretation of the leaflet might be and that it was not enough to say that the words were not likely to bring the Government into hatred or contempt, but the writer must show that it was impossible to have that tendency. Counsel then dealt with the Privy Council judgment.

[Referring to the passage "it is not easy to say how Explanation 2 adds to or detracts from the exact words of paragraph (c)," Fletcher, J., remarked that it was inevitable that in different cases different people might come to different conclusions. Some people might think that some weight should be given to freedom of argument and on the other hand there might be other minds that would pay more attention to the preservation of law and order.]

The Advocate-General said this was not the ultimate conclusion arrived at by the Privy Council. Reading further, he pointed out that the Judge limited "intention" to "attempt." He pointed to the final conclusion come to and went on to say that their Lordships had, therefore, to look for the law on the subject to the Madras case which had been approved by the Privy Council, which said that as the Judges in the Madras case had come to a conclusion on a question of fact they could not interfere. This seemed to exclude the people who had read the article. The Privy Council could rely upon the joint knowledge of the Judges themselves quite apart from any evidence. A fair conclusion to draw from the Privy Council judgment was that they had carefully considered the conclusion which the Madras High Court had come to. The Privy Council had considered for themselves section 4 and the necessary sub clauses and also Explanation 2, and while expressing the opinion that it was not easy to say how Explanation 2 with its qualifications added to or detracted from the language of paragraph (c) and while saying that the English judgments were of considerable assistance in interpreting the language of the Press Act and whilst giving an explanation of clause 2 coupled with Explanation 2, they ended up by saying that they were not going to disagree with the conclusion which the Madras Court had come to. If this Court thought the words in the articles of the Amrita Bazar Patrika were an attack on the Government or an attack on a class, it came under section 4 and there was no question, he submitted, of going into evidence at all. There was no question of intent at all, and, therefore, no question of evidence. The only evidence that could be given was under section 20 and no other evidence. He enquired whether their Lordships wished to hear him further or were simply going to decide whether evidence was admissible or not.

[WOODROFFE, J.—We think that we should hear Mr. Das on the question of the interpretation of this section, whether in view of a proper interpretation of the section evidence can be given in the case of these two articles.]

Mr. Das then addressed the Court and submitted that apart from Explanation 2 altogether, the section described something which required a seditious intent. The words in the main section described sedition, which required what was called seditious intent. He submitted that it was clear from the wording of the section itself. It could never have been the intention of the Legislature that they should not look to the intention or purpose of an article, but were only to see if there was some man somewhere upon whom some effect of this kind might possibly be produced. He cited the case reported as Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (8) to show that the Court must consider the class of persons who read the paper and the time and circumstances of publication.

Mr. Das, continuing his argument the following day, said that there were two questions which arose, so far as the evidence was concerned, on the consideration of the sections. The first was, was the evidence admissible at all, and, secondly, what would be the relevant evidence? He submitted that on the interpretation of the sections themselves, apart from any judicial authority, it was clear that to constitute an article or the paper published of the description which was mentioned in section 4, certain intent was necessary, which Counsel described as seditious intent. He placed before their Lordships the words used in the sections, namely, "purpose," "likely," "tendency," "directly," "indirectly," for their consideration, and said that all those implied intention. They found the same words used in the judgments of eminent Judges. The contention of the other side was that the word "intention" did not appear in the governing clause—section 4—itsself and, therefore, "intention" did not come in. His answer was, "look at section 124A of the Penal Code." If one matter was settled beyond any possibility of argument to the contrary, it was this, that under section 124A they did require seditious intent. Every case which had been decided on this point laid down that there was a question of intention under section 124A.

He relied on the decision of the Privy Council to show that intent was necessary even apart from Explanation 2.

Counsel then said that it was clear that whether they had got the Explanation or positive enactment, the question of intention was necessary and evidence had to be given. What was relevant evidence in cases of this description? First, evidence as to the time, the place, the circumstances, and the intention of the article was admissible. That was supported by Reg. v. Sullivan (4), Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (8) and Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2). Second, evidence as to the existing state of public feeling in the country. That was important, and the Bench would find that in Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (8) and Reg. v. Sullivan (4). Third, evidence as to the character and description of that part of the public who might be expected to read the articles. That was based on the Privy Council decision. Fourth, evidence showing the general policy of the paper. Fifth, evidence of the nature and tendency of the words used in the articles in the light of previous articles in the same paper. Sixth, evidence from other sources as to the meaning of the words used. His authority for that was Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (8). For instance, a word might be used from the Queen's Proclamation and it might be necessary to explain that word.

[FLETCHER, J.—I suppose the King's language has the same meaning in Calcutta as in London.]

For instance, one of the articles begins by referring to a compact. I am entitled to show what that compact is and how it is understood in this country, otherwise your Lordships will not understand the compact. Or reference is made to a particular agitation in this country. Your Lordships are not aware of that particular agitation. I am entitled to show how it is understood by the people here.

Mr. Das then referred to section 20 of the Press Act, and contended that it only dealt with such evidence as was not admissible under the general law. In support of his contention he cited the Full Bench case of Queen-Empress v. Amba Prasad (14), and (14) 20 A. 55 at p. 69; A. W. N. (1898).

said that he could give evidence as to habits of speech. It was admitted on all hands that if there was a question of intent evidence was necessary. He then turned to the second article and said that it referred to the employment by the executive of the military to shoot down people. That was an attack on the administration.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Suppose it was. Would that justify the writer of the article to say that the executive were shooting down people at their own sweet will?]

The question is what is my intention? If I have overstepped my limits, the question of intention comes in. I am not asking your Lordships to hold that this is legitimate but to show you what my intention was. What is the duty of a journalist? If he finds that throughout the country there is a feeling because of the employment of troops, if he finds that there is a general feeling of alarm and apprehension that the reign of law has gone, is it or is it not his duty to point that out? I should have thought that in every civilised country it must be a poor sort of journalist who cannot do that. If it is not the duty of a journalist to do that, I don't know what is.

Counsel then stated that the second article was a criticism of the administrative action taken at Delhi and also in the Punjab and was also criticism of the Rowlatt Act. It pointed out the state of public feeling on information received. The expression in the second article "shot down like cats and dogs" referred to the fact that while in England the military fired at the legs of a mob, that was not the case in the Punjab riots. He submitted that with regard to both articles he was entitled to call evidence.

[WOODROFFE, J.—For reasons which we will give later on in our judgment, the evidence which the applicant proposes to give upon the question of intention is, in our opinion in this case inadmissible. Nor is such evidence, in our opinion, in so far as it is covered by section 20 of the Press Act, admissible in proof of tendency. In so far as such evidence may be covered by section 20 of the Press Act, that is, in so far as it consists of copies of the newspaper published after the commencement of the Act, we will deal with the matter if and where such evidence is tendered.]

I intended to tender copies of the newspaper.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Do you intend to tender them now?]

Yes, one by one. There are about twenty of them. They are those of 15th February 1917; 7th April 1917; 18th April 1917; 28th April 1917; 24th May 1917; 4th June 1917; 25th September 1917; 27th September 1917; 23rd September 1917; 23rd August 1918; 16th August 1918; 8th January 1919; 10th January 1919; 18th January 1919; 8th February 1919; 19th February 1919; 25th March 1919; 10th July 1917; 13th July 1917; 14th July 1917; 3rd August 1917; 18th August 1919; 7th August 1917; 17th August 1917; 24th August 1917; 17th April 1919; 5th June 1919; 15th June 1919; 21st December 1918; 22nd August 1919; 7th February 1919; 2nd May 1919 and 5th May 1919. This is what I have got now, but having regard to your Lordships' order some more issues will have to be put in.

They show the policy of the paper and bear upon the words of the section. They are tendered under section 20 on the nature and tendency of the articles.

[FLETCHER, J.—There must be some limit. There must be some connected article or series of articles.]

Mr. Das referred to Ratan Lal's Law of Crimes, 11th Edition, page 1186, as showing that evidence might be put in to illustrate the general policy of the paper; and, secondly, evidence which had connection with the articles complained of. He tendered those newspapers on both those grounds.

[WOODROFFE, J.—The Madras High Court dealt with the question of policy as a question of intention and admitted papers in those cases where, in the opinion of the Court, the question of intention was relevant.]

[FLETCHER, J.—Under section 20 you are entitled to give some form of articles in evidence and we shall have to go through those articles as you tendered them and see which are relevant. We have not seen them and do not know whether they are connected or not.]

Mr. Das.—As I understand you, you will only allow such articles as are connected.

[FLETCHER, J.—I think the Madras case said that there must be some connection. It is another matter as to what kind of connection is required. Of course we cannot say that they are connected until we see them.]

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Apart from the question of intention and policy it will be admissible in aid of proof of the nature and tendency.]

Mr. Das.—I claim to put them in under both these grounds.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Any article that you rely upon merely to show the policy of the paper is inadmissible.]

[After some discussion the Court directed Mr. Das to give a complete copy of each issue he intended to put forward to the Advocate-General, and as regards the Court it would be sufficient if extracts from the papers were made into three sets and handed to the Court.]

Mr. Das said that before he proceeded to place before their Lordships the different articles which appeared in the previous issues of the Amrita Bazar Patrika, he desired to place before them a passage from "Odger on Libel and Slander," page 484, 4th Edition. After reading the passage, Counsel said that he desired in the light of those observations to place some of the articles in the previous issues of the paper, to show the nature and tendency of the articles in question. He then read the article of the 13th February 1917, headed "For God, King and the Country." He tendered that article for the expressions used in the article of the 10th April, which dealt with the Empire, and which showed how the Empire was hurt and how the Empire was saved. It showed the real meaning of the word "Empire" used by the Amrita Bazar Patrika. The article of the 7th April 1917 was headed "India and the Empire—The eternal motto of Hindu social life." This again explained the empire ideal. The article of the 1st April 1917 was headed "India and the Empire," while "Home Rule Movement and Sir Michael O'Dwyer" was the headline of the article of the 28th April 1917. Counsel read those articles.

[The Advocate General.—There is a much more interesting article than that—the next one of the 28th April.]

I will put in the whole paper. You can use that.

Continuing, Mr. Das said that the central idea of that article was that the prosperity of the Empire meant the prosperity of India and that the prosperity of India could not be achieved without the prosperity of the Empire. The object of this article was to have a radical change in the system of administration, and that change was to be consistent with the idea of the federal empire, which had been expressed in the articles of the Amrita Bazar Patrika and also by different speeches of statesmen in England. In fact it was based on the announcement which was made on the 20th of August 1917. He then read the article of the 24th May 1917, which was headed "The Empire."

The Advocate General.—There is a great deal more in that article. Please read from "the ideal of the real Empire.")

Mr. Das, after reading the article, said that brought out the meaning of the article very prominently. They wanted a radical change in the administration, which would bring in the real empire of which they had heard in the Proclamation of the 20th August 1917.

[The Advocate General.—Read the next: "This is the saddest tragedy of the present situation."]

So indeed it is.

After reading the portion, Mr. Das said that it carried out the same idea. If that was seditious, of course, they were guilty of sedition. How could a journalist deal with politics without pointing that out—that the idea which they were pursuing was wrong and was not in accordance with the pronouncement of the Secretary of State and the Viceroy? That was not true imperialism. Counsel then read the article of the 4th June 1917 which was headed "The King-Emperor's Birthday," and read the announcements made by the Secretary of State from the issue of the 23rd August 1917, the proceedings of the Imperial Legislative Council of the 20th September, containing Sir Hugh Bray's speech, which appeared in the issue of the 22nd September 1917, and the proceedings of the European Association meeting held at the Dalhousie Institute, Calcutta, on the 26th September, which appeared in the issue of the 27th September 1917, and read the article of the 25th September 1917, headed "The Threat of White Revolt," and that of the 27th September, headed "The Situation in Anglo India." He said that the point taken in those articles was that whenever a reform was proposed, it was the officials who opposed it always, and they had done it along with the European mercantile community. There was the following sentence in the article of the 27th September: "This administration and exploitation has been fatal to our economic advancement." Counsel said that the words "administration and exploitation" were used by Lord Curzon.

[FLETCHER, J.—Are those the actual words used by Lord Curzon?]

Yes. Of course Lord Curzon explained it afterwards that he did not use the word "exploitation" in that sense. Each sentence used in this article can be supported from the declaration of responsible Ministers from 1870 downwards.

Counsel then read articles of the 23rd August 1918, headed "Practical Proofs;" 16th August 1918, "The Extremists, the Moderates and the Anglo-Indian Press;" 25th January 1919 "Indian Nationalism and the British Crown;" 10th January 1919, "Sir William Duke's Reply to Extremists;" and the 18th January 1919 "The Peace Conference."

At this stage Mr. Das said that he was very tired and that with the permission of the Court his junior, Mr. I. B. Sen, would read the remaining articles.

Mr. I. B. Sen then read the article of the 8th February 1919, headed, "The Viceroy's Speech," and tendered His Excellency the Viceroy's speech itself made at the meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council and which appeared in the same issue of the paper.

[FLETCHER, J.—There is no proof that it is His Excellency the Viceroy's speech.]

[The Advocate General.—The fact that it appears in this paper is prima facie that it is not His Excellency the Viceroy's speech.]

[WOODROFFE, J.—What has this got to do with the case before us?]

Mr. Sen.—In the first article there is an attack upon certain officers recruited in England and upon the British mercantile community.

[WOODROFFE, J.—We are dealing with section 20 of the Press Act.]

This is only for the purpose of understanding the article which this paper had written upon this speech.

[WOODROFFE, J.—What is there to understand? We cannot understand the article unless we have the speech before us. We are of opinion that this speech is not relevant.]

Counsel then read the article of the 19th February 1919, "European Association's Latest Effusion," in which occurred the words "the people of this country will no longer submit to be ruled by every Tom, Dick and Harry."

[FLETCHER, J.—Is it worth reading that stuff?]

[The Advocate-General.—There is a great deal of vulgar abuse in the earlier part of the article.]

Counsel next read articles of the 26th March 1919, "Passive Resistance;" 10th July 1917, "Self-Government and Home Rule I;" 13th July 1917, "Self-Government and Home Rule II;" 14th July 1917, "Lord Rinaldis's Word of Caution No. 2;" 3rd August 1917, "The Test of Leaders;" 18th August 1917, 7th August 1917, 17th August 1917, "Home Rule and Passive Politics;" 23rd August 1917 and 1st April 1919, "The Satyagraha Day at Delhi." That was the report upon which the second article was based—the report of what took place at Delhi, Lahore and Amritsar. He commenced to read a telegram from the President of the Satyagrah Sabha, Delhi.

[FLETCHER, J., enquired what proof there was of that telegram and how it was relevant.]

In addition to that telegram there was also published a telegram in the Associated Press and the article commented upon those telegrams.

[WOODROFFE, J., remarked that the telegram was rejected, but Mr. Sen could read the comment.]

[Mr. Das then read the remaining articles, practically all of which were rejected.]

In the matter of THE AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

[WOODROFFE, J.—All the issues of the Amrita Bazar Patrika and extracts from those issues which have not already been rejected, are now rejected and will be marked as such.]

Mr. Das then asked permission to refer to different legislative enactments, proclamations of sovereigns and utterances of ministers and statesmen as part of his argument.

[WOODROFFE, J.—To prove what?]

To explain the articles.

[WOODROFFE, J.—What passages can those articles do you say these documents explain?]

The whole of the articles.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Then we hold that we cannot allow it.]

Then that is my case.

[WOODROFFE, J.—We don't wish to hear you, Mr. Advocate-General, unless you wish to say anything.]

The Advocate General.—I don't wish to say anything further.

[WOODROFFE, J.—We reserve our judgment.]
JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—This is an application by the Keeper of the Amrita Bazar Patrika Press and of the Amrita Bazar Patrika Co., Ltd., under section 17 of the Press Act I of 1910 asking that this Court may, under section 19, set aside the order of forfeiture which was passed by the Government of Bengal in respect and in consequence of two articles * published in the Amrita Bazar Patrika newspaper on the 10th and 12th April 1919, which are reproduced as annexures to the petition. The grounds of the forfeiture are that the first article was, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, likely and has a tendency, directly or indirectly, by inference, suggestion, implication, or otherwise, to bring into hatred and contempt the Government established by law in India and the officers of the said Government, recruited in England, and to excite disaffection towards the said Government, and that the second was likely and had a tendency, directly or indirectly, by inference, suggestion, implication, or otherwise, to bring into hatred the Government established in British India and to excite disaffection towards the said Government. The Government, therefore, acted under the provisions of section 4, clause (c).

I will deal at once with a contention of

Mr. C. R. Das, Counsel for the applicant, that the order was bad in so far as it does not state that the "officers of the said Government recruited in England" were in India. It would have been more formally correct if this had been expressly stated. It is, however, obvious that the reference is to officers in India and not, as suggested, to officers in Mesopotamia, England or elsewhere. Further, whatever the order may say, we have, (as pointed out by my brother Mookerjee J., during the argument), in disposing of the application, to see whether the article is not obnoxious to the provisions of section 4 which include, amongst others, attacks upon any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India. Further again under section 22 of the Press Act the only ground upon which the Court can set aside a forfeiture is that the matter which is the subject of it does not contain words of the nature described in section 4, sub section 1. No objection can be taken against the forfeiture itself, but it may be set aside under section 19. I hold, therefore, that this objection fails.

The substantial question is, whether the articles or either of them fall within the provisions of section 4, clause (c), or are excluded therefrom, on the ground that they are comments expressing disapproval of the measures of Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or of the administrative or other action of the Government established in British India without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the said Government or hatred and contempt towards a class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, viz, the officers of the said Government in India recruited in England.

No one, I think, reading these articles could come to the conclusion that they were not likely and had not a tendency to excite hatred and contempt towards the Government and class against whom they were directed. But it is urged for the applicant that even if, standing by themselves, the articles have this effect, it is open to the applicant to show, and he offers by evidence to show, that they were written without seditious intent. He then says that if he can show this alleged absence of seditious intent the forfeiture must be set aside. The argument involves the following considerations:—

* See Appendix—Ed.

Is the question of intention immaterial in any, or is it material in every, case coming under section 4? If the answer is in the negative to both propositions, then as regards what provision of section 4 is intention to be investigated, and do the articles in question come under that provision or not?

If I were dealing with the matter as res integra and without reference to two of the decisions to which I later refer, I should have been disposed to hold that the intention of the Legislature was that the Court should look at the articles and say whether the meaning of them was such that they were likely or had a tendency to have the effect mentioned in clauses (a) to (f) of section 4, and that, upon a consideration of this question, the enquiry into what was the intention of the writer or publisher was not material, though in judging the nature or tendency of the words used, evidence of the particular character mentioned in section 2) might, if it were necessary, be admissible.

Here I may interpose to point out that the word "intention" is often loosely used. Thus we hear the expression "intention of a document." A document cannot have an intention nor a motive, nor can it "attempt" to do anything. Intention, motive, attempt have reference to persons and denote psychological facts of which a document may be evidence. The so called "intention of a document," as distinguished from the state of mind of its author, is nothing but its meaning. So far as the document is concerned, its so-called "intention" is its meaning. The Press Act in my opinion was framed to enable the Government and the Court to deal with the meaning of documents and not with the intentions of their authors and publishers. It is the criminal law of sedition which deals with the latter. So on an application to set aside a forfeiture it was intended, I believe, that the Court should (apart from section 20) look at the document and ascertain on a fair reading what was its meaning and should then say whether the words used, when properly understood, were of the nature or tendency mentioned in clauses (a) to (f) of section 4. If it is not shown that they are not of this character then the forfeiture is upheld. If, however, on the true construction of a document the Court is of opinion that it is a disapproving comment on the measures or actions of Government, or the administration of justice which is not likely and has no tendency to excite the hatred, contempt or disaffection referred to in clause (c), that is, if it is a temperate and allowable criticism of such measures or actions, then the forfeiture is to be set aside. The Court in every case is, in this view, concerned with the meaning of the writing and not with the intentions of the writer. Intention is in this view the subject of criminal proceedings for direct sedition against persons under section 124A, or indirect sedition under section 153A, of the Penal Code and not of forfeiture of security given and document issued by a printing press.

It is true, however, that the wording of Explanation II of section 4 does raise a difficulty, for it uses words which have been relied on, and have been held, to show that the question of intention is, in certain cases, material; that is, the applicant may in the case of disapproving comments on the measures (which, in my opinion, means legislative measures) or administrative or other action of Government, or the administration of justice, show that in the making of such comments there was no attempt (which implies intention) to excite the hatred, contempt or disaffection mentioned in clause (c) of the section. Not improbably, the wording of this Explanation is due to careless drafting, the draughtsman overlooking the fact that he was importing into a section dealing with documents of a particular nature or tendency an explanation taken from section 124A of the Penal Code, which deals with an offence by individuals for the establishment of which a seditious intention is necessary. This was pointed out by Abdur Rahim, C. J., [Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2)] in his observation that the Explanation imported the question of intention, while clause (c) of section 4, to which the Explanation is attached, is not concerned with the intention of the writer of the words charged. It may be as was argued on behalf of the Crown in Mrs. Besant's case (2), that "attempting to incite" is a loosely worded equivalent of "tending to excite," but this construction was overruled and we must, as Abdur Rahim, J., says, read Explanation 2 as we find it.

However this be, this view of the section is no longer open, for it has been held by the Madras High Court in the case cited that whilst intention is immaterial so far as clauses (a) to (f) of section 4 are concerned, it is material if the case falls within Explanation II, when the Court is judging whether there was an attempt to excite hatred and contempt by comments coming under that section. It follows, therefore, that intention is only material if we have to deal with comments on the measures or actions of Government or the administration of justice, and it is not otherwise material. These comments again are not protected if they in fact excite or attempt to excite hatred, contempt and disaffection, but are protected if the disapproving comments on the measures of Government are made with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or if they are made on the actions of Government or administration of justice, and if in both these cases there is no attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection. As "attempt" implies intention, an inquiry whether there has or has not been such an attempt involves, it has been held, a consideration of the question of intention.

This view must be taken to have been approved by the Privy Council, which in the appeal from the decision of the Madras High Court observed as follows:—"Upon careful perusal of the several judgments their Lordships find that weight has been properly given to the several portions of the section. They do not find that the section has been misconstrued" [Mrs. Annie Besant v. Advocate General of the Government of Madras (3)].

Mr. C. R. Das has argued that the Privy Council overruled the distinction which the Madras High Court drew between the operative part of section 4 and the Explanation to clause (c). I am unable to accept this contention. It is true that their Lordships say that it is not easy to see how Explanation II adds to, or detracts from, the direct language of clause (c), but it does not, therefore, follow that the question of intention, which is material in the particular cases mentioned in the Explanation, is thereby made material as regards either other cases under clause (c), or all other clauses of section 4. I think, however, a legitimate argument may be raised as regards the subsequent passage of the judgment of the Judicial Committee which commences with "In substance the question under clause (c) of section 4" and which is relied on by the applicant to show that the Privy Council did not draw any distinction between an attack on the Government as such and comments on its measures and actions, and that it treated an attack on a class as involving intention though no mention is made of a class in Explanation II, and though, as the Judicial Committee later point out the words in clause (c) which refer to the hatred or contempt of a class or section are not limited by Explanation II. On the other hand the judgment of the Madras High Court, which is affirmed, clearly holds (page 1120*) that section 4 allows less scope to criticisms of the measures of Government, and that (as already stated) the operative portion of section 4 does not make the intention of the writer material when considering whether the words are not of the nature described in section 4. Attacks on a class or section are not mentioned in Explanation II, and the Judicial Committee pointed out that the words in clause (c), which refer to the hatred or contempt of a class or section, are not limited by Explanation II. Finally they say that "the section has not been misconstrued" by the High Court of Madras, which very clearly distinguishes between the cases where intention is, and is not, material. Mr. C. R. Das has suggested that the Judicial Committee in making the last observation was referring to the manner in which the Madras High Court had applied the section, but this is not so, as the Judicial Committee then go on to deal with the application in detail of the principles of the law to the language of the various articles then before the Court.

These observations are sufficient to dispose of the argument that the question of seditious intent is material in every case coming under clauses (a) to (f) of the body of the section. But as the point is of importance and has been argued at great length, I will further examine it.

Put in the most condensed form, the contention of the applicant's Counsel is, that before the Press Act can be put into operation in any case, it must be shown that the offence of sedition has been committed, or to put the matter more accurately with reference to the terms of sections 17 and 19, the forfeiture must be set aside if the applicant shows that no sedition has been committed through the matter which is the ground of the forfeiture. In this view of the case the Act would mean that the Government may judge whether the offence of sedition has been committed, and if it thinks that there has been such an offence, then it may make an order of forfeiture. Then the applicant may come in and show that there has been no sedition, and the hearing of the application would take the form of a criminal trial, with this difference that the burden of proving that an offence had been committed would lie not on the Crown, but on the party whose property was forfeited, and the penalty would not be imprisonment of any person, but forfeiture of security and copies of the newspaper. In such a trial all evidence would be admissible which was admissible in a criminal trial.

I do not think that such was the intention of the Legislature. It may be said that proceedings under the Press Act partake of a criminal character in so far as they involve forfeiture. It may also be that the matter forfeited might make the party responsible for it, liable to a criminal charge of sedition or a charge under section 153A of the Penal Code, but the Act itself was not enacted for the punishment of such offences, but as its title and preamble show for the better control of the Press. It is essentially a preventive measure: a measure with the view to prevent crime, that is crime imperilling the existence of the State, the safety of its officers, public order and the like. It is to be observed that under section 21 the procedure, until the framing of rules by the High Court, is ordered to be that of the practice of the Court in proceedings other than suits and appeals. The only evidence for which direct provision is made by the Act is the admission of other copies of the newspaper in aid of the proof of the nature and tendency (section 20), and section 21 states that nothing contained in the Act shall be deemed to prevent any person from being prosecuted under any other law for any act or omission which constitutes an offence under this Act. An offence under this Act is not sedition as such, but the printing or publishing of matter of the nature and tendency mentioned in section 4, which attracts to itself the penalty of forfeiture. If the Crown is desirous in any case of proceeding against any party for sedition, it will doubtless do so under the provisions of the Penal Code and according to the ordinary criminal procedure. Something may be said for Mr. C. R. Das's contention on the ground of thoroughness, for it may be argued either that intention is material in every case or in no case, but the other circumstances I have mentioned are in my opinion against it and the question is concluded by precedent.

We must then, in my opinion, follow the decision as to the interpretation of the section given by the Madras High Court and affirmed, as I understand it, by the Judicial Committee.

The question then is, are the articles before us merely disapproving comments on the measures or actions of Government? If they are not that, that is, if they are not such comments at all, or if besides being in part such comments, they are also an attack on the Government itself, or on a class, then in so far as they are not such comments no question of intention arises. For it is to be observed that a writing may in part constitute an attack on the Government itself and in another part be a comment on its measures and actions. If it is the former and of the nature specified in clause (c) or if it is an attack on a class, then it is not covered by the Explanation, which alone, according to the Madras decision [Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2)], imports the consideration of intention.

The first article in the order of forfeiture is alleged to be likely or to have a tendency to bring into hatred and contempt the Government established by law in British India and the officers of the said Government recruited in England and to excite disaffection against the said Government. I am unable to hold that this article does not contain words of the nature described, seeing that it alleges, amongst other things, that England in breach of her pledges farmed this country out to English officers, who govern the people of India according to their own sweet will on principles which are absolutely despotic and some of them un-British and barbarous, who serve themselves first and then only their mother country and increase their own pay looking down upon the people as mere human sheep created only to minister to their (the officers') own comforts and material prosperity, the officers fattening themselves out of the country, whilst the Indians decay, the officers again governing India as their own property in such a way that from being one of the richest of countries it has become the permanent abode of famine, plague and malaria.

The second article is alleged in the order of forfeiture to be likely and to have the tendency to bring into hatred, and to excite disaffection towards, the Government. This article may be said to be in part a comment on the action of Government with respect to the proceedings taken with reference to the recent riots, and there is a reference to the so called Rowlatt Act "which has robbed the people of many of the elementary rights of human beings." But it is more than this, as it is an attack upon the Government itself which is described as a "common enemy." It suggests that the people were provoked to violence, that on some pretence or another the Police picked up a quarrel, that the people were shot at like cats and dogs. The article then speaks of unprovoked aggression and says "we believe the Government of India will treat this awful incident with the same apathy as they have done with regard to the outrage at Delhi." Towards its close it says that as a result of what is said in the article, "the masses have at last been roused to realise that the reign of law is gone and people can be shot down at the sweet will of the Executive." I am unable to hold that this article does not contain words which are of the nature above described.

On this part of the case dealing with "nature or tendency" (corresponding to the words "are likely or may have a tendency" in section 4), certain evidence was tendered under section 20 of the Act. It may be a question whether the provisions of that section are equally available to the Crown and the accused. It speaks only of evidence in aid of the proof, and not disproof, of the nature and tendency of the words complained of. But this contention was overruled by the Madras High Court, and in the absence of any words of direct exclusion of evidence, it is fairer to assume that if an article is ambiguous or doubtful and, therefore, the Crown requires to supplement it by the evidence of other articles from the same newspaper, the person against whom the order of forfeiture is passed should have the right to give evidence in rebuttal. I am, however, of opinion that the section only applies where, if the article stood alone, there may be doubt or ambiguity as to the character, nature, or tendency of the words used and not when the meaning of the article is apparent on its face, as is the case here.

Besides other leading articles in the newspaper extending from the year 1917 to 1919, a number of extracts from the newspaper were tendered which, in my opinion, do not in any case come within the scope of the section, namely, reports of events from press or private correspondents, proceedings in Council, His Excellency the Viceroy's speech, the Bishop of Calcutta's sermon, Mr. Jinnah's (former member of Council) letter on his resignation, the Right Hon'ble Mr. Montagu's speech in introducing the Reform Bill and on the Mesopotamian Commission, Message of His Majesty the King-Emperor, letter of resignation of Moulvi Mazharul Haq, dissentient minute of Sir Sankaran Nair on a Government despatch, a speech of Mr. B. Chakravarti and the dissentient minute on the Industrial Commission. All such matters we rejected, whether it is claimed that they are admissible under section 20 of the Press Act or otherwise. We also rejected (after first fully reading them) the various leading articles tendered. In my opinion they do not aid in proof of the nature or tendency of the words used, which are quite intelligible on their face. Nor are they admissible as evidence of policy of the paper, for policy is a matter of intention and for the reasons given such evidence is not admissible. Nor if they were admitted, would they, in my opinion, have helped the plaintiff's case or affected my judgment as to the nature and tendency of the articles which have been selected by the applicant as supporting his case.

The articles tendered are many and lengthy and I give only their essential gist. Issues tendered in connection with the first article, the subject of these proceedings, profess the following sentiments:—In the first place there are expressions of loyalty to the Throne sacred as the symbol of the collective life and of loyalty to the true or ideal empire, wholly different from the reality, namely, the present British Empire which is the product of the conscious pursuit of lower ends and a determined effort to repudiate the true ideal of empire (24th May 1917). At present there is only a "white imperialism", a confederacy of white men for the exploitation of the non-white members of the present empire (ibid.). Independence is not sought but Home Rule within the Empire, that is, a combination of national freedom with imperial subjection. Many passages insist on the fact and this is the general tenor of the articles as a whole, that the obstacle in the way of Indian political well-being is the self-interested hostility of the bureaucracy or Indian Civil Service, which one issue (20th January 1919) says means the Government of India. All this is the "psychology of selfishness" (27th September 1917), which the writer says has produced a dangerous discontent in the masses (ibid.). The Viceroy, it is said, has protected the interests of the foreign bureaucracy and foreign exploiters (19th February 1919). In one issue (26th March 1919) it is even suggested that the Government is provoking some sort of physical conflict. The foreign bureaucracy which governs India is striving to retain their powers (3rd August 1917). This absolute power of the alien official must be broken (14th July 1917) in order that there may be a transfer of power from the alien bureaucracy to the people. But loyalty to the Crown and the "Ideal Empire" is professed and anything but constitutional methods of agitation are discouraged.

There is no allegation in the order of forfeiture of disloyalty to His Majesty the King-Emperor. What is alleged is that the articles are likely, and have a tendency, to bring into hatred and contempt the Government established by law in British India and to excite disaffection towards the said Government, and, as regards the first article, that it contains words which are likely or have the tendency to bring into hatred and contempt the officers of the said Government recruited in England. It has been held that the words "Government established by law in India" in section 4 are not to be construed as indicating only the supremacy of the British Crown in India and the British connection with it, as opposed to independence: Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2). For the rest the articles tendered do not assist the applicant, or disprove the alleged nature or tendency of the words used, the meaning of which is plain on their face. Because on previous occasions language has been used which was either not obnoxious to the section or was, under the circumstances, passed over by the Government, does not in any sense disprove the nature or tendency alleged in this case. What, however, they do show is that for about two years previous to the first article in question, the paper has been writing against the so-called bureaucracy, which it speaks of as being the Government and which that article has now attacked in terms which have led the Government to make the forfeiture, although there was according to one of the previous issues (27th September 1917) a deep, wide spread, and dangerous discontent in the masses in this country which should have led the paper to be careful of what it said and published.

Some further articles tendered deal with the recent grave riots in this country. The "Delhi outrage" is described (2nd April 1919) as a wanton outrage. It speaks of the enormity of the Police action in shooting unarmed people like sparrows: of the hecatombs in which "natives" were victims, of the resultant disappearance of "natives" from the arena of their unfortunate "native" land. It points out that the unarmed people of this country are neither Germans nor Turks. Mr. C. R. Das says as to this that no enquiry was held and that this explains the reference to the "apathy" of the Government of India in the second article in question. An article on the "Delhi Tragedy" (4th April 1919) speaks of grave provocation. The issue, however, of the 11th April 1919 exhorts the public to behave with composure, which the writer is sure that they will do. There is nothing in all this which disproves the alleged nature and tendency of the words of the second article in question. What they do show is that for two years the paper has been strongly criticising the so-called bureaucracy and for a short time previous to the second article also the action taken as regards the recent riots without any intervention by Government. When, however, violent and inflammatory language was used at a time which, owing to the late riots, was one of public danger, then the Government felt itself compelled to take action under the Press Act with a view to prevent the spread of further disorder.

These findings dispose of the application, but I will now deal with the case on the assumption that evidence of intention was (as argued by the applicant) relevant and will record and deal with the evidence tendered on his behalf on this part of the case. The argument was that, over and above the nature and tendency of the words used, the Court must be satisfied that there was a particular seditious intention, otherwise the order of forfeiture must be set aside.

Evidence was tendered of "time, place, circumstances and occasion of the article." On this head we were invited to enter into an extensive historical enquiry from the year 1833 to the present time with a view to show the rights of the Indians as set forth in charters, proclamations, official despatches and statements made by ministers of the Crown, that from time to time various reforms had been proposed by the Government such as Lord Ripon's Local Self Government Act and the Minto-Morley proposals substantially as they left England, which are said to have been defeated or obstructed by the activity of Government officials in this country. It was proposed to tender the Public Services and Industrial Commissions reports to show that the development of the country had been prevented by Government officials and the industrial interests of India had been sacrificed to Manchester. Promises made had thus, it is said, not been allowed to be fulfilled. We were invited to receive evidence of the question agitating the mind of the public and of the general "political environment." Secondly, evidence was offered of the state of the country and of public feeling. It was argued that evidence, oral and documentary, of political questions agitating the people and their feelings in general and of recent events in the Punjab was relevant to show that it was necessary in the interests of Government itself that such an alleged state of things should be brought to its notice. It was argued that the object being to ventilate a grievance a seditious intention was negatived. Thirdly, evidence was offered of the character and description of that part of the public who might be expected to read the article. Mr. Das proposed to call evidence to show what effect the reading of the articles in question had upon the readers and then to show the class of persons who read the Amrita Bazar Patrika. These are said to be (and evidence was offered to show it) the politically minded class amongst educated persons, who were all engaged in bringing about a lawful change in the administration, which change had been practically promised. Fourthly, evidence of the previous general policy of the newspaper. Fifthly, evidence from other sources of the meaning of the whole articles. To explain the articles applicant's Counsel desired to refer to various legislative enactments, Government resolutions and utterances of ministers of the Crown and other statesmen. Mr. C. R. Das, in response to the question of the Court—"What were the passages in the articles, the subject of these proceedings, which he said that these documents explain," replied that they were tendered to explain the whole of the articles, and any point made in them, and on the rejection of the above-mentioned evidence closed his case.

In the first place, it is to be observed that the truth of the facts alleged is no answer. Even if there were the "compact" and promises alleged, and even if they were broken, and even if this was due to the alleged self interested hostility of the class to which the first article refers, this would be no answer.

We must then distinguish between the meaning of an article and the intention of its writer. The construction of a document is a question of law to be determined by grammar or logic, the primary organs of interpretation, aided when necessary by evidence to make the words which are used fit the external things to which the words are appropriate [Evidence Act, section 92, proviso (6)], and by evidence of the character mentioned in sections 95-98 of the Evidence Act. Where the words of the document are (as in my opinion is the case here) plain and unambiguous, we must look to the document alone. Extrinsic evidence to explain a document is not admissible because not needed in such a case. In my opinion there is no ground in this case for the admission of explanatory evidence. Passing then to evidence of intention, this should be gathered from the language employed. When the meaning of a document has been truly ascertained, that document itself is evidence of the intention of the writer. Intention is a psychological fact and can be proved under section 14 of the Evidence Act when the existence of intention is in issue or relevant, provided that the collateral fact is not too remote. If then intention was rightly in issue in this case, that is, if for instance the existence of intention were relevant in the case of an attack on a class under clause (c) of section 4, though under that clause intention is not material, and though the Explanation to that clause which imports intention has no reference to words directed against a class, then speaking generally evidence of intention would be, according to the Madras decision, admissible. Seshagiri Ayyar, J., there said, Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2) "It is true that in the vast majority of cases the intention must be gathered from the language employed, but it is possible to show that what prima facie appears objectionable should not be given the meaning attributable to the words employed. The difference is very thin, no doubt; but I think that the Legislature was contemplating in Explanation II, the possibility of proof by the person proceeded against that the intention to create disaffection was not in the mind of the writer." Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2). If, then, it be assumed, for the purpose of this judgment, that evidence of intention was relevant, then in my opinion such evidence as has been offered to us and tendered would not, if admissible and if admitted, have established the applicant's claim to relief. Let it be assumed (without adjudging it to be so) that the political promises have not been kept, but have been thwarted by either the Indian Government or its officials or both, and that the motive of the writer or writers of the articles was, as alleged, to carry out the reforms said to have been promised, and to change the present political system, thus putting an end to the power of the Indian Civil Service, even then that would not justify the use of language likely or tending to create hatred, contempt or disaffection. Whether, notwithstanding such likelihood or tendency, there was or was not an actual intention to create hatred, contempt or disaffection must be primarily determined upon a perusal of the writings themselves. As the Judicial Committee say, "in judging the question of intention the publisher must be deemed to intend that which is the natural result of the words used." The words used in these articles are in my opinion likely to produce hatred, contempt and disaffection. This must then be presumed to have been intended until the contrary is shown. If the words upon their true construction do not show the nature or tendency alleged, then there is no need to enquire into the existence of seditious intention which the true construction of the words negatives. If, on the other hand, the words used naturally, clearly and indubitably have such tendency, then it must be presumed that the publisher intended that which is the natural result of the words used, and no other evidence is (to say the least) likely to rebut the existence of such intention. If, however, the words used leave the nature and tendency in doubt, it is not likely that Government action would be taken thereon, but if it did, it is not likely again that the Court would uphold the forfeiture, or that it would do so, at any rate, in the absence of strong evidence of seditious intent. Once, therefore, seditious intent is clearly inferred from the language used, other evidence on the question of actual intention becomes in practice of little moment. As suggested by the passage cited from the judgment of Seshagiri Ayyar, J., the distinction between intention inferred from the document and as otherwise existing is there. However this may be, and dealing with the particular facts of this case, nothing of the political history and argument and other matter which have been offered to us and proffered as evidence in this case would, if accepted as evidence, have shown that if the existence of the particular intention was necessary that intention was not present. If intention is necessary, then I think it is shown to exist.

To sum up:—In my opinion whatever else there is in the articles we are also dealing with a case outside Explanation 2, which it has been held imports intention. For there is here in both cases an attack on the Government itself, and not merely a comment on the measures or actions of Government, and in the first article there is also an attack on a class which is not covered by Explanation II. An enquiry into intention is, therefore, not material and it cannot be said that the words used are not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), clause (c). If, however, intention were material, then some of the evidence tendered is inadmissible and even if all that was offered to us and proffered in evidence had been admitted, it would not have rebutted the intention to be gathered from the articles themselves. The writer or writers must be deemed to have intended that which is the natural result of the words used, namely, the hatred, contempt and disaffection alleged.

The application, therefore, must be dismissed. As I see no reason in this case for departing from the usual rule that an unsuccessful party shall pay the costs, the order will be that the applicant do pay the Government's costs of these proceedings as of a hearing on scale No. 2.

MOOKERJEE, J.—On the 10th April 1919 the "Amrita Bazar Patrika," published an article headed "To whom does India belong." Two days later, the paper published another article headed "Arrest of Mr. Gandhi—More outrages." On the 15th April, the Governor of Bengal in Council took action under section 4, sub-section (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910, and the Keeper of the Printing Press where the paper was printed was thereupon served with a notice in the following terms:—

"Whereas it appears to the Governor in Council that the printing press known as the Amrita Bazar Patrika Press, Limited, located at Nos. 19 and 20, Baghbazar Street, Calcutta, in respect of which security to the amount of Rs. 5,000 has been deposited in accordance with the provisions of section 3 (2) of the Indian Press Act, 1910, has been used for printing and publishing the issues of the newspaper called the 'Amrita Bazar Patrika' bearing date April 10th, 1919, and April 12th, 1919, and whereas the said issue of the said newspaper, dated April 10th, 1919, contains an article entitled 'To whom does India belong,' the whole tenor of which article and in particular the passage from the words 'England having acquired India' to the words 'they increased their own pay' are in the opinion of the Governor in Council likely and have a tendency directly or indirectly by inference, suggestion, implication or otherwise to bring into hatred and contempt the Government established by law in British India and the officers of the said Government recruited in England and to excite disaffection towards the said Government and whereas the said issue of the said newspaper, dated April 12th, 1919, contains an article entitled 'Arrest of Mr. Gandhi—More outrages,' the whole tenor of which article and in particular the passage 'The masses have at last been roused to realise that the reign of law is gone and people can be shot down at the sweet will of the executive' are in the opinion of the Governor in Council likely and have a tendency directly or indirectly by inference, suggestion, implication or otherwise to bring into hatred the Government established in British India and excite disaffection towards the said Government.

"Now, therefore, take notice that the Governor in Council in pursuance of section 4 (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910, declare the security of Rs. 5,000 deposited in respect of the Amrita Bazar Patrika Press, Limited, Calcutta, and all copies of the issues of the newspaper called the 'Amrita Bazar Patrika' having date of April 10th and 12th, 1919, wherever found to be forfeited to His Majesty."

The security thus forfeited had been deposited pursuant to a notice issued on the 29th May 1913 under section 3, sub-section (2), in respect of an article which appeared in the paper on the 12th April 1913. On the 13th June 1919 the Keeper of the Press applied to this Court to set aside the order of forfeiture made on the 15th April. The application was heard by a Special Bench constituted under section 18 and we have now to determine the matter in controversy. Under section 19, sub-section (1), the High Court is competent to set aside the order of forfeiture on one ground and one ground alone, namely, that the words contained in the newspaper in respect of which the order in question was made were not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1). In view of the elaborate arguments addressed to the Court, it is necessary to examine the scope of the relevant sections of the Indian Press Act.

The preamble states that the provisions were enacted, because it was necessary to provide for the better control of the press, and section 1, sub-section (2), makes it clear that in the opinion of the Legislature such necessity extended to the whole of British India. Section 2 contains the interpretation clause and defines a newspaper as a periodical work containing public news or comments on public news. Section 3 provides for the deposit of security by Keepers of Printing Presses. The first sub-section refers to deposits to be made at the time of the declaration under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867. The second sub-section refers to presses in respect of which a declaration had been made prior to the commencement of the Act; in this class of cases, a deposit may be demanded only if it appears to the Local Government that the press is used for any of the purposes described in section 4, sub-section (1). It was under this provision that security to the maximum amount (Rs. 5,000) was exacted from the Amrita Bazar Patrika Press in 1913. We now come to section 4, which invests the Local Government with authority to declare the security as also copies of the offending newspaper forfeited in certain cases. The section is in these terms:—

"(1) Whenever it appears to the Local Government that any printing press in respect of which any security has been deposited as required by section 3 is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document containing any words, signs or visible representations which are likely or may have a tendency, directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion allusion, metaphor, implication or otherwise—

(a) to incite to murder or to any offence under the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, or to any act of violence, or

(b) to seduce any officer, soldier or sailor in the Army or Navy of His Majesty from his allegiance or his duty, or

(c) to bring into hatred or contempt His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India or the administration of justice in British India or any Native Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty, or any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the said Government or any such Prince or Chief, or

(d) to put any person in fear or to cause annoyance to him and thereby induce him to deliver to any person any property or valuable security, or to do any act which he is not legally bound to do, or to omit to do any act which he is legally entitled to do, or

(e) to encourage or incite any person to interfere with the administration of the law or with the maintenance of law and order, or

(f) to convey any threat of injury to a public servant, or to any person in whom that public servant is believed to be interested, with a view to inducing that public servant to do any act or to forbear or delay to do any act connected with the exercise of his public functions.

The Local Government may, by notice in writing to the keeper of such printing press, stating or describing the words, signs or visible representations which in its opinion are of the nature described above, declare the security deposited in respect of such press and all copies of such newspaper, book or other document wherever found to be forfeited to His Majesty.

Explanation I—In clause (c) the expression 'disaffection' includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity.

Explanation II—Comments expressing disapproval of the measures of the Government or of any such Native Prince or Chief as aforesaid with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or of the administrative or other action of the Government or of any such Native Prince or Chief or of the administration of justice in British India without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection do not come within the scope of clause (c).

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

(2) After the expiry of ten days from the date of the issue of a notice under sub section (1), the declaration made in respect of such press under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, shall be deemed to be annulled."

It is plain that the power to declare the security forfeited can be exercised only with regard to a press in respect of which security has been deposited under either of the two subsections of section 3. In respect of such presses, the provisions of the section may be utilized, when it appears to the Local Government that the press is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document which contains any words, signs or visible representations which are likely to produce the effects mentioned in clauses (a) to (f) or which may have a tendency, directly or indirectly whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication or otherwise (that is, in any other way or by any other process) to produce any of the effects mentioned in the six clauses. Notwithstanding the able argument of Mr. Das, I am not convinced that a question of intention at all arises with regard to that portion of sub-section (1) of section 4 which precedes the six clauses. A faint attempt was, indeed, made to deduce intention as a material element from the use of the word "purpose," but there was obviously no force in that contention. The press is used for the purpose of printing and publication; that clearly does not indicate that intention is a material factor in the determination of the question of the legal effect of the words, signs or visible representations contained in the newspaper, book or other document. Reliance was next placed upon the expression "tendency," but clearly intention and tendency are entirely different things. Intention has reference to the state of the mind of the actor; tendency, on the other hand, has reference to the possible result of the act. The "tendency" of an act may, in fact, be exactly the reverse of the result which the actor intended should follow from the measure taken by him. Intention is one of the decisive elements in determining the moral character of an act and is an essential element in many a criminal offence. The tendency of an act implies that the act may tend to cause a particular result, but may or may not actually lead to that effect. I can discover no solid ground for the contention that the use of the word "tendency" shows that intention is an essential element in the determination of the true character of the words, signs or representations. We have next to consider the six clauses but before we proceed to them, we may note that in the introductory words of this clause, the Legislature has used every conceivable expression which could widen its scope. Thus the Legislature was not content with the word "likely," but used as an alternative the expression "may have a tendency, directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion, allusion metaphor, implication or otherwise." Of the six clauses, we are concerned primarily with clause (c) in the case before us. This clause contemplates five classes of possible effect:—

(i) To bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty.

(ii) To bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India.

(iii) To bring into hatred or contempt the administration of justice in British India.

(iv) To bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection towards any Native Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty.

(v) To bring into hatred or contempt any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India.

If the words, signs or visible representations contained in a newspaper, book or other document are likely to produce any of these effects or may have a tendency to produce any of these effects, the question of intention is immaterial. We are concerned, not with the intention of the author, but with the effect which they tend to produce or are likely to produce. In my opinion, if the section had stopped with the first paragraph of what is now sub-section (1), the question of interpretation would thus have been fairly simple; the sub-section includes, however, two explanations which must be taken into account; the second of these has formed the subject of much discussion and comment.

The object of the second explanation is to exclude from the scope of clause (c) comments of certain classes which may be enumerated in three groups as follows:—

(i) Comments expressing disapproval of the measures of the Government or of any Native Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty:

Provided that such comments are made with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means:

Provided also that such comments are made without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection;

(ii) Comments expressing disapproval of the administrative or other action of the Government or of any Native Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty:

Provided that such comments are made without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection;

(iii) Comments expressing disapproval of the administration of justice in British India:

Provided that such comments are made without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection.

In each of these cases, the question of intention is material; in the first case, we have to ascertain the purpose with which the comments have been made, and in all the three cases, we have to determine whether an attempt has been made to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection. In the language of Stephen (Digest of Criminal Law, article 50), an attempt to commit a crime is an act done with an intent to commit that crime and forming part of a series of acts which would constitute its actual commission if it were not interrupted. To put the matter differently, attempt is an act done in part execution of a criminal design, amounting to more than mere preparation, but falling short of actual consummation, and, possessing, except for failure to consummate, all the elements of the substantive crime; in other words, an attempt consists in the intent to commit a crime, combined with the doing of some act adapted to but falling short of its actual commission; it may consequently be defined as that which if not prevented would have resulted in the full consummation of the act attempted; Reg. v. Collins (14). The effect of the second explanation thus is to exclude from the operation of clause (c) three classes of comments, subject to the qualifications formulated above. Consequently, where a case is alleged to fall within the scope of the second explanation, it is incumbent on the Court to examine the question of intention. But even though the question of intention is found in favour of the person whose security has been forfeited, he cannot obtain the benefit of the explanation, if the comments do in fact excite or constitute an attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection. The stringent provisions of the substantive portion of the sub-section are consequently relaxed only to a very limited extent; comments of the character mentioned in the second explanation may be permissible, even though they are likely or may have a tendency to produce the corresponding result mentioned in clause (c), but they must not excite or constitute an attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection. The difference between the clause and its explanation thus consists, in the main, of the recognition of the distinction between likelihood and tendency on the one hand and realisation or attempt on the other hand; this, though appreciable in theory, is likely to be valueless in practice to the person concerned. The exception to the all comprehensive general rule, contained in the so called explanation, still further loses its effect, when it is borne in mind that comments may in one portion be protected by the second explanation, but may, in another portion, fall within the scope of clause (c). In such an event the passage as a whole must plainly be deemed obnoxious.

Section 17 authorises the person against whom an order of forfeiture has been made under section 4 to apply to the High Court within two months from the date thereof to set it aside on the ground that the newspaper, book, or other document in respect of which it was made did not contain any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1). Section 18 provides for the hearing of the application by a Special Bench of the Court. Section 19, sub-section (1), provides that the Special Bench shall set aside the order of forfeiture if it appears to the Bench that the words, signs or visible representations contained in the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the order in question was made were not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1). Two propositions indisputably result from these provisions, namely, first, that the validity of the order of forfeiture can be questioned only on the ground, namely, that the words, signs or visible representations in question are not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), and, secondly, that although the order may have been made by the Local Government on the ground that the words, signs or visible representations were of the nature described in one or other of the six clauses of section 4, sub-section (1), the High Court can set aside the order of forfeiture only if satisfied that they do not fall within any of those clauses. In this connection, a question of burden of proof was raised in the course of argument, and reference was made to the decisions in Protap Chunder Mukerji v. Empress (10), Rohimuddi v. Queen-Empress (11), Milan Khan v. Sagai Bepari (12) to show the true functions of a Court of Criminal Appeal. These cases affirm the doctrine that a Court of Criminal Appeal should approach the case before it with a view to determine whether the conviction can be sustained on the materials on the record. That principle clearly has no application to a hearing under section 18 of the Indian Press Act. An order is made by the Local Government in exercise of the powers conferred by the Statute. The person affected thereupon applies to the High Court to set aside the order on the allegation that the words, signs or visible representations are not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1). It is manifest that the Court does not approach the case with the presumption that the order is erroneous; the burden lies upon the petitioner to establish the validity of his contention. If he fails to satisfy the Court that the words, signs or visible representations are not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the application must be dismissed. There is no force in the contention that this interpretation compels the petitioner to prove a negative; the argument is based on a superficial view of what must take place at the trial. The Court is invited by the petitioner to examine the true nature of the words, signs or visible representations: he expounds his version before the Court; if he is able to persuade the Court to accept his exposition as the correct interpretation, the construction adopted by the Local Government stands displaced, with the result that the order of forfeiture is cancelled. The burden of proof thus clearly lies upon the petitioner.

We have next to consider section 20, which is in these terms: "On the hearing of any such application with reference to any newspaper, any copy of such newspaper published after the commencement of this Act may be given in evidence in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the words, signs or visible representations contained in such newspaper which are alleged to be of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1)." There has been considerable discussion at the Bar as to the object and meaning of this section. In my opinion the object of the section was to widen, for a specified purpose, the rule of evidence embodied in section 14 of the Indian Evidence Act. Illustration (e) to that section shows that when A is accused of defaming B by publishing an imputation intended to harm the reputation of B, the fact of previous publications by A respecting B showing ill-will on the part of A towards B is relevant as proving A's intention to harm B's reputation by the particular publication in question. Section 20 of the Indian Press Act lays down a more comprehensive rule in the case of newspapers, inasmuch as it allows any copy of the newspaper, published after the commencement of the Act, to be given in evidence in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the words, signs or visible representations. Section 14 of the Indian Evidence Act, on the other hand, would not make the evidence relevant, unless the existence of a state of mind or state of body or bodily feeling was in controversy. It must be observed, however, that the wider rule embodied in section 20 of the Indian Press Act does not apply to publications other than newspapers; in other words, if a question arises as to the nature or tendency of the words contained in a book, previous books by the author cannot be given in evidence under section 20. But it has been argued, that section 20 has, at the same time, a restrictive effect in two directions, namely, first that evidence of the type contemplated by section 20 can be adduced only on behalf of the Crown, and, secondly, no evidence other than what is admissible under section 20 can be adduced at the trial either by the petitioner or by the Crown. I am convinced that these propositions are not well founded. The first contention is based on a very narrow interpretation of the expression "in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency." In my opinion, the matter before the Court is the determination of the question of the nature or tendency of the words, signs or visible representations. The parties come forward with counter allegations, and each side relies upon copies of previous issues of the newspaper in support of the construction favoured by it. If the copies produced are relevant, plainly the language of the section is not unduly strained when we hold that the materials produced, whether by the one side or by the other, constitute evidence "in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency." Besides, this is a manifestly just interpretation. The contrary view, which seeks to confine the privilege of production of evidence under the section to the Crown alone, would lead to a position so obviously unjust that I cannot persuade myself to believe that such a departure could really have ever been intended by the Legislature to be achieved indirectly by the disguise, as it were, of section 20. I hold accordingly that section 20 may be utilised by the person affected by the order of forfeiture precisely in the same manner as by the Crown: Amar Singh v. Emperor (15), Ghulam Qadir Khan v. Emperor (16). The second contention is equally groundless. If the Legislature had intended that no evidence of any description whatever, other than what is contemplated by section 20, should be admissible at the trial, an express provision to that effect might no doubt have been easily framed. Besides, cases can be imagined without difficulty, where evidence other than what is admissible under section 20 might be indispensable to enable the Court to discharge the duty imposed upon it by section 19. To take one instance: if the order of forfeiture relates to signs or visible representations, evidence may be essential to enable the Court to determine their meaning before their tendency could be adjudged. Again, where the order of forfeiture relates to words, they may, it is not inconceivable, belong to a language not known to the members of the Special Bench; or their tendency to produce a specified effect may be by suggestion, allusion or implication which may stand in need of exposition, by evidence. It is not necessary for our present purpose to attempt an exhaustive enumeration of the classes of evidence which might be admissible; but what appears to me to be clear is that section 20 was not enacted with a view to exclude all evidence other than what is rendered admissible thereby.

Section 21 requires the High Court to frame rules to regulate the procedure in the case of applications under section 17, the amount of the costs thereof and the execution of orders passed thereon; until such rules are framed, the practice of the Court in proceedings other than suits and appeals is to apply so far as may be practicable. The requisite rules have been framed by this Court and are set out in the volume of Rules and Orders edited by Mr. Hechle.

Section 22 provides that every declaration of forfeiture, purporting to be made under the Act, shall, as against all persons, be conclusive evidence that the forfeiture therein referred to has taken place, and no proceeding purporting to be taken under the Act shall be called in question by any Court except the High Court on such application as aforesaid, that is, the application mentioned in section 17. This section makes the declaration of forfeiture conclusive evidence of the factum of forfeiture; section 1, apart from the second Explan-further, the legality of the forfeiture can be questioned, only by the method mentioned in section 17 and to the extent provided thereby. To take one illustration: when an order of forfeiture has been made in respect of a book, the order, if not set aside in a proceeding under section 17, is conclusive evidence of the fact in a civil suit between the publisher and the author. Section 26 provides that nothing contained in the Act shall be deemed to prevent any person from being prosecuted under any other law for any act or omission which constitutes an offence against the Act. Consequently, the fact that an order of forfeiture has been made under the Indian Press Act, does not stand in the way of a possible prosecution for sedition under the Indian Penal Code, in respect of the selfsame writing.

I have so far analysed the relevant provisions of the Indian Press Act without the aid of judicial decisions. The object of the legislation was to secure control over presses, publishers and means of publication, as also the suppression of seditious or objectionable newspapers, books or other documents wherever found. It might legitimately have been expected that the provisions in a Statute of this character, so comprehensive in its application and so far-reaching in its consequences, would be carefully couched in language which could leave no possible room for doubt as to their meaning and legal effect. The fact, however, is otherwise, and reference has consequently been made to judicial pronouncements on the subject, which themselves are not always easy to reconcile: Muhammad Ali, In re (1), Furusottam Narayan Nande v. Chief Secretary to Government of Bihar and Orissa (13), Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2) and Mrs. Annie Besant v. Advocate-General of the Government of Madras (3). The views expressed in Mahomed Ali, In re (1) were, on many vital points, not accepted by the Madras High Court in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Government of Madras (2), and as the latter decision has now been approved by the Judicial Committee, the decision in Mahomed Ali, In re (1) can no longer be treated as binding in so far as it is inconsistent with the decision of the Judicial Committee. I do not wish to examine minutely the judgment of the Judicial Committee as if it were a Statute, but it is worthy of note that there are passages in it, which are, in appearance at least, of contradictory import. One of the controverted questions is, whether the second explanation covers the whole of clause (c) and thereby makes intention an essential factor in all cases comprised in the clause. There are four passages in the judgment of the Judicial Committee which bear directly on this point:—

(i) "It is perhaps not easy to see how Explanation II, with its qualifications adds to or detracts from the direct language of clause (c). A similar observation might be made upon section 124A of the Penal Code. The utmost that can be said is that the addition of the explanation with its apparent repetition of the positive enactment, in the guise of a qualification of the explanation, shows an almost meticulous care by the Legislature to balance the two considerations." (Consideration of freedom of argument and consideration of the preservation of law and order or of harmony.)

(ii) "In substance the question under clause (c) of section 4, sub-section (1), comes to this: Are the passages such as in fact to excite or do they disclose an attempt (which implies intention) to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the Government or of any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in India."

(iii) "It must be remembered that those words in clause (c) which refer to the hatred or contempt of a class or section are not limited by Explanation II, and that there has been, in this respect, some departure from the policy of the Penal Code, which superadded a qualifying explanation which has not found place in the Press Act."

(iv) "All the (Madras) Judges thought that several passages were calculated to bring the Government in hatred and contempt, and this after giving due weight to Explanation II."

Nothing would be gained by an endeavour to harmonise these passages, but taken together and read with the judgments of the Madras High Court, in which, according to their Lordships, they do not find that the section has been misconstrued, the Judicial Committee may be taken to have affirmed the view that no question of intention arises under section 4, sub.

tion, which does not cover all the cases comprehended in clause (c). In this view, I find myself unable to accept the contention, pressed by Mr. Das with much learning and ingenuity, that we should interpret section 4 as if it were a re-enactment of the Indian and English Law of Sedition. I do not overlook that, towards the conclusion of their judgment, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee describe the proceedings as a "criminal case," nor am I unmindful that in an earlier passage, they refer to the cases of Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (8), Queen-Empress v. Ramchandra (17) and Queen-Empress v. Amba Prasad (13), wherein section 124A of the Indian Penal Code was construed, and proceed to observe that these judgments are of considerable assistance towards the construction of section 4; but they also point out, in that very passage, that the language of section 124A is not precisely the same as the language in the Press Act, and in another passage they add that there has been in the Press Act some departure from the policy of the Penal Code. It may be pointed out further that, in the Indian Penal Code the provision in respect of sedition is contained in section 124A, which finds a place in the sixth Chapter of the Code, devoted to offences against the State, whereas section 153A, which relates to cases of promoting enmity between classes, finds a place in the eighth Chapter devoted to offences against private tranquillity. In the Press Act, on the other hand, what corresponds to but is not identical with the Law of Sedition is contained in section 4, sub section (1), but what might have corresponded to section 153A does not at all find a place in clause (c); as a matter of fact the provision was in the Bill as first published, but was omitted from the final version. We cannot also overlook, what indeed is obvious on a comparison of the terms of section 124A of the Penal Code and section 4 of the Press Act, that the two provisions cannot be completely assimilated, far less can they be treated as identical. The scope and purposes of the two legislations are fundamentally different, and, however, helpful the decisions on section 124A of the Penal Code may be, we cannot import into section (17) 22 B. 152.

2 of the Press Act a meaning not justified by its language. No useful purpose would thus be served by an examination of the principles enunciated in the cases of Reg. v. Duffy (18), Reg. v. Sullivan (4), O'Brien Ex parte (19), Reg. v. Burnas (5), Reg. v. Freeman Journal (20), Reg. v. Aldred (6), which were relied upon by Mr. Das with a view to enumerate the elements of a seditious intention under the Law of England (Stephen's Digest of Criminal Law, 6th edition, article 98). It would indeed be against all recognised canons of interpretation to import into the Press Act the provisions of the Law of Sedition as enacted in the Indian Penal Code or as administered in England. If the Legislature had intended to make section 4 an exact reproduction of the Law of Sedition, the section might have been materially shortened; the purpose would have been served if a simple provision had been framed to the effect that an order of forfeiture might be made wherever a newspaper, book, or other document was found to contain matter such as would justify a conviction under section 124A or section 153A. I cannot consequently accede to the contention that the test of the validity of an order of forfeiture under section 4 is, whether the offending article justifies a conviction under section 124A.

A preliminary point must next be noticed before the subject-matter of the offending articles is scrutinised. It has been argued that the terms of the notice of forfeiture are defective, inasmuch as section 4, sub-section (1), clause (c), refers to "hatred or contempt of any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India," whereas the notice mentions "the officers of the Government recruited in England." It cannot be disputed that this variance between the language of the Statute and the terms of the order should have been avoided, and there is no reason why the notice should not have adhered to the exact language of the section. This variance, however, even if it were treated as material, cannot be made a ground for cancellation of the order of forfeiture. There is one ground and one ground alone on which the validity of the order can be attacked under section 17 which can be set aside only under section 19; a defect in the form of the notice under section 4, sub-section (1), is not included in such ground. The articles must consequently be now examined with a view to determine, whether the words are not of the nature described in section 4 sub-section (1).

It is necessary to keep before us the precise issue which requires investigation, because the question of the admissibility of the evidence tendered under section 2) or under the general law must be decided from the point of view of its relevancy. The questions, then, are as follows:—

(i) Are the words contained in the newspaper likely to produce or have they a tendency to produce any of the five categories of consequences mentioned in clause (c) as analysed above?

(ii) If the answer is in the affirmative, do the articles fall within one or more of the three classes of comments enumerated in the second explanation as analysed above?

As regards the first question, the opinion I have formed is that both the articles, read without elucidation, have a tendency to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. Besides this, the first article has also a tendency to bring into hatred or contempt a class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, namely, the officers of that Government recruited in England. The language of the articles is plain and unambiguous and does not stand in need of, possibly does not admit of, a commentary and exposition. There is in both the articles an open and incisive attack, of the most direct and straightforward character imaginable, on the Government established by law in British India; in addition to this, the Anglo Indian officers are described in the first article as the lease-holders of India who serve themselves first, then their mother country, and next the three hundred and fifteen millions in India, who are governed by them at their sweet will on principles which are absolutely despotic and some of them un-British and barbarous. I shall not attempt a summary or an analysis, because in the process of condensation many a choice phrase and expression would be left out; to appreciate fully the articles,* they must be read in their entirety. In my judgment, when they are so read, there can be no doubt as to their tendency. But Mr. Das has made an ingenious attempt to adduce evidence to elucidate their probable effect and to prove that their real tendency is the reverse of their apparent tendency. He foreshadowed the classes of evidence he would tender for this purpose:—

(1). Documentary evidence contained in charters, proclamations, official despatches, pronouncements by Ministers of the Crown, from 1833 to 1919 on the subject of the methods of administration of India;

(2). Documentary evidence to prove that various reforms in the mode of administration proposed or inaugurated from time to time by the Government have not been realised or have been delayed or restricted by reason of the activity of Government officials in India, such as the Local Self-Government scheme of the Marquis of Ripon, the Morley Minto reforms, and the Montague-Chelmsford plan for responsible Government;

(3). Reports of Royal Commissions inclusive of dissentient minutes, such as the Industrial Commission and the Public Service Commission, in order to show how the development of Indian industries has been retarded, if not sacrificed, and how the pledges of successive Sovereigns for the good government of India have remained unfulfilled;

(4). Documentary evidence to show that the British Parliament has exercised little effective control over the affairs of the Indian Government, with the result that officials in this country have been responsible neither to the Parliament nor to the people;

(5). Oral and documentary evidence of events in the Panjab mentioned in the second article and the public feeling created thereby;

(6). Oral evidence to prove the actual effect produced on the minds of those who have read the offending articles;

(7). Evidence as to the general policy of the paper.

The ostensible object with which this evidence was tendered was to establish the tendency of the articles in question, but the real purpose was two-fold, namely, first, to prove the absence of seditious intent, and, secondly, to establish the truth of the allegations made in the articles. Now, as I have already explained, the absence of seditious intent is not a material factor in the determination of the very specific issue we are called upon to try; an article may well be beyond the bounds of the Indian Penal Code, but may yet be drawn into the net of the Indian Press Act. We are thus concerned here with the tendency of these articles. That tendency is manifest to every reader of ordinary intelligence. The evidence of witnesses on either side stating the impression produced on their minds by a perusal of the articles would, even if it were admissible, be of little assistance; the Court has to determine for itself, in a case like the present where there is no doubt or ambiguity as to the meaning of the words, what effect they are, by their nature, likely to produce on the normal average reader understanding them in their plain natural meaning. Nor would it be useful, even if it were permissible, to investigate what class of people subscribe to the newspaper, for the actual readers may well be assumed to be far more varied and numerous than the subscribers themselves. The evidence to prove the truth of the allegations made in the articles is equally irrelevant. Justification cannot be pleaded to take the case out of the operation of section 4, sub-section (1); and in one of the numerous cases cited by Mr. Das himself—Reg. v. M'Hugh (7), an eminent Irish Judge, Lord O'Brien, L. C. J., pointed out that there were cases where the maxim prevailed "the greater the truth, the greater the libel." Consequently, the historical documents, formidably arrayed, which Mr. Das offered to put in evidence (and which, by the way, are familiar to all students of British Indian history), were inadmissible, for the simple reason that they were irrelevant for the determination of the question of tendency of the two articles. Nor was evidence of intention admissible on this part of the case, for as already explained, the question of intention does not arise in relation to that portion of section 4, sub-section (1), which precedes the Explanation. We are thus left with the evidence tendered by Mr. Das under section 20, namely, copies of the "Amrita Bazar Patrika" published after the commencement of the Indian Press Act. Such evidence could be given only in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the words which are alleged to be of the nature described in section 4. Here, again, the evidence must be tested from the standpoint of relevancy. Some prima facie connection must be made out between the offending articles and the matter contained in the copies of the newspaper tendered in evidence; if no such connection is established, the evidence must be rejected. On this ground, we rejected forthwith extracts which embodied a sermon by the late Bishop of Calcutta, speeches by the Secretary of State on the Reform Bill and the Mesopotamia Commission, Minutes of dissent by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Sir Sankaran Nair, letters of resignation of the additional Members of the Imperial Legislative Council, such as Mr. Mazharul Huq and Mr. Jinnah, speeches by His Excellency the Viceroy, reports of public meetings and speeches delivered there, reports from press correspondents and like matters. They had no relevancy whatever to the definite question under investigation, namely, the true nature and tendency of the two articles. The same remark is applicable to the other numerous articles published in the paper during the last two years on a variety of political topics. They had no bearing on the question of nature or tendency of the articles under consideration; some of them might have been of assistance, if the question of seditious intent had been material, but it must not be assumed that all of them would have tended in favour of the newspaper. The position thus is that although evidence of the kind contemplated by section 20 was admissible in aid of the proof of the nature and tendency of the articles, and other evidence, if available, might conceivably have been used for the same purpose, the evidence actually tendered was wholly irrelevant for the determination of the question of nature and tendency. I hold accordingly that apart from the second explanation, the words contained in both the articles have a tendency to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India and the words used in the first article also tend to bring into hatred or contempt a class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, namely, the officers of the Government recruited in England. This leads us on to the next question.

*See Appendix—Ed.

The second question raises the issue, whether the articles in their entirety fall within the scope of the second explanation and are thus excluded from the operation of clause (c). It must be stated at the outset that in so far as the first article has a tendency to bring into hatred or contempt a class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, it cannot be rendered immune by the operation of the second explanation. A comparison of the five categories included in clause (c) with the three comprised in the explanation makes it abundantly clear that the fifth category in clause (c) has no counterpart in the explanation. With regard to this aspect of the first article, then, no question of intention can possibly arise, and this by itself would be sufficient to justify the refusal of the application with regard to that article. We have next to examine whether, apart from this, the two articles can be deemed to consist exclusively of comments of one or more of the three types mentioned in the explanation. The answer must be in the negative. As regards the first class of comments, namely, those expressive of the disapproval of the measures of the Government, it is plain that the term "measures" was intended to apply to legislative measures; the analysis of the explanation set out above shows that the comments were regarded by the Legislature in three aspects, namely, the legislative, the administrative, and the judicial functions of the State. Mr. Das has contended that the articles contained comments expressing disapproval of the legislative measures as also the administrative acts of the Government. If it be assumed that some of the comments may fairly be regarded in this light, it is obvious upon a perusal of the articles that they contain a great deal which cannot possibly be deemed as comments of this description. On this part of the case, according to the Judicial Committee, the question of intention is material. Consequently evidence would be admissible to prove the intention; but the evidence tendered was irrelevant. No portion of that evidence had any bearing upon the question of intention of the author of the articles. The question of intention comes in, as we have seen, from the use of the expressions "with a view to obtain" and "attempting to excite." These expressions are hardly applicable to "comments," but the explanation is ill-expressed, and in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee as to the materiality of intention in this connection, it would be fruitless to speculate as to the real intention of the framers of the Act. But as the Judicial Committee point out, in judging the question of intent, the publisher must be deemed to intend that which is the natural result of the words used, having regard, among other things, to the character and description of that part of the public who are to be expected to read the articles. From this point of view, there can be little doubt as to the intention. The articles themselves speak of "the seething discontent that prevails from one end of India to the other" and state that "now the whole country is ablaze. It is not the educated Indians alone who are indignant at these gross outrages, but the masses as well." If this be a correct description of the condition of the people—and the writer of the articles is most emphatic in his assertion—the effect of comments of the character contained therein would plainly be to excite hatred, contempt and disaffection. The position then is that even if the two articles had not contained an attack upon Government, and had consisted exclusively of comments expressing disapproval of the measures on the administrative action of the Government, the explanation would have been of no avail, inasmuch as they constitute an attempt to excite, even if they do not actually excite, hatred, contempt and disaffection amongst a people who, on the unimpeachable testimony of the writer, were already in a state of excitement. But as I have stated before, even if some of the passages can be treated as disapproving comments on the legislative measures and administrative actions of the Government, they contain a great deal not comprehended in that description. The result consequently is that the nature and tendency of the articles taken as a whole bring them within the operation of section 4, sub-section (1), clause (c), and they cannot be excluded therefrom by the application of the second explanation.

In this view the conclusion follows that the application under section 17 fails and must be dismissed with costs, as directed in the judgment of Woodroffe, J.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree with the judgment of Mr. Justice Woodroffe.

Application dismissed.

APPENDIX.

The following are the articles in the Amrita Bazar Patrika dealt with in the above judgment of the Special Bench:—

(1) TO WHOM DOES INDIA BELONG?

India belongs to Indians as of right, as England belongs to Englishmen. Englishmen, however, made a compact with the Indians in which the latter cordially agreed. It was that Indians should accept the rule of Englishmen provided they governed them on righteous principles. The arrangement was that Indians would pay Englishmen handsomely for their labour, but then the former should be treated not as a subject race but as fully the latter's peers.

Not only did a number of England's greatest statesmen agree to such an understanding but their illustrious Queen herself, in the name of God, gave a solemn pledge that her officers would treat her Indian and European subjects exactly in the same manner in every respect, whether it be in regard to self-government or public services, freedom of speech or toleration in religious faiths and practices. In a word Queen Victoria conferred all the political rights of a British citizen upon the Indians. What is more, both Houses of Parliament accepted this Royal Proclamation of 1858 without a dissentient voice.

In one sense the document is more than a Parliamentary Act. It contains not merely the declaration of the greatest sovereign of England, but also the unanimous decision of the entire British nation through its August Representative Assembly. But is India governed by England on those high principles which are embodied in the various Parliamentary Statutes and official Despatches as well as in the Proclamation alluded to above? Nay, is India governed by England herself?

There are two countries in Asia which are governed on what may be called European principles, viz., Japan and India. In Japan the rulers are but followers of European methods of administration. In India the Europeans themselves carry on the affairs of the country. India has thus a clear advantage over Japan. For the former is ruled by Europeans direct and the latter by the disciples of the Europeans. The Europeans in India, again, have the honour of their nation and sovereign in their keeping for both Parliament and Queen Victoria promised the Indians, before God and man, the same rule that obtained in Great Britain. It should also be noted that India is richer in resources and far more populous than Japan. Besides, India has a more ancient civilisation and literature than Japan. Japan, in fact, is a mere child in this respect.

All the same Japan is almost as great a power as England herself while India is only a "property." The existence of the latter is ignored by all, and three hundred and fifteen millions of Indians are looked down upon as mere human sheep. Though Japan was one of the poorest countries in the world, and though India, when it came into the hands of England, was one of the richest, India is now not only far poorer than Japan but it has become the permanent abode of famine, plague and malaria.

Is it not a strange phenomenon that the foremost Asiatic country, which is under the direct control of the foremost nation in Europe, is the home of starvation and pestilence, and the smallest country in this continent is a power strong enough to crush one of the strongest military nations in the world? Yet, the problem is easy of solution. Japan is the first consideration to a Japanese administrator; not so, however, is India to an Englishman ruling this country. To him India stands third in his estimation, he himself being the first and his country and sovereign being the second.

It is far from correct that England rules India even in the same sense as it rules Ireland. If that had been the case there would have been very little cause for dissatisfaction and India would have grown fast enough under the enlightened rulers of Great Britain. But the source of the seething discontent that prevails from one end of India to the other lies in the peculiar way she is governed.

England having acquired India forgot all her noble and solemn pledges and farmed it out to one thousand British officers headed by the Secretary of State for India. India really belongs to these English officers, and to England in name. The three hundred and fifteen millions in India are governed by them at their sweet will, and on principles which are absolutely despotic and some of them un-British and barbarous. The result is that Indians and the British Empire in India are decaying and India has become the property of a handful of Englishmen.

In short, these Anglo-Indian officers numbering a little over one thousand are in the position of lease-holders of India. They serve themselves first, then their mother country. As for the Indians, they were of course, according to these selfless statesmen, created by Heaven only to minister unto their comforts and material prosperity. Thus they expelled the Indians from all offices in the higher services and they increased their own pay. They could have never done it if England herself, and not these lease-holders, directly ruled the country.

In days gone by the landholders of Bengal had to lease out their estates to European indigo planters. The latter never cared for the improvement of the property. Their sole object was to make indigo out of the lands in their temporary possession and their only anxiety was whether or not the property would last the term of their lease.

It then comes to this. The forty millions of British people derive very little benefit from the Empire of India. As for the Indians they are dying fast, and the time is not far distant when the higher classes are likely to disappear altogether if the present mode of administration is not radically changed. A few thousand British officers and merchants to whom India has been farmed out are fattening themselves out of the country. How India is faring under the present system was graphically described, twelve years ago, by one of the Anglo-Indian officers, Mr. Donald Smeaton, a former member of the Viceregal Legislative Council who had entered Parliament, in one of his speeches at Edinburgh. We may refer to this speech in a future issue.

(2) ARREST OF MR. GANDHI.MORE OUTRAGES.

In resigning his membership in the Supreme Council Mr. Muzhrul Haque wrote thus to the Viceroy:

"Innocent persons were shot down (in Delhi) because they were holding a peaceful demonstration against an unpopular measure of the Government of India. Your Excellency's Executive Government has thought fit to endorse the version given by the local authorities.....Such action amounts to a negation of all good and orderly government."

And the reply to the above remonstrance is the commission of further horrors at Lahore and Amritsar, where, as in Delhi, the unarmed mob was also fired upon by the armed Police and many innocent men were killed and wounded! And why was this cruel barbarity perpetrated? Did the people take the law in their own hands? Judging from the telegrams of the Associated Press, which is under official control, what the people of Lahore did was to make a demonstration on receiving the news of Mr. Gandhi's arrest. It was a peaceful demonstration in all conscience and all that its promoters did was to raise shouts of "hai hai" and "Mahatma Gandhi ki jai." There was certainly nothing wrong in it. They then wanted to proceed in a certain direction when the Police obstructed them with fire-arms. The crowd was asked to disperse and go back. It is said that they did not obey this order, and the inevitable followed—they were immediately shot at like cats and dogs. It is not even alleged, as was done in the case of the Delhi outrage, that stones and brickbats were thrown at the Police. It was an unprovoked aggression for which, judging from the version at our disposal, there was absolutely no justification. And we believe the Government of India will treat this awful incident with the same apathy as they have done with regard to the outrage in Delhi. Is this a safe course?

"Nothing like the application of the lathi" That is the proverb in this country. The machine gun rule is of course still better. The teeming millions in this country, who have been reduced into a race of sheep, can very easily be cowed down by only a few armoured motor cars with machine guns and made to do anything by the rulers. In this way they can no doubt take possession of the body of the whole nation, but it has also a soul. That ethereal thing is always free, and beyond their power. Their machine guns and aeroplane bombs cannot touch it. On the other hand the more you oppress the more you develop its latent powers. So, though the authorities may get some immediate advantage by firing upon innocent and unarmed mob and killing and wounding some innocent people, they are mistaken in supposing that they are thereby strengthening themselves. Brutal violence never pays in the long run. It makes the whole nation united against a common enemy.

Look to the result of these outrages. Mr. Gandhi was proceeding to Delhi on a peaceful and high mission. His object was not to fight the authorities there but to preach to the people a noble aspect of the Satyagraha movement, namely, to learn self-restraint and not to retaliate even when wantonly oppressed by the Police. The Governments of the Punjab and Delhi should have thus welcomed him as a friend. Instead of that they prevented his entering into the Punjab, knowing full well that according to his Satyagraha vow, he could not obey their order asking him not to proceed to the Punjab. They were also aware that if there was just now an individual who was the beloved of the whole of India it was this Gujrati saint and any outrage committed on him would be deeply resented by tens of millions of men. Though they knew this fact full well yet they took him in custody and dragged him back to Bombay. And the inevitable followed. The arrest of Mr. Gandhi produced an upheaval in cities like Delhi, Lahore, Amritsar and other places.

This thoughtless action of the authorities was thus responsible for the popular demonstrations which took place at Lahore and Amritsar. It was their special duty to see that further provocations were not given to the people. What they did, however, was to let loose armed Police among the demonstrators. A better mode of provoking them to violence could not have been conceived. All the same, beyond roaming in the streets with bare heads and feet, shouting the mournful cry "hai hai" they are reported to have done nothing else. On some pretence or other, however, the Police picked up a quarrel and showed their bravery by shooting down men who were not armed even with walking sticks.

And now the whole country is ablaze. It is not the educated Indians alone who are indignant at these gross outrages but the masses as well. What the "agitators" failed to do, the Rowlatt Act and the pitiless policy of the Punjab and Delhi Governments have accomplished. The masses have at last been roused to realise that the reign of law is gone and people can be shot down at the sweet will of the executive. They have further come to know that the Rowlatt Act is a most dangerous measure which has robbed British subjects in India of many of the elementary rights of human beings. And further, the Hindus and Mussalmans have forgotten their communal differences and become one united body. The bureaucracy will thus find that, instead of strengthening their position, they have weakened it very much by their high-handed proceedings in the Punjab and passing such a relentless law as the Rowlatt Act.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL CASE No. 862 OF 1919.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 145, 439—Proceedings under s. 145—Order dropping proceedings under s. 145 and directing proceedings under s. 107—Revision—High Court, interference by.

Where by an order of a Magistrate proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, are dropped, because proceedings under section 107 would meet the case, and proceedings under the latter section are actually pending, the High Court will not interfere in revision with the order dropping proceedings under section 145. [p. 616, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with him Babu Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee), for the Petitioners.—Proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were initiated upon a Police report of an imminent fear of a breach of the peace regarding a large area of land. The first party consisted of two tenants and eight agents of the Teota Raja and the second party consisted of six persons who were said to be old tenants. The whole of the lands was attached by the Sub-Divisional Officer, who took cognisance of the matter and directed the Police to sell the standing grass. A petition against the order for the sale of grass was presented before the District Magistrate, who thereupon called for the record of the section 145 proceedings. The Police thereafter made other reports to the District Magistrate, suggesting that a breach of the peace would be prevented if certain persons were bound down under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The first party also presented a petition before the Sub-Divisional Officer, praying that the section 145 proceedings might be dropped as a breach of the peace had been prevented by a proceeding under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the persons named by the Police. The proceedings under section 145 were consequently dropped.

I submit that the way in which the District Magistrate intervened is wholly illegal. Refers to Tara Charan Sarkar v. Bengal Coal Co. (1), and Jagmohan Pal v. Ram Kumar Gope (2). Under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code the District Magistrate has no power to interfere. In a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code only the High Court can interfere under section 15 of the Charter (new section 107 of the Government of India Act). In dropping section 145 proceedings the Sub-Divisional Officer acted without jurisdiction. The Magistrate could drop the proceedings only under sub-section (5) of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Refers to Tara Charan Sarkar v. Bengal Coal Co. (1)

A Police report could be acted upon only for the initiation of proceedings under section 145, but the subsequent Police report should not have been acted upon. The Police should not be allowed to become the arbiter of the situation when once the matter was before the Court for judicial determination.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, (with him Babus Madhab Gobinda Roy and Ramani Mohan Chatterjee), for the Opposite Party.—I shall make my submissions on the assumption that your Lordships have got power to interfere in the present case, but I may be permitted to submit that the Sub-Divisional Officer not having acted without jurisdiction in dropping the proceedings, your Lordships cannot interfere under section 15 of the Charter.

The District Magistrate, as a matter of fact, did not interfere with section 145 proceedings. He simply passed an order on the petition which was before him (viz., on the petition against the order for the sale of the standing grass).

Sub-section (5) of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not lay down the only mode in which the proceedings can be dropped. Refers to Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Barada Kanta Chowdhury (3).

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal replied.

JUDGMENT.—Proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were initiated upon a Police report dated the 15th August 1919. The area was not stated in the report, but it appears from a map which is annexed to it that 4,000 bighas were covered within the boundaries given. The first party consists of two tenants and eight agents of the Teota Raja and the second party consists of six persons who are said to be old tenants. Then there is a vague reference to others. As it mentioned an "imminent fear of a breach of the peace", the whole of this land was attached and the Police was directed to sell the standing grass by the Sub-Divisional Officer who took cognisance of the matter. Both parties objected to the sale of the grass. The petition of the 2nd party was rejected by the Sub-Divisional Officer on the 19th August 1919. On the 20th the first party filed a petition before the District Magistrate against that order. That petition, so far as we can make out, was one complaining of the order for the sale of the grass and it is not quite clear from it whether any reference to the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, was made in it. The District Magistrate called for the record and directed that if there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace, the order for cutting the grass might be kept in abeyance till the motion was disposed of.

Thereafter the Police made a further report and asked for proceedings to be taken against 22 persons under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. Those reports were placed before the District Magistrate. The report was to this effect; that a breach of the peace was apprehended because certain outsiders were setting up one set of tenants against another, and the Police submitted that if those persons were bound down there would be no breach of the peace. They made a further report that after a conference held amongst Police officers they were of opinion that there was no reason for binding down all the 22 persons, but if six persons who were the ringleaders were bound down a breach of the peace would be prevented. After that there were proceedings against those six. The proceedings under section 145 thereafter came to be dealt with by the Sub-Divisional Officer; and on the 9th September a petition was put in by the first party tenants, stating that as proceedings were being taken against the ringleaders who were setting up one set of tenants against another and as there was no chance of a breach of the peace between the tenants themselves, the proceedings under section 145 should be dropped. The matter was fully heard by the Sub-Divisional Officer and upon a consideration of the materials then before him he came to the conclusion that the proceedings under section 145 ought to be dropped, inasmuch as proceedings under section 107 would meet the requirements of the case.

RAM PARSAD SAHU v. EMPEROR.

We do not think we can interfere with the order made, in the circumstances. The Sub-Divisional Officer is responsible for the peace of his sub-division and he has dropped those proceedings after having carefully considered the matter; and even if we had jurisdiction to deal with an order of this character, a point which we do not decide at present, we would have been loath to make an order interfering with the order which the Magistrate had made in the exercise of his discretion. We do not think we ought to interfere with the order made. The report upon which the order was originally made was vague and unsatisfactory. The Rule is discharged.

Having regard to what we have said we cannot interfere with the proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The present petitioners are not concerned with these proceedings. The Rule so far as it relates to them is also discharged.

Rule discharged.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Evidence, order of taking of—Procedure—Title, question of, whether can be investigated.

Although there is nothing in section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, to suggest which party should begin the case, it is unusual for the second party to begin his evidence. [p. 616, col. 2.]

In a proceeding under section 145 the Court is in no way concerned with the question of title, it has merely to consider and investigate the question of possession. [p. 617, col. 1.]

Rule calling upon the District Magistrate, Bhagalpur, to show cause why the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, pending in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate, Bhagalpore, should not be transferred to the Court of some other Magistrates or, in the alternative, why the learned Deputy Magistrate's order dated the 23rd of August 1919, directing the second party to begin with his evidence first, be not set aside.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Vakil does not press his application so far as it relates to the transfer of the case. But he does ask me to direct the Magistrate to adopt the procedure prescribed by law and sanctioned by practice which has become a rule of law.

The complaint against the learned Magistrate is that he has directed the second party to begin to adduce evidence in the case. The learned Vakil says that this is against the letter and also the spirit of section 145, as in civil proceedings or criminal proceedings the first party ought always to begin.

So far as the section itself is concerned, I do not find that it supports the learned Vakil. He relies specially upon the words "received the evidence produced by them respectively," and he lays stress on the word "respectively." In my opinion, all that it means is that he will receive the evidence produced by the parties one after the other. I do not think that the order in which the evidence ought to be received by the Court is dealt with in the section at all. So far as civil causes are concerned sometimes, in our experience, the defendant has to begin, specially when the onus is on the defendant. So far as the procedure laid down in summons cases is concerned, no doubt, the plaintiff must begin but in the absence of any express provision in section 145, I do not think that I can entertain the application, specially as the case has not come to an end and it is now pending before the learned Deputy Magistrate. While I do not interfere with the order passed by him on the 23rd August 1919, I do ask him to re-consider the matter. It is certainly unusual for the second party to begin his evidence in a case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

KULLAPPA NAICKER v. PALANIAMMALL.

The learned Counsel for the opposite party tells me that when the facts and circumstances of the case are considered, the order passed by the learned Deputy Magistrate becomes perfectly intelligible, and he states the facts to be as follows: namely, that the first party claims title to the land under a usufructuary mortgage alleged to have been executed in his favour by the owner who, I understand, is now an insolvent. The second party claims title through a purchase from the Official Assignee in whom the property of the insolvent vested. The learned Counsel for the first party states that the second party does not dispute his title but claims a title through the Official Assignee, and he says that the view that has been taken by the learned Deputy Magistrate is, if you prove your title you succeed in these proceedings and, therefore, it is wholly unnecessary for the first party to adduce its evidence in the case. In my view, there is some fallacy in this argument. The Criminal Courts are not in any way concerned with the title of the parties. All that it has got to consider and investigate is the question of possession and nothing else. I do not think that there is or can be any admission on the part of the second party that the first party was in possession on the date when proceedings were drawn up under section 145. They may not have disputed the fact that there is a mortgage document in favour of the first party, but there is no admission by implication that the first party is in those circumstances necessarily in possession of the land. In my view the question of possession is the vital question between the parties in these proceedings and I do not think that that question can be shirked. While, therefore, I do not set aside the order passed by the learned Deputy Magistrate on the 23rd August 1919, I invite him to re-consider the matter again.

RESPONDENT.

*Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 425, 40—Mischief, what constitutes—Cutting bund and causing diminution of water supply—Offence—Bona fide belief

To constitute the offence of mischief under section 425 of the Penal Code it is the destroyed property that must have lost its utility or value. [p. 618, col. 2]

The accused was charged with causing diminution of water supply to the complainant by destroying a bund at a particular place. It was not proved that the bund belonged to the complainant or that its destruction caused any diminution in its utility or value. It was proved, however, that the accused was in the habit of taking the water from this opening to his fields under a permit and that on this occasion, he cut open the bund anticipating the grant of the permit:

Held, that accused could not be convicted of mischief, inasmuch as (1) he acted in the bona fide belief that he would get the permit; [p. 618, col. 1.]

Kondi Chetti, In re, 8 Ind. Cas. 123; 8 M. L. T. 385; 11 Cr. L. J. 563, followed.

(2) by the mere diminution of water supply there was no destruction or diminution in value or utility of the property on which the injurious act was committed. [p. 618, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate District Magistrate, Salem, in Criminal Appeal No. 46 of 1919, praying against the order of the Stationary 2nd Class Magistrate, Attur, in Calendar Case No. 4 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—The conviction is based solely on the fact that accused's act in cutting open the bund caused a diminution of water supply to the complainant. There is no finding on the question of the ownership of the bund. Proof of mere diminution of water supply is not enough. To constitute the offence of mischief it must be shown that the destroyed thing lost its utility or value. This fact has not been established. As a matter of fact the accused has not been charged with the destruction of the bund.

Secondly, it has been proved that accused was in the habit of getting a permit to take the water from this opening. This time he had applied for the permit and cut the bund in anticipation of getting it. His action was thoroughly bona fide and does not amount to mischief.

Mr. S. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Complainant — The accused must have known that his act would cause damage to the complainant. He had no business to cut open the bund without authority. The offence of mischief is made out.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER. — The accused in this case has been convicted of an offence under section 430 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine. P. W. No. 1 complained to the Magistrate that the accused cut open the bank of a channel belonging to her and diverted the water, thereby causing a diminution of water supply to her fields. The Sub-Magistrate and Appellate Magistrate gave no opinion on the question of law whether the bund in question belonged to the complainant. They based the conviction upon the fact that the cutting of the bund resulted in the diminution of water supply to the complainant's fields. The question in these circumstances is whether the conviction is right. It appears from the evidence of P. W. No. 5 that in previous years the accused was in the habit of obtaining a permit to take water from this opening to his fields and that in this year also he applied to the Village Munsif for a permit and that anticipating the grant of the permit, he cut open the bund. The first question on these facts is whether the accused committed an act with the intention of causing damage to the complainant. Apparently the accused had bona fide belief that he would obtain permit and proceeded to water his fields without waiting for its actual receipt. This action will be covered by the principle enunciated by Ayling, J., in Kondi Ohetti, In re (1). We think that the accused was justified in believing that the Village Munsif would grant him the permit, as was done in previous years.

It was also argued by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that the accused not having been charged with having destroyed the bund, the mere cutting open of the bund at the particular place which resulted in the diminution of water supply to the complainant would not amount to mischief under section 430 of the Indian Penal Code. The definition of mischief in section 425 requires that it is the destroyed property that must have lost its utility or value. Here assuming that the bund did not belong to the complainant, by the mere diminution of water supply there has been no destruction or diminution in value or utility of the property on which the injurious act was committed by the accused. It was pointed out in Appellate Side Proceedings 22nd October 1868 (2) that unless the property itself was injured, the mere putting up of a dam at a particular place which resulted in depriving the complainant of the water supply would not amount to mischief under section 430. This decision was followed in Appellate Side Proceedings 12th November 1874 (3). These decisions have stood unchallenged for a long time. Following them we hold that the mere deprivation of water supply to the complainant is not an offence which comes under section 430 of the Indian Penal Code. We, therefore, set aside the conviction and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 342 OF 1919.
October 22, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das.

versus

GYAN CHAND—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 498—Enticing away married woman—Connivance of husband, effect of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 421—Appeal, summary dismissal of—Judgment, contents of—Appellate Court, duty of.

A conviction under section 498, Penal Code, is not bad merely because the husband connived at the taking away or concealing of the wife. [p. 619, col. 2.]

It is the duty of an Appellate Court in dealing with an appeal under section 421, Criminal Procedure Code, to record reasons for dismissing it summarily, and its judgment should show that the evidence and arguments advanced have been considered. [p. 620, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Shahabad, dated the 26th August 1919, summarily rejecting the appeal of the petitioner against the order of the Honorary Magistrate with 2nd class powers of Shahabad, dated the 11th August 1919, convicting the petitioner under section 498, Indian Penal Code.

FACTS.—The complainant, about five days after his wife's elopement, came to his native village Bihia and learnt of the enticement from his brother-in-law, P. W. No. 3. The complainant went to the accused and asked him to let the girl go with him. The accused promised to send her back but did not do so. The complainant then convened a meeting of the castemen, where the accused refused to give back the girl.

On these facts the accused was placed on his trial before A. Gafoor, Esquire, Honorary Magistrate of Shahabad with 2nd class powers, who by his order dated the 11th August 1919 sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 100 or in default two months' rigorous imprisonment under section 498, Indian Penal Code.

There was an appeal to the District Magistrate, A. P. Middleton, Esquire, I. C. S., but he rejected it summarily by his order dated the 26th August 1919, as under:—"I have heard the Mukhtear for the appellant. The judgment is convincing and I can see no reason for believing that the case is false. The appeal is summarily dismissed."

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 498, Indian Penal Code, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100.

The first point that has been argued before me by Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal on behalf of the petitioner is that the facts disclose that the husband connived at the whole incident and that, therefore, the petitioner cannot be convicted under section 498, Indian Penal Code. It is sufficient to say that in deciding this matter I must be guided by the section itself. It is, in my opinion, impossible to escape from the clear provision of the section. It provides that the offence under section 498 is committed when there is a taking or enticing away or concealing or detaining the wife of another man from that man or from any person having the care of her on behalf of that man, and secondly, such taking, enticing, concealing or detaining must be with intent that she may have illicit intercourse with any person.

In this case it has been found that these two ingredients exist. In my view the argument advanced by the learned Vakil is inadmissible, having regard to the clear provision of the section itself. It is, in my opinion, unnecessary to consider what the English Law on the subject is. We are guided, so far as this matter is concerned, by the Indian Penal Code and the Indian Penal Code does not exonerate a man merely because there is connivance by the husband.

It was next argued by Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal that the Appellate Court should have given some reasons for dismissing the appeal summarily. The Appellate Court disposed of the appeal in these words: "I have heard the Mukhtear for the appellant. The judgment is convincing and I can see no reason for believing that the case is false. The appeal is summarily dismissed." Stopping for a moment, I must say that judgments of this nature do not give much assistance to this Court at all. It is necessary for the Appellate Courts to remember that they are the final Courts of facts and that, therefore, their judgments should show that they have considered all the arguments that have been advanced before them and the evidence in the case. I may draw the attention of the learned Magistrate to the weighty words of Sharfudin and Roe, JJ., in the case of Gurubari Behera v. Emperor (1). There the learned Judges say as follows: "At the same time it has been so frequently held that it is desirable that in dealing with an appeal under section 421 the Court should give some reasons for dismissing an appeal summarily, that we feel it necessary to impress upon Sessions Courts the obvious advantages of recording reasons for summary action. The omission to do so gives this Court a large amount of unnecessary trouble and occupies a considerable amount of public time, if the Court finds it necessary to send for a record and go through it to see if there has been any injustice done. ...There is nothing which can be construed into a hardship upon Sessions Courts to require them to record at least so much as will satisfy us, when an application for revision is made, that they have fully considered all the questions in issue and have appreciated the simplicity or gravity of the case."

Having regard to the argument that was advanced before me by Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, I have examined the evidence of the lady with great care and I cannot say that the Court of first instance has taken a wrong view of the facts. In that view it is unnecessary to remand the case to the Appellate Court for writing out a proper judgment.

I dismiss this application.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 441—Criminal trespass—Intent of accused, proof of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 367, 437—Judgment of Criminal Court, contents of—Failure to examine prosecution evidence, effect of—Revision—High Court, interference by.

An unlawful entry upon property does not amount to criminal trespass unless one of the intents mentioned in section 441, Penal Code, is made out by the prosecution or found by the Magistrate. [p. 622, col. 2.]

Where the judgment of a Magistrate makes no attempt to scrutinise the oral evidence of the complainant but summarily accepts that evidence, the judgment cannot be upheld in revision. [p. 621, col. 2.]

Application for revision of the order of the 1st Class Honorary Magistrate, Nagpur, convicting the applicants under sections 447 and 352, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Applicants.

ORDER.—This application for revision arises out of a case in which three persons, Nago Mali, Pirkakhsh Musalman and Madan Gopal Bania, were convicted by Rao Bahadur H.S. Bhawe, an Honorary Magistrate exercising 1st class powers and empowered to sit alone, under sections 352 and 447, Indian Penal Code. Each was sentenced to pay Rs. 30 for the criminal trespass and Rs. 10 for the assault and was further ordered to give security for keeping the peace during a period of two years. The present application was preferred by Nago and Pirkakhsh only. A similar one (No. 54 of 1915) has been put in by Madan Gopal, and both are disposed of by this order.

The complainant is one Baji Telin, whose husband Ramji was an ordinary tenant of field No. 6 in Mauza Hurkeshwar till his death in the year 1909. The village papers for 1909-11 show Ramji's minor sons Gania and Bhaddu as his successors, and in the latter year Ganu Kunbi appears as sub-tenant. Settlement operations began in 1912 and in that year or the following one Gania and Bhaddu through Baji, their guardian, received a parcha recognising them as ordinary tenants. On the 15th April 1912, the applicant Madan Gopal, who is malguzar of Hurkeshwar, gave a lease of the field in dispute and another to the applicant Nago, who on the 26th September 1913 moved the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to act under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, naming Baji and six other persons as likely to disturb the peace. The Police were called on to report and written statements were put in by all concerned, but eventually the proceedings were filed on the 19th May 1914, the Magistrate noting in his order-sheet as under :—

"Nago and Baji are present. I have seen the Police report and the settlement parcha in favour of Gania minor guardian Baji. The applicant says that he would sue the malguzar for the recovery of his money."

On 14th July 1914 Nago sued Baji and her two sons for cancellation of the settlement parcha, alleging himself to be in possession. In that suit (No. 170 in the Court of the Junior Munsif, Nagpur) issues have already been framed and some evidence recorded. Baji's complaint was filed on the 11th August 1914. No suit has been instituted by Nago against Madan Gopal.

All the facts above set out are admitted by all concerned. The trespass and assault complained of by Baji are said to have been committed on Tuesday the 21st July 1914, i. e., 8 days before she was served with summons in Suit No. 170 aforesaid. Her story in brief is that while on her way home to Nagpur from Narsala, the village adjoining Hurkeshwar where too Ramji had a field, she learnt that the jawari she had sown in the Hurkeshwar field was being ploughed up; that she went at once to the spot, where she found the three applicants with four servants and four ploughs at work; and that when she interfered Pirkabhsh held her and Nago slapped her at Madan Gopal's instigation. The accused, when examined, denied that they went to the field on the 21st July. There is nothing on the record to show that any particulars of the offences of which they were accused were stated to them as required by section 242, Criminal Procedure Code, and the record of their examinations indicates that they were not properly questioned regarding what is the backbone of their defence apart from the alibis, namely, an implied, if not an express, surrender of the holding by Baji. Madan Gopal was not questioned at all about the payments of rent alleged by Baji or as to the title under which Gania Kunbi cultivated in 1910-11.

In the judgment no attempt was made to scrutinize the oral evidence of the complainant and her witnesses. The story told by Baji is briefly reproduced and that of her witnesses is dismissed with the following remark:—

"The complainant examined four witnesses, Shankar, Sakharam, Sujat Ali and Kashi-nath for prosecution. Their statements corroborated the statement of complainant in the main points."

The evidence for the defence was then discussed in detail and eventually rejected as untrue, with the result that the alibis set up were held not to be established. The next point for determination was then stated to be:—

"Whether Baji was in constant possession of the field and cultivated it herself; whether she impliedly surrendered the field; and whether the surrender was a bona fide one."

The question of possession was settled in favour of Baji on the strength of the jama bandis for 1908-10 and 1913-14 taken with Nago's withdrawal from the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The fact that Gania is shown as sub-tenant in 1910-11 was not referred to. The implied surrender was then dealt with in a manner which shows conclusively that the nature of such an implication is not understood by the Magistrate; his words are:—

"Accused Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have not filed a single document to show that the complainant made an implied surrender of the field and that the surrender was a bona fide one; excepting a patta (Exhibit D-1) given by accused Madan Gopal to accused Nago. But it (patta) has not been proved at all and as such it does not affect the right of Musammal Baji complainant and her sons, which clearly proves a mala fide transfer of the field in dispute in order to harass the original tenant."

After a further reference to the village papers as negating Madan Gopal's case that he was in possession through Gania in 1910-11 and 1911-12, the Magistrate summed up thus :—

"Considering the prosecution evidence supported by documentary evidence and the manufactured defence evidence, I think all the accused did commit an offence under sections 447 and 352, Indian Penal Code, and I, therefore, convict them."

The direction to furnish security was then justified as follows :—

"From the application, dated 6th January 1915 (i. e., 2 days before the Magistrate delivered judgment), filed by the complainant it appears that the accused are still threatening her and say that they would dispossess her from the field after the decision is given in this case. They appear to be turbulent men and require to be punished severely."

The Magistrate evidently took it for granted that he could convict accused if their alibis and Nago's possession were not made out to his satisfaction. The necessity of finding expressly that all the ingredients required to make up an offence of criminal trespass were proved was overlooked. The Rule issued by this Court on the applications of the convicted persons accordingly set out that none of the intentions mentioned in section 441, Indian Penal Code, has been made out by the prosecution or found by the Magistrate. His explanation addressed, to the District Magistrate, states that the intention of the applicants was to dispossess Baji forcibly and to assault her. That this could not have been their intention, however, seems clear from the fact that she was not in the field when entry was effected. The explanation is further inaccurate in assuming that when closing the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate gave an order to Nago which he disobeyed by entering the field.

With regard to the finding that the applicants used and ordered the use of violence to Baji, the Magistrate in his judgment failed to notice that Shankar and Sakharam do not support this part of her story, though at the trial she deposed that one of them told the accused "not to fight". Shankar, moreover, said he did not see Madan Gopal. That three men found it in them to slap a woman is not easy to believe, and the delay of three weeks in filing the complaint is further indication that at most a quarrel of words took place in the field. A minor matter is that when examined on her complaint and again at the trial Baji did not give identical accounts of what Nago did to her. None of those points have even been noticed by the Magistrate, whose summary acceptance of all the evidence for the complainant I have already commented upon. The convictions under section 352, Indian Penal Code, are, therefore, set aside and the corresponding fines, if paid, will be refunded.

With regard to the convictions under section 447, Indian Penal Code, I am clearly of opinion that in the present state of the record the finding that Baji kept the tenancy alive throughout 1910-1911 and 1911-12 is not sound. She produced no receipts for the rent of those years and her Pleader in this Court admits that the money orders she sent were for the rent of 1912-13. Gania, examined as D. W. No. 3, supported Madan Gopal, and Baji did not mention him as the person who was her bataidar in the two years succeeding her husband's death. There are other indications also, such as the sale of her kotha and bullocks at Harkeshwar and the regular sub-letting of the Narsala field, that Baji had good reason for abandoning the field in dispute and that inquiries made by the Settlement Authorities led to a resuscitation of her son's claim. I would also observe that there is no satisfactory corroboration of her claim to have sown the field in dispute in July 1914: she did not call either the person (Harbagurao) from whom she professes to have borrowed the seed grain or the labourers who sowed. If there was no crop visible on the 21st July, it could not be said in the present state of the evidence that the applicants knew they would do any damage by ploughing. Moreover, it is well settled that even if an entry is unlawful, it does not amount to criminal trespass unless one of the intents mentioned in section 441, Indian Penal Code, is made out, see Gobind Prasad, In the matter of (1), Queen Empress v. Rayapadayachi (2);

SHEIKH CHAMMAN v. EMPEROR.

Emperor v. Jangi Singh (3) and Ramchandra v. Ratho (4).

The omissions I have noticed might be made good in a further inquiry or a retrial. But looking to all the circumstances and particularly to the fact that the question of title is now being tried in a Civil Court, I think that the criminal charge is one which, given a more careful preliminary examination of the complainant, would never have come to trial at all. In this view I set aside the convictions and sentences under section 447, Indian Penal Code, also and acquitting the applicants, direct that the fines (if paid) be refunded.

The orders to furnish security and the bonds executed thereunder necessarily become void. But in connection with those orders I desire to point out in conclusion that to inflict petty fines on well-to-do persons but at the same time to bind them over for so long a period as 2 years has all the appearance of inflicting substantial punishment while deliberately barring an appeal. I would further invite the District Magistrate's attention to paragraph 2 of the Registrar's letter No. 143 of the 15th January 1915, in which I suggested that for the future offences of a quasi-civil nature, such as criminal trespass and breach of trust, should be tried by stipendiary Magistrate only.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 75—Enhanced sentence, when to be passed—Interpretation of Statutes—Marginal note, value of.

Section 75 of the Penal Code enables a Court to pass a sentence commensurate with the nature of the offence on the accused person; it does not empower a Court to pass a sentence disproportionate to the nature of the actual offence. [p. 624, col. 1.]

Recourse should not be had to the provisions of section 75 of the Penal Code if the punishment provided for the offence is sufficient. [p. 624, col. 1.]

The marginal note to a section forms no part of the Statute itself and is not binding as an explanation or construction of the section. [p. 623, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Purneah, dated the 20th August 1919.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted of cheating one Paharia Nepali to the extent of Rs. 2, and has been sentenced to transportation for nine years. It appears that there are previous convictions against the appellant, but only one is referred to by the learned Judge.

I have no doubt at all that the appellant has been rightly convicted under section 420, Indian Penal Code, but I have also no doubt that the sentence passed on him is too severe. In connection with the question of sentence, the learned Sessions Judge says that the appellant "is liable to receive enhanced sentence," inasmuch as there are previous convictions against him.

In my opinion, there is much misapprehension as to the scope and meaning of section 75, Indian Penal Code. The view which seems to have found favour with the Courts is that, as soon as it can be shown that there is a previous conviction within the terms of section 75 against the accused person, the Court is bound to pass an enhanced sentence on him, that is to say, a sentence wholly disproportionate to the actual offence under investigation. In my judgment, there is no justification for this view in the section itself. The words "enhanced sentence" find no place in the section, though they do occur in the marginal note to the section. But the marginal note forms no part of the Statute itself and is not binding as an explanation or construction of the section: Olaydon v. Green (1). I must be guided by the section itself, and, in my judgment, the section does not empower a Court to pass "an enhanced sentence" (to adopt the expression commonly used by the Criminal Courts) merely because there are previous convictions against the accused person, although it enables the Court to sentence a person to transportation for life or to imprisonment up to 10 years. The distinction, in my view, is important. In the one case, the Court would be at liberty to inflict a punishment out of all proportion to the offence committed. In the other case, the Court would be able to pass a sentence commensurate with the gravity of the offence, a power which, but for section 75, Indian Penal Code, the Court would be powerless to exercise. It is the experience of most Criminal Courts that they have at times felt handicapped by the sections of the Code providing for the punishment, with the result that they have been at times unable to pass adequate sentences on accused persons. Section 75 removes that disability, but it imposes as an essential condition for the exercise of the power that there must be previous conviction against the accused person. I will illustrate my meaning at once. Take, for instance, a case of theft. The maximum punishment which a Court is empowered to inflict on a person convicted of theft is three years' rigorous imprisonment. Now I do not think that a Court is at liberty to pass a sentence of seven years' imprisonment on a person convicted of theft, merely because there are previous convictions against him, if the offence itself does not call for a severe punishment. But the offence may be of sufficient gravity calling for a severer punishment than that permitted by section 379. If there are no previous convictions, the Court is helpless in the matter. If there are previous convictions, the Court is able to pass an appropriate sentence on the accused person. In other words, section 75 enables a Court to pass a sentence commensurate with the nature of the offence on the accused person; it does not empower a Court to pass a sentence disproportionate to the nature of the actual offence. This view is considerably strengthened by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sheo Saran Tato v. Empress (2), where the learned Judges said that recourse should not be had to section 75, if the punishment provided for the offence is sufficient.

(1) (1863) 3 C. P. 511; 47 L. J. C. P. 226; 18 L. T. 607; 16 L. W. 1126.

I consider that, in this case, the punishment provided for the offence is sufficient. I maintain the conviction of the appellant under section 420, Indian Penal Code, and reduce the sentence to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 75—Previous conviction in Native State, effect of—Enhanced punishment, whether can be inflicted.

A previous conviction in a Native State is outside the scope of section 75 of the Penal Code. Where, therefore, a person admits such a previous conviction, it ought not to be considered.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Muttra, dated the 30th August 1919.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Bhanwar has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Agra under section 454, Indian Penal Code, and under the provisions of that section, read with section 75, Indian Penal Code, has been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. There can be no doubt whatever on the evidence, which was believed by both the Assessors and the learned Judge, that the accused did commit the offence with which he was charged; but with regard to the application of section 75 I have great doubt. The accused admits two previous convictions, one under section 411, Indian Penal Code, and another under section 407. Both these convictions were made by the Dig Nizamat in the Bharatpur State. I have no information as to the nature or constitution of this Court. The question is whether section 75, as amended by Act III of 1910, contemplates a conviction by a Court of this kind. The point was considered in Bahawal v. Emperor (1) and it was held that a previous conviction held by a Criminal Court in Bikanir could not come within the scope of the section. Under the circumstances I think section 75 is not shown to be applicable in this case. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment will meet the ends of justice. With this modification I dismiss the appeal.

Sentence reduced.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 85
(2)—Sub-lease exceeding nine years, whether can be registered—Consent of landlord, effect of—Registration, validity of—Sub-lease, admissibility of.*

Section 85 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act operates as a statutory bar to the registration of a sub-lease by a raiyat which creates a term exceeding nine years; the consent of the landlord cannot validate the registration and if such a lease is registered, it is inadmissible in evidence. [p. 625, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jessore, dated the 28th of November 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Narail, dated the 25th of September 1916.

Babu Satish Chandra Ghatak, for the Appellants.

Babu Satyendranath Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover possession of certain land on establishment of the plaintiff's title. The plaintiff claimed by virtue of a sub-lease for an indefinite period granted by a person having a right of occupancy in the land. The Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that the lease to the plaintiff, in contravention of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, was void. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Jessore granted the plaintiff a decree. In my opinion, the learned Munsif was right. The questions as to the validity of a lease granted by a raiyat in contravention of the provisions of section 85, clause (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act are discussed at length in the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Beachcroft in the case of Ohandi Oharan Nath v. Samla Bibi (1). That was a Letters Patent appeal from a decision of my own.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that this case can be distinguished, because there was a finding in the first

(1) 44 Ind. Cas. 254; 22 C. W. N. 173; 23 C. L. J. 91.

Court that the plaintiff had proved the consent to the sub-lease of the superior landlord. The lower Appellate Court having decided in favour of the respondents came to no decision on this point. But even assuming that the landlord consented, the plaintiff's position is not improved. Clause (2), section 85, is a statutory bar to the registration of a sub-lease by a raiyat which purports to create a term exceeding nine years. The consent of the landlord cannot empower the registration authorities to register certain leases in contravention of the statutory provisions. If such a lease is registered contrary to the provisions of the Statute, it must be regarded as unregistered and is inadmissible in evidence; consequently the plaintiff is not in a position to prove the lease. In the present case it is found by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff was never in possession, so no question arises as to the validity of the plaintiff's tenancy independent of his lease. I cannot accept the contention on behalf of the respondents that the consent of the landlord makes this case distinguishable from the case cited above. It is also contended on behalf of the appellants that this suit is barred by the special law of limitation. As the plaintiff was never in possession, it seems doubtful whether Article 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act can apply to the present case. It is contended that the expression "dispossession" in the 3rd column of the schedule must be taken to have the same meaning as keeping out of possession. As, however, the appellant succeeds on his first point, it is not necessary to decide this point. The appeal is accordingly decreed with costs in this and the lower Appellate Court. The decree of the Munsif dismissing the suit is restored.

It was also argued that though the document was inadmissible in evidence, it was admissible for collateral purposes. But in this case, it being a suit for ejectment, there is no question on which the lease can be relevant for a collateral purpose.

The plaintiff has no title under the lease and being out of possession he can have no title apart from the lease.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 34, 58—Grove, whether altered to agricultural holding by sowing fodder—Ejectment.

The character of a recorded grove is not altered to that of an agricultural holding by the mere fact of a fodder crop being sown among the trees so as to render the occupier liable to ejectment under section 53 read with section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 30th of October 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—(August 23, 1919).—The suit was to eject the defendant-appellant Niyaz Husain from No. 390.1, 4 bighas, 12 biswas, 10 biswansis. It has been the recorded rent free grove of him and his predecessors ever since the 1281 Settlement. The evidence in the case is that of the patwari and a report of a Naib-Tahsildar who was deputed to make local inspection as to whether it was still grove or not. He was not put into the witness-box, but it is not seriously contested that his report should not be taken as evidence and I am told that the Acting Chief Justice recently held that reports of Government officers could be accepted without their attendance.

His report and the patwari's evidence shew that for the last 17 years bajra has been grown under and between the trees as a fodder crop and for the purpose of protecting the trees. The Naib-Tahsildar found 65 mango trees, 2 to 4 years old, and 33 old trees, namely, 4 mangoes, 3 jamuns, 2 tars, 19 nims, 1 gular, 1 chisham, 1 plum; also 2 new trees. The wajib-ul-arz allows the planting of new trees to replace the old. There is no justification in assuming that the new mango trees were hurriedly put in ad hoc when the suit was impending. The Naib-Tahsildar pertinently points out that there would have been some rotation of crops if cultivation were the primary use of the land and bajra chari would not have been put in year after year for 17 years. The view has always been taken that sowing a fodder crop among trees does not ipso facto change the character of a recorded grove to an agricultural holding, rendering the occupier liable to ejectment under section 58 read with section 34, Tenancy Act, and, in holding that it does, the Commissioner has, I consider, made a mistake of law. Interference with the Assistant Collector's finding that the plot still maintained the character of a grove was not, in my opinion, warranted. The plot in suit, No. 390.1, 4 bighas, 12 biswas, adjoins Nos. 390.2 and 390.3, the total area of the two 4 biswas, 10 biswansis, the area of the whole muafi plot No. 390 being 4 bighas, 17 biswas. Nos. 390.2 and 390.3 form a grave-yard. Considering the large number of trees, new and old, on the portion No. 390.1 in suit, I would hold that it still retains the character of a grove and the Commissioner's inference from the fact of fodder crop being grown among the trees is incorrect.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the Commissioner's appellate order and restore the decision of the Assistant Collector with costs to the appellant throughout.

HARRISON, J. M.—(August 29, 1919).—I concur.

were taken to set aside ex parte decree.*

MANINDRA NATH MITTRA v. HARI MONDAL.

In a suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud, the Court has no jurisdiction to decide on the merits of the former judgment: its function is to decide whether that judgment is vitiated by fraud [p. 60, col. 1.]

Where a defendant allows a suit to be decided against himself in his absence and takes no steps to have the ex parte decree set aside, a suit by him to have that decree set aside on the ground of fraud is not maintainable [p. 629, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Midnapore, dated the 26th of March 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Tamuk, dated the 22nd of September 1916.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

CHATTERJEA, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud. The plaintiff alleged that he held the land in dispute as an occupancy raiyat under the defendant for a long time, but that the latter by inducement, threat and misrepresentation obtained two kabuliyats for a term of 3 years from the plaintiff in the year 1911, and then brought a suit in the year 1914 for ejectment of the plaintiff on the ground that the term of the kabuliyat had expired; that the plaintiff filed his written statement in the said suit, but on the adjourned date of hearing could not appear owing to his illness, and the defendant obtained a decree for ejectment by fraud, in execution of which he dispossessed the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit on the 3rd December 1915 for setting aside the decree and for possession.

The Courts below found that the plaintiff was an occupancy raiyat and that the kabuliyats were obtained from him by the defendant to defeat his rights, that the claim was false to his knowledge and on this ground set aside the decree. The defendant has appealed to this Court.

With respect to the question as to what constitutes fraud for which a decree can be set aside, two propositions appear to be well established. The first is that although it is not permitted to show that the Court (in the former suit) was mistaken, it may be shown that it was misled, in other words, where the Court has been intentionally misled by the fraud of a party and a fraud has been committed upon the Court with the intention to procure its judgment, it will vitiate its judgment. The second is that a decree cannot be set aside merely on the ground that it has been procured by perjured evidence. See Baker v. Wadsworth (1), Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (2) at page 619 (where, however, the observations were obiter), Abdul Haq Ohowiherry v. Abdul Hafez (3), Munshi Moruful Haq v. Surendra Nath Roy (4) and Nanda Kumar v. Ramjiban (5).

The actual decision in the case of Lakshmi Oharan Shaha v. Nur Ali (6) (to which one of the members of the present Bench was a party) is really not in conflict with the above cases. It was no doubt observed in that case that the proposition of law as laid down in Mahomed Golab's case (2) had the effect of restricting within too narrow limits the remedy of a man against whom a fraudulent decree has been obtained. It was pointed out that the opinion expressed by Petharam, C. J., was obiter dictum, and that opinion again was based on an obiter dictum of James and Thesiger, L. JJ., and that Bagallay, L. J., reserved his opinion on the point. Reliance was placed on the cases of Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (7), Priestman v. Thomas (8) and Vadala v. Luwes (9), as showing that the authority on which the opinion of Sir Comer Petharam, C. J., was based had not been recognized in England, and it was laid down: "It is quite clear from the cases quoted above that the jurisdiction of the Court trying a suit of this kind is not limited to an investigation merely as to whether the plaintiff was prevented from placing his case at the prior trial by the fraud of the defendant. The Court can and must rip up the whole matter for determining whether there has been fraud in the procurement of the decree."

The case was dissented from in the case of Munshi Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (4) by Carnduff and Chapman, JJ., who reviewed the cases on the point and followed the cases of Flower v. Lloyd (10), Patch v. Ward (11), Baker v. Wadsworth (1). The learned Judges doubted the finality of the decisions in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (7) and Vadala v. Lawes (9) even in England, and pointed out that the judgment impeached in each of those cases was a foreign judgment, and "foreign judgments unquestionably stand on a different footing of their own."

There is, however, as stated above, no real conflict, so far as the actual decision goes, between the cases of Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (6) and Munshi Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (4), although different views were taken as to the grounds upon which a decree can be set aside in such cases and as to the authorities upon the point. In that case the decree sought to be set aside was an ex parte decree obtained upon a promissory note in the Akyab Court. It was found in the subsequent suit that the plaintiff (defendant in the former suit) never went to Akyab, never received any money from the defendant, and never executed the promissory note, so that the whole proceeding was fraudulent. That case was, therefore, one in which the claim was totally false and false to the knowledge of the defendant, and there was fraud practised upon the Court in the procurement of the decree. In the case of Munshi Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (4), on the other hand, the only fraud alleged was that the previous decree was obtained by perjured evidence, and that was also the case in Abdul Huq Chowdhury v. Abdul Hafez (3) and Nanda Kumar v. Ram Jiban (5). In Kedar Nath Das v. Hemanta Kumari Dasi (12) it was found that the fact of the previous suit was not known to the plaintiff (in the second suit) and that the said suit was in fact a false suit. The ex parte decree was accordingly set aside, and the decision of the Courts below was affirmed by this Court. Fletcher, J., (one of the members of the present Bench concurring) observed that the decisions in Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (6) and Munshi Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (4) can be reconciled in the same way as the English decisions which were cited. It was pointed out that in the first case the plaintiff knew that the case which was put forward before the Court was in fact a false one. It was not a case where an application was made to set aside a judgment on the ground that it was obtained by perjury; but it was a case of a party to the suit practising fraud on the Court by putting forward before the Court a case which was a false one, while the second case only decided that a decree obtained in a suit cannot be set aside in a subsequent suit brought for the purpose on the mere proof that the previous decree was obtained by perjured evidence. The cases of Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (7) and Vadala v. Lawes (9) show that if the case which was placed before the Court was a false one, the Court has jurisdiction in a subsequent suit to set aside the decree which was obtained by fraud practised on the Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that in order to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud, it must be shown that the fraud was practised in relation to proceedings in Court, and the decree must be shown to have been procured by practising fraud upon the Court, that in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (7), Vadala v. Lawes (9), Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (6) and Kedar Nath Dasi v. Hemanta Kumari Dasi (12) the fraud was committed in relation to proceedings in Court, while in Nanda Kumar v. Ramjiban (5) the fraud, if any, was committed out of Court (there was an entry in the Record of Rights followed by a rent decree) and that that is the true ground of distinction in such cases. Now, in order that a decree may be said to have been procured by practising fraud upon the Court, the fraud must be in relation to proceedings in Court. It is unnecessary, however, to decide in the present case what is the precise ground of distinction in the cases cited above or to discuss the authorities on the point, because we think that in any view of the case the present suit fails.

The previous suit was based upon a kabuliyat for a term of 3 years. The plaintiff admittedly executed the kabuliyat, but his case is that plaintiff in order to defeat his rights obtained the kabuliyat from him by inducement, threat and misrepresentation. The plaintiff, however, never took steps to avoid the kabuliyat, and the suit was brought 3 years after the execution of the kabuliyat, on the ground that the term (of 3 years) had expired. The plaintiff (defendant in the previous suit) filed his written statement, and raised the very same defence as that raised in the present case and one of the issues raised was: "Is the kabuliyat executed by the defendant in favour of plaintiff a valid and bona fide document?" On the date finally fixed for the hearing of the case, however, he could not appear and the evidence adduced by the defendant (plaintiff in the previous suit) was as follows:— "Defendant executed kabuliyats Exhibits I and II. He is not giving up possession. His term expired in Chait 1321." That was the whole of the evidence and an ex parte decree was passed in his favour.

Now, there was no contrivance by which the present plaintiff was prevented from placing his case before the Court in the previous suit, and it cannot be said that any fraud was practised on the Court in procuring the decree, or that the claim was false, though there might have been fraud in obtaining the kabuliyat several years before the suit. That the defendant did execute the kabuliyat the term of which had expired and that he was not giving up possession cannot be said to be false. Unless, therefore, we hold that the present defendant was bound to state the circumstances under which the kabuliyats were executed several years before the suit according to the case of the opposite party, viz., that the kabuliyats were obtained by coercion, misrepresentation or inducement which formed the subject matter of an issue in that suit, the decree obtained in the suit cannot be said to have been procured by fraud. To hold otherwise would be to hold that if a party to a suit does not disclose all the circumstances connected with the case of the opposite party and obtains a decree, it is open to the opposite party to bring another suit to prove his case and get the decree in the first suit set aside on the ground of fraud. But in that case there would be no end to litigation. We are of opinion that whatever may be the precise nature of fraud for which a decree may be set aside, the plaintiff in the present suit cannot get the decree in the previous suit set aside.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the suit dismissed, but we direct that each party will bear his own costs in all Courts.

DJYAL, J.—I agree with the judgment of my learned brother.

The fraud alleged is the obtaining of two miadi kabuliyats from the present plaintiff, who was at the time an occupancy raiyat under him, by the defendant who is the landlord and on the expiration of the term mentioned in those kabuliyats suing the plaintiff for ejectment. The present plaintiff contested the suit brought by the present defendant for ejectment on expiry of the terms set out in the two kabuliyats. Issues were framed, but at the time of hearing, the present plaintiff did not appear before the Court. Ex parte evidence was taken and a decree for ejectment was given to the present defendant ex parte. As to that decree, it does not appear that the present plaintiff ever applied to have it set aside or that he ever made an appeal.

The present suit is to set aside that ex parte decree on the ground of fraud. But the first question is, was there any fraud perpetrated by the present defendant in the course of the suit?

To my mind there is no such fraud proved. There was certainly no suppression of service of process. The present plaintiff himself appeared and issues were framed. He then took a large number of adjournments and finally let the suit be decided in his absence. The evidence given by the present defendant was to the effect that the kabuliyats were executed and the fact that there was such a kabuliyat executed is even now not in issue. In fact, in the words of a late Chief Justice in the case of Nanda Kumar v. Ram Jibin (5): "In effect, when analysed, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is no more than a re-trial on the merits of the original suit and a determination that the Judge who decided that suit was mistaken. But the Court in this suit has no jurisdiction to decide on the merits of the former judgment; its function was to decide whether that judgment was vitiated by fraud."

There has been no evidence of any fraud in the proceedings in the ejectment suit, though there may have been fraud in obtaining the kabuliyat originally and I must hold that the present suit cannot lie and the appeal must, therefore, be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12—Decree, preparation of, not necessary—Time spent in obtaining copy, of decree, whether can be excluded.

In a case in which it is not necessary to prepare a decree but one is actually prepared, the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the decree should under section 12 of the Limitation Act be excluded in computing the period of limitation for appeal. [p. 620, col. 2; p. 631, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Darbhanga.

Messrs. Saroshi Charan Mitra and Sudhanshu Kumar Mitra for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—It is conceded that if the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree be excluded, the appeal is amply within time; but the argument against the appellants is that the order in a miscellaneous case itself operates as a decree and that it was not necessary to file a copy of the decree and that, therefore, the appellants are not entitled to deduct the time taken for obtaining a copy of the same. It is undisputed that in this case a formal decree was drawn up, and I am of opinion that the appellants were entitled to obtain a copy of the decree in order that they may have, as the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court said, "full opportunity of considering the terms of the decree or order or judgment." Wajid Ali Shah v. Nawal Kishore (1).

The case cited against the appellants is the case of Khirode Sundari Dabi v. Jnanendra Nath Pal Ohauduri (2). That case merely decided that an order determining any question referred to in section 244, Civil Procedure Code, is a decree under section 2, Civil Procedure Code, and that, therefore when an appeal is preferred against such an order, it is sufficient to attach to the memorandum of appeal a copy of the order itself and that it is not necessary to attach to the memorandum a copy of the decree, even though such a decree may have been drawn up. This proposition may be accepted as correct, but the question which we have to decide is, whether the appellants, if they choose to obtain a copy of the decree, are entitled to the period taken for obtaining such copy. The identical point was decided in the case of Kamala Dasi v. Tarapada Mukerji (3). In an exhaustive judgment, dealing elaborately with the point under consideration, Mookerjee and Teunon, JJ., came to the conclusion that where a separate order is actually drawn up, copies of both the judgment and the order ought to be attached to the memorandum and that the appellant is entitled to a deduction of time taken in obtaining copies thereof. The reason for the rule, of course, is that the appellant is entitled to have full opportunity of considering the terms of the order or decree before he makes up his mind to appeal therefrom. It seems to me that it is impossible to escape from the clear provision of section 12 of the Limitation Act. That section provides "that the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order appealed from...shall be excluded." It will be noticed that the section is without limitation or exception of any kind, and I am wholly unable to see how we can read into the section exceptions which are not to be found there.

We have been referred to the case of Narbadeswar v. Nirmal Kumar (4) decided by this Court on 2nd December 1918. That case is an authority for the proposition that the memorandum of costs forms no part of the decree. I agree with that view. It is no authority for the proposition that if a decree is actually drawn up in a case under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, the appellant is not entitled to a deduction of time for obtaining a copy of such decree.

I hold that, where a decree is actually drawn up, as in this case, the appellants are entitled to a deduction of time for obtaining copy of such decree. Let the case now be disposed of by the Registrar according to law.

FOSTER, J.—I agree. I think that where a formal decree is actually framed by the Court it cannot but be looked upon as the final adjudication, and the case is quite different from one where the Court ends with an order after its judgment. If the Court makes a formal decree, it seems only reasonable that the appellant should regard that as the final adjudication from which the appeal is to be preferred.

Order accordingly.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Faridpore, dated the 20th of July 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Bhanga, dated the 25th of May 1914.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal must fail for the following reasons: The appellants filed a memo. of appeal, dated the 16th November 1916, against the judgment of the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court which was pronounced on the 6th July 1916. The appeal, of which the grounds of appeal were properly certified, came on for hearing before a Bench of this Court and was summarily dismissed under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 11, Code of Civil Procedure, on the 24th January 1917. It is quite clear that the matters raised in the grounds of appeal filed on the 16th November 1916 do not cover the matters that have been attempted to be urged at the hearing of the present appeal. The text of the proceedings was a document that is No. 6 in the printed paper book, which is called the memo. of appeal presented on the 1st March 1917. As a matter of fact it is nothing of the sort. When we look at the document itself, we find that it is a memo. of application for review under Order XLVII, rule 1, Code of Civil Procedure, with regard to an order of dismissal passed on the 24th June 1917 under Order XLI, rule 11. This memo. of review contained certain grounds which are not the grounds of appeal but were given as grounds for review and these grounds for review were sufficient to impress the learned Judges composing the Bench which summarily dismissed the appeal to review their order and admit the appeal. That does not entitle the appellants to urge these grounds of review as grounds of appeal for reversing the decision appealed against. I think this is a procedure that we ought not to assent to. In a case like this we ought not to allow grounds of appeal to be raised which apparently were not suggested until the learned gentleman who now appears for the appellants was called in at a somewhat late stage of the case and suggested further and important points which were matters that ought to have been urged at the preliminary hearing of the appeal. The appellants ought to have got the services of this learned gentleman at the earliest stage of the case. Then the grounds of appeal could have been properly framed before the hearing and disposal of the appeal under Order XLI, rule 11, Code of Civil Procedure. I do not think in this case we ought to allow these grounds to be urged before us. In my opinion the present appeal fails and ought to be dismissed with costs.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

Pre-emption—Vendee co-sharer in shamilat but not in patti, effect of—Shamilat land, nature of.

A vendee, who is not a co-sharer in the subdivision in which the share sought to be pre-empted is situated, does not become a co-sharer in the subdivision because some of the land appertaining to the village has been lumped together as belonging to all the pattis instead of being imperfectly divided. Within the shamilat patti itself each patti, to which the shamilat land appertains, exists as if it were in miniature and no right of pre-emption can be claimed in respect of such shamilat land. In the eyes of the law, the position of the shamilat land appertaining to each patti follows or forms a part of the patti to which it appertains. [p. 633, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 31st August 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 16th March 1918.

Messrs. H. O. Dutt and M. Wasim, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption, and the question for consideration is whether the plaintiffs are co-sharers in the sub division in which the property sold is situated and are entitled to claim pre-emption, as against the defendants-vendees. The Court of first instance found against the plaintiffs and dismissed their claim, but the lower Appellate Court held otherwise.

It appears that Mohammad Abid, Ali Yusuf and Mohammad Yahia were the owners of a 4 annas share in Mahal Mohammad Azam. On the 8th June 1888, they sold some specific plots of land, measuring 42 bighas, 8 biswas, to Madho (Exhibit 4). The sale deed was subsequently confined, by virtue of a litigation to which Madho was a party, to 37 bighas, 15 biswas, 16 biswansis of land and certain specific plots which were the subject of that litigation were excluded (Exhibit A18).

Madho was, however, entered at the time of the settlement as an under-proprietor of the said land and the superior proprietary right was entered in the name of Tikaram, who had purchased the interest of Mohammad Abid, and in those of Ali Yusuf and Mohammad Yahia ulais Mohammad Hashim. Tikaram subsequently acquired the shares of Ali Yusuf and Mohammad Yahia (Exhibit A2). In 1910 the mistake was corrected and a khata of 113 bighas, 15 biswas, 14 biswansis of superior proprietary tenure was formed, out of which 75 bighas, 19 biswas, 18 biswansis were entered as held by Tikaram and 37 bighas, 15 biswas, 16 biswansis were entered as held by Nepal, Hazari and Ram Ratan, the legal representatives of Madho. The khata was called Khata No. 7.

The village was divided at the time into several Pattis. One of the Pattis was called Patti Tikaram. Khata No. 7 appertained to that Patti. The plaintiffs respondents, Nepal and Hazari, are the owners of some of the plots appertaining to that khata. Another Patti was called Patti Mohammad Sadiq. The defendants-vendees are co-sharers in that Patti. There was some shamilat land which appertained to all the Pattis.

The disputed land forms part of Khata No. 7 in Patti Tikaram. It was sold by

ABDUL RAHAMAN v. MOHENDRA CHANDRA GHOSH.

Tikaram on the 2nd October 1917. The contention of the plaintiffs is that they have a preferential right of pre-emption because they were co-sharers with the vendors in the said khata and in the Patti aforesaid. The defendants-vendees urge, on the other hand, that the interests of the vendors were distinct from those of the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs had consequently no preferential right. While it is true that the interests of the vendors and those of the plaintiffs in Khata No. 7 were separate and distinct, the khata itself formed a subordinate and separate entity in Patti Tikaram in which the defendants-vendees had no share. Patti Mohammed Saleh, in which the defendants-vendees were co-sharers, formed a separate sub-division of the same mahal. As co-sharers of the sub-division or persons holding certain specific plots of land in that sub-division, the plaintiffs had a preferential right as against the defendants-vendees who had no interest in that sub-division. The mere fact that the defendants-vendors and the vendees were co-sharers in some shamilat land appertaining to all the pattis does not invest the defendants-vendees with any better right, for as pointed out in Durga Singh v. Gaya Singh (1) and Tirbhawan Singh v. Raghubar Dayal (2) a vendee, who is not a co-sharer in the sub-division in which the share sought to be pre-empted is situated, does not become a co-sharer in the sub-division because some of the land appertaining to the village has been lumped together as belonging to all the Pattis instead of being imperfectly divided. Within the shamilat patti itself each Patti, to which the shamilat land appertains, exists as if it were in miniature, and no right of pre-emption can be claimed in respect of such shamilat land. In the eyes of law the portion of the shamilat land appertaining to each patti follows or forms part of the patti to which it appertains.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Benamidar, suit against—Decree, whether binding on beneficial owner—Mortgage suit against benamidar—Real owner of mortgaged property, whether necessary party.

A proceeding against a benamidar in its ultimate result is fully binding on the beneficial owner. In a suit on a benami mortgage, therefore, it is not necessary to add the real owner of the mortgaged property as a party. [p. 634, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 7th of September 1917, reversing that of the Munsif Sundwip, dated the 29th of November 1916, and remanding the suit to his Court for re trial.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu D. L. Kastagir, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage bond executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 6. The suit was contested only by defendant No. 2, who was merely a benamdar. The real owner of the mortgaged property was not made a party. An application was made to make the real owner a party but that was refused by the first Court. Against that order an appeal was preferred before the District Judge, who set aside the order and remanded the case directing that the real owner who was a necessary party should be made a party.

Babu Ram Dayal De, for the Respondent, raised a preliminary objection.—I submit that no appeal lies in this Hon'ble Court because the order was passed under Order I, rule 10, clause (2), read with section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

CHATTERJEA, J. — The Court remanded the case for a re trial. It may be that the suit was contested by a benamdar, but that does not vitiate the trial. Can the District Judge remand the case on the ground that the real owner must be made a party?

The Appellate Court has power to remand a case under section 107, clause (2).

The objection was disallowed.

Babu D. L. Kastagir, for the Appellant.—My submission is that in view of the recent Privy Council decision reported as Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (1), the learned District Judge ought not to have remanded the case at all.

The benamdar can represent the real owner and the real owner is not a necessary party.

Order XXXIV, rule 1, of the present Civil Procedure Code supports my contention.

The case reported as Ram Kinkar Biswas v. Akhil Chandra Chaudhuri (2) shows that an appeal lies to this Hon'ble Court.

Babu Ram Dayal De, for the Respondent.—The Full Bench case in Ram Kinkar Biswas v. Akhil Chandra Chaudhuri (2) goes against my learned friend so far as the question of limitation is concerned.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—The question of limitation only arises if Sarada Sundari, the real owner, is a necessary party.]

Under Order XXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, Sarada Sundari is a necessary party because she is the holder of the equity of redemption.

In the Privy Council case the beneficial owner did not raise any objection and thus it is distinguishable.

My conduct shows that I have disclaimed my interest in favour of Sarada Sundari, the real owner, and thus it has become necessary to make Sarada Sundari a party to the suit.

Babu D. L. Kastagir replied.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the order of remand made by the District Judge must be set aside.

The lower Appellate Court directed the Court of first instance to add Sarada Sundari Dasi, the real owner, to be made a party to the suit because the defendant No. 2, who contested the suit on the mortgage, was merely a benamdar.

Having regard to the recent decision of the Privy Council, it appears that a proceeding against a benamdar in its ultimate result is fully binding on the beneficial owner. That being so, we do not see that it is necessary to add Sarada Sundari as a party to the suit which, moreover, would be barred as against her.

Some arguments were advanced on behalf of the appellant that the defendant No. 2 is not a benamdar now. But the Court of first instance found that "the defendant No. 2 lived in the same house as Sarada and served her. He took kabuliyats in his own name from the tenants in this property, as he himself admits. The tenants also used to pay rents in the house where he as well as Sarada Sundari lived." Admittedly there is no release executed in favour of Sarada Sundari. In these circumstances, we think that the defendant No. 2 still continues to represent Sarada, the real owner.

The result is that the order of remand is set aside and the case sent back to the lower Appellate Court for hearing of the appeal on the merits.

Costs to abide the result. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Case sent back.

Lambardar, powers of, to lease vacant lands, extent of—Consent of co-sharers, whether necessary—Co-sharers, whether can avoid bona fide lease—Wajib-ul-arz, construction of.

Where the wajib-ul-arz of a village lays down that before leasing vacant lands, the lambardar should consult the wishes of the co-sharers of the village, this does not mean that the consent of the co-sharers should be obtained. The general rule in the Central Provinces is that the lambardar leases the vacant lands in the ordinary course of management. The mere fact that the co-sharers are not consulted, does not entitle them to claim on that ground to avoid a bona fide lease [p 335, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the appellate decree of the District Judge, Nimar, decided on the 28th March 1915, arising out of the decree of the 2nd Munsif, Burhanpur, dated the 15th of December 1915,

HARI PRASAD v. GOVINDA RAO.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. O. Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff appellants own eight-annas share in Mouza Daola, the other eight annas being held by the first defendant, who is the Lambardar of the village. The second defendant is a tenant under a lease executed by the Lambardar. The plaintiff sues for the ejectment of the latter on the ground that the lease was executed without the knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs. There is also a prayer for joint possession of the land to the extent of the plaintiffs' half share. The Courts below have dismissed the suit.

The contention on behalf of the plaintiffs is that, under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz the Lambardar shall consult the wishes of the co-sharers before leasing the vacant lands of the village. It is urged that, as the plaintiffs were not consulted, as required by the custom, the plaintiffs are entitled to have the lease declared void and to have joint possession of the holding. The terms of the Nimar wajib-ul-arz are substantially the same as those of Wardha. In Kesho Rao v. Nana (1) Ismay, J. C., held that the co-sharers cannot claim to avoid a bona fide lease merely on the ground that their wishes were not consulted before it was given. This was followed in Bhima Shankar v. Krishna Mali (2) by the present learned Judicial Commissioner. The same view was taken by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Poonamchand v. Nandlal (3).

The custom embodied in the wajib-ul-arz does not require the consent of the co-sharers. They are merely to be consulted. What the Lambardar is to do if the proprietors are not agreed, is not stated in the wajib-ul-arz. The general rule in these Provinces is that the Lambardar leases the vacant lands in the ordinary course of management. This departure from the general rule embodied in this wajib-ul-arz does not appear to have ripened into a local custom with the certainty requisite for valid custom. Probably, as suggested by Ismay, J. C., a Lambardar who persists in ignoring the wishes of his co-proprietors renders himself liable on their application to be removed from office.

(1) Second Appeal No. 228 of 1901.

(2) Second Appeal No. 109 of 1903.

(3) 48 Ind. Cas. 72.

I have already pointed out that the consent of the proprietary body is not required by custom. The land is not required to be let by the proprietary body, but by the Lambardar. In the case of a stranger, such as defendant No. 2 in this case is, he has a right to assume that the person held out as the customary agent of the proprietary body has done what his customary duty required him to do. It will be intolerable if a bona fide tenant is called upon to prove that the Lambardar had consulted the wishes of the proprietary body. It is not alleged that the tenant had notice or knowledge of the fact that the Lambardar did not consult the plaintiffs. Under the circumstances the plaintiffs' suit for joint possession has been rightly dismissed. Two cases have been cited before me, which have no material bearing on the point for decision. The first is the case of Daryao Singh v. Mukund Singh (4). That case fully recognises the authority of the Lambardar to manage an undivided village according to the ordinary custom. What was held in that case was that the persons put in possession as tenants became ordinary tenants not liable to ejectment, though some of the terms of the lease were held to be not binding upon the co-sharers. In the present case, the plaintiffs do not complain of any of the terms of the lease. They desire to eject the tenant on the sole ground that they had not consented to the lease. The other case cited is Gopal Ramkrishna v. Govind Pandurang (5), which lays down that anything which the landlord is required or authorised to do under the Tenancy Act must be done by the whole proprietary body or by an agent acting on their behalf. The judgment of Ismay, J. C. recognises the Lambardar as ordinarily the agent of the co-sharers for the management of the village. I hold that the case has been rightly decided, and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed. There will be no order for costs, as the case proceeded ex parte against the tenant, and the respondent Lambardar is not entitled to his costs as he failed to consult the plaintiffs before giving the lease.

Appeal dismissed

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114 (g)—Accounts, suit for—Defendant, failure of, to produce account books—Presumption—Costs, liability to pay, how to be determined—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 10, O. XLI, rr. 4, 33—Transfer of parties—Court, power of, extent of—Appeal—Appellate Court, power of, to make appropriate order, extent of.

The failure of a defendant in a suit for accounts to produce his account books would justify the Court in raising the presumption, under section 114 (g) of the Evidence Act, that they are being withheld, because, if produced, they would be unfavourable to his case. [p. 639, col. 1.]

Where a defendant is largely responsible for the litigation, and by his obstructive methods hampers the investigation, thereby delaying and lengthening the inquiry, he should be made liable for the whole costs of the suit. [p. 640, col. 2.]

If a suit is instituted for an account between two persons, one alleging that nothing is due from him, and a balance is found to be due from him, that person must pay the costs of the suit and of the account. But the case is different where one party admits a given sum to be due from him and the other claims a much larger sum, and the suit proceeds only for the purpose of ascertaining whether such contested balance is really due or not. In this case, the costs would depend upon the substantial result, that is, if the balance claimed, or a substantial part of it, is shown to be due, the claimant would obtain the costs of the suit; if no part of it is due, he would have to pay them; and if only a portion of it is due, the Court would probably give no costs on either side. But in all these cases the Court would endeavour to see what were the substantial questions and causes of litigation between the parties. [p. 640, cols. 1 & 2.]

May v. Biggenden, 24 Beav. 207; 58 E. R. 337; 116 R. R. 94, followed.

Order I, rule 10, of the Civil Procedure Code authorises the Court to make an order transferring a party from the category of defendants to that of plaintiffs at any stage of the proceedings, not merely after the passing of a preliminary decree, but also after expiry of the period prescribed for an appeal against that decree, so long as the transfer is for the benefit of the parties, or tends to give effect to one of the aims of the law of procedure, viz., the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits with reference to the same subject-matter. [p. 641, col. 1.]

Order XLI, rules 4 and 33, give an Appellate Court ample power to make the appropriate order needed in the interests of justice. Under the former rule, on appeal by one of the parties upon a ground common to all, the decree may be varied in favour of all; under the latter rule, the Appellate Court has power to make the proper decree, notwithstanding that the appeal is as to a part only of the decree, and such power may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, even though such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal or objection. JUDGMENT.—The litigation which has culminated in this appeal was commenced by the plaintiff respondent for adjustment of accounts. Tarini Charan Singh, the father of the plaintiff, died on the 5th November 1899. On the 4th March 1881 he had made a testamentary disposition of his properties and had nominated his wife, Rangini Dasi, the sixth defendant in this suit, as executrix to his Will. On the 27th April 1901 the widow obtained probate and took possession of the estate as executrix. Differences arose, however, amongst the members of the family, which consisted of the three sons of the testator (the plaintiff, Narendra Narayan, the first defendant, Debendra Narayan, and Surendra Narayan, the father of defendants Nos. 2—5) and a daughter, Basanta Kumari. The result was that in 1903, the present defendant, Debendra Narayan, instituted a suit for construction of the Will and for administration of the estate. The suit was decreed in the Court of first instance on the 28th July 1905. On appeal by Debendra Narayan a consent decree was made in this Court on the 18th March 1906. Under that decree Debendra Narayan became entitled to recover a sum of Rs. 15,000 from the estate and for that purpose to take possession for a period of five years. The decree further directed that upon the expiry of this period, the estate would be held in equal shares by Debendra Narayan, Narendra Narayan and the sons of Surendra Narayan, who had died meanwhile. Debendra Narayan took possession of the estate under this decree on the 29th October 1906. Narendra Narayan instituted the present suit on the 11th March 1909 for recovery of possession of his one-third share, on the allegation that Debendra Narayan had already realised more than his dues under the decree. Debendra Narayan was made the first defendant, the four sons of Surendra Narayan were made defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and Rangini Dasi was joined as defendant No. 6. On the 12th April 1911 the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in the following terms:—

DEBENDRA NARAYAN SINGH v. NARENDRA NARAYAN SINGH.

"It is ordered that the plaintiff's right be declared to one-third of the disputed properties and he be given possession of the one-third share jointly with defendants Nos. 1—5; accounts will be taken to ascertain if the defendant No. 1 has taken more than his own dues during the period of his possession; the plaintiff to get from defendant No. 1 the amount which he may be found to have taken in excess of his one-third share. Order as to costs to be passed after the decree is made final; the first part of the decree to be final and the second part preliminary. Defendant No. 1 to file accounts up to the date of the plaintiff's taking possession of the share decreed to him. It is further decreed that the plaintiff do take possession of the share decreed to him within 15 days from to-day, otherwise the second part of the decree about account to be null and void."

The plaintiff accordingly took possession on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd April 1911. The mode of delivery of possession and the litigation which resulted therefrom will be found narrated in full in the judgment of this Court in Debendra Narayan Singh v. Narendra Narayan Singh (1). Debendra Narayan appealed against the preliminary decree for account. That appeal was dismissed by this Court on the 9th May 1913. During the pendency of the appeal in this Court, the work of the Commissioner, who had been appointed by the Subordinate Judge to take the accounts, was suspended. On the 4th December 1913 the Commissioner was directed to resume his work and to investigate the accounts in suit, that is, from the 29th October 1906 (the date when Debendra Narayan took possession under the decree in his suit) to the 20th April 1911 (when Narendra Narayan obtained possession under the decree in this suit). Considerable difficulty was experienced by the Commissioner in the performance of his duties from the lack of papers. Possession had been delivered in execution to Narendra Narayan, but to no purpose, because Debendra Narayan had locked up the malghar. The room was not opened by the Execution Officer and all that Narendra Narayan and his nephews did was to place additional locks on the door. Ultimately, the locks were removed by order of the Court and the doors broken open. But many of the requisite papers could not be found inside the room. The Commissioner took such evidence as was adduced by the parties concerned and examined such papers as were available. On the 11th November 1914 while the matter was still pending before the Commissioner, defendants Nos. 2—5, the sons of Surendra Narayan, filed a petition before the Subordinate Judge, praying that the accounts might be adjusted for their benefit as well. On the 19th November the Subordinate Judge held that although these defendants had not entered appearance until after the preliminary decree had been affirmed by the High Court, they were entitled to have their names transferred from the category of defendants to that of plaintiffs. He accordingly directed the Commissioner to ascertain the dues and liabilities as between the principal and pro forma defendants. This order was carried out by the Commissioner, and necessarily widened the scope of the enquiry before him. After much delay and many extensions of time the Commissioner submitted his final report on the 29th February 1916. Objections were lodged by both parties on the 4th May following. Arguments were heard in support of and in answer to the objections and judgment was reserved on the 1st June 1916. On the 6th June, the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 paid the requisite Court-fees on the amount found due to them by the Commissioner from the first defendant. On the 29th June judgment was delivered and the suit was decreed in favour of the original plaintiff and the transferred plaintiffs. On the 5th July defendants Nos. 2—5 deposited the excess Court-fees required. This was accepted on the 15th July and the decree was ultimately signed on the 25th July. The present appeal is directed against this decree, which was in the following terms:—

"The plaintiff No. 1 will get from defend.

ant No. 1 the sum named by the Commissioner and Rs. 359-4-3, that is, one third of Rs. 1,079 10- $\frac{1}{2}$, in all Rs. 2,845 12- $\frac{3}{4}$. The plaintiffs Nos. 2-5, who were previously defendants in the suit but have been made plaintiffs and have paid the Court fees, will also get from defendant No. 1 the sum of Rs. 2,169-4- $\frac{3}{4}$. Plaintiff No. 1 will get the cost of the suit from defendant No. 1 and defendants Nos. 2-5 will get their share of the cost. The plaintiff No. 1 will get from defendant No. 1 Rs. 2,845 12- $\frac{3}{4}$ as his claim and Rs. 4,712 9-5 as cost, that is, in all Rs. 7,558-1- $\frac{3}{4}$, and the plaintiffs Nos. 2-5 will get Rs. 2,169-4- $\frac{3}{4}$ as their claim and Rs. 361-0-0 as cost, that is, in all Rs. 2,530 12- $\frac{3}{4}$."

This decree has been assailed on behalf of the first defendant appellant on two grounds, namely, first, that the plaintiff should not have been allowed the entire costs of the suit, when his claim has been successful only in respect of a relatively small amount, and, secondly, that no decree should have been made in favour of defendants Nos. 2-5, who applied to be joined as plaintiffs at a very late stage of the litigation. The plaintiff has filed a cross-appeal and has urged that the amounts have not been taken on a correct basis and that he is in reality entitled to a much larger sum than what has been awarded by the Subordinate Judge. The other respondents, the sons of Surendra Narayan, have not preferred a cross-appeal, but they have urged that if at the instance of the plaintiff the amount payable by the first defendant should be increased, they should be allowed to reap the advantage of such finding. The points which emerge for consideration from the arguments addressed to us may accordingly be thus summarised: first, have the accounts been taken on a correct basis; secondly, is the order for costs erroneous on principle, and thirdly, are the sons of Surendra Narayan entitled to the relief they have obtained.

As regards the first point the plaintiff-respondent has urged in support of his cross-appeal that the Subordinate Judge placed a too restricted construction upon the preliminary decree and narrowed its scope unduly, when he held that, according to its terms, "the enquiry was limited to the finding as to what amount the defendant actually received and not what he could have received or in all probability did receive." In our opinion, the contention of the plaintiff is partially well-founded. There is a clear distinction between what the defendant actually received and what he could have realised by exercise of due diligence; but no real distinction can be made between what he actually received and what in all probability he received. The evidence relevant for proof of this matter must be tested in the light of the definition of the term 'proved' given in section 3 of the Indian Evidence Act: "A fact is said to be proved when, after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes it to exist, or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists." Now in the case before us, the first defendant went into possession of the joint family estate for a specific purpose, namely, to apply the entire income for payment of Rs. 15,000 due to himself. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant has realised more than Rs. 15,000 and calls upon him to account for the profits of the estate during the period of his possession. The plaintiff places before the Court a statement of what he believes to be the surplus of the income of the estate. Clearly, it is the duty of the defendant to produce the account papers, which were presumably in his possession and would show the receipts and the disbursements. Account papers are produced, except the rokars for the Bengali years 1316 and 1317, that is, from April 1909 to April 1911. The Subordinate Judge has expressed the opinion that these books were written up and were most probably in the malghar till shortly before it was locked up by the parties and possibly even after that. The defendant started the theory that the plaintiff was responsible for the disappearance of these papers, and the Commissioner apparently favoured this view. The Subordinate Judge however, has arrived at a contrary conclusion. He has held that it was the first defendant who withheld the papers, and he has described as absurd the story that the Civil Court peon helped the plaintiff to remove cartloads of papers in the presence of the officers of the defendant. The evidence has been placed before us and we agree with the Subordinate Judge in his conclusion that the defendant is responsible for the disappearance of the papers. But we are unable to accept the conclusion that defendant can, by his misconduct, successfully defeat the claim of the plaintiff. The principle applicable in such circumstances is well established.

In a suit for accounts, the non-production of account books by the party who has custody of them justifies the presumption under section 114 (g) of the Indian Evidence Act that they have been withheld, because, if produced, they would have been unfavourable to his case. If he is the plaintiff and is claiming accounts though withholding papers, his suit is liable to be dismissed: Upendra Kishore v. Ram Tara (2), Chand Ram v. Brojo Gobind Doss (3). If he is the defendant who is liable to render accounts, the Court will proceed on the footing of evidence furnished by the plaintiff, and, in doing so, may make all reasonable presumptions against him; see the observations of Phear, J. in Syed Shah Alai Ahmad v. Bibee Nusibun (4), quoted with approval by Field, J., in Annoda Persad v. Dwarkanath (5). Again, as was pointed out by Field, J., in Degamber v. Kallynath (6), if satisfied that the defendant has contumaciously refused or omitted to comply with the order for production of the papers, the Court may enforce obedience by imprisonment or by attachment of property or by both. But, even if the Court does not consider it necessary to exercise its disciplinary powers, it may, by raising a presumption against the defendant, afford relief to the plaintiff. An instance of this nature will be found in the case of Rampershad Tewarry v. Sheochurn Doss (7). There the defendant refused to render accounts; on evidence adduced to prove spoliation of the banking books, the Court charged him with the principal sum for which he was accountable with interest at 12 per cent. in lieu of the profits he had failed to account for. The Judicial Committee affirmed the decree of the Agra Sudder Court and held that the Court had properly visited the failure of the defendant to produce the accounts required, by charging him with interest on the principal sum for which he was accountable. This is in conformity with principles firmly established in equity jurisprudence. Thus, in Walmsley v. Walmsley (8), where an accounting party withheld the partnership books and documents and thereby endeavoured to baffle the justice of the Court, Sir Edward Sugden, L. C., held that the Master had rightly raised a presumption against him both as regards the amount of the capital and stock in trade and of the annual gains from the business. Again, in Gray v. Haig (9), where an accounting party had destroyed the accounts before the matters had been finally adjusted, Sir John Romilly, M. R., stated that he would act on the principle laid down in the well known case of Armory v. Delamirie (10) and presume, as against the person who destroyed the evidence, everything most unfavourable to him, which is consistent with the rest of the facts either admitted or proved. This accords with the view adopted by Lord Nottingham, L. C., in Wardour v. Berisford (11). See also Rowley v. Adams (12), affirming Rowley v. Adams (13). The learned Vakil for the defendant has, however, argued that this Court as a Court of Appeal should not interfere with the report of the Commissioner, when it has been accepted by the trial Court. This contention is clearly opposed to the decision in Chetty v. Mahomed Essa (14), which establishes that the Court is entitled to deal with the report on matters of fact as also questions of principle. In our opinion, the narrow view, adopted by the Subordinate Judge, regarding the scope of the preliminary decree has led to an erroneous decision upon the question of the accounts for 1316 and 1317, as is clear from the following passage in his judgment:—

DEBENDRA NARAYAN SINGH v. NARENDRA NARAYAN SINGH.

"The other items claimed by the plaintiff and not either noticed or allowed by the Commissioner can be disposed of together. They are either sale proceeds of grains, or income from holdings purchased with the profits of the money-lending business or income from money or paddy-lending for the years 1316 and 1317; they are not taken into account by the Commissioner. Be they of whatever category, the same remark applies to them, that they are not proved but are supposed receipts by the defendants. I need not go into details, but I have satisfied myself that they should not be relied on as proved facts. These amounts, the plaintiff argued, the defendant must have received during his tenure. I say he might probably have done so, but the terms of the preliminary order limit the scope of our inquiry and I cannot decree the amounts."

We hold accordingly that the accounts for 1316 and 1317, mentioned in the above paragraph, must be investigated. They relate to profits from the money-lending business and sale proceeds of paddy and of winter crops, turmeric, gram, kalai and the like. If the defendant produces the rokars for 1316 and 1317, the accounts will be taken in the usual manner; if they are not produced, the Court must make all reasonable presumption against the defendant and base its conclusion upon the figures available for previous years, supplemented by such oral and documentary evidence as may be available. In the events which have happened, the defendant cannot reasonably complain, if the average deducible from the fluctuating figures for previous years works out to his detriment.

As regards the second point, we are of opinion that, on the facts found, the Subordinate Judge has properly exercised his discretion in the matter of costs. The defendant is very largely to blame for this litigation and its protracted proceedings and he has spared no effort to defeat the just claim of the plaintiff and his nephews. The principles on which the costs of a suit for an account are regulated were lucidly stated by Sir John Romilly, M. R., in May v. Biggenden (15): "It is generally true that if a suit is instituted for an account between two persons, one alleging that nothing is due from him, and a balance is found to be due from him, that person will have to pay the costs of the suit and of the account. But the case would be wholly varied, if the case were, that one party admitted a given sum to be due from him, and the other had claimed a much larger sum, and the suit had proceeded only for the purpose of ascertaining whether such contested balance were really due or not. In this case, the costs would depend upon the substantial result; that is, if the balance claimed, or a substantial part of it, were shown to be due, the claimant would obtain the costs of the suit; if no part of it were due, he would have to pay them; and if only a small portion of it were due, the Court would probably give no costs on either side. But in all these cases, the Court endeavours to see what were the substantial questions and causes of litigation between the parties." See also Collyer v. Dudley (16); Kemp v. Burn (17). In the case before us, the first defendant denied the right of the plaintiff to claim an account and asserted that not only was nothing due from him, but that he himself had not realised, during his possession of the estate, the entire sum of Rs. 15,000 recoverable by him. The result of the litigation is that the plaintiff is unquestionably entitled to an account and that upon accounts taken, it is indisputably established that the defendant has received a considerable sum in excess of his dues. The enquiry has been delayed and lengthened by reason of the obstructive attitude of the defendant, who has managed to hamper the investigations by non-production of the papers. In such circumstances, he has been rightly made liable for the whole costs and we see no reason to interfere with the directions given by the Subordinate Judge.

As regards the third point, the first defendant has argued that his nephews should not have been permitted to be transferred from the category of defendants to that of plaintiffs, not merely after the preliminary decree had been made under Order XX, rule 16, Civil Procedure Code, but also after the time prescribed for an appeal against that decree under section 97, Civil Procedure Code, had expired and indeed after an appeal against the decree by the defendant to this Court had been dismissed. We are of opinion that this contention should not prevail. It cannot be disputed that Order I, rule 0, Civil Procedure Code, authorises the Court to make an order of this description at any stage of the proceedings. The Courts have always been reluctant to place a narrow construction upon this provision of the law, and to restrict the exercise of this discretionary power: Wilson v. Balcarres Brook Steamship Co. (18), Robinson v. Geisel (19), Broindra Kumar Das v. Gobinda Mohan Das (20). Thus fresh parties have been added after a decree has been passed and a reference made to the Commissioner to take accounts and sell the property: Vakhatchand v. Advocate General (21). Similarly, in a suit for partition, a fresh party has been added after the preliminary decree and submission of the report by the Commissioner: Jotindra Mohan v. Bejoy Chand (22). The power of the Court depends on the question whether the case is sub judice, for as Fry, L. J., observed in Duke of Buccleuch (23), the words "at any stage of the proceedings" apply as long as anything remains to be done in the case. See also Attorney General v. Corporation of Birmingham (24), Keith v. Butcher (25). On this principle, it has been held that, after final judgment, a person, who had hitherto been no party, cannot be made a defendant for the purpose of getting execution against him. Munster v. Fox (26). But a person has been allowed to intervene to get a judgment set aside: Mehaffey v. Mehaffey (27); Jacques

v. Harrison (28). In the case before us, the propriety of the course adopted in the Court below cannot be seriously questioned. If the application of the defendants had been refused, the result would have been the institution of a separate suit by them and possibly a fresh enquiry into the accounts at their instance. This could not have benefited the parties in any conceivable manner. One of the aims of the present procedure law is the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits with reference to the same subject matter, and the course followed by the lower Court is eminently fitted to fulfil that object.

The defendant has finally argued that if a further enquiry into the accounts should be directed as the result of the cross appeal, the benefit should accrue to the original plaintiff alone and not to the added plaintiffs as well, inasmuch as they have not preferred a cross-appeal. In all the circumstances of this case, we are of opinion that we should not accede to this contention. Order XLI, rule 4, and rule 33 give the Court ample power to make the appropriate order needed in the interests of justice. Under the former rule, on appeal by one of the parties upon a ground common to all, the decree may be varied in favour of all, under the latter rule, the Appellate Court has power to make the proper decree, notwithstanding that the appeal is as to a part only of the decree, and such power may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, even though such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal or objection. In the case before us, the claim of the added plaintiffs rests on precisely the same foundation as that of the original plaintiff; when they were added as plaintiffs, there was no alteration in the nature of the suit nor was there the introduction of a new cause of action. The further enquiry we shall presently direct will consequently cover the case of both sets of plaintiffs.

The result is that the appeal preferred by the first defendant is dismissed with costs and the decree of the Subordinate Judge is confirmed, except in so far as it disallows the claim for accounts of the

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 3 (3)— Taunsa, whether town or village—Census report, entry in, value of.

Taunsa is a town for the purposes of the Punjab
Pre-emption Act. [p. 643, col. 1.]

In deciding whether a place is a town or a village the fact that it is described as a town in the Census report is of great importance. [p. 643, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 2nd February 1916, dismissing the suit.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellant.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from the order of the District Judge of Dera Ghazi Khan, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for pre-emption of a house in Taunsa. The lower Court held that Taunsa is a town and not a village and that the plaintiff does not own the house immediately to the north of that in suit. If these findings are correct, it is admitted that plaintiff has no right of pre-emption.

The first question is, whether Taunsa is a town or a village. If it is a village then plaintiff certainly has a right of pre-emption superior to that of the vendee, if it is a town then he has only a right of pre-emption if he owns the house immediately to the north of that in dispute.

My order of the 14th December 1916 should be read along with this judgment. By that order I remanded the case to the lower Court for re-decision of the issue whether Taunsa is a town or not, and I pointed out certain matters into which enquiry should be specially made. The enquiry was made by the Subordinate Judge who also appointed a local Commissioner.
The latter did not record any evidence but submitted a report. Both the parties wished to examine the local Commissioner in Court and the Subordinate Judge ordered that they should deposit his process fee and diet money in equal shares. Defendants deposited their share but the plaintiff did not deposit his, and the upshot was that the local Commissioner was not summoned or examined by the Court. This is unsatisfactory and I agree with the Subordinate Judge that the report of the Commissioner, which is not based upon any recorded evidence, is not of much value as the Court has not been able to question him as to the data upon which he came to his conclusions. The learned Subordinate Judge is of opinion that Taunsa is a town. No objections have been put in to this finding on behalf of the appellant, but Mr.
Kureshi has argued the point on his behalf.
One of the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge for his opinion that Taunsa is a town is that out of an area of 82,000 kanals only 5,780 kanals are cultivated. This, however, appears to be a mistake, for the evidence on the record shows that some 50,000 kanals are cultivated. The other points relied upon by the Subordinate Judge are that there are over 100 shops in Taunsa, that there are three bazars, that there is a considerable trade with Karachi and other places, that there is a famous mosque and splendid buildings attached to it, that there is a mela held in connection with this mosque yearly, that Taunsa is the headquarters of a Tahsil and of a Circle Inspector of Police, that it contains a Veterinary Hospital, a Civil Hospital, a District Rest House, a Post and Telegraph Office, several schools both for boys and girls, and a certain number of pakka buildings. In my order of the 14th December 1916 I pointed out that at the last census it was classed as a town because its population exceeded 5,000 inhabitants. I find I was not correct in saying that population was the only reason for which it was classified as a town. The Punjab Census Report of 1911 at page 12 gives definition of town as:—“(4) every other continuous collection of houses inhabited by not less than 5,000 persons, which the Provincial Superintendent may decide to treat as a town for census purposes.”

AMRITA LAL MUKHERJEE v. HIRA LAL MUKHERJEE.

“NOTE.—In dealing with questions arising under head (4) the Provincial Superintendent will have regard to the character of the population, the relative density of the dwellings, the importance of the place as a centre of trade and its historic associations, and will bear in mind that it is undesirable to treat as towns overgrown villages which have no urban characteristics.”

Presumably the Provincial Superintendent classified Taunsa as a town after due consideration and the fact that he did so is, I consider, very important.

Considering this and the various facts detailed by the Subordinate Judge in his report, I think on the whole that the decision of the lower Court that Taunsa is a town should be upheld, and I uphold it accordingly. Plaintiff, therefore, has only a right of pre-emption if he can prove that the house to the north of that in dispute was gifted to him by his father. The finding of the lower Court is against him and very little has been said against this by Counsel for the appellant. It is not necessary for me to repeat the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for his finding. It is sufficient to say that I entirely agree with him and I have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff has not proved the alleged gift in his favour.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of decree—Cross-examination of objector, whether step-in-aid of execution—Order directing payment of process fees for issue of notice, whether gives fresh start of limitation.

The cross-examination of a person who objects to the execution of a decree does not amount to a step-in-aid of execution so as to give a fresh start of limitation. [p. 643, col. 2; p. 644, col. 1.]

An order to pay talbana for the issue of a notice does not furnish a fresh starting point for limitation, where talbana is not paid, and in consequence notice is not issued. [p. 644, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Hooghly, dated the 23rd of March 1917.

Babus Baidyanath Dutt and Samarendra Kumar Dutt, for the Appellant.

Babu Baranasibasi Mukherjee and Mr. A. Paul, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is, whether the decree-holder's application for execution, dated 21st July 1916, was barred by limitation. It appears that the decree was passed on 30th May 1910 on a Solenama, the decree being for partition of joint family property. In 1913 there was an application for execution which was dismissed for default on 31st July 1913. The question is—from what date did the time run against the appellant? It is argued for him that it ran from 26th July 1913 because, first, on that day he cross-examined Hiralal Mukherjee with reference to an objection which was then being taken to execution, and, secondly, there was an order in his favour that he should pay talbana for formal possession, if he liked to get it, within three days. It is clear that neither of these things will take the case out of limitation or give him a fresh starting point. The cross-examination of an opponent cannot be said to be an application to the Court to take a step in aid of execution. As to the second point, if there had been an issue of notice obviously that would have been a starting point for a fresh period, but there was no such issue of notice. The decree holder was given three days to pay talbana if he chose to do so. He did not put that in and his application was then dismissed for default. We think that the application was clearly barred by time. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, hearing fee—three gold mohurs—to each of the respondents who have appeared.

Landlord and tenant—Abandonment of house, effect of—Abandonment of land.

The abandonment by a tenant of his house in a village does not amount to an abandonment of the land on which the house stands. [p. 644, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Officiating District Judge, Shahabad, dated the 27th February 1918, reversing a decision of the Additional Munsif, Buxar, dated the 5th April 1917.

Messrs. Parmeshwar Dayal and Jadubins Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Narendra Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plot No. 301 in the village of Dulahpur, Thana Dumraon, which was the subject of dispute in the suit out of which this second appeal arises, is entered in the Record of Rights as belonging, with regard to a one-half share, to the defendant No. 1, with regard to 1/8th share to plaintiff No. 1 and 3/8ths share to each of the defendants. The rent is entered as included in the rent of the defendant No. 1, who does not contest the suit. It is recorded as being included in the rent of the holding of the defendant. The plaintiff sought for a declaration of his right to possess the whole plot. He claimed that he had a house on it which he had abandoned about 25 years ago and that since he had used the earth of the land for building a new house and had cut trees on the plot.

The defendants relied on the Record of Rights. The learned Munsif found that the entries in the Record of Rights were on the face of them incorrect and that the shares in it did not correspond to the claim of any of the parties during the settlement proceedings. He found, too, that the evidence adduced on either side was unreliable and unsatisfactory. He came to the conclusion that the disputed land was ghair mazrua of the malik who was not a party to the suit and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal the learned Officiating District Judge held that the plaintiffs' evidence satisfactorily proved his claim. He believed that the disputed land belonged to the plaintiff and that they had been in possession of it until two years from before the hearing. He found that the defendants had not exercised possession over the disputed land within 12 years and, therefore, he decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal on behalf of the appellants urges that the District Judge should have considered the Record of Rights and, considering the unsatisfactory state of the evidence, should have relied on it. He urges, too, that the plaintiff having abandoned the plot, the land became the ghair mazrua of the proprietor.

In the first place, the District Judge does come to a finding that the entry in the Khatian was wrong. In the second place the mere fact that the tenant of a plot of land in a village abandons his house on that plot does not amount to an abandonment of the land on which the house stands. The plaintiff in this case remained in the village and built another house close by. The case, as it stands, having reference to the Record of Rights, is not a satisfactory one, but the learned

A party, who in the trial Court fails to establish the case which he set up, is not entitled to advance a new case in appeal, nor is he entitled to a remand to enable him to establish his claim on the new case so set up [p. 645, col. 2.]

In every case where the plaintiff sues for recovery of possession of land on establishment of his title, the onus is primarily on him to prove his title. But when he makes out a prima facie case for establishment of his title and the defendant seeks to contradict his case by establishing title of his own, it is for the defendant to prove the title he sets up, whether it be lakheraj or whether it be any other kind of title. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 11th of May 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Bagirhat, dated the 18th of May 1917.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Appellants.
Babus Brojo Lal Chakravarty and Susil Kumar Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a title suit. Two points have been urged on behalf of the appellants-respondents. The 1st is that the issue of limitation has been wrongly decided and the second that in deciding the question of title the onus of proof has been wrongly thrown on the defendants.

The plaintiff, it is found, is the purchaser of the property in question at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, and any incumbrances that there were to his title have been annulled under section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Courts have held that limitation runs from the date of the plaintiff's purchase.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that if the landlord was out of possession, it must be shown that the defendants came into possession after the creation of the holding, in other words, it is sought to make the principle in the case of Kalikananda Mukherjee v. Bipro Das Pal Chowdhuri (1) applicable to the present case. It appears, however, that no such contention was raised in either of the Courts below. The question as to the date of the creation of the holding was not gone into, and it does not appear to have ever been suggested before this appeal was filed that the dispossession was prior to the creation of the interest which was purchased by the plaintiff. After having failed on the points on which they fought the case in the lower Courts, the appellants are not entitled to a remand to enable them to try and establish their claim on a new case.

As regards the question of onus it is said that as the defendants pleaded Lakheraj title, it was for the plaintiff to prove that the land was rent paying land. In support of this contention the case of Halodhar Chatterjee v. Kamendri Narain Roy Choudhury (2) was cited and also other rulings. None of these rulings support the broad contention that has been urged that in every case where the defendant pleads Lakheraj title it is for the plaintiff to disprove that title. In every case where the plaintiff sues for recovery of possession of land on establishment of his title, the onus is primarily on the plaintiff to prove his title. But when the plaintiff has made a prima facie case for establishment of his title, if the defendant seeks to contradict the plaintiff's case by establishing title of his own, it is for the defendant to prove the title he sets up, whether it be Lakheraj or whether it be any other kind of title.

MAHMUD v. JUMMA.

In the present case there appears to have been no error committed by the lower Courts. They have held that the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case and they have, after considering the evidence on the defendant's side as to his Lakheraj title, held that this does not prevail against the title set up by the plaintiff. There has been no error of law which would justify my interference in second appeal.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), ss. 3 (3), 5 (a)—Taunsa, whether town or village—House, part of, used as shop, whether subject to pre-emption—Appeal, second—Place, whether town or village—Question of fact.

Taunsa is a town for the purposes of the Punjab Pre-emption Act.

Where it is found that a building is for all practical purposes a residential one, the mere fact that a small part of it is used as a shop does not in any way alter its character.

Semble, that the question whether a place is a town or a village is one of fact and cannot be raised in second appeal.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Multan, dated the 20th March 1914.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellants.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued for pre-emption of a house situated in Taunsa in the Dera Ghazi Khan District. He stated that Taunsa is a town in which the custom of pre-emption prevails and that his house was adjacent to that in suit, while defendants had no house in the locality. The first Court dismissed the suit, as it held that Taunsa was a village and that plaintiff had not proved any superior right. The lower Appellate Court held Taunsa to be a town and for somewhat curious reasons, which it is unnecessary to discuss as plaintiff's superior rights are admitted if Taunsa is proved to be a town, decreed the suit. The only questions before us are whether Taunsa is a town for the purposes of the Pre-emption Act, and whether, as part of the building sold consists of a shop, plaintiff should have obtained a decree.

It appears most doubtful to us if the question whether a place is a town or village can be raised on second appeal. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is based entirely on the local circumstances which exist and not on any of the legal ingredients, if any such exist, distinguishing a town from a village. Counsel for the appellant relied on Feroze-ud-din v. Rahim Bakhsh (1) as an authority in his favour. In that case it was held that a question whether a certain building was a sarai or not was a question of law and a second appeal was admitted. We do not consider the two cases to be exactly analogous, but it is not necessary for us to discuss the matter at any length, as we find that in a recent decision contained in Civil Appeal No. 1248 of 1916 [Allah Bakhsh v. Topan Kam (2)] Taunsa has been held by this Court to be a town.

As for the question whether the building was not liable to pre-emption as part of it consists of a shop, this matter was not pressed before the lower Courts, although an issue was framed on the subject. It appears that the building is for all practical purposes a residential one, and the mere fact that a small part of it is used for a shop does not in any way alter its character.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 11, 16, 85—Raiyat at fixed rates, power of, to grant under-lease, extent of.

Section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which restricts the power of *raiya*t to grant under-leases, must be read along with sections 11 and 18 of the same Act, and, therefore, it does not apply to the case of a *raiya*t holding at a fixed rate of rent.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the defendant No. 1 against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated 3rd January 1917, reversing the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The plaintiffs brought the suit for recovery of possession of certain property after establishment of their title. The main point that has been taken in this appeal is this. The plaintiffs are the sub-lessees of a *raiya*t and the question that has been urged on behalf of the appellant before us is that the lease is in contravention of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and, therefore, incapable of being given in evidence. The persons through whom the plaintiffs claim, i. e., defendants Nos. 1 and 2, have been found as a fact to be *raiya*t holding at a fixed rate of rent. In the case of Hari Mohan Pal v. Atul Krishna Bose (1) it has been established that section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which restricts the powers of *raiya*t to grant under-leases, does not apply to the case of a *raiya*t holding at a fixed rate of rent, because section 85 has got to be read along with sections 18 and 11 of the same Act. We are bound by that decision and we do not see any reason to dissent from it.

The other point that is urged before us is that, having regard to the statement of the plaintiffs, as appears from the judgment of the primary Court, that one-fourth of the entire area belongs to the defendant Hochen Sardar, the Court has decreed too much of the property in favour of the plaintiffs. But that is not so. It is clearly shown by the judgment of the lower Appellate Court.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Where the extent of a recurring liability, such as the liability to pay rent, has been determined in one suit and other suits between the same parties as to subsequent periods have been decided on the authority of that decision while it was itself under appeal to a higher Court, the party who ultimately succeeds in the appeal from the first decision is

Appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in Original Suits Nos. 12, 14, 15, 18 to 20, and 11, 13, 16, 17, 21, 22 and 56 to 64 of 1916 respectively and second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, Kistna, in Appeal Suits Nos. 31 to 49 and 51 to 54 of 1916 respectively, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the Honorary Suits Deputy Collector, Bezwada, in Summary Suits Nos. 73 to 1 and 93 to 96 of 1915 respectively.

FACTS.—The second appeals here related to suits for rent by a Zamindar, while the first appeals were in connection with suits by tenants to recover excess rent paid.

As regards the latter, the original suits for rent were filed in the Revenue Courts, against which there were appeals and second appeals. The suits were before the Madras Estates Land Act was passed and while the Act of 1868 was in force. Under section 72 of that Act, the Revenue Courts had no jurisdiction, which was given only by section 52 of Act I of 1908. The Zemindar claimed waram rate. The High Court allowed it. Some of the tenants appealed to the Privy Council, which reversed the High Court's decrees. The present suits were by tenants to recover the excess paid by them, they not having been able to appeal against the High Court decrees, and the other suits by the Zemindar were resisted on the strength of the decision of the Privy Council. The earlier decision of the High Court is in Venkata Narasimha Nayudu v. Chinna Bapaya (1) and that of the Privy Council in Ravi Veeraraghavulu v. Bomma Devara Venkata (2). There were also subsequent decrees for rent by the High Court at waram rates prior and subsequent to the Privy Council decision.

The question was whether Ravi Veeraraghavulu v. Bomma Devara Venkata (2) operated as res judicata. The faslis to which these decrees related ranged from 1315 to 1323.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Iyengar, V. Ramadoss and P. Somasundaram, for the Appellants.—Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code applies only if the former decision was by a competent Court. And 'competency' means competency of the Court of first instance. See explanation II. Here the Revenue Court, which had no jurisdiction under Act VIII of 1865 then in force to try suits for rent, tried them in the first instance. And the mere fact that there were appellate decrees in the High Court and in the Privy Council cannot satisfy the test of competency.

[WALLIS, C. J.—If the rights of landlord and tenant inter se are finally adjudicated on, does not the doctrine of res judicata operate?]

No, competency of the Court of first instance is the test. See Malubhai v. Sursangji (3). See also Kidambi Venkatachariar v. Lakshmi Doss (4), Motari Seshayya v. Venkatadari Appa Row (5), Secretary of State v. Raiah of Venkatagiri (6) and Bommedevara Venkata v. Andavolu Venkataratnam (7).

At the most the decision will operate as res judicata only as regards the particular fasli or faslis to which it relates. The pattas and muchilkas have to be exchanged annually unless dispensed with altogether, which means that they are in force for a year only. The decisions are to the effect that the decree supplies the place of the contract for the year in question. It has no more value. See Kidambi Venkatachariar v. Lakshmi Doss (4) and Vedachata Gramani v. Boomappa Mudaliar (8). Farther subsequent decrees have been obtained for the subsequent faslis. The prior decrees, even if they have any unspent force, are superseded by the subsequent decree. See Second

ZEMINDAR OF PANGIDIGUDEM v. VENKATAPPAYYA.

Appeal No 2574 of 1913 followed in Joganadha Mudaliar v. Neeroy Audiah (9), Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (10).

Mr. Prakasam, for the Respondents.—The decision of the Privy Council is a final determination by a "Court" of the rights of landlord and tenant inter se. Explanation II to section 11 does not say that competency means competency of the original Court. The section, therefore, applies to the present case.

When a Court has once decided as to the rights in dispute in a particular way, that endures to the benefit of the party in whose favour it was decided for subsequent disputes. Other points may be raised and the suits may have to be tried in full. But so far as the right determined is concerned, the bar to trial is absolute. See Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (11), Rajah Nilmoney Singh Deo Bahadur v. Sharoda Pershad Mookerjee (12), Panchanada Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (13), Tangutur Subrayudu v. Yerramsetti Seshasini (14), Cunniah Mulaly v. Ringaswami Mudali (15), Shankar Vishnu Gokhale v. Raghunath Hari Dharap (16).

Section 72 of Act VIII of 1865 has been replaced now by section 52 of the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1903). By the latter, exclusive jurisdiction has been given to the Revenue Courts regarding suits for rent. But rights already existing are not disturbed by the new Act. And the right in question is one which has become vested by the decision of the Privy Council.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar.—The Privy Council have not made any declaration of rights. Nobody asked for it even. What they did was merely to decide the contract between landlord and tenant for the particular fasli or faslis in question. That being an adjudication only as regards particular faslis, I cannot get the rent for subsequent faslis by executing that decree. Fresh suits have to be brought and tried after fresh exchange of pattas and muchilkas every year. The contracts are fresh on every occasion. Therefore, there can be no res judicata. See also Rangayya Appa Rau v. Ratnam (17), Second Appeal No 403 of 1911.

The scope of section 52 of Act I of 1903 is discussed in Vadladi Jagannadha Bhupathi Deo Garu v. Paddala Appalasawmy (18) and Raja of Pithapuram v. Jonnalagodla Venkatasubba Row (19). The new Act may not disturb existing rights, but it does not confer the right if it did not exist.

The case in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (20) is fully discussed in Kishen Sahai v. Bakhtawar Singh (21). The question was whether the view of the majority or of the dissenting Judges is to be followed.

See also Waghla Ransangi v. Shaik Masud-din (22) and Mocraree v. Mahomed Akmal (23), in the latter of which a view contrary to that taken in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (20) is taken.

Mr. Prakasam.—Even if the Privy Council sat only as a Revenue Court of appeal, there is a clear finding of right which bars further question.

[WALLIS, C. J.—Supposing that Act I of 1908 had not been passed, do you mean to say that the decision of the Privy Council will endure for ever for your benefit in spite of the fact that you have to accept a fresh patta every year?]

Once the permanent arrangement is recognised by judgment, the acceptance of fresh pattas makes no difference. And the fact that the decision of the Privy Council was a reversal of only some of the decrees of the High Court does not keep the unappealed decrees intact. They are also superseded. No doubt Kishen Sahai v. Bakhtawar Singh (21) distinguishes Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (20). See also Ward & Co. v. Wallis (24).

Mr. Ramdass follows.—Section 72 of Act VIII of 1865 does not extend the operation of the judgment beyond the year or years concerned, after which it has not even evidentiary value. For the judgment simply supplies the place of the contract for the year and unless exchange of pattas and muchilikas is made every year, no suit for rent can be brought. See Kidambi Venkatachariar v. Lakshmi Doss (4) and Vedachala Gramani v. Boomiappa Mudaliar (8).

[KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—Suppose the Court settles in a particular year that you are entitled only to a money rent. Can you ignore the decision the next year and claim rent in kind?]

I can; see Rangayya Appa Rau v. Ratnam (17).

[KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The Privy Council say that you cannot. If you in your patta for a year say that the arrangement is to be perpetual, can you ignore that in another year?]

Nobody would say so and there can be no bar. For the contracts are fresh every year. Even a judgment under section 52, clause (3), will have force only until the next patta.

See also Bashyakarlu Naidu v. Gundapaneni Subbanna (25) and Shanmuga Mudaly v. Palnati Kuppu Chetty (26). Even if a decree is passed, the patta should be re-tendered, so that the decree does not supply its place. But if refused, the decree will be evidence, and not otherwise.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—In this case, a batch of appeals and a connected batch of second appeals have been argued together. The appeals are from decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada ordering the defendant Zemindar to refund to his tenants excess rents for Fasli 1316 and the following Faslis, which the Zemindar has recovered from them by suits on the authority of (24) (1900) 1 Q. B. D. 675 at p. 678; 69 L. J. Q. B. 423; 82 L. T. 261.

the decision of this Court in Venkata Narasimha Nayudu v. Ohinna Bapayya (1) between the same parties for Fasli 1315. When these suits were decreed, the decree of this Court was under appeal to the Privy Council, which reversed it in Ravi Veeraraghavulu v. Bomma Devara Venkata (2). The Subordinate Judge has decreed the suits on the authority of Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (11) as interpreted by the majority of the Bench in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (20). In Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Chowdhery (11) the defendant had brought two earlier suits against the plaintiff to recover his share of a debt which the plaintiff was entitled to recover from third parties. The first suit was for his share of the principal with interest thereon to the year 1821. The second suit was for his share in the subsequent interest. The Sudder Adalat decreed the first suit, and the second suit was decreed on the authority of the decision in the first suit and the money recovered while the decree of the first suit was under appeal to the Privy Council, which reversed the decree of the Sudder Adalat and remanded that suit. In these circumstances the Judicial Committee held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money which had been recovered from him in execution of the decree in the second suit. The judgment in the second suit, they observed, must be held to be subsisting and valid until it was reversed or superseded by some ulterior proceedings, and they held that in the circumstances of the case the decrees in the second suit as well as the decree in the first suit were superseded by their judgment in the appeal in the first suit. They observed that the order in Council clearly intended that all the rights and liabilities of the parties should be adjusted on the remand in the first suit, and that it would be in contravention of the order to permit the decree obtained while the appeal was pending to interfere with this purpose. Moreover, they observed that the decrees in the second suit rested on precisely the same cause of suit as the decree which was reversed by the Privy Council, and this though the interest sought to be recovered in the two suits was in respect of different periods. Consequently they considered that the decrees in the second suit must be held to be mere subordinate and dependent decrees and not to remain in force when the decree on which they were dependent had been reversed. The majority of the Full Bench in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (20) held that where the rate of rent had been fixed by decree for one year and rent for subsequent years had been recovered by the landlord from the tenant on the authority of that decision while it was under appeal to a higher Court which reversed it, the tenant was entitled to sue to recover the excess rent paid by him in the subsequent suits which were decided on the authority of the decision in the first case. The principle of this case would seem to be that where the extent of a recurring liability, such as the liability to pay rent, has been determined in one suit, and other suits between the same parties as to subsequent periods have been decided on the authority of that decision while it was itself under appeal to a higher Court, the party who ultimately succeeds in the appeal from the first decision is entitled to regard the intermediate decrees as superseded and to enforce his rights as regards the intermediate periods with reference to the decision in the first case. It may be that, as held in the dissenting judgment of Garth, C. J., the opinion of the majority is not fully covered by the authority of Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (11), but if in that case the decree in the second suit could be regarded as dependent on the result of the pending appeal as to the decree in the earlier suit, I do not see why the same view should not be taken with regard to the facts of Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (20) and of the present case. The decision of the majority in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (20) has been followed in this Court in Panchanada Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (13) and cited without disapproval in Kishen Sahai v. Bakhtawar Singh (21), and I am not prepared to differ from it, more especially as it appears not unsuited to the conditions of litigation in India, where rent suits, such as this, are of constant occurrence and unfortunately may well take eight years, as here, or even longer from their inception in the Revenue Court to the final decision by the Privy Council, and the landlord cannot be debarred from enforcing payment of his rent as it accrues due in the meantime. If this principle be accepted, the next question is whether it is applicable to the present case where the decree which went on appeal to the High Court and to the Privy Council was the decree of a Revenue Court in a suit under section 9 of the Rent Recovery Act, 1865, and settling the terms of the patta for Fasli 1315 including the rent which, when so settled, formed the statutory contract between the parties for that Fasli under section 72 of the Act, but were not binding as res judicata on the Civil Courts in suits to recover rent for other Faslis, as the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction in rent suits, as held in Second Appeal No. 408 of 1911 and Second Appeal No. 2574 of 1913.

Nonetheless the decision of the High Court on appeal from the Revenue Court in the landlord's favour, which being a decision in second appeal must be treated as a decision of law, was binding as authority while it was unreversed in the Civil Courts in the rent suits which subsequently came before them. Consequently in the rent suits which came before them while it was under appeal to the Privy Council, it was treated as settling the question and the suits were decreed in the landlord's favour. In these circumstances if the decision in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (20) is to be accepted, I see no sufficient reason for refusing to extend it to the present case. I do not think the fact that the Civil Courts decided the subsequent rent suits on the authority of the High Court decision between the parties which was then under appeal, and not as res judicata, is a sufficient reason for refusing to apply this rule if it is to be recognised at all. We have been referred to Kishen Sahai v. Bakhtawar Singh (21). In that case the landlord had sued in a Revenue Court to fix the rate of rent payable by the tenant, and obtained a decree. He then sued in a Revenue Court for the enhanced rate so fixed and obtained a decree, but subsequently the decree of the Revenue Court fixing the rate of rent was set aside by the Board of Revenue under the provisions of the local Statute. The tenants then sued to recover the rent which they had paid, contending that the decree for rent had been superseded by the decree of the Board of Revenue setting aside the decree fixing the rate of rent. The Board of Revenue in that case was not a Civil Court and its decrees were not binding as authority on the Subordinate Civil Courts, and that circumstance appears to me sufficient to distinguish that case from the present.

SUKAN SAO v. KARU MAHTON.

The question is one of considerable doubt and difficulty, but on the whole I have come to the opinion that the tenants, on reversal of the decree of the High Court by the Privy Council, became entitled to recover the rent which they have overpaid in the intermediate suits by reason of this decision. I think, however, the Subordinate Judge was wrong in assuming that the rate of rent fixed in the Revenue Court for Fasli 1315 has been decided to be the proper rent for succeeding Faslis. The decision of the Revenue Court only related to the contents of the patta for Fasli 1315: and all that the Privy Council decided was that the High Court had no sufficient grounds for disturbing this finding of fact. Now that the decree of the High Court has gone, it will, in my opinion, be necessary for the Court to find afresh what is the proper rate of rent with a view to ascertaining to what extent, if any, the plaintiffs are entitled to a refund. I would, therefore, reverse the decrees and remand the suits for disposal according to law. Costs will abide.

The connected second appeals relate to suits for the rent of a Fasli subsequent to the decision of the Privy Council. For the reason already given, I hold that the decision in the revenue suit for 1315 is not binding on the Civil Courts and, therefore, the decrees must be set aside and the suits remanded for disposal according to law. Costs will abide.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 120. (2a)—Recital in deed executed subsequent to 1883, admissibility of, to determine whether land is khudkasht—Khudkasht, meaning of.

A recital contained in a deed executed subsequent to 1883 that certain lands were the proprietor's private lands (khudkasht) cannot, in view of section 120 (2a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, be received in evidence for the purpose of showing that the lands were of that character. [p 654, col. 2.]

The term khudkasht does not conclusively connote proprietor's private land. [p 651, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk, Sami and Jagannath Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Wasi Ahmad, P. Banerjee and Sant Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sought for a declaration that an area of 8 bighas 5 kathas in village Sheikhpura and 1 bigha 10 kathas in village Makdumpur had been wrongly entered in the Record of Rights as the occupancy holding of the defendants 1st party, it being the Lakheraj Brahmottar Khudkasht land of the defendants 2nd party which the plaintiff had purchased, and in which, being Khamat, no occupancy right could accrue. A declaration was also sought that the defendants 1st party were merely temporary settlement holders and had no right to apply for commutation of rent under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The lands formed the ancestral property of the brothers Bishun Lal and Baldeo and their respective sons Gangadhar and Thakur. In 1886 Baldeo and Gangadhar, as representing the two branches, executed what was described as a satawa thika patta in favour of Jitan Mahton, father of defendants 1st party, in respect of 3 bighas 6 kathas and 13 dhurs of the land for ten years from 1204 to 1303 at a uniform annual rental of Rs. 12. Out of this sum Rs. 10 a year was to be appropriated by the lessees towards re-payment of the principal, without interest. The lease-holder was to enter into possession and cultivate the land or get it cultivated and at the end of the term was to give up possession.

On the 4th June 1897 (Jeth 1304 F. S.) Gangadhar and Thakur borrowed Rs. 850 from Jitan on the basis of patta and kabuliyat, whereby the 9 bighas 15 kathas of Khudkasht Brahmottar Lakheraj land were settled with Jitan for a period of nine years from the beginning of 1305 to 1313 F. S. Under these deeds it was agreed that Jitan was to cultivate the land and give half the produce to the lessor; at the end of the term he was to give up possession. Both this deed and the deed of 1886 stipulated that the lessee was to make no claim to an occupancy right.

Again in 1905 Gangadhar mortgaged the land to Karu, Jitan's son, for Rs. 400, and it is alleged by the plaintiff that on the 8th June 1908 Gangadhar settled it with one Baijnath Sahai for the purposes of cultivation, but as Jitan and his son were pressing for payment of the amounts due to them Baijnath was persuaded to give up his lease.

On the 3rd August 1909 Gangadhar settled the 9 bighas 15 kathas of land under a registered patta and kabuliyat with Karu for a zurpeshgi of Rs. 1,425, the amount found due on the previous bonds. Under this patta Karu was to pay half share of the produce to Gangadhar, who was to pay interest on the zurpeshgi at the Kalhan, seemingly out of the half share of produce he received. At the end of the term the lessee was to give up possession on payment to him of the principal of the zurpeshgi with interest due. Here too it was stipulated that there should be no claim to a right of occupancy.

In 1914 Gangadhar having died, his widow Musammatt Khurdev Kumari mortgaged the land to Karu for Rs. 300 and finally on the 27th June 1915 sold the lands to the plaintiff by a registered Kabala. The Record of Rights was finally published in Sheikhpura in January 1920 and in Makdampur in November 1909, showing the defendant 1st party, Karu, to be an occupancy tenant.

The plaintiff's case was that the land was Khudkasht, and was the proprietors' private land, in which no right of occupancy could accrue, and that by his purchase he had become proprietor; that the defendants 1st party had held the lands not as cultivating *raiya*s but as tenure-holders, and that in any case there had been break in the occupation of the land by the defendants 1st party.

The Subordinate Judge found that the Kabala on which the plaintiff relied was valid, genuine and for consideration, and that the sale was made by Musammatt Khurdev Kumari for legal necessity. He held, however, that there was no evidence on the record to establish that the land in suit was Khudkasht Khamat land, and that the recitals in the deed of 1886 and subsequent years, to the effect that the lands were Brahmottar Lakheraj Khudkasht, could not be received in evidence having in view the provisions of section 120 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He received the documents put in and came to the conclusion that the land had been settled with the defendants 1st party for the purposes of cultivation; that Jitan was a settled *raiya*t of Sheikhpura when he entered into occupation in 1306, and that the plaintiff had failed to prove that Gangadhar had himself cultivated the land in 1304 F. S. or had genuinely settled the land with Baijnath Sahai in 1315.

He decided that the patta of the 3rd August 1909 was a cultivating lease and did not create a tenure, so that there was no merger of the occupancy right, which he found the defendants 1st party had, into the superior tenure. He dismissed the suit and on appeal his decision was upheld by the District Judge.

The first point taken by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff appellant is that the lower Courts were mistaken in ruling out the recitals in the documents of 1886 and subsequent years as inadmissible for the purpose of showing that the lands are the proprietor's private lands. He argues that those recitals are admissible as evidence quantum valeat and that the fact that the documents were executed after 1883, makes no difference if section 120 (2) be rightly interpreted. In the present case, there is admittedly no evidence that the lands have ever been specifically styled khumar, zirat, sir, niy, niy got or khamat, or that they have been recognised by village usage under those names, so that we have to see who.

ther sub-section (2) of section 120 and the words therein "any other evidence which may be produced" will make the recitals admissible.

The various cases in which the construction to be put on these words has been discussed and decided have been reviewed by Mukherjee and Beauchcroft, JJ., in Ganpat Mahton v. Rishal Singh (1). In Nilmoni Chuckerbutti v. Bykant Nath Bera (2) it was held that "any other evidence" can only refer to evidence that prior to 1883 there had been transactions showing the land to be proprietor's private land. In SherBahadur Sahu v. M. H. Mackenzie (3) it was held that since evidence of letting before 2nd March 1883 was expressly made admissible, the Legislature must be taken to have intended to exclude evidence of letting after that date. In Ajodhya Prosad Singh v. Ram Golam Singh (4) Nilmoni Chuckerbutti v. Bykant Nath Bera (2) was followed; in this case it was held that the mere fact that the lands in suit were described as khudkasht would not in itself be sufficient to prevent the tenants from acquiring rights of occupancy in the lands, and that the landlord could not claim that the tenants were estopped by recitals in the leases, having in view the provision of section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The learned Judges in Ganpat Mahton v. Rishal Singh (1) express an opinion that the interpretation put forward in Nilmoni Chuckerbutti v. Bykant Nath Bera (2) is open to criticism as unduly restricting the generality of the expression "any other evidence that may be produced", and in our opinion, in a sub-section which merely directs a Revenue Officer as to the evidence for which he is to look in coming to a decision, such restriction is not justifiable, especially where the question is before a Civil Court. Lastly the case of Bhagtu Singh v. Raghu Nath Sahai (5) was referred to by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court. In that case it was held that admissions in a kabuliyat are evidence admissible under the Indian Evidence Act, whether made before or after 1883, though their probative value must depend on the facts.

(1) 33 Ind. Cas. 978; 20 C. W. N. 14.

(2) 17 C. 469 at p. 468.

(3) 7 C. W. N. 400.

(4) 4 Ind. Cas. 529; 13 C. W. N. 661.

(5) 1 Ind. Cas. 571; 13 C. W. N. 135; 9 C. L. J. 15.

Their Lordships did not comment on the correctness of this finding, for they decided the case of Ganpat Mahton v. Rishal Singh (1) on the ground that by the insertion of the new sub-section (2a) by the Amending Act of 1907, it was made clear that an admission made in the recital of an agreement between a landlord and his tenant after 1883 could not be considered by the Court. The question was considered but not decided in Masulan Singh v. Goodar Nath Pandey (6) but Harrington, J., expressed an opinion that an admission that the land was let after March 2nd, 1883, as Kamat was not sufficient, and that it was an admission made in a contract between the landlord and tenant, which under section 178 could not bar the tenant from acquiring a right of occupancy under the Act.

It seems clear to us that sub-section (2a) of section 120 was inserted by the Amending Act of 1907 specially to bar admissions made in agreements between the landlord and tenant, such as the one with which we are dealing.

We must hold that even if the wording of section 120 (2) does not make the recitals inadmissible, sub-section (2a) bars their admission and that the recitals in the deeds of 1880 and after cannot be taken into consideration.

It is to be noted that the recitals do not refer to the land as zerait, kamat or sir, but as khudkasht, and the use of this word does not conclusively connote proprietor's private land.

It is next contended by Mr. Manuk that the documents of 1886 and 1897 conferred the rights of a tenure-holder and not a raiya interest. The document of 1886 is called a thika satawa patta and settles the land with defendants 1st party on an annual rental of Rs. 12, and the lessee is to cultivate it himself or get it cultivated by others, and to take the whole of the produce; no interest is payable on the surpeshgi advance.

The patta and kabuliyat of 1897, called Karindgi, provide that the lessee, having entered into possession and fully cultivated the land, shall pay half the produce to the lessor and that "the proprietor of the said land neither has nor shall have any concern or claim to the raiya share." These two documents then show that the land was to be cultivated by the lessee and rent was to be paid in the one case in cash and in the other in kind; the patta and kabuliyat of 1897 clearly expressed a raiya settlement, and removed doubts as to the nature of the previous deed. The mere fact that care was taken to stipulate that an occupancy right would not be claimed, goes to show that the parties had in contemplation a raiya settlement.

(6) 1 C. L. J. 456.

The last point taken before us is that the years 1304 and 1314-1315 are not covered by the lessees of 1885 and 1897 and that the lower Courts have wrongly thrown the onus of proof of occupation during those breaks on the plaintiff. With regard to 1304 the Subordinate Judge found that the evidence of the defence was sufficient to prove that defendants 1st party were in possession that year, and that the plaintiff had failed to prove his possession. The Court had the full evidence of both parties before it and the question of onus hardly arose.

It is pointed out that the period of the lease of 1897 was from 1305 to 1313 and that of the lease of 1909 was from 1316 to 1324, and that while the Courts below have found that the defendants were in possession from Jeth 1315 to Jeth 1316 they have come to no finding about possession from the end of 1313 to Jeth 1315. The Subordinate Judge has come to a finding that in 1316 the defendants 1st party were in possession as occupancy *raiya*s and the patta and kabuliyat of the 3rd August 1909 (1316) (Exhibits 3 and 4) show that the defendants had been in possession up till then. Considering that the settlement operations were going on during 1315, if any one else had been in possession at that time we should have found some entry as to that either in the khana-puri or attestation stage. The finding that the defendants 2nd party were in possession in 1316 as occupancy *raiya*s would connote a finding that they were in possession in 1314 and 1315.

For the reasons given above, we see no reason to interfere and, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 318 OF 1916.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 15, 115, O. II, r. 2, O. VII, r. 10—Applicability of s. 15—Suit, whether can be transferred to Court of lower grade after it has been properly instituted—Relinquishment of claim, what amounts to—Plaint, return of, for presentation to proper Court, when can be ordered—Appeal—Appellate Court, refusal of, to hear appeal—Revision—High Court, interference by.

The mere fact that in the course of the trial of a suit the plaintiff is found to be entitled to a part only of the relief claimed by him and that that part would have been within the competency of a Court of a lower grade, if the suit had originally been confined to it, gives no authority to the Court under section 15 of the Civil Procedure Code to transfer the suit to a Court of a lower grade, as once a suit is properly instituted and is legally pending, the operation of the section is exhausted. The section depends for its application upon what is actually claimed in the plaint filed, and not upon what ought to have been claimed or is found after trial to have been claimable. [p. 656, col. 2.]

The relinquishment by a plaintiff of a portion of his claim under Order II, rule 2 (1), of the Code refers primarily to the relinquishment before the institution of the suit, and the rule has no application to any part of a dismissed claim abandoned in appeal. No such abandonment can affect appellate jurisdiction. [p. 656, col. 2; p. 657, col. 1.]

After a claim has been tried and dismissed, the mere fact that an appeal is made only as to a part of it, does not involve an admission that the suit was wrongly instituted so as to justify the procedure laid down in Order VII, rule 10, of the Code, as this rule only applies when it is found that a suit as originally framed was wrongly instituted, and the abandonment of a claim pendente lite cannot be given retrospective effect so as to vitiate the institution of the suit. [p. 657, col. 1.]

The refusal by a District Judge to hear an appeal amounts to a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law, and is open to revision under section 115 of the Code. [p. 657, col. 2.]

Application for revision of the order of the District Judge, Raipur, dated the 13th September 1916 against the order of the Munsif, Dhamtari, dated the 25th March 1919.

ORDER.—This case is a useful illustration of the absurdity to which the law can be reduced by a want of accuracy in the reading of it, and an insufficiency of common sense in the application of it. The facts are simple and may be stated briefly. The plaintiff and the defendant are co-owners of a certain village in the Dhamtari Tahsil of the Raipur District, the defendant being the Limbardar. The plaintiff instituted a suit against the defendant on the 23rd December 1913 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Raipur, claiming Rs. 1,152-13-0 as his share of the profits for the years 1907-08 to 1912-13 inclusive. On the 14th April 1915 the Sub-Judge dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiff appealed from this decree to the Court of the Divisional Judge, Chhattisgarh Division, but in respect of Rs. 450 only. The Divisional Judge remanded the case for re-trial in respect of this claim. So far the law had been correctly applied; but at this point the Subordinate Judge, actively misled by the Pleaders on both sides, made the initial blunder which has led to the deadlock which I am about to remove. Finding that the plaintiff had accepted his decree as to Rs. 702-3-0 of the original claimed and that only Rs. 450 remained in controversy, he considered that the further progress of the suit should be made in the Court of a Munsif. Therefore, he returned the plaint "for presentation to the proper Court." Presumably he considered himself justified in making this order by section 15 and Order VII, rule 10 (1), of the Civil Procedure Code. At any rate there is no other provision of that Code in which any foothold can be found for it. The plaint was presented to the Munsif of Dhamtari, who tried the suit and gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 381-9-4 on the 25th March 1916. From that decree both parties presented appeals to the District Court. The learned Judge, considering that he had no jurisdiction over the appeals owing to the value of the subject matter of the suit when originally instituted, returned the memoranda "for presentation to the proper Court." The parties then carried their appeals to the Divisional Court. Here also they found the door closed against them, the learned Divisional Judge holding that the District Court was the proper venue for the appeals. The memoranda were returned once more "for presentation to the proper Court." Between this Scylla and Charybdis of technicality, the parties have made their way to this Court through the narrow passage afforded by section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff's application has been registered as Civil Revision No. 285 of 1916, and the defendant's application as Civil Revision No. 318 of 1916. This order, made in the latter because the governing orders of the Courts below have been recorded on the defendant's appeal, will govern the disposal of both cases.

As I have already stated, the root blunder was made by the Sub-Judge when he returned the plaint in a suit properly instituted and legally pending before him. This order involved an inaccurate interpretation of section 15 of the Code. That section requires that every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it. Once the institution has taken place in accordance with this provision, the operation of the section is exhausted. The section gives no authority for any transfer of a pending suit, merely because in the course of the trial the plaintiff is found to be entitled to a part only of the relief claimed by him and that part would have been within the competency of a Court of lower grade if the suit had originally been confined to it. Here the plaintiff sued for Rs. 1,152-13-0, and section 15 of the Code was completely satisfied by the institution of the suit in the Court of a Sub-Judge.

We have now to deal with Order VII, rule 10 (1), of the Code. That rule reads thus:—

"The plaint shall at any stage of the suit be returned to be presented to the Court in which the suit should have been instituted."

In this connection it is necessary to refer to Order II, rule 2 (1), and Order VI, rule 17, of the same Code. The former allows a plaintiff to relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court. This provision finds place in an Order which deals with the frame of the suit, and, in my opinion, refers primarily to relinquishment made before institution of the suit. This seems clear from the language of clause (2). At any rate the rule has no application to any part of a dismissed claim abandoned in appeal. No such abandonment can affect appellate jurisdiction. Under the Central Provinces Courts Act, 1904, appeals lie from Courts irrespective of the value of the subject-matter in appeal.

No doubt Order VI, rule 17, of Act V of 1908 is sufficiently wide to allow of an amendment of the plaint involving a relinquishment of a part of the original claim, so as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the Court asked to try it, if as originally laid the claim was beyond its jurisdiction or subject to two or more jurisdictions. It may also be the law, though I refrain from recording any obiter dictum on the point, that a claim may be amended before trial so as to bring Order VII, rule 10, into operation and make a return of the plaint necessary. But I hold without hesitation that after a claim has been tried and dismissed, the mere fact that an appeal is made only as to a part of it, does not involve an admission that the suit was wrongly instituted so as to justify procedure under Order VII, rule 10. That rule only applies where it is found that a suit as originally framed was wrongly instituted. An abandonment of a claim, pendente lite, cannot be given retrospective effect so as to vitiate the institution of the suit. The rule laid down by section 15 of the Code depends for application upon what is actually claimed in the plaint filed, and not upon what ought to have been claimed or is found after trial to have been claimable.

In this case the suit, as originally framed, was instituted in the Court of lower grade competent to try it, namely, the Court of the Sub-Judge. That Court dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed in respect of Rs. 450 only, an amount within the competence of a Munsif. Under section 15, clause (b), the appeal was properly carried to and decided by the Divisional Court. Suppose that the Sub-Judge had given the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 450 and the defendant had appealed; that appeal would also have been one for the Divisional Court because "the value of the suit" was Rs. 1,152 13 0. When the case was remanded by the Divisional Judge, it was still the same suit, and the Sub-Judge was bound to dispose of it. On objection by the defendant followed by application from the plaintiff—objection and application being made orally by the Pleaders—the Sub-Judge returned the plaint for presentation to a Munsif. This return was clearly wrong. Whether it was ultra vires is a question which I leave to be decided in appeal before I deal with it. The Munsif accepted the plaint and thereby permitted the institution as a fresh suit of a suit left unfinished by the Sub-Judge. Whether the Munsif had jurisdiction to try the case is another point which must be decided in appeal before it is finally determined by this Court. But, rightly or wrongly, with jurisdiction or without, the Munsif has made a decree. Under section 15, clause (a), of the Central Provinces Courts Act, 1904, appeals from that decree lie to the District Court, and there is no alternative. If that decree is ultra vires, still it is only the District Court which can set it aside and order the Munsif to return the plaint for presentation to the Court of the Sub-Judge. If the District Court should so decide the Sub-Judge will be bound by that order. On the other hand, it may be said that the Munsif has only tried a claim, however irregularly laid, for Rs. 450 within his competence, and that his proceedings are saved by section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code. In that case the District Judge must dispose of the appeals on their merits.

It is thus clear that the Divisional Judge was right and the District Judge was wrong in refusing the appeal. The orders of the District Judge, amounting to a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law, are open to revision under section 115 of the said Code, and must be set aside.

For the above reasons the order of the District Judge refusing to accept and adjudicate upon the applicant's appeal is set aside, and he is directed to receive and register the said appeal and to dispose of the same according to law. I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—These four appeals are against decrees of the District Judge of Patna, dated the 27th February 1917. The suits related to Mouza Maksuspore Erazi Mokadammi Sakri Azrakbe, Touzi No. 18/916. This estate was sold for arrears of revenue in September 1903. It was purchased by the plaintiff in the name of her Mukhtar-am Sidhu Narain Lal, who after the purchase executed a deed of release in her favour. The sale has since been confirmed, and the plaintiff's case is that between the sale and the delivery of possession the late proprietors fraudulently got their names registered as tenure-holders. She accordingly prayed for annulment of whatever rights the previous proprietors had and for possession. The defendants, who are the previous proprietors, claim to be permanent tenure-holders.

The suits were dismissed in the Court of first instance but on appeal to the District Judge they were decreed, the learned District Judge holding that the defendants were co-sharer Malikhs whose share had been sold along with the rest of the estate at the time of the revenue sale. The defendants have appealed.

It is not denied that if these defendants are co-sharer proprietors, there can be no question of the correctness of the learned District Judge's decision. But it is contended in the first place on behalf of the appellants that they are permanent tenure holders who are protected under the first exception to section 37 of Act XI of 1858. Without at present considering the question of whether the defendants are in reality tenure holders or not, this contention can only succeed if they have held at fixed rates from the time of the permanent settlement. Now it is admitted that the defendants first got settlement in 1849, but it is urged that this was the date of the first permanent settlement of this Mahal and this settlement is the permanent settlement which is referred to in the first exception to section 37. It is, in my opinion, impossible to accept this contention. In the body of the section and in the second exception the word "settlement" occurs. This obviously means, and it has been held in many decided cases to mean, the settlement whenever it is made, but in the first exception to the section the words used are "the permanent settlement" and it was obviously intended that these words should mean something different from the word "settlement" used in the rest of the section. These words, in my opinion, can mean nothing but the Permanent Settlement of 1793 and in this view I am supported by the decisions in Rai Ohunder Chowdhury v. Shaikh Busheer Mahomed (1) and Nagendra Lal Chowdhury v. Nazir Ali (2). The learned Vakil for the appellants relies on the case of Hamed Ali Sadagar v. Atlas Ali (3), but it is by no means clear that in that case the learned Judges were dealing with the first exception to section 37 and if they were, I must differ from their view. The defendants, therefore, are not, in my opinion, protected by the first exception.

It has been urged somewhat half-heartedly that if the defendants are not protected by the first exception, they are protected by the second exception to section 37, which refers to "tenures existing at the time of settlement which have not been held at fixed rates." It is clear, however, from the kabuliyat which was executed by these defendants (Exhibit B-1) that this was a permanent tenure and that the rate of rent was fixed and as I understand the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellants, the contrary contention has been abandoned.

It has, however, been contended that even if the defendants are permanent tenure-holders at fixed rates and although they do not directly come within the first exception to section 37, the plaintiff is not entitled to annul the under-tenure because it was created by Government and that, therefore, cannot be annulled under section 37. There is no authority for such a contention and in my view it is untenable. It is only under the first exception to section 37 of Act XI that a permanent tenure holder at fixed rates can claim protection and as the defendants do not come within this exception, I cannot see how they can be protected.

The learned District Judge has, however, found that the defendants are not under-tenure-holders but are Mufassil Talukdars who obtained their settlement under clause 2 of section 10, Regulation VII of 1822. There is no denial that this is so, but it has been urged by the learned Vakil for the appellants that a settlement under clause (2) is not, as has been found by the learned District Judge, a settlement with the defendants as Zemindars but as under tenure holders. On a reading of clause (2), however, it cannot, in my opinion, bear this interpretation and the correct view of the position of the defendants as Mufassil settlement-holders under this clause is described in the case of Bandhu Acharia v. Nathni Bahar Singh (4), in which it was remarked: "It is clear, therefore, that if a joint settlement is made under clauses 2, 3, and 4 (that is of section 10, Regulation VII of 1822), all the Malguzars are jointly responsible for the payment of the Government revenue although the Mahal is under the management of one of them as an agent or Sudar Malguzar, and if default is made by the agent or manager or Sudar Malguzar, the entire tenure is liable to sale; but even in these cases the terms of the settlement may provide that the entire tenure will not be liable to sale by reason of the default of the agent or manager or Sudar Malguzar to pay the revenue. In the case of a settlement under clauses 2, 3 and 4 where settlement is made with a Sudar Malguzar who represented all the persons interested in the property, his default makes the entire tenure liable for sale unless there is a provision to the contrary in the settlement." If this view is correct, as in my opinion it is, the defendants were co-proprietors with the Sudar Malguzars from whom the plaintiff purchased and at the sale their share also passed. In the result then I would dismiss these appeals with costs.

ABUL RASHID MANDAL v. SHAHARALI MOLLA.

The period of 15 days allowed by section 66 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act for payment of arrears of rent in an ejectment suit should be reckoned from the date of the decree of the first Court. The fact that an appeal has been preferred against that decree would not affect the matter, as, so long as the appeal is pending, the only decree capable of execution is the decree under appeal. JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of suits for rent brought by the plaintiffs, who were non permanent tenure-holders, against the defendants.

The defence, so far as concerns these appeals, was that the plaintiffs' right as tenure-holders had come to an end in consequence of a decree for ejectment which had been obtained against them by the superior landlord, Maharaja Sir Pradyot Kumar Tagore, and in execution of which the Maharaja had obtained possession of the tenure against the plaintiffs.

It appears that the present plaintiffs, who were the defendants in the suit for rent brought by the superior landlord, did not pay the amount within fifteen days of the decree. After the appeal was filed, the execution proceedings taken by the Maharaja were stayed by the Court of Appeal below allowing the defendants (present plaintiffs) to deposit the decretal amount within 15 days, but they did not do so.

Possession of the tenure was delivered to the Maharaja in execution and the amount was realised by attachment of moveables. After the appeal was dismissed, the present plaintiffs deposited the decretal amount in Court within 5 days of the decree of the Appellate Court. They then brought the present suits.

The Court of first instance decreed the suits. On appeal the lower Appellate Court dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs for the period subsequent to the date on which the superior landlord obtained possession in execution of the decree under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court, and the main contention raised on their behalf is that the right of the plaintiffs was subsisting by reason of the fact that the amount ordered to be paid was paid within 15 days of the decree of the Appellate Court.

We do not think that this contention is correct.

Section 66 provides for ejectment of a tenant not being a permanent tenure-holder (and certain other classes of tenants) for arrears of rent, and sub-section (2) of the section provides that in a suit for ejectment for an arrear of rent a decree passed in favour of the plaintiff shall specify the amount of the arrear and of the interest (if any) due thereon, and the decree shall not be executed if that amount and the costs of the suit are paid into Court within 15 days from the date of the decree, or, when the Court is closed on the fifteenth day, on the day upon which the Court re-opens.

The question is, what is meant by the words "date of the decree" in sub-section (2) of section 66 of the Act?

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that it means the final decree in the case, and we are referred to the cases of Noor Ali Chowdhuri v. Koni Meah (1), Nam Narain Singh v. Lala Raghunath Sahai (2) and certain observations of Banerjee, J., in Bhola Nath Bhattacharjee v. Kanti Chundra Bhattacharjee (3) in support of the contention that when there is an appeal against a decree, the words "date of the decree" mean the date of the decree of the Appellate Court, because that is the final decree in the case. But the question is whether the defendant in a suit under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is entitled to pay the amount of the decree within 15 days of the Appellate Court's decree, even in cases where the decree of the Court of first instance has been executed before the appeal is disposed of.

So long as the appeal is not disposed of, the decree of the Court of first instance is the only decree to be executed and it cannot be said to be superseded by the decree of the Appellate Court so long as the appeal is not disposed of. At the time, therefore, when the decree under section 66 was executed by the Maharaja, it was a valid decree and the only decree which was capable of execution. The defendants (present plaintiffs) had defaulted to pay the money as provided by section 66; and we do not see how in these circumstances the present plaintiffs were entitled to deposit the money after the decree of the Appellate Court and to get rid of the proceedings which had taken place under the decree of the Court of first instance. The cases relied upon on behalf of the appellants do not support their contention.

In the case of Noor Ali Chowdhuri v. Koni Meah (1) the learned Judges held that "inasmuch as the appellate decree must be presumed to incorporate the terms of the original decree and was the only decree of which execution could be taken, the tenant (judgment-debtor) having paid the decretal amount within 15 days of that decree was protected from ejection." But the learned Judges further observed at page 16 of the report that "it was of course open to the decree-holder to take out execution of the original decree at any time before it was superseded by the decree in appeal. Not having done so, we are unable to see that he has any real grievance because the terms of the appellate decree have been complied with by the appellant."

The decision in Nam Narain Singh v. Lala Raghunath Sahai (2) also proceeds upon a similar ground. That was a case under section 88 of Act I of 1879, the provisions of which are similar to those of section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and the learned Judges in that case held that in a case where the decree of the original Court was not executed pending the appeal to the higher Court, the words "date of the decree" in the latter part of section 88 of Act I of 1879 ought to be read "as the date of the final decree; that the decree of the Appellate Court was the final decree and the only decree capable of execution, and the payment of the decretal amount having been made within 15 days of that decree the application for execution was rightly disallowed."

In both the two cases, the decree of the Court of first instance had not been executed before the appeal was decided and the tenant having paid the decretal amount within 15 days of the appellate decree, the landlord could not object to the same, nor execute the decree of the Court of first instance after the payment had been made.

The case of Bholi Nath Bhattacharye v. Kanti Chundra Bhattacharye (3) related to a mortgage decree. Banerjee, J., distinguished the case of Noor Ali Chowdhuri v. Koni Meah (1) on the ground that "the provision for stay of execution upon payment of arrears forms no part of the decree; it is a provision contained in the Rent Law; that law enacts that if payment is made within 15 days from the date of the decree, execution should be stayed and the Court held that the date of the decree there meant the date of the final decree in the case." The learned Judge observed, "that may be so, but there is no reason why a decree for foreclosure should be taken subject to any similar limitation." The question, however, whether the words "date of the decree" in section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act should be construed to mean the date of the appellate decree, even where the decree of the Court of first instance has been executed before the disposal of the appeal, was not a matter for consideration, and was not considered by Banerjee, J., in that case.

It is urged before us that the fact, that the decree of the Court of first instance was executed before the disposal of the appeal, ought not to make any difference and that, as a matter of construction, the defendant in a suit under section 66 is entitled to pay the decretal amount within 15 days of the date of the decree, which means the appellate decree.

If this contention were accepted, it would follow that the decree of the Court of first instance cannot be executed so long as the appeal is not disposed of; because it cannot be held that proceedings in execution of a decree under section 66 of the Act passed by the Court of first instance and under which the defendant is ejected and possession delivered to the landlord, must be set aside if the tenant pays the decretal amount within 15 days of the appellate decree, although that decree is one of dismissal. We think that such a construction would be unreasonable, because it would then be in the power of the defendant by preferring an appeal to annul all the proceedings taken under a decree which, so long as it is not superseded by the decree of the Appellate Court, is a good and valid decree.

We are accordingly of opinion that the lower Appellate Court is right in holding that the rights of the plaintiffs, came to an end under the decree obtained by the superior landlord against them.

There remains to consider one short point, namely, that all the present plaintiffs were not parties to the decree in the suit by the Maharaja. It appears, however, that that suit was brought against all the registered tenants and that the plaintiffs who were left out, were not registered tenants. That being so, the contention fails.

The appeals are dismissed with costs.

Appeal and revision from a decision of the District Judge, Shahabad, dated the 19th March 1918.

Mr. Ram Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and H. N. Sahay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Second Appeal No. 837 of 1918 and Civil Revision No. 161 of 1918 are directed against the decision of the District Judge of Shahabad dated the 19th March 1918, and arise out of Suit No. 132 instituted in the Court of the Munsif for recovery of Bhaoli rent in respect of 123 mango trees for 1320 and 1321 F.

The plaintiffs are co-sharers in respect of two annas in the patti of 8 annas in which the trees in question are situate. The suit was in respect of the share of the plaintiffs, with a prayer in the alternative for the entire rent in case the separate collection of rent by the plaintiffs was not proved. The other landlords in the patti were accordingly made pro forma defendants.

The plaintiffs alleged that the rent was taken by appraisement of the produce and produced the Danabandi Chithas shewing the estimate of the yield during the years in suit. The tenants on the other hand stated that the rent was paid by actual division of the crop according to Batai system and that the share of the plaintiffs was taken by them. The tenants defendants also pleaded that the plaintiffs' names were not registered and hence the suit for rent could not lie.

The Munsif held that the plaintiffs' names were entered in register D, Exhibit 5, and this question has now been set at rest. He also held that the rent was payable by Danabandi system as alleged by the plaintiffs and entered in the Khatian, and not according to Batai system as alleged by the defendants, and that the defendants had failed to prove payment of the rent to the plaintiffs or the pro forma defendants, the co-sharer-landlords in the years in suit, and that the collection of the two annas share of the plaintiffs in the patti was not separate. Upon these findings the Court decreed the suit for rent for the entire 8-annas share in full according to the Danabandi papers produced by the plaintiffs. Against this decision the defendants appealed to the District Judge.

The District Judge held that the entry in the Record of Rights that the system for payment of rent was Danabandi was wrong and that the rent payable was by Batai system. The learned District Judge considered it immaterial to go into the question whether the rent was actually paid or not and dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs, inasmuch as they failed to prove the system by which the rent was payable. The plaintiffs have, therefore, come to this Court in second appeal and have also filed an application in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code in case the second appeal was to be held incompetent.

On behalf of the respondents it has been contended that the second appeal to this Court is barred by section 153 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The contention appears to be sound, inasmuch as the rent claimed was in respect of Rs. 97 odd. The plaintiffs no doubt in the first instance claimed a decree in respect of their share of the rent which amounted to Rs. 24 odd for the years in suit, on the allegation that the collection was separate. The Munsif held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for their share only as they failed to prove separate collection and the Munsif, therefore, gave effect to the alternative prayer in the suit, for the entire rent which amounted to Rs. 13. The claim in this case should, therefore, be deemed to be in respect of Rs. 93 odd. The appeal to the District Judge was, therefore, competent and was not barred by clause (b) of section 153 inasmuch as the claim was above Rs. 50. But the claim being for less than Rs. 100, the second appeal to this Court from the decree of the District Judge is incompetent. This would be so irrespective of whether the rent claimed is payable in money or in kind, or whether the claim is made by a co sharer-landlord making the other co-sharers pro forma defendants to the suit or by the 16-annas landlords. There was at one time a conflict of authorities in the Calcutta High Court with regard to a suit brought by a co sharer-landlord with regard to his share of the rent or with regard to the entire 16-annas rent making the other co-sharers pro forma defendants; but the later decisions seem to have settled the point in question: vide Bhagabati Devi v. Nanda Kumar Chuckerbutty (1), Sital Chandra Bhat-tacharjee v. Shishir Aflullin (2). In my view these later decisions are in consonance with the scope and object of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and are supported by the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Raja Pramada Nath Roy v. Raja Ramani Kanta Roy (3). I, therefore, uphold the contention of the respondents and dismiss the second appeal to this Court as being barred by section 153 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The plaintiffs seeing this difficulty have also come up in revision. The finding of the Court below that the rent was payable by Batai system being a finding of fact, cannot be and is not seriously challenged in this Court. The ground urged for the exercise of the revisional powers of this Court is that the District Judge failed to exercise jurisdiction in declining to decide the question whether the rent for the years in suit was actually paid or not. Upon the pleas taken by the defendants an issue was framed by the Munsif as to whether the defendants' plea of payment was true (issue No. 4). This issue was decided by the Munsif against the defendants, holding that the tenant defendants absolutely failed to prove payment to the plaintiffs or pro forma defendants of the rent for the years in suit. The learned District Judge declined to go into the issue in view of the finding that the system for realisation of rent was by division of the produce and not by appraisement. This view appears to be wrong. Whatever be the system for the realisation of rent it appears to me that the defendants were bound to pay the share of the produce due to the landlords as rent. The Danabandi papers have been accepted to be true by both the Courts below and if the defendants failed to prove the payment of rent alleged by them to the landlords, the plaintiffs would be entitled to a decree in the suit on the basis of the Danabandi papers unless the tenant-defendants were able to prove by satisfactory evidence what was the actual produce during the years in suit. It was, therefore, incumbent upon the District Judge to decide whether as a matter of fact the plea of payment was true or not. In this view the District Judge refused to exercise jurisdiction and hence his decision is liable to be set aside in revision.

The application in Civil Revision No. 161 of 1918 is, therefore, allowed and the decree of the District Judge is set aside, and the case is sent back for a decision on the plea of payment raised by the defendants and for disposal of the case in accordance with the result of the finding on Issue No. 4 framed by the Munsif. Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144, O. A Court has inherent power to order restitution in a case not covered by section 144, Civil Procedure Code, for the obvious reason that where a Court by a temporary injunction deprives a person of what he is legally entitled to, it should ex debito justitiæ restore that which he has thus lost and also compensate him for the profits which he has been precluded thereby from earning [p. 665, col. 1.]

Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to a case to which section 144 applies. A suit, therefore, for mesne profits following on an application for restitution to possession is not precluded. [p. 665, cols. 1 & 2.]

Possession under a temporary injunction is not wrongful for the purposes of Article 109 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and as that article is confined to suits, it is inapplicable to an application for restitution. Article 181 provides the period within which such an application must be made, [p. 665, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decision of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, in Civil Appeal No. 164 of 1918, dated the 15th January 1919, arising out of Miscellaneous Case No. 31 of 1918, in the Court of the Munsif, Wardha, dated the 17th July 1918.

Mr. D. P. Tiwari, for the Appellant,

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of an application for mesne profits accrued during the five agricultural years 911 12 to 1915-6 from absolute occupancy field No. 109 of Mouza Khairi. The facts of the litigation will be found set out in great detail in the judgment of the District Judge, Wardha, delivered on the 19th February 1914, in Appeal No. 333 of 1913. A copy of this judgment is filed in Second Appeal No. 289 of 1914 decided by Batten, Additional Judicial Commissioner, on the 27th January 1915, by which the case was remanded to the District Judge for a fresh decision of the first appeal. The District Judge after further inquiry decided the appeal to his Court in accordance with his first decision, with the result that the plaintiff Radha's claim with regard to the aforesaid field was dismissed. From this second decision an appeal (Second Appeal No. 503 of 1916) was preferred but was dismissed on the 17th January 1917. Meanwhile the defendant Sakhu had on the 21st February 1916 applied to be put in possession of field No. 109 and she was reinstated after the District Judge on the 9th September 1916 decided Appeal No. 199 of 1916 in her favour. In his judgment the District Judge found that when the plaintiff sued for a declaration that she was solely entitled to field No. 109 aforesaid and also to certain other fields and prayed that the entry in the recent settlement recording the defendant as co-sharer in all those fields to the extent of 8 annas should be cancelled, the defendant was in possession of field No. 109 and that she had been removed in accordance with the two temporary injunctions obtained by the plaintiff on the 4th October 1911 and the 6th November 1912, respectively. The following table will show the relationship between the parties:—

The result of the plaintiff's suit was a decision that No. 109 of Khairi belonged exclusively to the defendant Sakhu by virtue of a compromise, whereby the parties settled a dispute which arose soon after the death of Goklaji who had survived Krishna. The application of the 31st January 1918, out of which this second appeal arises, purports to be preferred under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, i. e., to be for restitution after reversal of a decree. The non-applicant Radha objected that section 144 has no application and that the claim for mesne profits is time-barred and in any case should have been joined with the prayer for possession previously granted. Both the lower Courts have held that while section 144 is not in terms applicable, the applicant Sakhu has an equitable right to the compensation claimed and that the Court has inherent power to grant her this relief without relegating her to a separate suit. They also held the application to be governed by Article 181 of the Limitation Schedule and, therefore, to be within time.

The first ground of appeal is based upon a misconception of the view taken by the lower Courts as to the applicability of section 144, Civil Procedure Code. I am inclined to agree that the respondent's application does not fall within the strict terms of that section. The appellant Radha's plaint made no claim either for possession or mesne profits and the relief she obtained from the trial Judge was merely a declaration and injunction. There is, however, ample authority for the view that the Court has inherent power to order restitution in cases not covered by section 144. The obvious reason is that the Court, having by its temporary injunction deprived the respondent Sakhu of what she was legally entitled to, should ex debito justitiæ restore her to the possession which she had thus lost and also compensate her for the profits which she had been precluded from earning.

The next contention pressed is that Sakhu should have applied for the mesne profits when she moved for reinstatement in possession. Rule 2, Order II, First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, is relied on in this connection. If section 144, Civil Procedure Code, applied to the application under consideration, the rule cited would have no application: see Somusundaram Pillai v. Ohokalinga Pillai (1). If it be taken that the application does not fall under section 144, the question arises whether the rule cited being applicable under section 141, Civil Procedure Code, would preclude a suit for mesne profits following upon a suit for possession. Upon this question the weight of authority is against the appellant and is in accord with the view as to the nature of a claim for mesne profits which has hitherto obtained in the Court: see Bhairao Prasad v. Sangaram Singh (2), Lalson Babui v. Janki Bibi (3), Ponnammal v. Ramamirida (4) and Paramsukh v. Yadoji (5). The second contention, therefore, fails.

It remains to deal with the question of limitation, and as to this it is urged that Article 109 of the Limitation Schedule applies. To this the answer seems to me to be that the appellant Radha's possession under the temporary injunctions granted by the trial Judge cannot be regarded as wrongful for the purposes of the article relied upon. It may be true that the respondent Sakhu might have brought a separate suit for possession or mesne profits or both before Radha's suit was decided, but this cannot affect the position that Radha's possession begun in 1911 was based upon injunctions issued by the Court and with Sakhu's consent. It has also to be observed that Article 109 applies to suits, whereas what we are here dealing with is an application for restitution to which Article 181 appears to be applicable. The application was filed on the 31st January 1918, which is within three years of the District Judge's second decree dismissing Radha's claim, and I agree with the lower Appellate Court in thinking that Sakhu's right to restitution must be taken to have revived on the date of that decision (30th August 1915), even if it arose to begin with on the date of the District Judge's first decision (19th February 1914).

All the appellant's contentions are thus overruled and the appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Appellate Court, power of, to take additional evidence when to be exercised.

Rule 27 (b) of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code does not mean that in order to enable an Appellate Court to pronounce judgment in favour of a particular party, additional evidence should be admitted in appeal; it means only that where it is impossible to pronounce judgment at all on the evidence, the Court may call for a witness [p. 666, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Mozuffarpore, dated the 15th March 1918, reversing a decision of the Munsif, Sitamarhi, dated the 26th January 1917.

Messrs. S. P. Varma and Sambhu Saran, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lachmi Narain Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who was Thiccadar of an eight-annas share in Mouza Akhta, at the expiry of his lease sued the four defendants, who are recorded as tenants of the holding, for the rent in arrears for the years 1318—1321. The defendant No. 1, who alone contested the suit, pleaded that since the publication of the Record of Rights the holding had been split up and that he had by purchase added to his separated lands. He pleaded too that he had paid the rent due from him in full.

The Munsif in a careful judgment found that the receipts filed by the defendant to prove his payment were genuine and showed recognition by the plaintiff of the splitting up of the Jama by accepting rent from the defendant. He came to the conclusion that the collection papers put in by the plaintiff were forged, and that the plaintiff's witness, the Patwari, who denied his signature on the receipts, was not telling the truth. The Munsif dismissed the suit. The plaintiff's Patwari, who was alleged to have written the receipts, did not appear on the date of hearing before the Munsif to deny his writing, although he had been present in Court on previous occasions.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the Patwari to appear before him and give evidence on the ground, it seems, that the plaintiff had sought for the issue of a warrant to secure his attendance, but had been refused by the lower Court. On the strength of the Patwari's denial of his writing the receipts, and on the ground that the receipts were the only evidence on which the defendant based his defence, the Subordinate Judge found that the defendant had failed to substantiate his plea and decreed the plaintiff's appeal.

The first ground taken by the appellant is, that the lower Appellate Court wrongly allowed the Patwari to give evidence. Order XLI, rule 27, states the grounds on which such additional evidence may be received on appeal. There must be the necessity for the evidence of the witness in order to allow the Court to pronounce judgment or there must be some other substantial cause.

In the present case in my opinion there was no such necessity, nor was there any substantial cause.

The Munsif had shown that the Patwari had been present up to the date of hearing and had filed collection papers at a very suspiciously late stage of the case.

Recognizance had been taken from the witness for his appearance on the 29th of August 1916 and the witness appeared on that date. The plaintiff did not take any other steps to secure his further appearance till the last date of hearing, when the case was a year old.

The reasons given by the Munsif for refusing to issue a warrant appear to me to be quite satisfactory, and there was no substantial cause for allowing the Patwari to appear to give evidence on appeal in view of the reasons which had been given. The evidence of the Patwari was not necessary to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment; there was quite sufficient material on the record. Rule 27 (b) of Order XLI does not mean that, in order to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment in favour of a particular party, additional evidence should be admitted on appeal; it means only that where it is impossible to pronounce judgment at all on the evidence, the Court may call for a witness, Kalika Dutt Mandar v. Tulsi

HATHISINGH v. KUBER JETHA.

Mandar (1). In this case the Subordinate Judge has decreed the appeal simply because the Patwari has denied his writing of the receipts, and gives no good reasons why the Patwari's evidence should be believed. Reasons were especially necessary, since the Munsif had given good reasons for believing the collection papers to be forged.

On the ground that the Appellate Court was not entitled in this case to take additional evidence on appeal and to base its finding on that evidence, the present appeal must succeed. It may further be stated that the Subordinate Judge's statement that the Munsif's finding was solely based on the receipts is not accurate. The Munsif found that another co sharer Malik had recognised the splitting up and this gave him the additional cause for coming to his finding.

The appeal is allowed with costs. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Munsif is restored.

Appeal allowed.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), s. 135 J, whether retrospective—Record of Rights, entry in—Presumption of correctness.

The provisions of section 135J of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, which was enacted by Act IV of 1913, are not retrospective, and the presumption contained in that section does not, therefore, apply to entries made before 1913.

Appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge at Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 313 of 1914, reversing the decree passed by, and remanding the suit to, the Subordinate Judge at Godhra, in Suit No. 70 of 1913.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. H. Mehta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It appears from the judgment of the learned Joint Judge that he has presumed certain entries in the Record of Rights to be true. Those entries were made originally in 1905-06, and were repeated in 1912-13. The revenue years end on the 31st March. Therefore, the latter entry in the Record of Rights must be taken to have been made prior to the 31st March 1913. Bombay Act IV of 1913, which amended the Land Revenue Code and superseded the original Record of Rights Act of 1903, enacted that a new section 135J should be added to the Land Revenue Code, providing that "an entry in the Record of Rights and a certified entry in the register of mutations shall be presumed to be true until the contrary is proved or a new entry is lawfully substituted therefor." That Amending Act did not receive the assent of the Governor-General in Council until the 28th May 1913, which would be in the revenue year 1913-1914, subsequent to the year in which the last entry relied upon by the learned Judge was made. We do not think that the provisions of section 135J, which have just been read, can be retrospective with regard to entries which for the purpose of determining the rights of the parties were until after the year 1913 innocuous. The appellants' Pleader has, therefore, successfully shown that the decree of the learned Judge has been influenced materially by evidence or by a presumption which he ought not to have made. For these reasons we must remand the case to the learned Judge, directing him not to give effect to the presumption in section 135J with regard to entries made prior to the operation of the Amending Act of 1913. If the entries in the Record of Rights are still relied upon as of any probative value, the defendants should be allowed to give rebutting evidence with regard to the facts recorded therein, as the entries themselves appear to have been admitted at a very late stage. The learned Judge should consider the evidence already recorded, and such further evidence as may be given, in the light of the remarks in this judgment. We set aside the decree and remand the case for disposal to the lower Court. Costs in the cause.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), ss. 12, 13—Arbitration for making award.

A Court has power, under section 12 of the Arbitration Act, to extend the time for making an award, even though there has been an order of remission and the award has in fact been made, and this power is not limited by section 13 of the Act. [p. 670, col. 1]

Appeals from the orders of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, dated the 13th March 1919.

Mr. N. Sircar (with him Mr. S. O. Bose), for the Appellants.

Sir B. C. Mitter (with him Mr. S. N. Bannerjee), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—These are two appeals by the appellants from two orders made by Chaudhuri, J., on the 13th March 1919, in respect of two applications which were heard together.

The facts material to the matters before the Court are as follows:—

A dispute arose between the parties with reference to a contract relating to the purchase of Hessian cloth.

In pursuance of the terms of the contract, the dispute was referred to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and, on the 14th June 1918, an award was made in favour of Tejpal Jamunadas.

On the 22nd July 1918, the award was remitted to the said Chamber by Greaves, J., in order that evidence might be taken. I have not a copy of the order before me, but I understand that no time for making the fresh award was mentioned in the order, and consequently by reason of section 13 (2) of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, the fresh award should have been made within three months after the date of the order remitting the award. The fresh award, which was in favour of Tejpal Jamunadas, was made on the 24th October 1918.

In the learned Judge's judgment, the award is stated to have been made on the 25th October, but according to the papers before me, it was in fact made on the 24th October.

This was two days beyond the three months allowed by the above-mentioned section.

On the 25th October 1918 it was sent by the Registrar of the Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce to the Registrar of the High Court.

In due course it was filed and, on the 18th November 1918, one C. C. Basu on behalf of Tejpal Jamunadas wrote to B. Nathmull & Co., and demanded payment of the amount awarded. On the same day B. Nathmull & Co. obtained a Rule calling upon Tejpal Jamunadas to show cause why the award should not be set aside.

On the 27th November 1918 Tejpal Jamunadas obtained a Rule calling upon B. Nathmull & Co. to show cause why the time for making a fresh award should not be extended until the 31st of October 1918.

The two Rules were heard together. The learned Judge discharged the Rule for extension of time, and directed that the award should be set aside.

The learned Judge was of opinion that a great deal of delay was caused in consequence of the absence of witnesses on behalf of B. Nathmull & Co. and said he would have liked very much to refer this matter to the Chamber again because the whole case had been heard by them.

He, however, came to the conclusion that he had no power to enlarge the time after the award had been made and said that he regretted to have to come to the conclusion that under section 13, clause (2), he had no power to remit such an award: consequently he set aside the award.

Tejpal Jamunadas appealed against both the orders of the learned Judge; the appeal against the order of the learned Judge refusing to extend the time stood first in the list and was numbered 21.

The two appeals were heard together.

Sir B. C. Mitter, on behalf of the respondents, took the point that there was no appeal from Chaudhuri, J.'s order, by which he discharged the Rule for extension of time, inasmuch as it was not a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

TEJPAL JAMUNADAS V. B. NATHMULL & CO.

It was not disputed that there was a right of appeal against the learned Judge's order by which he set aside the award.

It was contended on behalf of the appellants that the discussion as to the right of appeal in Appeal No. 21 was academical, inasmuch as there was admittedly a right of appeal in Appeal No. 22, and the reasons for the setting aside of the award, given by the learned Judge, must be considered; that the learned Judge would not have set aside the award if he had thought he had power to extend the time; that the Court of Appeal under Order XLI, rule 33 has power to pass any decree or make any order which ought to have been passed or made; and, consequently, that the Court of Appeal, if it thought right, could, in Appeal No. 22, make an order extending the time, and so make the award effective.

In my judgment, the point is purely a technical one: the applications, though two in form, were heard as one matter, and the substance of it was, that the appellants were alleging that the award could be made effective provided the Court would extend the time; the respondents, on the other hand, were alleging that the award was incapable of execution and was incapable of being turned into an effective award by an order of the Court.

The learned Judge set aside the award, because he was of opinion that he had no power to extend the time or to remit the matter to the arbitrators. The appellants contend that he had power to extend the time.

If we were to accede to the respondents' contention that this Court could not go into the question of the Court's power to extend the time, this Court would be in the position that it could entertain an appeal from the learned Judge's decision to set aside the award but it could not consider his reasons for that decision and, further, that if it did consider his reasons, and even if it came to the conclusion that his reasons were ill-founded and that he had power to extend the time, still the Court could not interfere with his decision in that respect because there was no right of appeal from his order refusing to extend the time.

This would lead to a most unreasonable result. In my judgment, even if there is no appeal against the order refusing to extend the time, which I do not decide this Court in considering the Appeal No. 22, which is against the order setting aside the award, must consider the learned Judge's reasons for his decision; and if the Court comes to the conclusion that the learned Judge's reasons were ill-founded and that he was wrong in holding that he had no power to extend the time, and so make the award effective, this Court would have power to make an order for extension of time under Order XLI, rule 33.

The first question to be considered on the merits of the appeal is whether the Court has power to extend the time. As I read the learned Judge's judgment, it is clear that he would have extended the time for making the award if he had power so to do; but he came to the conclusion that he had no such power and he based his decision on the judgment of Harington, J., in Shib Krishna Dawn & Co. v. Satish Ohunder Dutt (1).

This case, however, depended upon the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. The case which I have now to consider depends upon the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act and, in my judgment, it is not covered by the case cited.

Section 12 of the Indian Arbitration Act provides that the time for making an award may, from time to time, be enlarged by order of the Court, whether the time for making the award has expired or not.

The Court, therefore, has power to enlarge the time, though the time for making the award has expired, as in this case.

It was, however, contended that this power could not be exercised by the Court after the award was made. In my judgment this is not so.

Section 9 of the English Arbitration Act, 1889, is, in all material respects, identical with section 12 of the Indian Arbitration Act and with reference to that section it was decided by the Court of Appeal in Knowles & Sons, Ltd. v. Bolton Corporation (2) that the Court had jurisdiction to extend that time for making an award although the award had been in fact made, and in my judgment under section 12 of the Indian Arbitration Act the Court has the power to extend the time, though the time for making the award has expired and even though the award has been in fact made.

The above was not strenuously disputed; but it was urged on behalf of the respondents that the jurisdiction given by section 12 could not be exercised by the Court, after the award has been remitted, as it was in this case, under section 13 of the Act. It was argued that, having regard to the position of section 13 in the Act, and to the fact that it came after section 12, and having regard to the express terms of section 13, the time for making the fresh award was limited to the three months mentioned in the section, unless at the time of the order of remission the Judge, who made the order, otherwise directed.

In my judgment this contention is not well-founded, and I think the power given to the Court by section 12 to enlarge the time is not limited in the manner suggested and may be exercised from time to time, and even after the award has been remitted by the Court to the arbitrators.

It was then urged that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had not followed the English cases, and reference was made to the case of Raja Har Narain Singh v. Ohaudhrain Bhagwant Kuar (3). This case was the basis of Harington, J.'s decision in the case already referred to.

It was decided entirely upon the construction of the Civil Procedure Code then in force, and in the Judicial Committee's judgment it is pointed out that the construction of the section of the Code could not be much aided by analogies drawn from the sections of the English Common Law Procedure Act.

As already stated, the present case does not depend upon the provisions of the

Civil Procedure Code, but upon the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, and in my judgment the case cited does not govern the present one.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the learned Judge had power to enlarge the time for making the fresh award, even though there had been an order of remission and the award had been in fact made.

It remains to consider whether the learned Judge should have enlarged the time. I have already said that it is apparent from the learned Judge's judgment that he would have enlarged the time, if he had considered that he had the power so to do, and the merits of the appellants' application to enlarge the time have not been seriously disputed in this Court, and, in my judgment, the time for making the fresh award should be enlarged until the 31st October 1918, in accordance with the appellants' application; so that the award, which was made on the 24th October 1918, should be effective.

The result is that, in my judgment, these two appeals, which are in reality one appeal, should be allowed with costs; the two orders of the learned Judge should be set aside and the time for making the fresh award should be enlarged until the 31st October 1918, and the award should be restored to the file. The respondents must pay the appellants' costs of the proceedings before Chaudhuri, J. WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Execution of decree—Sale, application to set aside, whether can be made to officer conducting sale.

TIPANGAYDA v. RAMANGAYDA.

An application under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an auction sale must be made to the Court. [p. 671, col. 2.]

The Collector or other officer conducting the sale is not the "Court" within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 89 of the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, an application under that rule made to the Collector or other officer cannot be considered as having been properly made. [p. 671, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 4 of 1916, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Haveri, in Miscellaneous Application No. 60 of 1915.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaonkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This was an application by the judgment-debtor to have an auction sale held by the Mamlatdar of Hangal set aside under Order XXI, rule 89, on the ground that he had deposited in the Mamlatdar's office Rs. 154-12-10, including 5 per cent. of the purchase money, and had applied to the Mamlatdar to set aside the sale that was held on the 15th April 1915, but was referred to the Civil Court. As the Court was closed and re-opened on the 19th May, the period of limitation expired on the 19th May, but the application was not made until the 13th July. It was then argued that the application to set aside the sale made to the Mamlatdar was an application to the Court, and that, therefore, it was within time. The trial Judge disallowed the application, and this order was reversed on appeal, mainly on the authority of Mathuji v. Kondari (1) where it was held by the Court that the application and deposit to a Revenue Officer should be looked to on the question of limitation. That decision was under section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and the learned Judges thought that having regard to the words of that section the essential fact upon which the action of the Court was to depend was the deposit within thirty days, and not the fact that the application was to have been made within that period. But now the period of limitation for an application to set aside a sale is transferred from the Civil Procedure Code to the Limitation Act, and it is expressly provided that such an application must be made within thirty days from the date of the sale. It has been argued that the Collector or the Mamlatdar or the Revenue Officer executing a decree comes within the definition of the word "Court," so that this application was made within time. Now it is obvious that the Revenue Officer under the rules passed under section 320 of the old Code, which are still in force, has no power to consider an application to set aside a sale. If the application be made to the Collector or other officer within the time limited by law, then he should refer the applicant to the Civil Court. That, as I read rule 17 of the rules, means that the Collector or other officer cannot be considered as a Court within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 89, or the corresponding section 310A of the old Code, and, therefore, the judgment debtor who presents his application to the Collector cannot stop limitation running against him, unless after having been referred to the Civil Court he presents his application there within thirty days. He is not protected by section 14 of the Limitation Act, which only excludes time during which a party has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of Appeal against his opponent. But I see no hardship in this. It is quite clear that the application to set aside the sale must be made to the Court. The party desiring to make that application has thirty days within which to make it. If he makes it to a Collector or a Revenue Officer so shortly before the period of limitation expires that he has no time to go to Court, then that is his own fault. Here in this case there is no hardship whatever. The judgment-debtor had over a month in which to present his application to the Court after he had been referred to the Court by the Mamlatdar, and he did not choose to present his application until July. In my opinion, therefore, the order of the lower Appellate Court was wrong. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court with costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree. Primarily an application under rule 89 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code must be made to the Court. The application in this matter was undoubtedly made to the wrong person in the first instance, and not made to the Court until long after the time allowed, unless the Collector or the Mamlatdar can be regarded as authorized to receive such applications on behalf of the Court. We are asked to infer such authorization from rule 17 of the rules. It seems to me this rule can best be read as meaning that the Collector should not receive applications, but should return them to any one presenting them to him with an intimation that the persons presenting them must go to the Civil Court. On that interpretation of rule 17 it follows that this appeal must succeed, and I agree with the order proposed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 50 (2), 115—Tenant recorded as occupancy tenant, whether entitled to presumption under s. 50 (2).

A tenant who is recorded in the Record of Rights as an occupancy ryot is, by reason of the provision of section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, not entitled to the benefit of the presumption arising under section 50 (2) of the Act.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Patna.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Appellant.
Messrs. Bimla Charan Sinha and M. S. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—These appeals arise out of suits for enhancement of rents. The suits were partially decreed in the Court of first instance. On appeal the whole of the suits have been dismissed. The landlords have appealed.

The first point that arises in the suits is whether a tenant who has been recorded as an occupancy raiya is, or is not, entitled in view of section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to the presumption arising under section 50 (2) of that Act. The learned Subordinate Judge, following the decisions in the Secretary of State for India v. Kajimuddi (1) and Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Umed Ali (2), which was followed by Mullick, J., in the case of Pirithi Ohand Lal Choudhry v. Sheikh Mohamed Tahir (3), has decided that section 115 does not stand in the way of the tenants. The decisions in Secretary of State for India v. Kajimuddi (1) and Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Umed Ali (2) have been dissented from in the Full Bench ruling in Pirithi Ohand Lal Choudhry v. Basarat Ali (4), and this decision has been followed in the case of Pandit Harihar Persad Bajpai v. Ajub Misir (5) and in Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Faizuddi (6) and in Guru Charan Nandi v. Sarab Ali (7). In my opinion the view taken in the Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court or the later decisions of that Court is the correct interpretation of the law.

We are asked, however, in view of the further remarks made in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge not to interfere with his decision. All that he has said is that it has been submitted that as all the lands have deteriorated on account of the sluice gates and there is no supply of sufficient water on the lands, no enhancement should be allowed. Without discussing the matter, he says "there is much force in this contention." It is perfectly clear that he has really not considered this question but that his whole decision is based on his finding with regard to section 115. His decision as to whether the lands deteriorated or not, is not in accordance with law. I would, therefore, set aside these decrees and would remand the appeals for re-hearing. Costs to abide the result.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1861), s. 193—Sanction to prosecute granted by Munsif—Order affirmed by District Judge—High Court, whether can interfere—Sanction to prosecute for perjury, when to be granted—Perjury, conviction for, when can be upheld—Practice—Patna High Court, whether bound to follow practice of Calcutta High Court.

Where sanction to prosecute given by a Munsif is confirmed on appeal by the District Judge, the High Court has power to interfere with the order of the District Judge under section 195 (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 677, col. 1.]

Where there is great delay in applying for sanction to prosecute for perjury, and where the Magistrate would have to determine the question by merely weighing the evidence on both sides, sanction ought not to be granted. [p. 677, col. 1.]

No person can be convicted under section 193 of the Penal Code except on proof that it is impossible that the statements of the party accused made on oath can be true. [p. 677, col. 1.]

Where there is a general practice sanctioned by concurrent decisions in the Calcutta High Court, the Patna High Court will not depart from it. [p. 674, col. 1.]

Civil criminal revision against the order of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 17th July 1919, refusing to revoke in appeal the sanction granted by the Munsif, Patna, on 17th February 1919, for the prosecution of the petitioners under various sections of the Indian Penal Code.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order of the District Judge of Patna refusing to revoke a sanction granted by the Munsif under section 195 of the Code to prosecute the petitioners under section 193, Indian Penal Code, for making certain statements before the Munsif in a suit before him.

The first question which I have to consider is, what is the power of this Court to interfere with the order of the District Judge? Clearly the order is not an order in a criminal case, and, therefore, this Court has no power to revise that order under the revision section of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is conceded that the power exists under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and under section 107 of the Government of India Act, but it is argued that circumstances which would attract the jurisdiction of this Court under the Civil Procedure Code or under the Government of India Act are not present in this case, and that, therefore, this Court will be loath to exercise its jurisdiction under these provisions. The only other section under which power may exist is section 195 itself. Is there any power under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to interfere with the orders of the District Judge? That is the substantial question which I have to decide.

If I had to decide this point for the first time, I would have considerable difficulty in holding that there is any power under the Code to interfere with the order of the District Judge when the District Judge approves of the course taken by the Munsif either in granting sanction or in refusing sanction. Clause (6) of section 195 runs as follows: "Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate....." If there was nothing else in section 195, then, in my view, there would be ample power in the High Court to revoke a sanction granted by the Munsif, because there cannot be any doubt that the Munsif is subordinate to the High Court. But clause (6) must be read together with clause (7), which gives a statutory meaning to the word 'subordinate' which, in my judgment, it is impossible to ignore. The material portion of clause (7) runs as follows:—"For the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie....." The use of the word 'deemed' is significant. It implies that the position deliberately created by clause (7) may not be true outside section 195 and may be purely artificial, but that, for the purpose of section 195, a Munsif's Court is subordinate only to that Court to which appeals from the Munsif's Court ordinarily lie, and to no other Court. Therefore, the short point is, to which Court do appeals from the Munsif's Court ordinarily lie? Only one answer is possible to the question, and that is, to the Court of the District Judge and not to the High Court. Therefore, it would appear that the only Court which can revoke a sanction granted by the Munsif is the Court of the District Judge.

But it was argued that, as the Court of the District Judge is clearly subordinate to the High Court, this Court is competent to set aside an order passed by the District Judge under section 195. The answer to this argument seems to be that section 195, clause (6), merely gives a power to revoke a sanction granted by the sanctioning Court or to grant a sanction refused by the sanctioning Court. Can it be said, in this case, that the District Judge has granted a sanction for the prosecution of the petitioners? In my opinion, it cannot. No doubt if the District Judge had differed from the Munsif, then his order would be an order either granting or refusing sanction, and the High Court would have power under clause (6) of section 195 to interfere with the order of the District Judge. It is on this ground that the judgment of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Muthuswami Mudali v. Veeni Chetti (1) can be supported. But where the District Judge merely affirms the order of the Munsif, it is difficult to see how he can be said either to grant or refuse sanction, giving to the High Court any power to interfere under section 195.

But whatever my opinion may be as to the construction of section 195, clause (6), it seems to me that I am conclusively bound by a construction put upon that clause by the Calcutta High Court and long acquiesced in, not only by that Court, but, so far as I can see, by this Court ever since its creation. In this Court we have adopted the principle that, where there is a general practice sanctioned by concurrent decisions in the Calcutta High Court, we will not depart from it in Patna. If, therefore, Mr. Sen is right that the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court is to assert its jurisdiction with reference to applications made before it against orders of District Judges approving of sanction granted by the Munsifs, then, speaking for myself, I would be loath to depart from that practice, merely because I would construe section 195, clause (6), differently.

What, then, is the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court in this respect? The learned Assistant Government Advocate refers me to a case reported as Hamijuddi Mondol v. Damodar Ghose (2) in support of his contention that there is no such settled practice of the Calcutta High Court in this respect. In that case, the Calcutta High Court took the view that it was powerless to interfere under section 195 with an order of the District Judge revoking a sanction for prosecution granted by a Munsif. But Mr. Justice Rampini, who was a party to this decision, himself took another view in the later cases. In the case of Habibur Rahman v. Munshi Khodabux (3) Rampini, J., held that, where a sanction to prosecute given by a Munsif was confirmed on appeal by the District Judge, the High Court had power to interfere under section 195, clause (6). The point was again debated in the case of Girija Sankar Roy v. Benode Sheikh (4). Mr. Justice Rampini was again a party to this decision. The learned Vakil who appeared to show cause expressly relied upon Hamijuddi Mondal v. Damodar Ghose (2) for the proposition that the High Court was powerless to interfere under section 195, clause (6). Rampini, J., distinguished that case in these words: "That was a case in which it was held that the High Court cannot interfere, under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, with an order of the District Judge revoking a sanction for prosecution granted by a Munsif. But the present case is one in which the District Judge affirmed the sanction, and did not revoke it. We think we have the power to interfere with such an order under sub-section (6) to section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure." I do not profess to understand the distinction which was made by that learned Judge, but the Madras High Court is probably right in pointing out that the decision in Hamijuddi Mondol Damodar Ghose (2) rested on the ground that an order revoking a sanction to prosecute was not a refusal of a sanction within the meaning of sub-section (6). Whatever may be the basis of Hamiyuddi Mondol v. Damodar Ghose (2), that case, at any rate, is no authority for the proposition that the High Court has no power to interfere with an order of the District Judge approving of sanction granted by the Munsif. The view of Rampini, J., who was a party to the decision in Hamiyuddi Mondol v. Damodar Ghose (2), is clear and decisive on this point.

The next case to which I shall refer, the case of Emperor v. Har Prasad Das (5), is of importance in that it lays down the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court in this respect clearly and unambiguously. What was really in debate in that case was the power of the High Court to interfere with orders under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code by Civil and Revenue Courts. Holmwood, J., in his order of reference to the Full Bench, said as follows:—"Our own view of the matter in a recent case was that there was no question as regards the jurisdiction of the High Court in sanctions under section 95. There it is expressly laid down that any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate, and in the case of an Assistant Settlement Officer the Special Judge would in the first instance deal with the matter, and in the event of its going further, the Civil Bench of the group to which the case belonged. It is the settled practice in this Court to treat cases under section 195 by way of appeal, and no question as to the revisional powers of the Court or the powers under the Charter arises". Holmwood, J., presided for a long time over the Criminal Bench of the Calcutta High Court, and his authoritative statement as to the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court in this respect cannot be ignored.

There is another case to which I must refer, the case of Ram Prasad Malla v. Raghbar Malla (6) on which the learned Assistant Government Advocate strongly relied. In that case, the District Judge revoked a sanction granted by the Munsif, but directed prosecution under section 476 of the Code. Having regard to the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Begu Singh v. Emperor (7) the course adopted by the learned District Judge could not be justified, and the High Court had no difficulty in setting aside the order under section 476. But the High Court was clearly of opinion that the order of the District Judge revoking the sanction granted by the Munsif was an erroneous order. It had, therefore, to consider the question whether it had any power to set aside the order of the District Judge revoking a sanction granted by the Munsif. The case, it will be seen, fell expressly within the ruling reported as Hamiyuddi Mondol v. Damodar Ghose (2), from which the learned Judges could not differ without referring the point to the Full Bench. And they solved the difficulty by interfering under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. This is the whole decision, and I am at a loss to understand how it may be said to assist the arguments of the Assistant Government Advocate. The head-notes* are entirely misleading, but the actual decision is a clear intimation of the disagreement of the learned Judges with the view expressed in Hamiyuddi Mondol v. Damodar Ghose (2). The case is certainly not an authority for the proposition that the High Court is powerless to interfere with the order of the District Judge approving a Munsif's sanction.

I think Mr. Sen is clearly right in his contention that it is the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court to exercise its jurisdiction in respect of applications made before it against the orders of District Judges approving of sanction granted by the Munsifs. I cannot say that this practice is against the Statute law of the land, for, though I would construe clause (6) differently, the Calcutta High Court has undoubtedly taken the view that approval of sanction operates as giving of sanction and that, therefore, the High Court has power to interfere with the orders of District Judges. The question is whether I ought to depart from this construction of section 195 which has been acquiesced in uninterruptedly for a large number of years. In my view, I ought not, unless there is any decision of this Court which directs me so to do.

This brings me to the Full Bench decision of this Court to which I was a party in the case of Lalji Tewari v. Emperor (8). The learned Assistant Government Advocate strongly relies upon the following passage in the judgment of Atkinson, J., with which I agreed: "Sanctions granted or refused by a Small Cause Court may come before this Court in its revisional jurisdiction under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or possibly under section 107 of the Government of India Act, but not certainly under the provisions of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which is self-contained and marks out and defines the procedure applicable in its own terms." The sole question for our decision in that case was, to what Court could an application, with respect to a sanction given or refused by a Court of Small Causes under section 195 of the Code, be made for its revocation or grant, as the case may be? The point that was in debate before the Full Bench was, to what Court is the Court of Small Causes subordinate? The Full Bench decided that the Court of Small Causes is subordinate to the Court of the District Judge, and that, therefore, the District Court is the proper Court to review the order of a Provincial Small Cause Court granting or refusing a sanction passed under section 195 of the Code. This is the only decision of the Full Bench and is of course binding on me. It is worthy of notice that Atkinson, J., based his decision largely on the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court in this respect, and it will be useful to cite the following passage from his judgment: "It has been stated more than once by distinguished Judges of this Court that where a uniform course of practice existed referable to particular legal principles in the Province of Bengal before the partition, that then this Court would recognise such practice in the administration of law in this Province" Mr. Justice Atkinson proceeded to say as follows: "Therefore, on the grounds of continuity from long established practice I would have thought that in this Province at least a new departure would not have been hastily embarked on without consideration, which was inconsistent with the prior existing practice prevailing in old Bengal when the present Province of Bihar and Orissa fell within its jurisdiction."

The passage cited from the judgment of Atkinson, J., on which the Assistant Government Advocate strongly relies, represented our view of section 195, clause (6), but the question which has been argued before me was never in debate in the Full Bench case. There was no argument advanced to us on this point, no cases were cited on the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court in this respect, and we were not asked to consider whether, if and when the District Judge approved of the sanction granted by the Court of Small Causes, there would be any power in this Court to interfere with the order of the District Judge. Had the case been argued before us from this point of view, it would have been difficult for us to depart from a construction of section 195 long acquiesced in by the Calcutta High Court, since we based our decision largely on the practice that prevailed in Calcutta before the partition. I still adhere to the view which I expressed in that case, but, when the point comes before me expressly for decision, I find it impossible to ignore the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court in this respect. The expression of our opinion on this point in the Full Bench Case was in the nature of an obiter dictum and is of no binding authority. In this connection, I may cite the following valuable passage from the speech of Halsbury, L. C., in the case of Quinn v. Leatham (9): "There are two observations of a general character which I wish to make, and one is to repeat what I have very often said before, that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it."

I hold that this Court has power to question the propriety of the order of the District Judge approving the sanction granted by the Munsif.

The next point is, ought I to interfere in this case? In my view, I ought to interfere. There was great delay in this case in applying for sanction. In my opinion, the petitioners have been prejudiced by this delay, inasmuch as the serving peon is now dead. The whole point in the case is, was summons in a Small Cause Court suit served on the opposite party or not? The case of the petitioners is that summons was served. This is denied by the opposite party. There cannot be any doubt that the serving peon would, if he were alive, be an important witness in the case. It is argued that delay is of no consequence when the Crown applies for sanction. That may be so, but still I have to see whether, in this case, delay has prejudiced the petitioner. In my opinion, it has. In the next place, it cannot be shown in this case with any certainty that the statements made by the petitioners must necessarily be false, as it could if the petitioners had made two contradictory statements. No person can be convicted under section 193, except on proof that it is impossible that the statements of the party accused made on oath can be true. I have always taken the view that sanction to prosecute for perjury should not be lightly granted in cases like this, where the Magistrate would have to determine the question by merely weighing the evidence on both sides.

I would set aside the order passed by the learned District Judge and revoke the sanction granted by the Munsif.

Order set aside.

ABDUL SALAM—APPLICANT

versus

RAMNEWAL SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 179, 181 (2)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 406—Criminal breach of trust—Offence, what constitutes—Offence committed at one place, whether can be tried at another—Jurisdiction.

The gist of the offence of criminal breach of trust is the dishonest misappropriation, conversion or disposal of the property: the loss to the complainant is a consequence of the breach of trust and not necessarily an integral part of it. [p. 678, cols. 1 & 2.]

Complainant authorised the accused to withdraw certain money belonging to the complainant at Rangoon and to transmit it to him at Maymyo. The accused withdrew the money but failed to remit it to the complainant. He was prosecuted for criminal breach of trust at Maymyo:

Held, that inasmuch as the money had been received, retained and misappropriated at Rangoon, the Rangoon Courts alone had jurisdiction to try the case. [p. 679, col. 2.]

Mr. C. H. Campagnac, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. N. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Ramnewal Singh, contractor of Maymyo, filed a complaint against Abdul Salam of Rangoon before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Maymyo, charging him with criminal breach of trust under section 406 of the Penal Code.

Complainant's case was that he deposited Rs. 9,000 with the Superintendent of Police Supplies, Rangoon, in connection with tenders for certain contracts.

He gave Abdul Salam a power-of-attorney to withdraw this Rs. 9,000 from the Superintendent of Supplies, on an express agreement that he was to remit half the money to complainant at Maymyo and deposit the other half as security for a rice contract with the Superintendent of Police Supplies. The accused drew the money but failed to remit or bring any to Maymyo and failed to account for it.

The allegation is that accused has misappropriated the money and that part of it has been paid without authority to one Haji Rahamat Ulla.

The alleged breach of trust took place in Rangoon. Objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate at Maymyo, but the Magistrate on the authority of Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (1) held that section 179 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gave him jurisdiction.

Accused is at present within the local limits of the appellate jurisdiction of this Court, which is now asked to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and decide under the provisions of section 185 of the Criminal Procedure Code by what Court the offence should be tried.

Section 181 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that the offence of criminal misappropriation or of criminal breach of trust may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused person, or the offence was committed.

According to the allegations of complainant the money was received, retained and misappropriated in whole or in part in Rangoon and, therefore, there is no doubt that under section 181 (2) the Rangoon Courts have jurisdiction to try the case.

It is argued, however, that under section 179 the case is triable in Maymyo, because the failure to remit the money to complainant there has caused a loss to him at Maymyo.

Section 179 runs as follows: "When a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done, and of any consequence which has ensued, such offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done, or any such consequence has ensued."

If section 179 is read as it stands in connection with the definition of criminal breach of trust given in section 405 of the Penal Code, it would appear that the applicant, Abdul Salam, is accused of the commission of the offence of criminal breach of trust by reason of the misappropriation of the money in Rangoon and not because of the consequent loss, which has ensued to complainant at Maymyo.

The gist of the offence of criminal breach of trust is the dishonest misappropriation, conversion or disposal of the property, which in the present case is alleged to have taken place in Rangoon.

The loss to the complainant, which has accrued in Maymyo, is a consequence of the alleged breach of trust and not necessarily an integral part of it.

In Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (1), however, Sir John Edge, C.J., took the view that where B, being in charge, on behalf of a company at a place in Bengal, of certain goods belonging to the company and being ordered to return the goods to Cawnpore, where the office of the company was, did not do so and failed to account for the goods or their value, the Courts at Cawnpore had jurisdiction to inquire into the charge, inasmuch as the consequence of B's acts, viz., loss to the company, occurred in Cawnpore.

To my mind this view is hardly in accordance with what appears to be the obvious construction of section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code. No doubt the loss, which is the consequence of B's acts, occurred in Cawnpore, but the loss was the consequence of the misappropriation elsewhere, and B was accused primarily on account of the misappropriation and only secondarily on account of the consequence of his act.

It was the dishonest misappropriation elsewhere and not the resulting loss at Cawnpore, which constituted his offence.

This was the view taken in the later Allahabad case of Ganeshi Lal v. Nand Kishore (2) by Karamat Husain, J., who in the course of his judgment observes: "The word 'consequence' in this section, i.e., 179, Criminal Procedure Code, in my opinion, means a consequence, which forms a part and parcel of the offence. It does not mean a consequence, which is not such a direct result of the act of the offender as to form no part of the offence."

With this expression of opinion, I am entirely in agreement, and it was approved by a Bench of the Madras High Court in the leading case of Rambilas, In re (3), where the effect of various Allahabad rulings on the point in question was discussed.

It was there pointed out that "The offence of criminal breach of trust is completed (assuming a preliminary trust) by the misappropriation or conversion of the property dishonestly....It is only the intention which is essential. Whether wrongful gain or loss actually results is immaterial; it is a consequence, but no essential part of the offence, and a person is not accused of the offence by reason of it."

The judgment is particularly apposite to the facts of the present case and the continuing portion may well be quoted:—

"The learned Public Prosecutor has drawn our attention to the second part of section 405, which deals with dishonest use or disposal of property in violation of law or contract. He says accused had contracted by letters received at Dharapuram to remit the amounts to the complainants there; and argues that the contract was broken by failure to deliver the money at Dharapuram, and that this fact gives jurisdiction to the Erode Court.

"We are unable to follow this reasoning. In the first place the present case falls under the first, and not the second part of the section: the complaint clearly charges dishonest misappropriation to accused's own use, and not use or disposal in violation of law or contract.

"Secondly, if it were otherwise, the offence would be committed where the dishonest use or disposal took place not where the contract was made or should have been performed."

On behalf of complainant Rajani Benode Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Co. (4) is cited, but the circumstances of the two cases are not parallel. The complaint in the Calcutta case contained allegations of cheating, forgery and fraudulent tampering with a document and the Court was of opinion that there was no doubt on the allegations that the Courts at Lahore and Chittagong were equally competent to exercise jurisdiction.

There was, therefore, no doubt as to the Court by which the offences could be tried or enquired into.

In the present case it is not disputed that the offence is triable at Rangoon, whereas it is more than doubtful if the Maymyo Court has jurisdiction.

Section 181, sub section 2, expressly lays down where the offence of criminal breach of trust can be tried, and under that section the Maymyo Court certainly has no jurisdiction.

It does not appear to be justifiable to appeal to section 179 and strain what I take to be its plain construction in order to give the Maymyo Court jurisdiction, simply because complainant resides in Maymyo and it would suit his personal convenience to have the case tried there.

My decision is that the offence must be inquired into or tried by a Court in Rangoon.

The term "misbehaviour" in section 56 of Bombay Regulation II of 1827 is not restricted to misbehaviour in the strict course of a Pleader's professional duties, but includes general misbehaviour. [p. 681, col. 1.]

There may be acts which would entitle the High Court to refuse admission to a candidate seeking to be enrolled as a Pleader or an Advocate, or to consider that it is improper that a Pleader or Advocate should remain as a practitioner of the Court, although the acts complained of do not involve an imputation of general infamy or bad character. JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—A notice was issued by the High Court in its Disciplinary Jurisdiction on the 12th of July 1919, against Jivanlal Varajrai Desai and Vallabhaji Jhaverbhai Patel, who are Barristers at law and Advocates of this Court, and Mr. Krishnalal Narsilal Desai, High Court Pleader, at present practising in the Courts at Ahmedabad. The reason for issuing the notice was the receipt of a letter from Mr. Kennedy, the District Judge of Ahmedabad, dated the 22nd of April 1919, which runs as follows:—

1. "I have the honour to submit for the determination of their Lordships the question of the Pleaders of this Court who have signed what is known as the Satyagrahi pledge. The following are the Pleaders practising here who have given in their names as members of the Satyagrahi league.

Mr. Manilal Vallabhram Kothari.

Mr. Kalidas Jaskaran Jhaveri.

There are others who have not yet given in their names to me.

2. I had an interview with the above gentlemen on the 16th and expressed my sentiments and elicited theirs. I asked for some sort of satisfactory explanation of the sense in which they took the Satyagrahi oath. They have furnished an explanation which I do not think is satisfactory. I, therefore, submit the case for orders, as I suppose the question is general to all Districts.

3. As I understand the Satyagrahi oath, it binds the signatories not only to oppose the Rowlatt Bills and cognate legislation, but to break all laws of whatever kind which a committee may decide should be broken. I gather also from the papers that some illegal acts have been already ordained. I cannot myself see that the public adherence to a body which has that rule binding on it, is consistent with the duty of a Pleader and the terms of his Sanad, and I think the explanation furnished by the Pleaders leaves matters much where they are.

4. I am not in any way impressed by the temporary suspension of the illegal activities of this league. There can be no doubt (at least I have none) that suspension is merely a device to avoid the possibility of punishment falling on the Satyagrahis in respect of acts directly or indirectly due to their teaching and influence, the actual perpetrators of which and the instigators of which are likely to meet with condign punishment.

5. I am of the belief that the above gentlemen are sincerely and conscientiously under the impression that the Rowlatt Bill legislation is a crime, and as they have that impression, I would not blame them for going to the edge of the law to oppose it. They are all men for whom I have considerable esteem, and I have known them and appreciated them for some years, and it is very painful for me to raise their case, but I am of the opinion that they are unfit to practise until they have severed their connection with this league in the same public way in which they have joined it.

6. There are also at least two Barristers who have joined and are prominent members of the local league.

Mr. Jivanlal Varajrai Desai.

Mr. Vallabhaji Jhaverbhai Patel.

But I have no power to deal with them and very likely recent events in Ahmedabad may make it unnecessary to proceed against them. I enclose a copy of the Satyagrahi oath and of the explanation and covering letter of three of the Pleaders concerned. No one would be more pleased than myself if it could be found that the explanation was satisfactory. But personally I am of the opinion it is not."

Accompanying the letter were copies of what is known as the "Satyagrahi oath," and letters to the District Judge from Messrs. G. R. Dabholkar, Krishnalal Narsilal Desai, Kalidas Jaskaran Jhaveri and Manilal Vallabhram Kothari, explaining their conduct as the District Judge had requested at an interview with them on the 16th of April. It will be noted that the District Judge did not consider this explanation satisfactory, and that he considered that those four Pleaders were unfit to practise until they had severed their connection with the Satyagrahi league in the same public way in which they had joined it. With regard to Messrs. Jivanlal Varajrai Desai and Vallabhrai Jhaveribhai Patel, Barristers-at law, who the Judge stated had joined and were prominent members of the local league, the Judge said he had no power to deal with them.

This notice was issued under clause 10 of the Letters Patent. A similar notice was also issued on Messrs. G. R. Dabholkar, Manilal Vallabhram Kothari, and Kalidas Jaskaran Jhaveri, under clause 56 of the Bombay Regulation II of 1827. Cause has now been shown by all the respondents and it has been admitted by Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, who appeared for Messrs. J. V. Desai, G. R. Dabholkar and K. N. Desai, that whether they are to be dealt with under clause 10 of the Letters Patent or clause 56 of the Bombay Regulation II of 1827, the same principles are involved.

In the case of Government Pleader, Bombay v. Annaji Narayan Deshpande (1) it was held that the term "misbehaviour" under clause 56 of the Bombay Regulation II of 1827 is not restricted to misbehaviour in the strict course of a Pleader's professional duties, but includes general misbehaviour. And in Sarbadhicary, In re (2) at page 45, appears the following passage:—

"Their Lordships will not attempt to give a definition of 'reasonable cause,' or to lay down any rule for the interpretation of the Letters Patent in this respect. Every case must depend on its own circumstances. It is obvious that the intention of the Crown was to give a wide discretion to the High Court in India in regard to the exercise of this disciplinary authority."

The powers of a Court in dealing with cases of alleged misconduct against attorneys are described in Hill, In re (3). An attorney, while acting as a clerk to a firm of attorneys, in completing the sale of certain property, received the balance of the purchase-money, which he appropriated to his own use. On an application to strike him off the roll, he admitted the misappropriation, and it was held that although the misconduct was not committed strictly in his professional character, yet, as it was misconduct which would have prevented him from being admitted as an attorney, the Court would exercise its summary jurisdiction, and punish the misconduct. Lord Blackburn said:—

"But where there is a matter which would subject the person in question to a criminal proceeding, in my opinion, a different principle must be applied. We are to see that the officers of the Court are proper persons to be trusted by the Court with regard to the interests of suitors, and we are to look to the character and position of the persons, and judge of the acts committed by them, upon the same principle as if we were considering whether or not a person is fit to become an attorney."

Lord Cookburn said:—

"I should add, there is one consideration I omitted, and which, I think, is entitled to great weight. It is that put to us in the course of the discussion, namely, that if these facts had been brought to our knowledge upon the application for this gentleman's admission, we might have refused to admit him; and I think the fact of his having been admitted does not alter his position; having been admitted, we must deal with him as if he were now applying for admission; and as in the case of a person applying for admission as an attorney, we should have considered all the circumstances, and either have refused to admit, or have suspended the admission for a certain time, so where a person has once been admitted we are bound, although he was not acting in the precise character of an attorney, to take notice of his misconduct."

It is not suggested that the respondents have done anything which would subject them to criminal proceedings, but that case is sufficient authority for stating that we can deal with the respondents in the same way as if they were now applying for enrolment.

It is necessary, therefore, to carefully consider the terms of the document known as the Satyagraha oath or pledge which, according to the copy sent to us by the District Judge, runs as follows:—

"Being conscientiously of opinion that the Bills known as the Indian Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill I of 1919, and the Criminal Law (Emergency Powers) Bill II of 1919 are unjust, subversive of the principles of liberty and justice, and destructive of the elementary rights of individuals on which the safety of the community as a whole and the State itself is based, we solemnly affirm that in the event of these Bills becoming law and until they are withdrawn we shall refuse civilly to obey these laws and such other laws as a committee to be hereafter appointed may think fit, and further affirm that in this struggle we will faithfully follow truth and refrain from violence to life, person or property."

The movement to obtain signatures to this oath commenced in February. I may say at once that no one can reasonably object to the right of a citizen to express his opinion as to the merits or demerits of a legislative measure proposed to be adopted by the Government and, if he is opposed to it, to take every means to induce Government to withdraw it, provided he keeps within the bounds imposed by established law. The signatories to the oath have expressed their objection to these Bills, which came to be known as the Rowlatt Bills, and affirmed that they would civilly refuse to obey them if they became law. Civilly according to the dictionary means in a polite manner, politely. It is suggested that civil or polite disobedience is the same as what is known as passive resistance. That is not so. Passive resistance connotes complete inaction in the presence of a command of law, that is to say, the refusal to do what the law commands, while disobedience includes the doing of something which is forbidden by law. Whether the disobedience is active or passive depends on the nature of the law which it is intended to disobey.

Now we are concerned in this matter with the conduct of the respondents not as citizens but as Advocates and Pleaders.

We have nothing to do with their political views, nor have we anything to do with expressions of opinion on their part, however strong, against any particular measure proposed by the Legislature. But a public declaration made by an Advocate or a Pleader that he has bound himself civilly to disobey any laws which a committee to be thereafter appointed might think fit, appears to me to go very much further than a mere expression of opinion as to the merits of a Bill proposed by a Legislature. I take it for the purpose of the argument that the respondents, as Mr. Kennedy believes, were sincerely and conscientiously under the impression that the Rowlatt Bill legislation was a crime, and that they honestly thought that signing the Satyagraha pledge would be a constitutional form of agitation against the passing of the Rowlatt Bills. But I have to consider whether the signing of such a pledge is consistent with the duties which they owe as officers of this Court. Advocates and Pleaders are a privileged class enrolled not only for the purpose of rendering assistance to the Courts in the administration of justice, but also for giving professional advice, for which they are entitled to be paid, to those members of the public, who require their services. Their position, training and practice give them immense influence with the public and their example must necessarily have a much greater effect, whether for good or for evil, than the example of those who do not occupy this privileged position. It is not necessary in order for us to be able to exercise our jurisdiction that any offence should have been committed, nor is it necessary that what the respondents have done should have subjected them to anything like general infamy or imputation of bad character. The case of Walloce, In re (4) was relied on by the respondents. But I do not think that Lord Westbury in giving judgment went so far as to say that an act to render an attorney remaining in the Court as a practitioner improper must necessarily be an act committing an attorney to anything like general infamy or an imputation of bad character. That was an appeal from a decision of a Canadian Court, and as regards the respondent in the case proceedings of a different nature could have been taken against him for the act complained of. Under the Letters Patent and the Regulation each case must be decided on its own facts, as their Lordships of the Privy Council said in Sarbadhi-cary's case (2) and in my opinion there may be acts which would entitle us to refuse admission to a candidate seeking to be enrolled as a Pleader or an Advocate, or to consider that it was improper that a Pleader or Advocate should remain as a practitioner of the Court, although the acts complained of do not involve an imputation of general infamy or bad character. This pledge, however, can be said to involve, if not directly, certainly indirectly, the professional character and reputation of the respondents. Their duty as Pleaders and Advocates under their Sanads is to advise their clients to the best of their abilities as to what the law is, not as to what the law should be in their opinion. But it would be impossible for them to keep their duties to the League separate from their professional duties. This conflict would become the more pronounced if any of the respondents had occasion to advise his client regarding one of the laws denounced by the league.

Sir Chimanlal was asked whether his clients would be able to give advice conscientiously to their clients without being influenced by their pledge, and Sir Chimanlal replied that they would give advice as lawyers conscientiously and not as Satyagrahis. He was bound to say that, but the atmosphere of this Court, before which his clients have been arraigned, is somewhat different to the atmosphere of their consulting chambers in Ahmedabad. Supposing for instance the committee had denounced the Income Tax Act, the respondents would be bound by their pledge to refuse to fill in the schedules sent to them for the purpose of assessment. If a client consulted one of them regarding the way in which the schedule should be filled in he would be on the horns of a dilemma. Every member of the League of this description is of necessity a propagandist. To arrive at the desired end as many adherents must be gathered in as possible, no opportunity of doing so must be lost. It would, therefore, be the respondent's duty as a Satyagrahi to persuade the client to disobey the law, it would be his duty as an officer of the Court to tell the client to obey.

It cannot be doubted for a moment that it is extremely undesirable that any of those who hold Sanads as Advocates or Pleaders of this Court should find themselves involved in this conflict of duty. Then there is the danger of their example being followed by persons who do not possess that high moral character, that love for the truth, that abhorrence of all ideas of violence to life, person or property possessed by the respondents. It would appear on the face of it that the signatory to the pledge abdicates all independent judgment in favour of an unknown body of his fellow signatories. I am told that if the committee referred to in the pledge called upon the signatories in pursuance of their pledge to do acts repugnant to the respondents' feelings, they would not act in accordance with their pledge. If that is the case, the signing of the pledge would not involve any obligation on the part of the signatories to act according to the pledge, and if a signatory considers himself entitled to form his own opinion whether he should follow the lead of the committee or not, it follows that the pledge is worthless and he would much better not have signed it. But the public can only judge men by their actions, and the more ignorant and less educated of the public who sign the pledge and see the names of other signatories are not acquainted with the mental reservations of their fellow signatories. A very sound principle to remember is that those who live by the law should keep the law. I should certainly be inclined to grant a Sanad of this Court to any one who I knew was a signatory to this pledge, for I should not consider him a proper person to be enrolled in that privileged class referred to above. That being so, I should be inclined to say under the powers given us by the Charter and the Regulation that a person who had signed this pledge was not a fit person to be allowed to continue amongst that privileged class.

Turning now to the letters of explanation given by the Pleader respondents to the District Judge, I am not surprised at his expressing the opinion that they were not satisfactory. It must be remembered that those letters were written a few days after the lamentable riots on the 10th and 11th April at Ahmedabad and, though I do not for a moment suggest that any of the respondents took any part either directly or indirectly in those riots, it is a matter of common knowledge that there had been several meetings attended by thousands of millhands during March and the first ten days of April which were summoned by the leaders of the Satyagraha Sabha. Whether those meetings had any connection with the subsequent riots was a question which was not discussed during the course of the arguments, but it has already been the subject of judicial decision. The District Judge considered he had no power to deal with the Barrister respondents; so the record contains no letter of explanation from them. Mr. J. V. Desai, however, has put in an affidavit at the last moment, a proceeding which cannot be commended considering that the hearing of these notices has twice been adjourned for the convenience of the respondents, while Mr. V. J. Patel with wiser discretion has contented himself by being represented before us by Mr. G. N. Thakore who supported the argument of Sir Chimanlal.

There is no need to deal with Mr. Desai's affidavit. It is sufficient to say that it does him no credit.

I have refrained from dealing with many points contained in the argument of Counsel for the respondents, which concern rather the politician than the Judge, and are, therefore, always open to controversy. The plain issue is what are the duties of the respondents to this Court?

I have waited in vain for any acknowledgment on the part of the respondents that they have realised, in the events which have happened, that, however harmless and constitutional they may have considered this movement when it was started, it is absolutely incompatible with their duties as lawyers to the High Court that they should continue to take part in it.

Sir Chimanlal did indeed say that it might be that the Satyagraha movement would receive its quietus. He hoped and trusted that it had received its final quietus now. That no doubt was his own personal opinion, but is there any trace on the record that that was also the opinion of the respondents?

Sir Chimanlal also said it was open to the signatories to withdraw from the pledge. Then why does not he advise his clients to do so now?

I wish to make it perfectly clear that apart from all other considerations, those who are enrolled as Advocates and Pleaders of this High Court or of the District Courts cannot serve two masters. It may be that after due consideration of this expression of our opinion the respondents may see the force of it. We have no desire to deal harshly with them, and for the present we shall content ourselves with giving them this warning. We do so because we are told that the Satyagraha Sabha since the riots of April has been quiescent. Whether we shall take any further action depends entirely on the development if any of the Satyagraha movement, so that these notices will be adjourned with leave to the Advocate-General and the respondents to move for their restoration to the Board should occasion arise.

In connection with these notices there has been a regrettable incident of which we are bound to take notice. An application was made to this Court by some of the respondents or their Pleaders for copies of Mr. Kennedy's letter. Copies were furnished and considering that the respondents were lawyers, it did not appear necessary to inform them that such copies were given to them for their private information and not for publication. That letter was published before the case came on for hearing in Court. Who is responsible for what we must regard as a very grave breach of a well-recognized rule we cannot say. We are quite sure that the legal advisers of the respondents are free from blame; if the respondent or respondents who published the letter do not give in his or their names to the Registrar, the blame must for the present rest on all the respondents.

HEATON, J.—I concur generally in the judgment just delivered by my Lord the Chief Justice and I concur in the order proposed by him. There are, however, a few words of my own to add. One of the legal gentlemen concerned in these proceedings in dealing, in an affidavit, with the Rowlatt legislation and the Satyagraha movement wrote as follows:

"I believe that it is the inherent right of a citizen to protest against such legislation by such constitutional methods and I have merely acted on that bona fide belief."

Of the rights of ordinary citizens however little need be said, for we are not dealing with the case of ordinary citizens. Our notices were issued against professional lawyers, and it is with them and with them only that we are concerned. They belong to a privileged class and they enjoy their privileges with our consent. But just as they enjoy special privileges, so they are under peculiar obligations. Moreover, this Court is under special obligations in regard to them. Just as it licenses or permits them to practise as lawyers, so it is bound to see that they do not flagrantly abuse their privileges.

I will first deal with their obligations to clients. We not unnaturally asked what advice would a professional lawyer, who had taken the Satyagraha pledge, give to a client who asked him whether as a citizen he ought to obey one of those laws which as a lawyer he was pledged civilly to disobey. If the lawyer's answer were that, to quote the words of the pledge "the law was unjust, subversive of the principles of liberty and justice and destructive of the elementary rights of individuals" and ought to be disobeyed, then a position would arise which we could not but consider reflected very unfavourably on the lawyer's performance of his professional duty. For, it is as much the lawyer's duty in dealing with his client to act on the law as it is, not as he would have it be, as it is the duty of a Judge to do the same.

We were, however, most positively assured by Counsel who appeared for the respondents that this would not happen. In other words, we are told that though as citizens the respondents would unhesitatingly assert that certain laws ought not to be obeyed; yet they would, as professional lawyers, advise their clients that those same laws had to be obeyed. It may be so; but the temptation to tell the client that the law should be disobeyed would at least be severe, and would place them in a position which no conscientious lawyer ought to occupy.

I will now turn to the duty of professional lawyers to this Court and to the law. They are bound, as I have said, to act according to the law as it is, not as they would have it be. Criticism of the law, even severe criticism, is permitted even to Judges, much more so perhaps to professional lawyers. Nevertheless it is a matter of conscience with both, that they are to recognize and give effect to the law. We must assume that professionally the respondents would obey all the laws: but as they have taken a pledge, as citizens, to disobey certain laws, their position is just as unsatisfactory in relation to this Court and to the law as it is in relation to their clients.

It seems to me that professional lawyers cannot fulfil both the obligations of the Satyagraha pledge and the obligations of their profession. They are pledged to follow the truth, but this they cannot consistently do if they disobey certain laws as citizens whilst as lawyers they obey and advise obedience to those same laws.

It has been necessary to say all this, as I gather that the respondents are blind to the fact that there is anything unsatisfactory or unbecoming in their attitude. They are under the impression that their position as professional lawyers is correct. But to me it seems to be essentially incorrect.

Suppose we were dealing with those who desired to become professional lawyers and who applied to us for enrolment on our list of Advocates or for Sanads to practise as Pleaders. Should we grant the applications? I greatly doubt it. At any rate until the applicants had given definite undertakings that they would limit their political activities, not merely so as not to interfere with, but so as not to excite suspicion as to the correctness of their professional conduct.

The attitude which the respondents have adopted is to my mind undeniably embarrassing and unseemly from a professional point of view. But need we anticipate that anything worse will follow? That we cannot say. It depends on the development of the Satyagraha movement with which the respondents have intimately associated themselves.

KAJIJI, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgments of my Lord the Chief Justice and brother Heaton and I concur in the order proposed and have nothing to add.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION No. 423 OF 1918.
January 3, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.
CHAKAURI RAI—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1869), s. 203—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Order directing prosecution—Preferring false claim—Accused, whether must be given opportunity to show cause.

The mere dismissal of a suit in the absence of a clear finding that the suit was false and was brought with intent to injure the defendant, is not a justification for directing the prosecution of the plaintiff under section 209 of the Penal Code. [p. 638, col. 1.]

Where a plaintiff is called upon to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 209, Penal Code, he should be afforded every opportunity of adducing evidence in support of his claim and to remove any doubt in the mind of the Court as to the falsity of the case. [p. 638, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Munsif, Siwan, dated the 23rd November 1918, directing the prosecution of the petitioner under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, for an offence under section 209, Indian Penal Code.

Messrs. P. K. Sen and Rajendra Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Manohar Lall (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against an order of the Munsif of Siwan, dated the 23rd November 1918, passed under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directing the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code. The facts are as follows:—

The petitioner brought a suit on the 29th May 1918 for recovery of Rs. 100 principal, with interest, from the defendant. The claim was based on a Farad Hisab, which purported to bear the thumb impression of the defendant and to have been signed by one Ram Narain Lal on behalf of the defendant. The defendant denied his liability, his having put the thumb impression on the Fard Hisab and his having authorised Ram Narain Lal to sign on his behalf. As a motive for the false case the defendant alleged that the plaintiff had demanded oil from him at a cheaper rate on the occasion of his daughter's marriage, which the defendant refused to supply.

On 30th July 1918 the Munsif on hearing the evidence of both sides dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. On 7th November 1918, more than three months after the disposal of the suit, the Munsif issued a notice upon the petitioner to show cause, on or before the 23rd November 1918, why he should not be prosecuted under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code, or under any other provision of the law, for having laid a false claim in the aforesaid suit.

On the 23rd November 1918 the petitioner showed cause, asserting that the claim was not a false one, and wanted to apply for time to adduce evidence. The Munsif rejected the petition with the remark: "The Pleader for the opposite party says that he has no instructions. From the judgment of the Small Cause Court Suit No. 233/73 of 1918 it appears that the Court found that the suit was falsely brought by the opposite party. A motion in the High Court against the judgment has already been rejected. I direct that the opposite party be prosecuted under section 209, Indian Penal Code, by the Sub Divisional Magistrate of Siwan for bringing the said Small Cause Court suit falsely. Let a proceeding be drawn up, and send the same to the Sub Divisional Magistrate by the 29th November 1918 for necessary action." Aggrieved by the said order, the petitioner has come to this Court.

It appears to me that the order of the Munsif directing the prosecution of the petitioner must be set aside. The basis of the order under section 476 is solely the judgment of the Munsif in the suit brought by the plaintiff; but in that judgment there is no finding of the elements that constitute section 209 of the Indian Penal Code to justify the Munsif to take action under section 476 on the ground that a prima facie case was made out against the petitioner. The claim of the plaintiff was based upon a Fard Hisab which purports to bear the thumb impression of the defendant and to have been signed by one Ram Narain Lal (P. W. No. 3) on his behalf. The thumb impression was blurred and the expert could not come to any definite opinion as to whether it was or was not of the defendant. So from the internal evidence of the thumb impression, the Fard Hisab could not be held to be a false document. Ram Narain Lal and Manhgu Raut (P. W. No. 6) swear that the defendant put his thumb impression and that the former signed for him and at his request. The Munsif has not disbelieved this evidence in his judgment, nor has he held that the Fard Hisab was necessarily a forged document. The Fard Hisab relates to old debts, the account of which was settled at the time of execution of the Fard Hisab. Most of these debts consisted of rents paid by the plaintiff to the landlord for and on behalf of the defendant. In support of this the plaintiff filed village papers such as Siahas, counterfoil books from 1318 to 1322, and examined the Patwari Gopee Lal (P. W. No. 5) and Durbal Gossain (P. W. No. 4), an agent of the Malik, who proved that the rents of the land held by the defendant were paid by the plaintiff. The Munsif again does not say a word about the oral evidence of the plaintiff as to the aforesaid payment of the rents, which formed a part of the consideration of the Fard Hisab in suit. He suspected the genuineness of the Siahas and the counterfoils for the reasons given by him. Of course it is impossible to believe that for the sake of the plaintiff the landlord would forge his counterfoil books and Siahas extending over long years from 1318 to 1322. Be that as it may, there may be reasons for the Munsif to suspect these papers which may be considered to have been disposed of by his judgment, but no attempt has been made by him to dispose of the oral evidence on the point. Unless it was held that the old debts in respect of which the Fard Hisab in question was executed did not exist, the claim of the plaintiff could not be said to be false even if the Fard Hisab be held to be a forged one for the purpose of supporting the plaintiff's just claim. The Munsif only holds that he is not satisfied that there was any dealing between the plaintiff and the defendant, or that the Fard Hisab was executed by him. This is not a sufficient finding that the case of the plaintiff was a false one to his knowledge and was brought with intent to injure the defendant.

The Munsif has accepted the statement of the defendant that he had refused to supply to the plaintiff a higher quantity of oil per rupee. This is supported only by one witness Ramnandan. It may be enough for the Munsif to suspect the case of the plaintiff, but it is certainly not enough for putting the plaintiff on his trial when the onus of proving the falsity of the claim would be upon the defendant. Upon the record there is nothing to show conclusively that the claim of the plaintiff was a false one and there is not a clear finding of the Munsif upon the point. On this ground alone the Rule must be made absolute.

Yet there are other grounds. The Munsif did not use judicial discretion in directing the prosecution of the petitioner—there is absolutely no chance of any conviction. The oral evidence of the witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff, who swear that an account was made, the Fard Hisab was executed and the defendant put his thumb impression upon it and got it signed by Ram Narain Lal for himself and that rents were paid by the plaintiff to the landlord, has not been disposed of by the Munsif at all and it will be difficult for the Criminal Court to hold that the witnesses were all lying. Against this the prosecution will have no evidence to show that the claim of the plaintiff was false and was instituted with intent as contemplated by section 209 of the Indian Penal Code. We cannot expect any more evidence than is on the record. The prosecution will rest entirely upon the sole testimony of the defendant. His only witness will not be able to prove the falsity of the claim but that there was a motive to bring a false case. It is a fundamental principle that in a case of this kind there must be a clear case for putting the accused on his trial before directing the prosecution. The mere dismissal of the plaintiff's case, or his failure to prove it, does not necessarily render the plaintiff liable for prosecution under section 209 for bringing a false claim.

Yet another ground—the civil suit was disposed of on the 30th July. More than three months after, on the 7th November, the Munsif issued a notice on the petitioner to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. The Munsif, however, explains this by saying that he had already moved the District Magistrate through the District Judge on the 3rd August 1918 for taking action against the petitioner under Government Circular No. 697-701-J, dated the 18th October 1913, and that the District Magistrate declined to proceed against the petitioner by his letter received by the Munsif on the 6th of November 1918. This was also four days after the judgment of the Munsif. Be that as it may, it does not appear that the Munsif himself, on the 30th July 1918 when disposing of the case, had not (sic) contemplated any action to be taken by (sic) the petitioner himself suo motu. If that were so, he would have at once started proceedings under section 476 instead of writing to the District Magistrate to take action under the Government Circular, by helping the defendant in obtaining a sanction under section 195. The Munsif apparently did not consider that the case was so clear as demanded a prompt action under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I am aware of instances of much longer delay in proceedings taken under section 476, but it must be dependent on the circumstances in each case where it was originally in the mind of the Court at the time of trying the case that an action under section 476 would be necessary.

Again the Munsif directed the petitioner to show cause within a fortnight of the issue of the notice. The petitioner did appear and showed cause, but wanted time to prove his case. Considering the lapse of time since the judgment was passed, the Munsif should have, in my opinion, allowed time to the petitioner to remove any doubt that may have remained in the mind of the Munsif regarding the truth of his case. The Munsif declined to do so and at once directed the prosecution of the petitioner upon the grounds mentioned in his judgment. It has already been shown that the judgment of the Munsif in the suit does not afford sufficient ground for holding that the case of the plaintiff was necessarily false to his knowledge and was brought with intent to injure the defendant. The mere use of the word 'false' at the end of the judgment by the Munsif does not comply with the requirements of section 209 of the Indian Penal Code.

The order of the Munsif, dated the 23rd November 1918, directing the prosecution of the petitioner is, therefore, without jurisdiction and is hereby set aside.

Order set aside.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, proviso (4)—Mortgage, registered—Agreement, oral, to accept less than mortgage debt in full discharge of mortgage, whether can be proved.

Under proviso (4) of section 92 of the Evidence Act, oral evidence is inadmissible to prove an agreement whereby a mortgagor agrees to accept less than the amount due to him under a registered mortgage in full discharge of the mortgage. [p. 690, cols. 1 & 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Batchelor in Second Appeal No. 971 of 1913, which confirmed the decree passed by the District Judge, Nasik, in Appeal No. 294 of 1912, confirming the decree passed by the Assistant Judge, Nasik, in Suit No. 241 of 1911.

FACTS of the case appear from the following judgment of BACHELOR, J.—The appellant, who was the plaintiff below, brought this suit to recover on two mortgages dated 1894 and 1899. The original mortgagor was one Ganpat, the father of the present defendants. The defence was that the mortgages had been discharged by a payment of Rs. 800 made by Ganpat to the mortgagee. It was shown that Ganpat and the mortgagee were friends, and that Ganpat on his death-bed prevailed upon the mortgagee to accept Rs. 800 in full satisfaction of the mortgage claim. It was further found that the money was there and then formally paid over to the mortgagee in the presence of several persons. That is a finding of fact in which both Courts have concurred, and it cannot of course be canvassed in this Court.

The appeal, however, is based upon the argument that the evidence as to this circumstance was inadmissible under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, read with proviso 4 of that section. I am of opinion, however, that the evidence was admissible.

The evidence which under section 92 would be inadmissible would be evidence of an oral agreement or statement for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from the terms of the original mortgage. That is not the evidence which was called and received in this case. The evidence called and received was directed to a totally different purpose, namely, the purpose of showing that these contracts of mortgage had been terminated by the discharge of the obligation imposed by them, and I see nothing in section 92 which prohibits the admission of such evidence. Illustration (e) to section 91 of the Act shows, what could not be disputed, that evidence as to the payment of Rs. 800 could unquestionably be received. It would appear from the case of Ramlal Ohandra Karmokar v. Gobinda Karmokar (1) that in a case substantially similar, so far as one can gather from the report, Rampini and Wilkins, J.J., took the view which I am taking now. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from the decision of Mr. Justice Batchelor. The trial Court had admitted evidence led by the defendant to show that the two mortgages in the suit were discharged by the mortgagees by a payment of Rs. 800. It was argued in appeal that this evidence was inadmissible, on the ground that it rescinded or modified the contract required to be in writing which had been registered according to law. The learned Appellate Judge has held that the evidence called and received was directed to a totally different purpose, namely, the purpose of showing that these contracts of mortgage had been terminated by the discharge of the obligation imposed by them, and he saw nothing in section 92 prohibiting the admission of such evidence. We have been referred to the recent case of Karampalli Kuni Kurup v. Thekku Vittal Muthorakutti (2) which seems to be exactly on all fours with the present case. The head-note runs: "A subsequent oral agreement to take less than is due under a registered mortgage-bond is an agreement modifying the terms of a written contract, and, if it has to be proved, oral evidence is inadmissible under section 92, proviso 4, of the Indian Evidence Act." But the argument before us has been that there has not been a subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify the mortgage, but there has been an actual discharge, and that oral evidence was admissible to prove a discharge. In my opinion there is no substance in that argument. The defendant's case must be that the mortgagee agreed to receive Rs. 800 in full satisfaction of the much greater amount which was due on the mortgage, and although he might have said when receiving Rs. 800 "I now discharge you from the mortgage," there was nonetheless an agreement which modified the original agreement of mortgage. It would be an extremely dangerous precedent if oral evidence were allowed of such agreements. In this case it may be noted that the plaintiff himself denied having received Rs. 800, or having given a discharge on the mortgage, although the payment has been proved as a fact. But one can easily imagine that there may be many cases where the mortgagor may set up a false case of such an agreement, and it appears to me that it was to meet such cases, inter alia, that proviso 4 of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act was enacted. In my opinion the appeal must succeed. The result will be that the defendant will be allowed credit for Rs. 800, which he has proved he has paid to the mortgagee. We allow the appeal with costs in proportion throughout, and remand the case to the lower Court to take an account in accordance with this judgment.

(1) 4 C. W. N. 304.

(2) 26 M. 195

JAG. NNATH KASHIRAM v. SHANKAR GANPAT.

HEATON, J.—I agree. But as the case presents so many possibilities of argument, I would like to put my conclusion in my own way. There are three ways in which the defendant's case might have been presented. The defendant might simply have pleaded that the mortgage was discharged and nothing further. That was not what he did plead, and presumably not what he could have proved. So I come to the second way in which the defendant could make his defence, and that was the way he adopted. He said that an agreement had been entered into between the mortgagee and the mortgagor according to which, on the payment of Rs. 800, which was only a part of the mortgage debt, the mortgagee would give a complete discharge, and the mortgage-deed would cease to operate. It is found as a fact that Rs. 800 were paid. But this payment was a payment of part only of the mortgage debt, so the mortgage-deed would still be operative; it would still regulate the relations between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, unless there had been some modification of its terms. The modification suggested is that the mortgage debt should be changed, from what under the deed it would be, to a sum of Rs. 800. That would be a very large modification of the terms of the deed. This modification could not be proved, as is provided by proviso 4 to section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, by the method by which the defendant sought to prove it. We cannot, therefore, take it that the defendant can succeed in that way. He has not shown that the mortgage debt has been discharged, because the law of evidence prevents him from showing it.

The third way in which the defendant might have presented his defence was one which has not been adopted by him, and as to which I will say nothing beyond mentioning it. He might have pleaded that the mortgagee had entered into an agreement to reconvey to him the mortgaged properties on payment of Rs. 800. Whether that defence would have availed him or not I do not know. But I do not wish my judgment to be understood as stating that a defence of that kind would necessarily be excluded by the law of evidence. I, therefore, agree with the proposed order.

Appeal allowed.

Costs awarded to plaintiff—Death of plaintiff—Attorney, whether can realise costs from opposite party.

Where costs are awarded to a party and he dies before they are realised, and his legal representatives are unable to pay his Attorney's costs, it is open to the Attorney to ask the Court for an order for direct realisation of his costs from the opposite party. [p. 693, col. 1.]

Mr. B. L. Mitter (with him Mr. S. Ghose), for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. L. Buckland, for the Plaintiff Firm.

JUDGMENT.—In this case I am prepared to make the order which is asked for by the Attorney against the plaintiff. An action was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant. The defendant happened to be the Receiver appointed by the Court of the assets of a certain firm. The plaint in the action shows that in the course of the work the defendant did as Receiver for that firm he executed certain promissory notes on which the plaintiff became in the end the endorsee, and the action was brought really against him as the maker of the note by a person to whom it had been endorsed by the original payee. That being so, there can be no doubt that the Receiver was personally liable and that the action was brought against him personally. Whatever the rights may be between the defendant in that action and the firm over whose assets he had been appointed Receiver, that was a matter which had nothing to do with the case, and in no way bound the plaintiff. It is like the simple case of an executor who, in order to carry out his duties, orders certain goods—it may even be for the funeral of his testator. The action that has to be brought against him by the supplier of those goods would be an action against him personally in respect of his order, and if it were brought in the form of an action against the executor as representing the testator's estate, it would be an action which was wrong in form. In the old days you could not have coupled such a claim with a count for a debt which had been incurred by the testator in his lifetime.

Now, in the course of certain interlocutory proceedings, the defendant was successful and he obtained orders against the plaintiff for certain costs which have been taxed at Rs. 1,030. The defendant died, no steps were taken to reconstitute the action, and the action was dismissed, no order being made as to costs. In these circumstances the Attorney for the defendant comes before me and asks that I make an order to pay him Rs. 1,030 against the person who was plaintiff in the action. Now, the lien of an Attorney for his costs upon property recovered or preserved is not only one of the oldest doctrines of law, but one which is based on very manifest justice, and the objection to the order that I am asked to make is that, although the law which prevails here recognises the Solicitor's lien, I have no jurisdiction to make such an order as this because there is nothing in the Code or in the rules that enables me to make a direct order for payment to the Attorney. What exactly is the correct method of enforcing a Solicitor's lien I do not know on this hypothesis, but I presume it would be by starting another suit and going into the whole matter from the beginning with a plaint and written statement. In my view that is entirely unnecessary. I find that it has been held by the late Chief Justice of this Court when sitting as a puisne Judge at first instance on the Civil Side, Khetter Kristo Mitter v. Kally Prosonno Ghose (1), that there is authority to make an order for payment direct in this class of cases. If I may be allowed to say so, I think that the short and summary way in which that point was dealt with was the correct way to deal with it, to regard it as a matter of settled law, that when the Court has jurisdiction in an action it has jurisdiction not only as between the parties to that action, but also as regards those officers of the Court who act for the parties. If, for example, one is minded to give parties their costs out of a fund, and the fund is a fund that is in Court, it is an old Chancery practice to order payment to the Solicitor direct, and not to the parties. Why? Because the Solicitor is recognised by the Court; the matters between the Solicitor and his client, so far as they concern that action, are just as much under the hand of the Court as is the contention between the party and party, and the improvement as to procedure that was introduced into England by the Solicitors' Act is an improvement as to procedure only. Thus it may be that it is a better remedy to a Solicitor to apply against his own client in the action for an injunction to restrain his client receiving the proceeds of the judgment, and thus defeating the Solicitor. That remedy in the action it is still open to the Court to give. As between the Solicitor and his client, the action is in the hand of the Court, and when I find that the late Chief Justice did not feel himself hampered by any technicality, I am certainly not going to create a technicality that seems to me to be contrary to principle.

Now, the only other point which has been taken by Mr. Buckland is this. He says that this summary remedy is not to be regarded as a remedy ex debito justitiæ: it is only to be resorted to in a proper case, and prima facie it is not a proper case unless it is clearly shown that the Attorney is unable to recover his costs from his client.

Two cases have been cited to me for that, and upon consideration I think both of these cases are very special ones. The first is a divorce suit [Harrison v. Harrison (2)]: it is a case where a husband was granted a divorce against his wife, and one of the terms of the divorce was that he had to provide or secure an income for the wife to live upon of £130 per annum. The wife's Solicitors took out an application under the Solicitors' Act, and proposed to take their costs out of this annual maintenance of £130, and the Court said in effect, "We won't do that unless you satisfy us that that is really necessary." Prima facie the person responsible to pay the wife's costs was the husband, who in England is liable to pay the costs of his wife in such an action even although the wife is the opposite party. The Court's view was:—"We are not going to put our hand upon this tiny fund that is intended for the woman's living, unless we are shown it is reasonable and necessary in the circumstances. We do not think it would be a proper case under the Solicitors' Act." It was argued in that case that this £130 was a mere matter of alimony as it is strictly called; the Court held it was not alimony in strictness, and that the Solicitors' Act did, technically speaking, apply to it; but in substance it was a maintenance or living fund for the wife, and the Court would not let the Solicitors have recourse to that without being satisfied that it was reasonable and necessary.

The next case was the case of Jackson v. Smith (3). Now that case is this: there was a partnership action, an action for dissolution, and there was a Receiver appointed, the affairs of the partnership were wound up and there was a certain fund in Court, but the creditors of the firm had not been paid out of the fund; and when the learned Judge who decided that case (Mr. Justice Kay) was making his order upon further consideration he held that unless he was shown that the plaintiff was unable to pay his own Attorney's costs, he would not there and then at once make a charging order upon this fund so as to put this Attorney's costs in front of the creditors of the partnership. The plaintiff, who apparently did not desire to pay his own Attorney's costs if he could get out of it, preferred that the fund which the partnership creditors had to look to, should bear the brunt in the first instance. The Court said no, and I do not think that either of these decisions interferes with the exercise of my discretion upon the facts of this case. I am not going to lay down that I shall require an Attorney, before I enforce his lien, to satisfy me that he has utterly exhausted every possibility in order to get payment otherwise. It seems to me that this Solicitor is quite reasonable in coming to the Court to ask that the Court should allow him to stand in the shoes of this defendant and to claim this money which the plaintiffs have been ordered to pay. The original client is dead; there is evidence that his legal representatives are not people of substance; there is definite evidence they are unable to pay; and I think it is no abuse at all of the summary powers of this Court for this Attorney to ask for an order which merely puts him in the shoes of his own client, so that this sum of money which was ordered to be paid in 1916 should at last be realised.

I shall direct that this order be made so far as the plaintiff is concerned, and that the plaintiff be ordered to pay those costs to the Attorney direct. As regards the legal representatives of the defendant, I have express power under the rules to make an order upon them to pay the costs of the Attorney. The order ought strictly to have been asked in Chambers, but of course it is elementary that anything I can do in Chambers I can a fortiori do in Court, and I do not think that any costs have been thrown away in joining both matters in one motion. So far as the legal representatives are concerned, I shall only allow the applicant the costs as of a Chamber application to be added to the amount which I shall order them to pay. The plaintiff must pay to the applicant half of the costs of this motion.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 2 (1st)—“District to which this Act may for the time being extend,” meaning of.

The extension of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to a particular district contemplated in section 2 (1st) of the Act is the extension of the substantial portion of the Act and not merely the extension of a particular section or one or more sections. What is meant is that there must be an extension of the Act sufficient to provide that its main purpose applies to the district, or a really substantial part of the main purpose. [p. 694, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Dharwar, in Civil Suit No. 23 of 1916.

Mr. D. A. Tuljapurkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. A. Jahagirdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the plaint land and Rs. 900 as mesne profits for three years before suit from the defendant. The suit was filed in the Court of the Assistant Judge of Dharwar. The defendant sought to prove by parole evidence that the sale-deed which he had admitted having executed should be construed as a mortgage. This was a defence which he could set up if he was an agriculturist at the time of the transaction, which was in 1903.

It is argued that the defendant could prove he was an agriculturist within the meaning of section 2 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act because the Act had been extended to the District of Dharwar before the execution of the sale-deed. When the Act was passed, sections 1, 11, 16, 60 and 62 only were extended to the whole of British India. The rest of the Act extended only to the Districts of Poona, Satara, Sholapur and Ahmednagar, but might, from time to time, be extended wholly or in part by the Local Government to other Districts. In 1903 sections 2 and 20 of the Act were extended to Dharwar. Clearly the object of that extension was to enable agriculturists to obtain the benefit of section 20, which enacts that the Court may at any time direct that the amount of any decree passed, whether before or after the Act comes into force, against an agriculturist, or the portion of the same which it directs under section 19 to be paid, shall be paid by instalments with or without interest. Section 19 had been repealed, and section 20 ought to have been amended accordingly.

It has been argued then that the defendant can prove that he was an agriculturist at the date of the execution of the sale-deed, but that argument depends upon the definition of 'agriculturist,' which expression under section 2 must be taken to mean 'a person who by himself or by his servants or by his tenants earns his livelihood wholly or principally by agriculture carried on within the limits of a district or part of a district to which this Act may for the time being extend, or who ordinarily engages personally in agricultural labour within those limits."

But I do not think it can be said that the Act has been extended by the Notification of 1903 to the Dharwar District, and that, therefore, the defendant can now prove that he was an agriculturist at the date of the transaction, so that he can be allowed to prove by parole evidence under section 10A that the sale-deed should be construed as a mortgage. It may have been the intention of the Local Government to enable a person resident in Dharwar to prove that he was an agriculturist in order to take advantage of section 20. Clearly such a person could only prove that he was an agriculturist if he was earning his livelihood wholly or principally by agriculture carried on, if he was a resident of Dharwar, in the Dharwar District, provided the Act had been extended to that District and, therefore, it may be said that the Local Government considered that the Act had been extended to Dharwar. But we have to consider what is the plain meaning of section 2. In my opinion it cannot be said that in 1903 the Act was extended to Dharwar merely because sections 2 and 20 were extended. What is meant by the extension of an Act to a District is the extension of the substantial portion of the Act, and not merely the extension of a particular section or one or more sections. Otherwise the Act would extend to the whole of British India because sections 1, 11, 56, 60 and 62 extend thereto. The plaintiff could only succeed if section 2 had contained the words "district to which this Act may for the time being either wholly or in part extend." In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the learned Assistant Judge was correct and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—We have in this case, as has happened so often before, to consider the meaning of the word 'agriculturist.' Broadly speaking, at any rate for the purposes of this Court, there are two ways of ascertaining the meaning of that word: one way is to turn to the dictionary, the other way is to turn to the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. But the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act only provides you with an 'agriculturist' if that person (broadly speaking) is residing within the limits to which the Act has been extended. The word as used in the Act has no application whatever to cultivators and others who live outside those limits. In this particular case the person claiming to be an agriculturist lived and carried on his work in the Dharwar District and the transaction we are concerned with was of the year 1903. So we have to consider whether the Act extended to the Dharwar District in 1903. There can be no doubt that the Act cannot extend to a District because a few sections only extend. I think the Act itself provides us with good reason for saying this, because it provides that section 1 and four other sections extend to the whole of British India, and that the rest of the Act extends only to the four named Districts. I do not think that would have occurred in the Act itself if the Legislature had intended that the extension of these five sections would have to be regarded as an extension of the Act. I think the very contrary appears.

Then it may be said that the Act cannot extend to a District unless every single word of it extends. I do not think that applies either. I think what is meant is that there must be an extension of the Act sufficient to provide that its main purpose applies to the District, or a really substantial part of the main purpose. That happened in the Dharwar District in 1905, not in the year 1903. We have the effect of section 10A dealt with in the Full Bench case of Sawantrawa Fakirappa v. Giriappa Fakirappa (1). The result is rather curious, because section 10A is held to apply to transactions which were entered into after the Act is extended in a particular region, and not to apply to transactions before that time, and this has been described as very arbitrary. But for all that, there is a very good reason for it, and the reason is this. Section 10A was enacted to meet an evil which had arisen by reason of the operation of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act in the four Districts to which for many years it had been applied, and it was feared that when the Act came to be applied to other Districts the same evil might arise there also. But it did not appear that the evil which was prevalent in the four Districts had at that time become at all common elsewhere. That I believe to be a correct statement of facts so far as they were then known, and I believe so far as they are now known, and, therefore, it would be natural and it would exactly fulfil the intention of those who suggested section 10A that it should result precisely as laid down in the Full Bench decision in Sawantrawa Fakirappa v. Giriappa Fakirappa (1). The remedy for the evil is only to be applied after the evil comes into existence, and the evil is not likely to come into existence until the Act is extended. The result that we have arrived at in this case is absolutely in accordance with what I believe to be the intention of section 10A. We find that it does not apply to the transaction in this case, because that transaction happened at a period before there was any reason to suppose that the evil which section 10A was intended to thwart had arisen in the Dharwar District. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

AITI KOCHUNI v. AIDEW KOCHUNI.

Appeal allowed.

In matters of succession the Koches, aboriginals of Assam, are governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law, under which an unchaste daughter is not entitled to inherit the estate of her father, and the disability caused by her unchastity is not cured by her subsequent marriage after her father's death, with the person with whom she lived an unchaste life, as the right to inherit was not hers at the time the succession opened out. [p. 695, col. 1; p. 697, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated the 30th of July 1917, reversing the decree of the Munsif, Nowgong, dated the 16th of April 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of the property left by her father as his heiress. The parties belong to the Assam Valley Districts. The plaintiff during the lifetime of her father is alleged to have eloped with a person with whom she lived as man and wife for sometime, and after the death of her father they were married. The contesting defendant is a daughter by a mistress of the father of the plaintiff and is in possession of the property left by her father. The sole question is the right of succession of an unchaste daughter to the property left by her father according to Dayabhaga Law.

In this case there is no issue by valid marriage. The defendant is an illegitimate child and cannot succeed. According to Dayabhaga Law illegitimate children cannot succeed. They are trespassers here. Ram Saran Garain v. Tek Ohand Garan (1), Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2), Kirpal Narain v. Sukurmoni (3). We are to consider the position at the time of the institution of the suit, and not at the time of the death of the father.

Once a woman is found unchaste it does not follow that she will always remain so. In this case the bridegroom is himself alleged to have defiled her. Gangadhar v. Yellu Viraswami Shiravale (4). I rely on Yagnavalkya's text beginning with "Ananyopurbikam," etc. If a maiden is defiled by the very bridegroom, she has not got to atone for that act.

fied between 'Punarvee' and 'Shairini,' and the present case does not fall within the classification and no penance is laid down for this particular case.

Under the Mitakshara Law illegitimate sons cannot succeed. Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2).

Mitakshara should prevail where Daya-bhaga is silent.

The case of Kerry Kolitane v. Monee Ram Kolita (5) is repugnant to the Hindu ideas.

The attitude of the Hindus is better illustrated in the case of Sakuntala.

In this part of the Province the custom is in existence and custom is transcendent and can override any express law.

There is absolutely no legal evidence to show that the plaintiff was unchaste before the death of the father or after that.

The onus lies on the defendant to shew that she eloped and the age is also important in this case, and none of them have been proved.

Sasadhar died in 1909 and the suit was brought in 1916.

The bar to inheritance is removed by subsequent marriage: Pedda Amani v. Zemin-dar of Marungapuri (6).

Babu Banbehari Sorkar, for the Respondents.—I submit that the Privy Council decision does not help my learned friend.

We must look at the time when succession opened, and not at the time when the suit was instituted.

I submit further the sons of a continuous concubine are the sons of one of 13 kinds of Dasi Putras and can inherit. Ohatturbhuj Patnaik v. Krishna Ohandra Patnaik (7) referred to.

[Dr. Kanjilal cites Kirpal Narain v. Sukurmoni (3) and shews that the sons of a continuous concubine cannot succeed.]

I would refer to Digest of Colebrooke, Volume II, page 340.

The cases of Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2) and Kirpal Narain v. Sukurmoni (3) dealt with only limited interests and the decisions are not sound.

There cannot be a valid marriage with a girl who has lost her virginity.

Marriage 'Mantras' are only meant for virgins. See Manu VIII, 226, and also Golap Chandra's book, 4th Edition, page 95.

"Panigrahana," etc., of virgins alone can be accepted according to Hindu Law.

'Ananyapurbikam' in Yagnavalkya means that she must be a virgin, and not that she should be defiled by anybody else.

Medhatithi as commentator explains in Chapter VIII, 226, Manu's Text, page 1016; 'Panigrahanika,' etc.

There 'Kanya' has been explained as a maiden not defiled.

Kullukavatyia also says there cannot be any legal marriage with a defiled girl.

See Kulluk's Commentary, page 223.

In Dayabhaga 'Kanya' and 'Kumari' have been said to be first claimants in order of succession, i.e., maiden daughter should take first and then married daughter.

Chapter XI, section 2 (Dayabhaga).

Tara v. Krishna (8) referred to.

'Ananyopurbikam' has been translated by Monmo-ho Nath Sastri in Dharma Shashtra as one who has not been known by anyone before and who has not been given away in marriage.

There was not a legal marriage at the time when succession opened out.

If there has been no legal marriage, the Privy Council case of Pedda Amani v. Zenindar of Marungapuri (6) has no application.

AITI KOCHUNI v. AIDEW KOCHUNI.

The Privy Council decision is in my favour.

Raghunandan in his Utbahatatta, page 697, supports my contention when he says:—
"Khotajonaya..." etc.

The custom is transcendental and it ought to prevail against Statute Law.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal relates to the right of succession of an unchaste daughter to the estate of her father under the Dayabhaga Law.

The appellant before us is the daughter of one Sasadhar Koch. During her father's lifetime she eloped with a person named Khedu Koch and they lived together for several years as man and wife. After her father's death, however, she married Khedu, and she now claims the property left by her father as his heiress.

It appears too that Sasadhar after the death of the plaintiff's mother took another woman Bishali as his "mistress or wife without any formal marriage" and had a son by her and two daughters by her. The son is dead, but the daughters are alive and are in possession and they contested the plaintiff's claim. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. On appeal the suit has been dismissed and the plaintiff has appealed.

The parties are Koches, aboriginals of Assam. It has been held by this Court [see Deepo Debia v. Gotindo Deb (9)] that the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law is the law applicable to Assam and the learned Vakil for the appellant has argued the case on the view that the Dayabhaga is the law applicable to these parties.

Now it has been held that according to the Dayabhaga the daughter is under the same obligation to chastity as a widow, therefore, as the law is now settled, unchastity will prevent her from taking the estate. See Kerry Kolitane v. Monee Raa Kolita (5) (per Mitter, J.), Ramnath Tolapattro v. Durga Sundari Debi (11), Ramnada v. Raikishori (12) and Sundari Letani v. Pitambari Letani (13). It is found in the present case that the plaintiff ran away from her father's house, took one Khedu as her paramour and lived with him as his mistress until after her father's death. That being so, she would be excluded by reason of her unchastity from inheritance under the Dayabhaga.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that the disability caused by her unchastity was cured by her subsequent marriage with the same person with whom she lived as a mistress before her father's death.

It is argued that as a child procreated before marriage may be legitimized if born after the mother's marriage with the person who procreated it even under the Hindu Law, similarly the bar to inheritance caused by reason of unchastity may be removed by subsequent marriage with the person with whom she was living as mistress. In support of the proposition that in order to render a child legitimate the procreation as well as the birth need not take place after marriage, reliance is placed upon the observations of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pedda Amani v. Zemindar of Marungapuri (6): "The point of illegitimacy being established by proof that the procreation was before marriage, had never suggested itself to the learned Counsel for the appellant at the time of the trial, nor does it appear from the authorities cited to have been distinctly laid down that according to Hindu Law in order to render a child legitimate the procreation as well as the birth must take place after marriage. That would be a most inconvenient doctrine. If it is the law that law must be administered. Their Lordships, however, do not think that it is the Hindu Law. They are of opinion that the Hindu Law is the same in that respect as the English Law." With reference to these observations Sir Gurudas Banerji in his Tagore Lectures (Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan, 3rd Edition, page 166) remarks: "This decision, so long as the Privy Council do not think it fit to reconsider the point, must be received as the law on the subject. But with every respect that is due to the decision of the highest tribunal for India, I may be permitted to say that the doctrine that procreation in lawful wedlock is necessary to constitute legitimacy is not only supported by the language of the texts, but is also in accordance with the general spirit of the Hindu Law by which the nuptial rites are primarily meant only for virgins, while the necessity of marrying girls before puberty reduces the practical inconvenience of the doctrine within the narrowest possible limits." The decision of the Privy Council so far as it goes is of course binding upon us, but the marriage of the mother and the birth of the child in the case before the Privy Council took place before the succession opened out, and the only question, therefore, was as to the legitimacy of the child. The question raised in this case, viz., whether a daughter is excluded by reason of unchastity at the time when the succession opened out, did not arise in that case and was not considered by their Lordships.

Reference is made by the learned Pleader for the appellant to the text of Yajna-

and the translation of it in Golap Chandra Sarkar's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, page 78, "Let a man who has finished his student-ship espouse an auspicious wife who is not defiled by connection with another man, is agreeable, non-Sapinda, younger in age and shorter in stature," etc., and it is contended that the words "not defiled by a person other than the person with whom she is to be married." We think, however, that those words mean a "virgin," i. e., one who has not been defiled by any person, because the text does not contemplate any sexual connection between the bride and the bridegroom before marriage. The nuptial rites among Hindus and the nuptial Mantras are meant for virgins, and the view we take is in accord with the practice and sentiments of Hindus. It is unnecessary, however, to discuss this matter further nor the question whether unchastity in a maiden may be expiated by penances before marriage, because no marriage took place before the succession opened out in the present case. The only question we have to consider is whether the disability of the plaintiff to inherit by reason of her unchastity, when the succession opened out on her father's death, was removed by her subsequent marriage with her paramour. At the time the succession opened out she had not married her paramour and there was no knowing when she would marry him or whether she would marry him at all. Did the estate remain in abeyance until she married, so that her marriage with her paramour might remove the disability caused by her unchastity at the time of her father's death? We cannot hold that under Hindu Law there can be such abeyance. The learned Subordinate Judge says: "It is a matter of common knowledge that many people of lower castes such as Koches, etc., in Assam contract unions with women without any marriage and get married afterwards, sometime in their old age after their children become grown up men, and no stigma attaches to the children from before the formal marriage provided there was a marriage afterwards. But as neither side has raised the plea of local custom, I must decide the case according to the Dayabhaga and its interpretation by the Bengal High Court." The plaintiff and her paramour, therefore, could have married in their old age possibly half a century after the succession opened out, and if the appellant's contention is correct, we must hold that the estate must remain in abeyance until she marries and the heir upon whom it has vested on the death of her father (and it must have vested in someone) should be divested, may be after half a century, if she chose to marry her paramour at that distance of time. We are unable to uphold such a contention.

The last ground urged is that no question of vesting and divesting arises in this case as the defendants are not the heirs of the deceased they being the daughters by Bishalya, a mistress, and that although there was also a son born of Bishalya who survived, his father, he could not succeed because it has been held that under the Dayabhaga illegitimate sons even of Sudras, except a dasi putra, cannot succeed. See Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (2), Kirpal Narain v. Sukurmoni (3). There was some discussion before us as to whether the brother of the defendants could be called a dasi putra (in which case he would be an heir) and whether or not a narrow construction had been placed upon the expression by this Court in those cases. We think it, however, unnecessary to consider those questions. So far as the question of vesting of the estate is concerned, it is to be observed that there are brothers and nephews of the deceased so that there were heirs of the deceased; and the defendants are in possession of the property left by the deceased and have been recognised as tenants by the Revenue Authorities. In these circumstances they are entitled to contest the claim of the plaintiff if she is not the heiress of the deceased.

We would add that according to the learned Subordinate Judge it is common practice among people to which the parties belong in that part of the country to contract unions with women without any marriage and to get married afterwards when the children are grown up men. To apply to such people the strict rules of Hindu Law (and specially those of the Dayabhaga School which are based upon the principle of spiritual benefit), in such matters, may lead to injustice in some cases. We think such questions should be decided with reference to local custom and usage, and it is to be regretted that the parties did not set up such custom or usage, although the existence of the "practice" as a "matter of common knowledge" is referred to by the Court below. As it is, we must decide the case according to the Dayabhaga Law, and under that law the plaintiff was excluded from inheritance, and her subsequent marriage with Khedu did not revive the right which was not hers at the time the succession opened out.

The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 20 (d)— Insolvent, suit by, to recover deferred dower of daughter, maintainability of.

A person who has been declared an insolvent cannot, while his estate is in the hands of the Receiver, maintain a suit in his own name for the deferred dower of his daughter, even though the Receiver has refused to bring such suit. [p. 700, col. 2.]

Civil revision from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr.

FACTS.—The petitioner, Khelafat Husain, was declared insolvent in 1911 and a Receiver was appointed for the administration of his assets. During the course of his insolvency his daughter died and he became entitled to a portion of the deferred dower due to his daughter. He asked the Receiver of his estate in insolvency to bring a suit in respect of the dower, inasmuch as the same was getting barred by limitation. The Receiver refused to sue. Khelafat Husain, thereupon, applied to the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr for permission to sue as pauper. The learned Judge declined to give him the permission by the following order, dated the 27th August 1918:—

"There is no asset to enable the petitioner to institute the suit and I don't think he should do so as the right of action vest in the trustee. I don't see how permission can be given to the insolvent to sue. Whether he can sue in forma pauperis is a question for the trying Court to decide. The application is disallowed."

Thereafter on a suit being instituted the application for leave to sue as a pauper was disposed of by Mr. Satish Chunder Mitra, the Second Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, on the 7th April 1919 in the following terms on the question of cause of action:—"So long as there is a Receiver of the insolvent's properties, the applicant insolvent cannot sue at all..... He must wait till his disability ceases, when and when only he can sue. He cannot in my opinion sue in his personal capacity making the Receiver a defendant in the case, when the Court did not permit the Receiver to sue. It is said that by the time the disability ceases the claim of the plaintiff would be barred by limitation. That no doubt is a difficult point. If the disability of the applicant be a legal disability, I do not see any reason as to why he should not get an extension of time on that ground."

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT v. BIDYASUNDARI DAS.

The petitioner thereupon made an application to the High Court in revision against the above order of the Subordinate Judge.

Mr. Khurshad Husnain, for the Petitioner.— Under section 16 (2) (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act the property of the insolvent vests in a Receiver, and under section 20 (d) the Receiver may institute any suit relating to the property of the insolvent. The claim for a portion of the dower debt has not yet ripened into property so that the Receiver may get a hold over it. In any case there is nothing in law to prevent an insolvent (a beneficiary) from bringing an action for the ultimate benefit of creditors (the other beneficiaries) when the Receiver (a trustee) is unable to sue owing to want of funds. Under English law personal actions may be brought by the insolvent himself. Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 2, page 137.

Mr. Fakhruddin, for the Opposite Party.— The insolvent has no cause of action and section 20 (d) is a bar to the suit. It is the Receiver alone that can sue. The Receiver's discretion should not be interfered with.

Mr. Khurshad Husnain heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.

CUTTS, J.— This is an application in revision made in respect of an order of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr rejecting an application by one Khelafat Hossain to sue as a pauper. It appears that the petitioner was declared an insolvent in the year 1911, but it has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that in spite of the petitioner having been declared an insolvent and his estate being in the hands of a Receiver, he has sufficient funds to prosecute the suit and that he has no cause of action inasmuch as his property and assets are in the hands of a Receiver.

The first point urged before us is that the learned Subordinate Judge had no power to go behind the order, declaring the petitioner an insolvent. It is unnecessary to discuss this point for, even assuming it to be a valid contention, the petitioner would not be entitled to sue. "All rights of action which relate directly to the bankrupt's property and can be turned into assets for the payment of debts pass to the trustee but where a cause of action arises from the bodily or mental suffering or personal inconvenience of the bankrupt, or from injury to his person or reputation, then the right of action remains with the bankrupt" (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 2, page 137 paragraph 236).

Now the suit which the petitioner desires to bring in this case is a suit for the deferred dower of his daughter. This is certainly not a suit of a nature which can be brought by the insolvent himself. It appears that the Receiver had been asked by the insolvent to bring the suit and had declined. This, however, will not assist the insolvent, and it may be that the Receiver had very good grounds for his refusal.

In these circumstances this application must be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

ADAMI, J.— I agree.

Application dismissed.

Appeal—Final hearing—Court, whether can go into whole case—Gift to wife by member of firm heavily indebted, validity of—Intention to delay or defeat creditors—Pleadings, inconsistent, when permissible.

At the stage of the final hearing of an appeal the entire appeal is open for consideration, including an investigation of the issues remitted for trial, where such investigation is essential for the proper determination of the matter directly in controversy between the parties [p 702, col. 1.]

A gift to his wife by a member of a firm heavily involved in debt, which is deliberately kept secret till the firm is adjudged bankrupt and the plain object of which is to delay, if not to defeat, creditors, and under which possession is not obtained by the donee, nor is any convincing explanation given to justify the transaction, is a fictitious gift and confers no title on the donee to the properties dealt with thereby. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT v. BIDYASUNDARI DAS.

Either party to a litigation may in a proper case include in his pleadings two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claim relief thereunder in the alternative, but whenever such alternative cases are alleged, the facts belonging to them respectively should not be mixed up but should be stated separately so as to show on what facts each alternative relief is claimed. [p. 703, col. 1.]

The plaintiff, who avails himself of the right to place inconsistent cases before the Court and endeavours to establish both the alternatives by contradictory oral testimony, is in a state of inextricable difficulty; evidence adduced in support of both the cases can hardly be expected to secure confidence. JUDGMENT.--This is an appeal by the fourth defendant in a suit for cancellation of a deed of gift. On the 20th February 1909 Raimohan Saha executed the deed in question in favour of his wife Bidyasundari Dasi. The deed covered immoveable properties valued at Rs. 14,000 by guess. On the 5th July 1911 Raimohan was adjudged an insolvent and his assets vested in the Official Assignee of this Court. On the 21st November 1911 Bidyasundari executed a deed of gift in favour of Raimohan. This deed covered all but six of the properties covered by the previous deed of gift executed by the husband in favour of the wife. On the 16th December 1911 Raimohan died. On the 22nd December 1913 Bidyasundari instituted the present suit for cancellation of the deed of gift executed by her. In the fourth paragraph of the plaint it is alleged that she executed the document under the impression that it was a power-of-attorney for the management of her properties. It is further alleged that she did not execute the document with her free-will and consent but was under the influence of her husband and his brothers. She adds that she was not informed of the particulars of the document, got no independent advice about it and did not understand its force and effect. On these grounds she prays that the deed of gift be declared void, invalid, collusive, inoperative, ineffective and not binding on, nor enforceable against, herself and her properties. The claim was resisted by the Official Assignee. On his behalf it was asserted that the gift by Raimohan to his wife was a fictitious transaction, intended to defeat and delay his creditors and partners. It was further alleged that the deed of gift executed by Bidyasundari in favour of her husband was not executed under compulsion nor in ignorance of its contents. On these pleadings the following issues were raised:

(a) Was the plaintiff induced to execute the disputed deed of gift under undue influence;

(b) Did the plaintiff execute the above document without knowing its contents and understanding its effect upon her interest;

(c) Is it true that the plaintiff had no independent and disinterested advice in connection with the disputed deed of gift?

The Subordinate Judge disbelieved the allegation that the plaintiff had executed the document under the impression that it was a power-of-attorney. He held that she must have been told that it was a deed of gift, although she might not have been supplied with full particulars. But the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had no independent or disinterested advice, that she did not understand the true nature and contents of the document and that she executed it under undue influence and pressure. He declined to investigate the allegation of the Official Assignee that the gift by the husband to the wife was never intended to operate as a genuine transaction. In this view, the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit and cancelled the deed of gift. The Official Assignee has appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Chitty and Beachcroft, JJ., on the 20th July 1917 when they held that, for the proper determination of the appeal, evidence should be taken and a finding arrived at with regard to the first deed of gift. They accordingly framed and remitted for trial the following issues:

(i) Whether the deed of gift by Raimohan to Bidyasundari was a benami transaction or was intended to convey the properties to her;

(ii) Under what circumstances and for what purposes was that deed of gift made;

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT v. BIDYASUNDARI DAS.

(iii) Was Bidyasundari ever in possession of the properties so conveyed?

The Subordinate Judge took evidence, oral and documentary, and came to the conclusion that the deed of gift by Raimohan to Bidyasundari was a benami transaction, that it was executed to defeat the claim of creditors and that the lady was never in possession of the properties ostensibly transferred to her. The new evidence together with these findings has been made part of the record and the appeal has been argued before us with reference to all the materials.

On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, the propriety of the order made by Chitty and Beachcroft, JJ., has been called in question, and our competency to reconsider its necessity has been supported by reference to the decisions in Hiatunnessa v. Kailash Chandra (1), Hanuman Das v. Gursahay Singh (2) and East Indian Railway Co. v. Ohanga Khan (3). It is needless to define the exact powers of the Court at the stage of the final hearing of the appeal: it is sufficient to state that the entire appeal is open for consideration and we must base our decision on such portions of the materials on the record as appear to us to be relevant. We are further clearly of opinion that for the proper determination of the matter directly in controversy between the parties, an investigation of the issues remitted for trial by Chitty and Beachcroft, JJ., was essential. The two gifts, though separated by nearly three years in point of time, cannot be assumed to be wholly unconnected transactions; and the facts disclosed after remand tend to show that there is an intimate relation between them.

As regards the deed of gift executed by Raimohan in favour of Bidyasundari, the Subordinate Judge has laid stress upon the suspicious circumstances which attended its execution. The document was executed secretly and was attested by witnesses, the majority of whom cannot be traced. Although the donor had three sons, he transferred the best and most valuable of his properties including his homestead to his wife; why he felt impelled to adopt such a course is not satisfactorily explained. Suspicion as to the genuineness of the transaction is deepened, when we discover that at the time of the alleged gift, the firm (in which Raimohan was a partner) was heavily involved in debt and was greatly embarrassed, though perhaps not actually insolvent; and we have further the significant fact that the gift was deliberately kept secret till the firm was adjudged bankrupt. In such circumstances, it is by no means difficult to form an estimate of the true nature and purpose of the gift; the object plainly was to delay, if not to defeat, the creditors whose dues were steadily increasing in amount. We have finally the unquestionable fact that the donee never took possession of the properties transferred to her. The Subordinate Judge has classified the properties under six heads and has found with regard to each of the classes that the plaintiff has failed to prove her possession in respect thereof. The evidence has been placed before us and has been minutely scrutinised, but no error has been found in the analysis given by the Subordinate Judge, such as would affect the validity of his conclusion. We must consequently affirm the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the deed of gift was secretly executed at a time when the failure of the firm was in sight, if not actually imminent, that the matter was kept secret till the firm had been declared insolvent, that the lady never obtained possession of the properties and that no convincing explanation has been attempted to justify the transaction. In this view, we must hold that title did not pass from the donor to the donee and that consequently the plaintiff had no title to the disputed properties.

Apart from this, it is plain that as regards the second deed of gift, the plaintiff has not laid the foundation for a case of cancellation. Her allegations in the plaint are mutually contradictory. She asserts that when she executed the deed she was assured that it was a power of attorney for the management of her properties. This, if true, involves in essence a charge of fraud. But, not content with this, she asserts, in the alternative, that the document was not executed with her free-will and consent. This, if true, is a case of coercion or undue influence. It may be conceded that either party to a litigation may in a proper case include in his pleading two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claim relief thereunder in the alternative; but whenever such alternative cases are alleged, the facts belonging to them respectively should not be mixed up, but should be stated separately so as to show on what facts each alternative relief is claimed. Reference may be made in this connection to the decision of the Full Bench in Narendra Nath Barari v. Abhay Charan Chatterpadhya (4) and of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hoseini Bibi (5), which is explained in Jino v. Manon (6), Phillips v. Phillips (7), Berdan v. Greenwood (8), Morgan, In re, Owen v. Morgan (9) and Davy v. Garrett (10).

The plaintiff, who avails himself of the right to place inconsistent cases before the Court and endeavours to establish both the alternatives by contradictory oral testimony, is, however, plainly in a state of inextricable difficulty; evidence adduced in support of both the cases can hardly be expected to secure confidence. The allegation in the present case that the plaintiff did not receive independent advice is the ground of attack common in this class of cases. The deed was of the simplest character and was free from all complexity; no explanation could have been needed to make its effect intelligible to her. The theory of undue influence looked more promising, but was not supported by tangible evidence. What really happened is clear from the evidence on the record. When bankruptcy was imminent, Raimohan transferred the properties to his wife so as to thwart, if possible, the claims of the creditors. But after the insolvency had taken place, when assets were needed to bring about a composition with the creditors, the properties had to be replaced in the name of Raimohan. After this had been effected, the contemplated settlement fell through and Raimohan himself died. Now, with a view to save as much property as possible from the grasp of the Official Assignee, Bidyasundari, probably with the concurrence of other members of the family, has instituted the present suit. The truth is that the first transaction was fictitious and the second which is challenged is genuine.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the suit dismissed. The plaintiff must pay the Official Assignee his costs in all Courts; but in view of the fact that the paper books prepared after remand consist very largely of irrelevant papers, we direct that each party should pay his own cost of preparation of the paper book after remand. This does not affect the sum which was paid by the Official Assignee in this Court on behalf of the respondent for the preparation of the paper book; he will be entitled to realise that sum. The hearing fee on each occasion is assessed at Rs. 500.

Appeal allowed.

The "estate" referred to in section 19C of the Court Fees Act means the property of a deceased person, and it is impossible to dissociate the identity of the person from the property in the meaning of the word. [p. 704, col. 2.]

Section 19C of the Court Fees Act only provides for cases where a fresh grant of Probate of a Will or Letters of Administration of the estate of the same person becomes necessary and the fees have already been paid in respect to the whole or part of the property comprised in the estate of the deceased person. [p. 704, col 2; p. 705, col 1.]

There is nothing in the wording of the section which can be so construed as to support the contention that when a beneficiary under a Will dies before the estate of the testator is fully administered and Probate is taken out of the Will of the beneficiary, then no Court-fees are required to be paid in respect of that portion of the beneficiary's estate which he has taken under the previous Will and in respect of which Court-fees have already been paid. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J. —The appellant Babu Bhagwati Saran Singh is the executor by implication of the Will of his late wife Musummat Mayian Godavari Koer, who died on the 16th April 1917 leaving a Will of even date. The property comprised in the Will consisted principally of a half share in the Maksudpur estate, which the deceased acquired under the Will of her late father Raja Rameshwar Prasad Narain Singh who died on the 2nd December 1902. The only other property comprised in the Will was a house at Gaya and a decree against the testator's sister. The property was left by the deceased to her husband, the appellant, for life and after his death to such of her daughters as should survive their father. It appears that when Raja Rameshwar Prasad Singh died, he also left a Will disposing of his property which included the bulk of the property mentioned in the Will of his daughter now under consideration. His widow, the Rani Ram Sunder Kuer, obtained Letters of Administration with the Will of her late husband annexed and paid the full fee chargeable under the Court Fees Act of 1870. That estate has up to the present apparently not been fully administered.

The appellant, having applied for a grant of Probate of his deceased wife's Will before the District Judge of Gaya, petitioned the Court for an order that by reason of section 19C of the Court Fees Act, 1870, no fee is chargeable upon a grant of Probate in the present case in so far as concerns the property comprised in the Will of the estate of his deceased wife's father, upon which duty was paid under the Act when Letters of Administration were granted to the latter's widow. The learned District Judge rejected this application and in my opinion rightly.

Section 19C of the Indian Court Fees Act provides:

"Whenever a grant of Probate or Letters of Administration has been or is made in respect of the whole of the property belonging to an estate, and the full fee chargeable under this Act has been or is paid thereon, no fee shall be chargeable under the same Act when a like grant is made in respect of the whole or any part of the same property belonging to the same estate.

"Whenever such a grant has been or is made in respect of any property forming part of an estate, the amount of fees then actually paid under this Act shall be deducted when a like grant is made in respect of property belonging to the same estate, identical with or including the property to which the former grant relates."

It is only necessary to read that section to see that the estate therein referred to means the property of a deceased person, and it is impossible to my mind to dissociate the identity of the person from the property in the meaning of the word "estate" as there used. I may point out that in another part of the Act when the word estate is used merely to indicate the property without involving any connotation of individual ownership, as in section 7, clause (5), the Legislature thought fit to append an explanation to that section in order to shew exactly the sense in which the word "estate" is there used. But in section 19C and the other sections of the same Chapter relating to Probate and Letters of Administration it seems to me impossible to treat the word "estate" as having any other meaning than that already mentioned. If the appellant's contention was right, then it would follow that once the fee chargeable under the Act had been paid in respect to any particular property on the death of the owner for the time being, that property would be exempt ever afterwards from similar fees notwithstanding that it continued to pass from generation to generation by Will or inheritance, and successive Probates or Letters of Administration were granted. That clearly was not the intention of the section. The section, in my opinion, provides for cases where a fresh grant of Probate of a Will or Letters of Administration of the estate of the same person becomes necessary and the fees have already been paid in respect to the whole or part of the property comprised in the estate of the deceased person. The Probate is sometimes revoked, or again a portion of an estate may remain unadministered and may require a fresh grant, and there are many cases in which a fresh grant becomes necessary. It is clearly to provide for such cases that section 190 of the Act was passed, and it stipulates that in such cases no fresh fees should be chargeable where the fees had already been paid by some previous executor or administrator. There is nothing in the wording of the section which, in my opinion, can be so construed as to support the contention now put forward by the appellant. This appeal must be dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 14, 29 (b)—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 77—Suit to enforce registration of document—Limitation, whether can be extended under s. 14 of Limitation Act.

In computing the period prescribed under section 77 of the Registration Act for bringing a suit to enforce the registration of a document, the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act are not applicable. [p. 708, col. 1; p. 712, col. 1; p. 715, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the 1st Additional District Judge, 24 Pergunnas, dated the 12th July 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Sealdah, dated the 18th December 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Maulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq (with him Babus Atindra Nath Mukherji and Santosh Kumar Bose), for the Appellant.—If the Sub-Registrar refuses to register a document, the person claiming under such a document has to bring a suit within 30 days from the date of such refusal. (Vide section 77 of the Indian Registration Act.) Now if he makes a bona fide mistake in selecting the Court in which his suit should be instituted, he will get an extension of time under section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act. (Vide section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act.) In the present case the plaintiff presented a document for registration in the Sealdah Sub-Registry Office, but the executant of the document did not appear and the registration was refused. There was an appeal to the Registrar of Alipore under section 73 of the Registration Act and the appeal was dismissed. Now the plaintiff thought that as the Registrar of Alipore had refused to register the document, the suit should be filed in the Alipore Munsif's Court. The suit was filed in the Alipore Munsif's Court. It was kept pending there for some time and eventually the Munsif of Alipore found that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit. Then it was filed in the proper Court. Now section 14 says that it will extend the period of limitation prescribed for any suit whether such period has been provided for in the Indian Limitation Act or not. It is clear that if the last day is a holiday, the suit should be filed on the first re-opening day. The other side relies on section 29 of the Indian Limitation Act. It does not take away the application of sections 4 to 25, which are general rules of computation [vide Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (1) and Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (2)]. The general principle of law which was settled long ago, has been enacted in section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act [vide Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhon Chunder Sen (3)]. The Full Bench case in Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Parhi (10) is of no help to the other side, as the Registration Act is not a complete Code in itself.

Secretary of State v. Shib Narain Hazra (11) is not against me. Section 29 of the Indian Limitation Act says that the period prescribed should not be affected or altered. Vide Golap Ohand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (1), and Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dina Bashy Shaha (12).

Babu Kshitish Chandra Chuckeravarti (with him Babu Nitish Chandra Lahiri), for the Respondents.—The history of the controversy began in 1859, when the two Acts, viz., the Act X of 1859 (Rent Act) and the Act XI of 1859 (Indian Limitation Act) came into force. The first question that arose for consideration was whether the Limitation Act had any application to the rent suits. The first case was decided in 1865, John Foulson v. Modhoosoodun Paul (13). The next case is Dixonath Panday v. Roghoonath Panday (14), then Unnoda Persaud Mookerjee v. Krishto Coomar Moitra (15), then Mohummud Buhadoor Khan v. Collector of Bareilly (16). In 1877, two Acts, viz., Act III of 1877 (Registration Act) and Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act), were passed.

In the case of Golap Ohand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (1) Mr. Justice

Mitter argued that by the Act of 1877, the period prescribed should not be altered or affected. But it is clear that if section 14 applies to the present case, the period prescribed by section 77 of the Registration Act cannot but be affected, if not altered. Mr. Justice Mitter in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17) has concurred with the Chief Justice, Sir Francis Maclean, and has held the other way. There are three classes of cases which come before the Court for consideration:—

Firstly:—Lex non cogit ad impossibilia cases. Vide Ahad Baksh v. Sheikh Babar Ali (18).

Secondly:—Bengal Tenancy Act cases. Vide sections 184 and 185 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Kamal Krishna Kundu Chowdhury v. Rai Kedar Nath Kundu (8).

The last case on the point is Secretary of State v. Gangadhar Nandi (19). It has distinguished Daropadi v. Hira Lal (4) and Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (2). Secretary of State v. Shib Narain Hazra (11) is in my favour.

Thirdly:—Section 29, clause 1.(b), which is the reproduction of section 6 of Act XV of 1877, is clear.

The Registration Act is a special Act, and the rule of 30 days is specially prescribed. Therefore, nothing in the Limitation Act can affect or alter the period of 30 days. Vide Veeramma v. Abbiah (20).

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Has the case in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17) ever been dissented from?]

On the other hand Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) has been distinguished in Girina Nath Roy v. Pitini Bibee (21) and practically overruled by Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Parhi (10), and not followed in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17). [The Vakil for the respondents was stopped.]

KALIMUDDIN MOLLAH v. SAHIBUDDIN MOLLA.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—The question which has been referred to the Full Bench is whether the case of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khotun (17) was rightly decided. The above named case is reported in 30 Calcutta 532 under the name of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khotun (17).

The question arose in a second appeal in a suit brought by the plaintiff to enforce registration of a conveyance alleged to have been executed in his favour by the defendants.

The document in question was presented for registration in the Sub-Registry office at Sealdah. As the defendants did not appear, registration was refused by the Sub-Registrar; against this order the plaintiff made an application to the Registrar on the 26th of January 1914; his application was rejected.

Thereupon on the 21st of February following, the plaintiff brought his suit in the Court of the Munsif at Alipore. On the 19th of June 1914, the Sealdah Sub-Registry office not being within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Munsif at Alipore, the plaint was returned under the provisions of Order VII, rule 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure and was on the same day presented in the proper Court, namely, the Court of the Munsif at Sealdah.

By section 77 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, it is provided that when the Registrar refuses to order the document to be registered under section 72 or section 76, any person claiming under such document or his representative, assign or agent may within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal institute in the Civil Court, within the local limits of whose original jurisdiction is situate the office in which the document is sought to be registered, a suit for a decree directing the document to be registered in such office, if it be duly presented for registration within thirty days after the passing of such decree.

The suit was not brought in the Court specified by the section within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal and so prima facie the suit could not be entertained.

It was urged, however, that the provisions of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908 should be applied and that the time during which the plaintiff was prosecuting the suit in the Court of the Munsif at Alipore should be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed by section 77 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908.

If the case of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khotun (17) was rightly decided, section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act would not apply to the present case and the plaintiff's appeal should be dismissed.

Section 29 (b) of the Indian Limitation Act provides as follows:—Nothing in this Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit appeal on application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India.

It is not denied that the Indian Registration Act, 1908, is a special law within the meaning of section 29 (b) and that the thirty days prescribed by section 77 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, is "a period of limitation specially prescribed" by such special law. The question, therefore, remains whether the provisions of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, if applied to this case, would "affect or alter" the period of limitation specially prescribed by the Indian Registration Act.

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the true construction of section 29 (b) was that, save as to the period of limitation, the other provisions of the Act of Limitation are applicable to cases falling under any special or local law.

These are not the words of the section, and it must be considered whether the application of the provisions of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, would "affect or alter" the period of limitation specially prescribed by the Indian Registration Act.

The words of section 29 (b) are plain and unambiguous and in my judgment they should be construed according to their natural significance.

In this case if the provisions of section 77 of the Registration Act alone were applied, the plaintiff would have had to institute his suit in the Court specified by the section within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal by the Registrar, i. e., within thirty days from the 26th January 1914. On the other hand if the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908, were applicable, the plaintiff would obtain an extension of the period of limitation until the 19th June 1914, provided he could show that he had been prosecuting his suit in the Alipore Court with due diligence and good faith.

Under such circumstances it seems clear to me that the applications of the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908, would affect, even if it did not alter, the period specially prescribed by the Registration Act.

It was argued on behalf of the respondent that the words "prescribed for any suit" in section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act mean "prescribed by this Act for any suit." Whether that be so or not (which I do not decide), there is a clear distinction between the words used in section 14, namely, "prescribed for any suit" and the words used in section 29 (b), namely, "specially prescribed for any suit by any special law," and in my judgment the words used in section 14 do not apply to the computing of the period of limitation "specially prescribed by the special law" contained in the Indian Registration Act, 1908.

The case relied upon by the learned Judges who referred this question to the Full Bench is Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) decided in 1883. But on reading the judgment in that case it appears that no reference was made to section 6 of the Limitation Act of 1877. This fact, I find, is mentioned by Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., in his judgment in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17), and he described the section which was not noticed "as of the highest importance in deciding this question."

I think the authority of the case in Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) is much diminished by the omission to consider the effect of section 6 of the Limitation Act, 1877.

In 1889, in Girija Nath Roy v. Patani Bibee (21) the learned Judges said: "As regards the case of Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) the decision is not easily to be reconciled with section 6, for the effect of that decision was undoubtedly to alter the period prescribed by the special Limitation Act." The learned Judge, however, did not consider themselves bound by the case, as the one under consideration was a different one.

Then in 1903 came the decision in Abdul Hakim v. Abdul Rahim (or Latifunnessa Khatun) (17).

Since 1903 the authority of that decision in this Court has not been doubted.

The Indian Limitation Act and the Registration Act, which are now in force, were passed in the same years, namely 1908, five years after the decision in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17). I cannot help thinking that if it was thought that a wrong interpretation had been placed in the above mentioned case upon the Limitation Act and the Registration Act of 1877, the material sections of which are similar to the section now under consideration, this would have been put right by the Legislature in 1908.

In my judgment, therefore, both upon the interpretation, which I think should be placed upon the material sections of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, and upon the authorities in this Court, the question submitted to us should be answered in the affirmative and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The litigation which has culminated in this reference was commenced by the appellant under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, to enforce registration of a conveyance. The document was in the first instance presented for registration to the Sub Registrar of Sealdah, who refused to register it on the ground of denial of execution. An application was thereupon made under section 73, sub section (1), to the Registrar at Alipore. This was dismissed on the 26th January 1914. On the 2nd February 1914, the plaintiff lodged a plaint in the Court of the Munsif at Alipore under section 77, sub section (1). The Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, which should have been instituted in the Civil Court within the local limits of whose original jurisdiction was situated the office in which the document was sought to be registered. This was plainly the Court of the Munsif at Sealdah, and not the Court of the Munsif at Alipore within the local limits of whose original jurisdiction was situated, not the office in which the document was sought to be registered, but the office of the Registrar who had exercised jurisdiction under section 73, subsection (1). The Munsif accordingly returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. This order was made on the 19th June 1914, and on the same day the plaint was lodged in the Court of the Munsif at Sealdah. In these circumstances, the defendant contended that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it had been instituted in a Court of competent jurisdiction beyond the expiry of the period of thirty days prescribed by section 77, subsection (1). The plaintiff urged that he was entitled to the benefit of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. That section is in the following terms:—

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of Appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature is unable to entertain it."

The Courts below have dismissed the suit as barred by limitation on the authority of the decision in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17), which holds that section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act does not apply to a suit instituted under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court. The appeal came in the first instance before Teunon and Greaves, J.J., who held, first, that there was a conflict of judicial opinion upon the question as was clear from an examination of the decisions in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17) and Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) and secondly, that the case of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17) had not been correctly decided. Under the rules of Court, consequently, the following question has been referred for decision by a Full Bench: "Whether the case of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17) was rightly decided."

Section 29 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, provides that nothing in the Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India. It has not been disputed that the Indian Registration Act is a special law and that section 77 contained therein, which creates the right to bring a suit to compel registration of a document, also specially prescribes a period of thirty days as the period of limitation for the institution of such a suit. The question thus arises, whether the rule contained in section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act would, if applied to a suit under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act, affect or alter the period of limitation prescribed thereby. The appellant has contended that the answer should be in the negative. His argument in essence is that the period of thirty days prescribed by section 77 would remain untouched; although the plaintiff would be entitled in the computation of the period of 30 days to exclude the period of pendency of proceedings in another Court, such exclusion, it has been suggested, would not alter the period of limitation specially prescribed. But this interpretation, even if adopted, would be of no avail to the plaintiff, unless he could establish that the process of exclusion described would not affect the period of limitation specially prescribed. We have been invited in substance to restrict the application of the terms "affect" and "alter" to two classes of cases, namely, first, where the commencement of the period of limitation is postponed, and secondly, where the period provided in the Indian Limitation Act is different from that prescribed by the special or local law. I am not prepared to accept this narrow interpretation of section 29, subsection (1), clause (b). We are bound to adhere to the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words, as Lord Wensleydale observed in Grey v. Pearson (22), unless that would lead to some absurdity or some repugnance or inconsistency with the rest of the Statute, in which case the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words may be modified, so as to avoid that absurdity and inconsistency, but no further (Vacher & Son, Limited v. London Society of Compositors (23), Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Herbert (24)). On a plain reading of section (22) (1857) 6 H. L. C. 61; 26 L. J. Ch. 473; 3 Jur. (N. S.) 823; 5 W. R. 454; 10 E. R. 1216; 108 R. R. 19. (23) (1913) A. C. 107 at p. 117; 82 L. J. K. B. 232; 107 L. T. 722; 57 S. J. 75; 29 T. L. R. 73; (24) (1913) A. C. 326 at p. 332; 82 L. J. P. C. 119; 108 L. T. 850; 11 L. G. R. 865; 57 S. J. 516; 29 T. L. R. 592, KALIMUDDIN MOLLA v. SAHIBUDDIN MOLLA.

29, I am of opinion that cases of the description now before the Court, where neither the commencement of the period of limitation is postponed nor the length of the period modified, but a portion of the time which has elapsed is eliminated, may well be deemed to furnish instances where the period of limitation has been "affected or altered." In all the three classes of cases, the result to the defendant is precisely the same, namely, he remains exposed to the risks of litigation for a much longer period than what is prescribed by the special Statute. The chief object of a Statute of Limitation is to quiet titles and extinguish State demands, and from this standpoint, the effect upon the defendant who is attacked is identical. See the observation of Lord St. Leonards in Trustees of Dundee Harbour v. Donnell (25) quoted in Tara Nath v. Iswar Chandra Das (26). Prima facie, then the interpretation is reasonable that section 29, sub-section (1), clause (b), excludes the application of section 14 to suits instituted under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act. Besides, we cannot, in section 14, construe the words "any suit" as meaning "any suit, including a suit for which a period of limitation has been specially prescribed by any special or local law." This conclusion, as will presently be seen, is consistent with principles which have been well-recognised in this Court for a long series of years.

The question was raised as early as 1864, with regard to the applicability of the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1859, to the Bengal Rent Act, 1859. A Full Bench of this Court in the case of John Poulson v. Modhoooodun Paul (13) came to the conclusion that suits for arrears of rent under the Rent Act were not affected by the Limitation Act. Norman, J., relied upon the observations of Wood, V. C., in Fitzgerald v. Champneys (27): "The Legislature having had its attention directed to a special subject and observed all the circumstances of the case and provided for them, does not intend by a general enactment afterwards to dero-gate from its own act, where it makes no special mention of its intention so to do." The same view was adopted in Dinonath Panday v. Roghoonath Panday (14) and was re-affirmed by a Full Bench in Nogendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Parhi (10), where it was held that section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, was not applicable to suits for arrears of rent under the Bengal Rent Act, 1859. The Court overruled the contention that section 14 embodied a general principle of law and there was nothing inconsistent if that equitable rule was applied to rent suits. These views are in conformity with two decisions of the Judicial Committee, viz., Unnoda Persaud Mookerjee v. Krishto Coomar Moitra (15), and Mohummud Buhadoor Khan v. Collector of Bareilly (16). In Unnoda Persaud Mookerjee v. Krishto Coomar Moitra (15) the question arose whether the period of limitation applicable to an action for rent brought under the Rent Act, 1859, was affected by the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1859. The answer was in the negative, and Sir Montague Smith who delivered the opinion of the Judicial Committee quoted with approval the observations of Wood, V. C., mentioned above. In Mohummud Buhadoor Khan v. Collector of Bareilly (16) the Court was called upon to consider whether the exceptions in favour of minority and other legal disabilities contained in the Indian Limitation Act, 1859, were applicable to suits under section 20 of Act IX of 1859, which authorised the institution of suits to contest the forfeiture of the properties of rebels. The plaintiffs were infants when the confiscation took place and the period prescribed for the institution of a suit expired before they attained their majority. Morgan, C. J., and Robert, J., held that the suit was barred by limitation, because in their opinion, the plaintiffs, notwithstanding that they were minors at the time of the confiscation, could claim no exemption from the operation of section 20 and as more than one year had elapsed from the time of the seizure, the suit could not be maintained. This view was confirmed by the Judicial Committee. Sir Montague Smith, in overruling the contention that a saving with respect to parties under disabilities must be taken to be, by equitable construction, implied in Act IX of 1859, observed as follows:

"It is impossible that any Court can add to the Statute that which the Legislature has not done. The limitation is enacted in plain and absolute terms. The Legislature has not thought fit to extend the period which it has prescribed to persons under disability. Where such enlargements have been intended, they are found in the Acts containing the limitation, as in the General Act. This Act contains no such saving, and their Lordships would be legislating and not interpreting the Statute if they were to introduce it. It was said that the clauses in the General Statute, Act XIV of 1859, relating to disabilities might be imported into this Act, but this cannot properly be done. Act XIV is a Code of Limitation of general application. This Act is of a special kind and does not admit of those enactments being annexed to it."

Let us now examine the decision in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17). Maclean, C. J., and Mitra, J., held that the decision of the question whether section 14, Indian Limitation Act, was applicable to a suit under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act was governed in principle by the Full Bench case of Nogendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Parhi (10), which itself followed in principle the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Unnola Persaud Mookerjee v. Krishto Coomar Moitra (15) and Mohummud Euhadoor Khan v. Collector of Barilly (16). They were pressed to follow the contrary view taken in the earlier decision of this Court in Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12). Mitra, J., pointed out in the course of argument that the attention of the Court had not, on that occasion, been invited to the provisions of section 6 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, which corresponds to section 29 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Indeed, the correctness of the decision in Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) had been doubted earlier in Girija Nath Roy v. Patani Bibee (21). With all respect I am unable to follow the decision in Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12). On the other hand, the judgment of Maclean, C. J., in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17) appears to me to be unassailable and is in conformity with the decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Veeramma v. Abbiah (20).

It is not necessary for our present purpose to consider in detail the numerous judicial decisions which involve the question of the applicability of one or other of the sections of the Indian Limitation Act to cases under local and special laws, such as the Provincial Insolvency Act, the Indian Companies Act, the Land Acquisition Act and the Bengal Tenancy Act. Many of these cases are noticed in Secretary of State v. Shib Narain Hazra (11) and they disclose a divergence of judicial opinion which cannot be reconciled. To take one instance, the decisions are by no means uniform upon the question whether section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to suits under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act. In Ahad Baksh v. Shikhs Babar Ali (18) Jenkins, C. J., was inclined to adopt the view that section 5 was not applicable, but he felt himself bound by previous decisions. Cases of that type, however, are, as was pointed out in Surendra Nath Nag v. Gopal Chunder Ghosh (7), governed by the principle embodied in section 10 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 [Matabbar Mollah v. Shoshi Bhushan Ghatak (6)]. Reference may also be made to the decisions in Secretary of State v. Gangadhar Nanda (19) and Secretary of State v. Shib Narain Hazra (11), where the cases of Daropadi v. Hira Lal (4) and Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (2) were distinguished and it was ruled that section 15, subsection 2, of the Indian Limitation Act did not extend the period of limitation prescribed by section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

I am fortified by another circumstance in the conclusion that section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act does not apply to suits under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act. The decision of Maclean, C. J., in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17) was pronounced on the 31st March 1903. At that time the Indian Registration Act, 1877, and the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, were in force. Since then, both the Statutes have been recast and re-enacted in 1908, but the Legislature has introduced no alteration with a view to nullify the effect of the decision in question; consequently, a well-known rule of interpretation becomes applicable. It is a well-settled principle of construction that the Legislature is presumed to know not only the general principles of law but also the construction which the Courts have put upon particular Statutes, and, therefore, where a section of an Act, which has received a judicial construction, is re-enacted in the same words, such re-enactment must be treated as legislative recognition of that construction Jogendra Ohundra Roy v. Slam Das (23), Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (29), Nandlal v. Bank of Bombay (30)]. The Legislature knows what the law is and has the power to alter the phraseology, if it transpires that its true intention has not been given effect to in judicial decisions; the absence of such action on the part of the Legislature during a period of time may well be taken to indicate that the Courts have rightly ascertained its intention, specially if, in the interval, the Statute has been amended in other respects. The case before us is much stronger, as we have here a legislative affirmance of the judicial interpretation of this provision of the law.

KALIKUDDIN MOLLAH v. SAHIBUDDIN MOLLA.

I hold that the provisions of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act cannot be applied in computing the period prescribed under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act; the question referred to the Full Bench must, accordingly, be answered in the affirmative and the appeal dismissed with costs.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is whether the case of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17) was rightly decided, and arises out of a suit for registration of a document under the following circumstances.

The plaintiff presented a document, said to have been executed by the defendant, for registration in the Sealdah Sub Registration office. Registration was refused by the Sub-Registrar as the defendant did not appear. The plaintiff appealed to the District Registrar, which was rejected on the 26th January 1914. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit on the 21st February 1914 in the Court of the Munsif of Alipore. The Sealdah Sub-Registry not being within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Munsif's Court, the plaint was returned on the 19th June for presentation to the proper Court, and was presented on the same day in the proper Court, viz., the Court of the Munsif of Sealdah. The Courts below concurred in dismissing the suit on the ground of limitation. On second appeal to the High Court, Tennon and Greaves, JJ., relying upon the decision in the case of Khetter Mohun Ohuckertully v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) and differing from the case of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17), have referred the question whether the latter case was rightly decided.

Now section 29 of the Limitation Act prescribes that nothing in the Act shall "affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India." Section 77 of the Registration Act (Act XVI of 1908), which is a special Act, prescribes a special period of 30 days for a suit for registration of a document. Prima facie, therefore, the provision of section 14 of the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit brought under section 77 of the Registration Act. It is contended, however, that the provision of section 14 of the Limitation Act does not affect or alter the period prescribed by section 77 of the Registration Act. The period of 30 days remains the same, only the time during which the suit was pending in the Alipore Court, which had no jurisdiction to try the suit, is excluded in computing the period of 30 days prescribed by the Registration Act. I am of opinion, however, that the application of section 14 does "affect" the period prescribed by section 77 of the Registration Act, although the "period prescribed" may not be altered. The suit, which according to the provisions of section 77 of the Registration Act had to be brought in the proper Court within 30 days of the date of the order of refusal to register, i.e., on the 26th January 1914, is extended by the period during which it was pending in the Alipore Court, viz., from the 21st February to 26th June 1914. The period fixed by the special law (the Registration Act) is affected, because there is no doubt that the period prescribed by that Act is extended.

KALIMUDDIN MOLLAH v. SAHIBUDDIN MOLLA.

In the case of Unnoda Persaud Mookerjee v. Krishto Oommar Moitra (15) the Judicial Committee, in considering the question whether the provision of section 14 of Act XIV of 1859, the Limitation Act then in force, was applicable to suits under Bengal Rent Act X of 1859, observed that according to a well-established rule for the construction of Statutes it should be presumed that the Legislature did not intend by the general enactment to interfere with a special legislation. Their Lordships referred to the rule of construction expressed by Lord Hatherly in Fitzgerald v. Champneys (27): "The reason is that the Legislature, having had its attention directed to a special subject and observed all the circumstances of the case and provided for them, does not intend by a general enactment afterwards to derogate from its own Act, where it makes no special mention of its intention to do so." In Mohummud Buhador Khan v. Collector of Bareilly (16), which was a case relating to a claim to recover confiscated property for which special provision was made by Act IX of 1859, the Judicial Committee, referring to the contention which had been urged before the High Court, viz., that a saving with respect to parties under disabilities must be taken to be equitable construction implied in the clause, observed: "Their Lordships, however, think that it is impossible that any Court can add to the Statute that which the Legislature has not done. The limitation is enacted in plain and absolute terms. The Legislature has not thought fit to extend the period which it has prescribed to persons under disability. Where such enlargements have been intended they are found in the Acts containing the limitation, as in the General Act. This Act contains no such saving, and their Lordships would be legislating and not interpreting the Statute if they were to introduce it. It was said that the clauses in the General Statute, Act XIV of 1859, relating to disabilities, might be imported in this Act, but this cannot properly be done. Act XIV is a Code of Limitation of general application. This Act is of a special kind and does not admit of those enactments being annexed to it."

It is contended that the Registration

Act, unlike Act X of 1859, is not a code complete in itself and, therefore, the general provision, contained in Parts II and III of the Limitation Act should be held applicable. It was held, however, in Veeramma v. Abbiah (20) that the Registration Act is a complete code in itself, and that, therefore, the general provisions of the Limitation Act (the provisions of section 7) are not applicable. It is to be observed that the Registration Act prescribes special periods for the proceedings to be taken under it, including a suit for registration of documents, and it appears that the intention of the Legislature was to reduce to the shortest limits the time within which the parties aggrieved by the registration authorities might take action.

I may refer in this connection to the case in Abu Baker v. Secretary of State (31), where a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that the provisions of section 12 of the Limitation Act affect the special period prescribed by the Madras Forest Act V of 1882, which prescribed a period of 30 days for appeal.

It appears that the only case in which the provisions of sections 14 of the Limitation Act have been applied to a suit under the Registration Act is the case of Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) relied upon by the referring Judges, but the provisions of section 6 of Act IX of 1871, which corresponds to section 29 of the present Limitation Act, was not at all considered or referred to. The learned Judges did not give any reasons but proceeded upon the ground that the question had been decided in more than one case, the only case expressly referred to being the case of Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Ohunder Dass Biswas (1) in which the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act were applied to a suit for rent.

The case of Khetter Mohun Ohuc'erbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) was followed in the Bombay High Court in Gurocharya v. President of Belgaum Town Municipalities (32) in a case under section 86 of Bombay Act VI of 1873 (Municipalities Act). Sarjent, C. J., held that the question whether the general provisions of Act XV of 1877 are applicable to cases provided for by special Acts was rightly decided in the affirmative by the Calcutta High Court in Gopal Chandra Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (1), followed in Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (5), Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12). The only reason given by the learned Chief Justice was that had the Legislature intended to entirely exclude cases under special Acts from the operation of the Act of 1877, it would scarcely have used the qualified language it has employed in section 6 of that Act. Evidently the words "affect or alter the period so prescribed" in section 6 were referred to, but the question whether the application of section 14 of the Limitation Act would affect the limitation prescribed by the special Act does not appear to have been considered. In our Court, however, in the case of Girija Nath Ray v. Patani Bibee (21), in dealing with the question whether the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the Limitation Act were applicable to a suit for rent under Bengal Rent Act VIII of 1869, Tottenham and Ghose, JJ., observed with reference to the case of Khetter Mohan Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) that the decision "is not easily to be reconciled with section 6, for the effect of that decision was undoubtedly to alter the period prescribed by the special Limitation Act. We do not, however, consider ourselves bound by that decision, for the present case is an entirely different one."

The case of Khetter Mohan Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) was referred to in the order of reference in the case of Nagendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Pahari (10), where a Full Bench of this Court held that the provisions of section 14 are not applicable to suits for arrears of rent under Act X of 1859 as that code is a complete code in itself, though it is not referred to in the judgment of the Full Bench. Lastly in the case of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17), where the question of the applicability of section 14 of the Limitation Act to a suit under the Registration Act had to be considered, Maclean, C. J., (Mitra, J., concurring) observed that the case was governed in principle by the Full Bench case of Nagendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Pahari (10), and pointed out that in Khetter Mohun's case (12) section 6 of the Limitation Act, which is of the highest importance in deciding the question, is not even referred to, and that the decision in that case did not meet with the approval of the Judges who decided the case of Girija Nath Ray v. Patani Bibee (21).

The learned Pleader for the appellant relied upon the fact that the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act have been applied to suits under section 77 of the Registration Act and referred to the cases Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (5), Matabbar Mollah v. Shoshi Bhushan Ghatak (6), Ahad Baksh v. Sheikh Babar Ali (18), Surendra Nath Noy v. Gopal Chunder Ghosh (7), Hossein Ally v. Donzelle (33). The last case, however, was under the Bengal Rent Act VIII of 1859 and decided without reference to the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act. The case of Ahad Buksh v. Sheikh Babar Ali (18) was a case under the Registration Act, but was decided by the Court of Appeal without reference to the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act. Jenkins, C. J., pointed out that in some cases the Court professed to follow Mayer v. Harding (35) but went further than is sanctioned either by that case or the maxim on which the whole doctrine rests, but in view of previous decisions [in Hossein Ally v. Donzelle (34), Shoshee Bhushan Rudro v. Gobind Chunder Roy (35), Jary Mohun Aich v. Anunda Charan Biswas (36)] and of the legislative sanction accorded to the rule there laid down by the General Clauses Acts of 1867 and 1897, he applied the principle to the case, and I agreed with the decision. It is true that the decisions in the first two cases Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (5) and Matabbar Mollah v. Shoshi Bhushan Ghatak (6), were based upon the ground that the general provisions of the Limitation Act applied to special and local Acts, but the decisions may be supported on the principle that, where parties are prevented from doing a thing in Court on a particular day not by any act of their own, but by the act of the Court itself, they are entitled to do it at the first subsequent opportunity. The observations in Surendra Nath Nag v. Gopal Ohunder Ghosh Kundu (7) were obiter.

The question, whether section 29 (1) merely applied to the period of limitation prescribed and does not necessarily make part III relating to computation of the period inapplicable to a special period of limitation prescribed by a special or local law, was considered in a recent case, Secretary of State v. Shib Narain Hazra (11), where Richardson, J., reviewed many of the cases on the point and held that both parts II and III of the Limitation Act are inapplicable to special periods of limitation. See also Secretary of State v. Gangadhar Nanda (19).

It is unnecessary to refer to the other cases in which the question of the applicability of the general provisions of the Limitation Act to special and local Acts has been considered; the decisions are not uniform. So far as the question of the applicability of section 14 of the Limitation Act to suits under section 77 of the Registration Act is concerned, the only case is that of Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (12) and it was, as stated above, disapproved in Giriji Noth Roy v. Patani Bibee (21) and expressly dissented from in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17), and it is to be observed that the Registration Act and Limitation Act of 1908 did not alter the law, although the said Acts were passed 5 years after the decision in Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (17). On these grounds, I answer the question referred to us in the affirmative.

MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 15 OF 1919.

SECOND APPEAL No. 49 OF 1919.

August 6, 1919.

Present:—Sir Dawson Miller, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Foster.

RAMDHAN TEWARI—APPELLANT

versus

BISHUN PRAGASH NARAIN SINGH—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 17—“Appear,” meaning of—Court, whether bound to wait for Pleaders—Practice.

The word “appear” in rule 17 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code does not simply mean that the party or his Pleader are physically present in Court and, therefore, can be seen by the eye, but it has a much more technical meaning, that is to say, that they are actually present in Court for the purpose of conducting the case. [p 717, col. 1.]

It is desirable, if possible, to accommodate parties to some extent if their Pleaders happen to be absent in another Court and have a chance of attending within a short time so as not to disturb the business of the Court, but a Judge is not bound to wait. [p. 717, col. 2; p. 718, col. 1.]

Appeals from a decision of the District Judge, Champaran, dated the 12th November 1918, confirming a decision of the Munsif, Motihari, dated the 16th May 1918.

Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harnarain Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—These are two appeals which have been tried together. The first is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated the 6th November 1918 dismissing the appellant's appeal for default of appearance. The other is an appeal from an original order by the same Judge refusing to restore the appeal dismissed on the 6th November. The latter order was made on the 12th November, that is some six days later, in which, after hearing the parties, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that there was no excuse for the absence of the Pleader and the application was accordingly rejected.

The facts of the case upon which the appeal from the order of the 6th November depends appear, as far as can be gathered from the petition and from the order itself, to be these: that when the case was called on, the appellant, who happened to be himself present in Court but was not himself conducting the case, stated that his Pleader was absent. It does not appear from the order where the RAMDHAN TEWARI v. BISHUN PRASAD NARAIN SINGH.

Pleader was at that particular moment and there being no appearance by anybody in order to conduct the appeal, the learned Judge dismissed it. Certain supplementary facts have been brought to our notice by reference to the petition in this appeal. The petition is verified, if it can be called verification, by an affidavit made by a servant of the appellant. That petition says that the petitioner is a poor man and could not engage more than one Pleader, that on the day fixed when the case was called on the petitioner went to bring his Pleader who was engaged before the Subordinate Judge in another place, and that he could not appear promptly before the District Judge. Whether he did appear or not subsequently or whether he had any possible chance of appearing in the course of a short time or whether he had any intention of appearing is not stated in the petition.

These shortly are the facts, and the order dismissing the case for want of appearance would certainly on the face of it clearly appear to be an order made under Order XLI, rule 17, of the Civil Procedure Code, which provides in effect that where the appellant on the day fixed for hearing does not appear when the appeal is called on, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed; but it has been contended that in the circumstances of this case the order could not have been an order made under the rule just mentioned, because the appellant did in fact appear and spoke to the learned Judge stating that he would go and fetch his Pleader and that circumstances such as that are not contemplated in Order XLI, rule 17, and that it is only in a case where nobody puts in any appearance at all in Court on behalf of an appellant that the rule can have any application. We have been referred to two cases which have dealt with this question. The first was a decision of two Judges of this Court in the case of Jugeshar Rai v. Railal Bahadur (1). In that case, on the date fixed for hearing in the trial Court, the plaintiff was present and his application for adjournment was presented for the purpose of filing a list of witnesses and documentary evidence. That application was rejected and on the same day the learned Munsif who tried the case made an order to this effect:—

"No further step is taken. The case is dismissed with costs."

From that decision an appeal was preferred and the learned District Judge held that no appeal lay to him. He accordingly dismissed the appeal making no order as to costs. Against that order of the District Judge this High Court was moved in revision, and the learned Judges who heard the application came to the conclusion that the learned District Judge was in error in holding that no appeal lay to him, because they said one at least of the plaintiffs was present when the case was taken up for hearing. Therefore, it could not be held to be a dismissal for default and the District Judge should have taken up the case on appeal and determined whether the application for adjournment was properly refused or not. It does not appear from the somewhat scanty statement of the facts in that case whether the plaintiff who appeared was there for the purpose of conducting his own case or not and, therefore, so far as that decision goes it is impossible to hold that it governs the facts of the present case.

In another case also decided by a Division Bench of this Court, viz., Lalji Sahu v. Lachmi Narain Singh (2), pretty much the same question had to be determined, but in that case the facts are more clearly stated and they appear to me to bear greater analogy to the present case than the facts stated in the case of Jugeshar Rai v. Railal Bahadur (1). In that case the plaintiff happened to be in Court when the case was called on and his Pleader was absent. It appears, however, that the plaintiff himself was not conducting his case in person and owing to the absence of his Pleader, the Court dismissed the claim and declined to entertain an application by the plaintiff for restoration under Order IX, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that it had no jurisdiction. The matter came up before the High Court in revision under the latter Order. The case, however, deals with the question of whether a dismissal of a case for default under such circumstances as existed there was in fact a dismissal for default, or whether it was a case where there was no default of appearance and which the Judge ought to have determined on the merits. The learned Judges of this Court dealt with that question in this way. They said: "A party may appear in two ways, either in person or by Pleader. If he is not appearing in person, the mere fact that he is standing in Court does not amount to an appearance within the real meaning of the word. It could not be suggested for instance that if, when a case was called on, a litigant stood up at the back of the Court and applied for a few minutes' time to bring his Pleader he would be appearing in the true meaning of the word." Then the learned Judges quoted certain cases where a different view had been taken, but came to the conclusion that that was not the proper view and that the proper view was what they had themselves expressed and which was supported by a decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Gopala Row v. Maria Susuya Pillai (3). Incidentally they point out that the Calcutta High Court seem to have gone still further.

It seems to me, if and in so far as there is any conflict between the two cases which I have just referred to, and I do not think there necessarily is, that the last case of Lalji Sahu v. Lachmi Narain Singh (2), is the decision which we ought to follow. Order XLI, rule 17, as well as Order IX, rule 8, and rules of similar import refer to the word 'appear,' and it seems to me quite clear that that word as used in these rules does not simply mean that the party or his Pleader are physically present in Court and, therefore, can be seen by the eye, but it has a much more technical meaning, that is to say, that they are actually present in Court for the purpose of conducting the case. Now it is quite clear in the present instance that the party himself, although he happened to be present in Court as an interested spectator, was not there for the purpose of conducting his own case, nor did he ever for a moment attempt to do so. Hence I am of opinion that there was a default of appearance in the present case such as is contemplated by Order XLI, rule 7, and that the order made on the 6th November 1918 was clearly an order made under that rule and it disposed of the appeal.

(3) 30 M. 274; 17 M. L. J. 225.

With regard to the other appeal, the only question we have to consider is whether the learned Judge properly considered the question before him. The application then before him was an application under Order XLI, rule 19, which provides that where an appeal is dismissed under certain of the previous rules of the same Order, including rule 17, and it is proved that the appellant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing, the Court shall re-try the appeal on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit. The actual words of the order made which is the subject of the present appeal are these:—

"Heard. Absence of a Pleader is no excuse. This application is accordingly rejected."

All the learned Judge had before him in order to determine whether the non-appearance of the Pleader on the occasion in question was justified or not was the petition which I have referred to earlier and the affidavit made by the petitioner's servant, and the affidavit is certainly very unsatisfactory. It is an affidavit of a servant who does not state that he was present in Court and knew what had taken place, but merely states that the facts alleged in the petition were true. There was no affidavit by the petitioner himself or by the Pleader, nor was any evidence apparently called, and I think that in these circumstances we cannot say that the Judge was not justified in dismissing the application on the ground that he was not satisfied that the absence of the Pleader had been justified by the evidence before him. It is quite true that in the very short order which was made he does not deal with it in that way but merely says that the absence of the Pleader is no excuse, but, at the same time, as this is an appeal from an original order, we are entitled to consider the material which the learned Judge had before him, and I cannot help thinking that what was really in his mind was that there was nothing in the evidence before him to show anything more than that the Pleader was in fact absent and that there was no justification made out why he was not present when the case was called on. Speaking for myself I think it is desirable,

MANMATHA NATH KAR V. SECRETARY OF STATE.

if possible, to accommodate parties to some extent if their Pleaders happen to be absent in another Court and have a chance of attending within a short time so as not to disturb the business of the Court, but a Judge is not bound to wait and it does not appear from the circumstances of the present case that the Pleader would have been able to return and conduct the case at any period during that day. In fact it is not even alleged in the petition and as I have already said, the only affidavit verifying the petition is that of the appellant's servant which is certainly not of a satisfactory nature. In these circumstances, therefore, we do not feel justified in reversing the decision arrived at by the learned District Judge dismissing the application for restoration of the appeal. These appeals are dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 104 H (4)—Settlement of fair rent by Court—Matters to be taken into consideration.

In settling a fair rent under section 104H, sub-section (4), of the Bengal Tenancy Act what the Court has to consider is the rent of other holdings of the same class comprised in the same settlement rent roll; the mere fact of the villages being neighbouring does not necessarily show that they are comprised in the same settlement rent roll. [p. 719, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 11th August 1917, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of that District, dated the 15th of February 1915.

Babus Sib Ch. Palit and Khirode Narain Bhuian, for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Ch. Mitra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to two plots of land, one measuring 303 bighas 2 cottas 14 chittaks and the other measuring 9 bighas 16 cottas 9 chittaks. The former is claimed by the plaintiffs as an occupancy holding and the latter as their lakheraj.

The plaintiffs were recorded as tenure-holders in respect of the first plot of land and the second plot was entered as mal land in the Record of Rights and the rent was settled on the basis of the plaintiffs being tenure-holders. The plaintiffs prayed in this suit for a declaration that they were occupancy raiyyats and not tenure-holders in respect of the first plot of land, that the assessment of rent under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was wrong and that the original rent was fair and equitable and that the second plot (9 bighas and odd) is lakheraj.

The Court of first instance found that the second plot of land was lakheraj, that the first plot of land constituted an occupancy holding of the plaintiff, that the rent settled was incorrect and that the entry as regards the rent of the first plot should be corrected by substituting the amount which the plaintiffs had been paying prior to the publication of the Record of Rights.

On appeal, the learned District Judge held that 7 bighas 6½ cottas of land out of the second plot were mal, that the remaining lands of that plot were lakheraj, that the plaintiffs were occupancy raiyyats and that the fair rate of rent was Rs. 1-8 per bigha, and he made a decree accordingly.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

Two contentions have been raised on behalf of the appellants. The first is that the assessment of rent by the learned District Judge at the rate of Rs. 1-8 per bigha has been made on an erroneous ground.

Section 104H, sub-section (4), provides that "If it appears to the Court that the entry of rent settled is incorrect, it shall settle a fair rent", and sub-section (6) provides that "in settling a fair rent under sub-section (4) the Court shall be guided by the rents of the other tenures or holdings of the same class comprised in the same settlement rent roll, as settled under sections 104A to 104F."

The learned Subordinate Judge observed: "The plaintiffs are occupancy raiyyats and the presumption is that the existing rent is fair until the contrary is proved. The defendant has, I find, failed to prove the contrary. The rent roll of the Mouzas within which the land is situate has not been proved. The rent rolls of his Mouzas of Pargana Paharpur have been produced. These Mouzas do not appear to be adjoining Mouzas. So I cannot act on these rent rolls."

The learned District Judge on appeal said: "The rent (12 annas a bigha) that the plaintiffs were paying prior to the recent settlement was fixed in the year 1876, 40 years ago, and the appellant-defendant has proved that in some of the neighbouring villages the raiyyats were paying rent for similar lands at the rate of Re 1.8 a bigha. The plaintiffs themselves are realising rent from their under-tenants at the rate of Rs. 2.4 or more a bigha. I am of opinion, therefore, that one rupee eight annas will be a fair rate of rent for all culturable land."

The learned District Judge referred to rent paid for similar lands in neighbouring villages, but what the Court has to consider is the rent of other holdings of the same class comprised in the same settlement rent roll and the mere fact of the villages being neighbouring does not necessarily show that they are comprised in the same settlement rent roll. The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court, in order that fair rent may be settled having regard to the provisions of sub section (6) of section 104H.

The next contention relates to the lakheraj land. The learned District Judge, it appears, appointed a Commissioner to find out whether the land claimed as lakheraj fell within plots Nos 20, 21 and 22 of the Survey Map of 186, and the Commissioner found that 7 bighas $6\frac{1}{2}$ cottas of the lands in dispute were identical with the lands lying within the said plot, namely, plots Nos. 20, 21 and 22. Now these plots admittedly were mal lands. The finding of the learned District Judge in so far as 7 bighas $6\frac{1}{2}$ cottas are concerned will, therefore, stand.

In the result, the decree of the lower Appellate Court, so far as the 303 bighas and the 7 bighas $6\frac{1}{2}$ cottas are concerned, will be set aside and the case sent back to that Court in order that fair rent may be settled in respect of the 303 bighas and odd cottas as also in respect of 7 bighas $6\frac{1}{2}$ cottas of the land mentioned above. Costs will abide the result.

Case sent back.

JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The defendants Nos. 3 to 6 are the appellants before us. The plaintiff brought his suit for a declaration that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have no ganti interest in the disputed Mahul and that the entry in the Record of Rights was incorrect and that such entry, so far as it recognises the existence of a ganti right in the names of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and the predecessors of defendants Nos. 4 to 7, may be ordered to be expunged. He made other prayers in the plaint to which it is unnecessary to refer.

The facts of the case are set forth in the judgment of the Court below and need only be briefly stated. It appears that the Mehal in respect of which the suit is instituted was settled for a term of years with one Prannath Dhar. Prannath had created a ganti interest in favour of some of the defendants or their predecessors. His interest in the Mehal was sold on the 10th January 1906 by reason of his default in payment of Government revenue and was purchased by the plaintiff in the present suit.

It appears that shortly after the plaintiff's purchase on the 23rd June 1906, the Settlement Officer settled the rent payable for the Mehal and the settlement was made on the basis of the rent payable by the gantidars. The settlement holder, that is, the plaintiff in this suit, executed a kabuliyat in the year 1908 and in that kabuliyat he agreed to respect the recorded rights possessed by the under-tenure holders, rights of the village headman and others in the said estate. It cannot be denied that the right of the gantidars was a right that was at the time recorded.

The question that arises for our considerations is this:—(Can the plaintiff, having agreed to respect the right of the gantidar tenants, now ask for a declaration that no ganti right existed? It seems to me that on the authority of the two cases, Tapanidhi Raghunath Puri v. Pitambar Gajendra Mahapaty (1) and Chandramoni Mohanti v. Manmatha Nath Mitter (2), he is bound to recognise the ganti tenure and cannot question its existence.

The learned Judge has decreed the plaintiff's suit on the findings that the gantidars were never in possession and exercised no right as gantidars. In my opinion that finding does not dispose of the question. It is not said that the plaintiff has acquired any title by adverse possession. If he cannot question the title of the gantidars by reason of the kabuliyat which he executed, it seems to me that he cannot get a declaration that the ganti right does not exist.

It has been argued before us that some of the gantidars did on certain occasions renounce all claim to the ganti. The answer is that the suit is not based on the ground of abandonment. There could be no abandonment by some of the gantidars only. No issue was raised on this point.

On behalf of the respondents reliance has been placed on the cases of Gour Chandra Saha v. Mani Mohan Sen (3), Jahandar Baksh Mallick v. Ram Lal Hazra (4) and Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pandey (5). We have examined these cases and, in our opinion, they do not affect the present question.

It has also been argued before us that the original gantidars have parted with their ganti interest in favour of defendants Nos. 8, 9 and 10 and, therefore, the original gantidars have no rights to prefer any appeal to this Court as they have no longer any interest left in the ganti. In my opinion that question cannot be gone into. The defendants explain in their written statements that these sales were merely colourable transactions and the purchasers were mere benamdars. No issue was raised on the question and such controversy cannot, for the first time, be raised in second appeal. I, therefore, think that the decision of the Courts below decreeing the plaintiff's suit cannot be supported and must be set aside. I would accordingly decree this appeal with costs and dismiss the suit of the plaintiff with costs of all the Courts.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

BALASUBRAMANIA SASTRI—

PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

PONNUSAMI IYER, MINOR BY GUARDIAN,

SUBBALAKSHMI AMMAL—LEGAL

REPRESENTATIVE OF DEFENDANT No. 2—

RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Temple—Archaka excluded from office till payment of fine—Suit by archaka to recover damages—Damages, measure of—Delay in bringing suit, effect of—Voluntary payments, whether income.

Where an archaka of a temple is excluded from his employment till he pays a certain amount of fine imposed upon him by the trustees, he is under no obligation to pay the fine under protest and thus reduce the amount of damages recoverable from the trustees by shortening the period of his unemployment. [p. 725, col. 1.]

Where the trustees of a temple eject an archaka from the temple they do so at their own risk, and they cannot be heard to say that a delay in taking steps to test the propriety of their conduct involved a lack of diligence on the part of the archaka, which should mitigate or deprive him of the right to damages. [p. 725, col. 1.]

Payments made to archakas for performing archakai in a temple are voluntary, in the sense that their amount and the making of them is at the devotee's option. Where it is in the contemplation of the parties that such payments would be received by an archaka, an action will lie to claim them as damages from the trustees of the temple. [p. 725, col. 1; p. 726, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 202 of 1916 (Appeal Suit No. 10 of 1916, District Court, Chingleput), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Conjeevaram, in Original Suit No. 558 of 1914.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 7th to 9th August 1918, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court has held that defendants were entitled to insist on plaintiff paying the fine imposed on him before he could be allowed to return to work and to the enjoyment of the profits of his employment, such payment to be under protest and subject to plaintiff's right to recover the amount he paid by suit. The importance of this is with reference to plaintiff's claim to compensation for loss of earnings from the date of his exclusion from his employment until the date of his plaint.

The first answer to this claim is that defendants had no right to exclude plaintiff from his employment until the fine was paid. Defendants contend first that plaintiff was bound to mitigate the damage he would sustain by making all reasonable exertions, including paying the fine, to return to work or to obtain other work suitable to him. If this is based on the general law relating to damages we cannot accept it. For no case has been shown us, in which the reasonable exertion to be taken by the plaintiff included anything resembling the payment demanded here or anything outside work, such as the plaintiff had done or might reasonably be required to do. The alternative case put forward by defendants is that plaintiff's duty to pay his fine under protest in order to return to work rests on the custom of the temple. On the existence of such a custom we can find no discussion of evidence or proper finding in the lower Appellate Court's judgment. We must, therefore, call on it now to find on the evidence on record on the issue whether an Archaka is bound by the custom of the temple to pay under protest any fine inflicted on him and the trustee is entitled to exclude him from the temple until he does so.

The next question raised in the appeal is whether the plaintiff, who was bound to make exertions to mitigate the damage he sustained, took adequate steps to do so by endeavouring to obtain other employment, which he could reasonably be expected to accept, within a reasonable time. It is argued here that an Archaka excluded from his own temple cannot be expected to take up other employment of any description. The lower Appellate Court must submit a finding on the question whether this is the case. Fresh evidence may be taken.

Lastly in its paragraph 9 the lower Appellate Court refers to an admission of plaintiff that his earnings consisted in the voluntary offerings of devotees at the temple. But we cannot find any statement by him that such offerings were voluntary. The lower Appellate Court must now submit a finding whether the offerings, of which plaintiff's income consisted before his exclusion, were voluntary. Fresh evidence will be allowed on this question also.

Findings are due in six weeks. Seven days are allowed for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Chingleput submitted the following

FINDING.—In this suit the Dharmakarthha of Sri Kamakshi Amman temple by his guardian and power-of-attorney agent, 2nd defendant, fined an Archaka of the temple twice; on the first occasion the fine was 8 annas for taking a worshipper into a place prohibited by the 2nd defendant and on the second occasion Rs. 10 for using disrespectful language to him in a correspondence. The Archaka filed a suit to recover both these amounts as well as certain damages claimed by him for his being prevented from discharging his duties as Archaka. Inter alia the written statement of the trustee and the agent contained an averment to the effect that according to the custom of the temple if any servant is fined by the Dharmakarthha, such servant must pay the fine in the first instance and then set up his grievance, if any, for redress in respect of such fine. Though in paragraph 4 such a contention was specifically raised, no issue was framed by the learned District Munsif but nevertheless in paragraph 8 of his judgment we find the following: "The defendant's Pleader argued that plaintiff was not entitled to any damages because he would not have been prevented from performing his office in the temple if only he had paid the fines imposed on him and questioned their propriety afterwards; and he said it was the custom in the temple for its servants to pay the fines and then question the propriety of their imposition. No such custom was proved before me and even if proved I should be slow in upholding such a custom, for the trustee may arbitrarily fine a temple servant a prohibitive amount and keep him out of his emoluments forever, if such a custom were to be recognised by the Courts of law."

2 In the usual course the matter came on appeal before this Court and my predecessor in-office dismissed the appeal so far as this contention went. The matter went up in second appeal before their Lordships of the High Court, who in their judgment framed an issue to the following effect:—"Whether an Archaka is bound by the custom of the Kamakshi Amman temple at Conjeeveram to pay under protest any fine inflicted on him and the trustee is entitled to exclude him from the temple, until he does so." Their Lordships directed this Court to record a finding on this issue on the evidence on record. I am not, therefore, entitled to record any further evidence on this point. On a perusal of the oral and documentary evidence in the case I cannot find a single syllable either for or against the question raised in this issue, and it must be so because there was no specific issue framed in the first instance. In the absence of such evidence I can only record a finding in the negative on the issue remitted to me.

3. In respect of the two other issues on which I was directed to record findings after taking evidence adduced by the parties, the plaintiff re-examined himself and defendants examined 6 other witnesses. Before I proceed to discuss and record findings on the issues remitted to me by their Lordships, I must refer to a contention put forth by defendants' Vakil in respect of the burden of proof in this case. According to him it is on the plaintiff and not on him and, therefore, he says that plaintiff must begin the case. I referred to the plaint and the written statement (in the original pleadings) and I do not find a single averment to cover the issue now under consideration. The unsuccessful party for the purpose of second appeal was the plaintiff and in the memorandum of appeal I do not see any contention on his behalf to cover the points now under consideration. I must, therefore, in determining the question of burden of proof be guided only by what their Lordships say in their judgment. The defendants' Vakil lays stress on the wording of the issues and argues that on the language used in the issues the burden must be said to be on the plaintiff.

4. In determining this question I am bound to see what their Lordships meant.

BALASUBRAMANIA SASTRI v. PONNUSAMI IYER.

when remitting the issues to me. It is certainly clear that the argument which formed the basis for the issue, proceeded from the defendants' Vakil, because their Lordships say thus: "The next question raised in the appeal is whether the plaintiff, who was bound to make exertions to mitigate the damage he sustained, took adequate steps ———." I say that this contention was put forth on behalf of defendants because the succeeding sentence contains the contention of plaintiff. The succeeding sentence runs thus: "It is argued here that an Archaka excluded from his own temple cannot be expected to take up other employment of any description." If this is the contention advanced on behalf of plaintiff in respect of the subject-matter of the issue, it is not at all proper to say that it was he who advanced the contention that other avocations are left open to him and that he must make exertions to take advantage of such avocations to mitigate the damages he sustained. It is thus mathematically clear that the contention on which the particular issues were framed by their Lordships emanated from defendants and not from plaintiff. Such being the position, the sentence "who was bound to make exertions to mitigate the damage he sustained" may be taken either as an observation of their Lordships or may be an argument advanced on behalf of the defendants. If it amounts to an observation on the part of their Lordships I will take it as a direction and proceed to further trial. But if it is an argument advanced on behalf of defendants, it is no business of mine to presume that plaintiff is bound to make exertions to mitigate the damage he sustained and it will be one of the duties of the person alleging that statement to establish that ground also. Whatever it is, it will be impossible to ask a man who specifically pleaded before their Lordships that it is not possible for an Archaka excluded from his own temple to accept other employments elsewhere, to prove the issue remitted to me and as defendants according to my opinion are the individuals who are responsible for this issue, they are bound to begin the case and adduce evidence to enable me to record a finding on the issues. I, therefore, rule that it is defendants that must begin and not plaintiff.

5. In conformity with such direction the defendants examined six new witnesses. There are no documents filed. Of the six witnesses examined before me four are worshippers in the temple, one an Archaka in office in the temple, and another a temple servant of Jambukeswaran temple in Trichinopoly. One other point must be made clear before I begin to discuss the evidence. The words "other employment," which the plaintiff can reasonably be expected to accept, require further explanation. The defendants' Vakil seems to be of the impression that the language used in this issue would cover any kind of employment available in the world. At this stage defendants' Vakil interferes and adds "consistent with Brahminhood," yet he is the first man who suggested in the course of the cross examination the calling of trade for the plaintiff. If the calling of trade is consistent with Brahminhood in the term in which it is understood by Brahmins or by the class to which the parties belong, then all avocations, however degrading they may be in the social strata, may be said to be avocations for plaintiff to discharge when he is out of office as an Archaka. Certainly that is not the meaning with which the issue was framed and remitted to me for finding. The proper explanation for the words used in the issue is only to show other employments in the sphere of work in which plaintiff is placed and does not mean any kind of work available in the world. As plaintiff is an Archaka, the only way in which plaintiff can find other employment must be consistent with his Archaka duties or duties akin to such Archaka duties such as Paricharakam and other duties of a religious nature. We cannot travel beyond the region of religion to compel plaintiff to seek employment in branches of service which have no bearing of religion in it. So far as plaintiff is concerned, the witnesses examined on behalf of defendants say that he is not a Purohit and cannot discharge the duties of Purohit. The defendants' Vakil in a way suggests that Archakas, being also ex officio Paricharakas may also try employment as a cook or a drawer of water.

BALASUBRAMANIA SASTRI v. PONNUJAMI IYER.

He is mistaken in his suggestion. It may be that because the Paricharaka duty in the temple is part and parcel of Archaka duty also and because such duty is done in the temples and for gods, no degrading element may be attached to it or nobody would regard a Paricharaka doing service in the temple as one doing degrading duties. Nevertheless that is not the standpoint in which I should view it. When the defendants ask plaintiff to do duty as cook or draw water elsewhere than in the temple, it will be certainly degrading to the status of an Archaka and nobody can compel a man to degrade himself because circumstances placed him in a miserable position. However miserable it may be, one is not bound to lower himself in the social status and degrade himself in the eyes of others. So far as regards plaintiff's getting employment as Archaka elsewhere in Conjeeveram, unfortunately the plaint temple is an unique one where the Puja is according to the Smartha Vaideeka rituals as opposed to Agama rituals performed by Gurukkals. In other words, Smartha Brahmins like those who do Archaka duties in the plaint temple will not perform Puja in Siva temples where there is Lingam, and except the plaint temple there are no other temples in Conjeeveram where plaintiff can take service and do Puja. That line is, therefore, blocked for plaintiff. In his deposition he admitted that he knows no other craft except the Archaka work, that he is not possessed of wealth to start business as suggested by defendants' Vakil, nor has he got the necessary strength or stamina to undertake other duties even though they may be degrading.

For these reasons I find the 2nd issue for plaintiff and against defendants.

6. On the 3rd issue evidence was let in on behalf of defendants to show that the offerings are voluntary. They are certainly voluntary and can never amount to compulsory payments because the devotee, who when compelled to pay a certain sum for Archaka is entitled to keep back, if he is not inclined to pay that amount. Even if he has entered the temple nobody can compel him to remain there and perform Archana at the stipulated rate. There is evidence on behalf of defendants to show that the offerings for Archaka by the devotees range from 3 pies to 6 annas and one of the Archakas went to the length of saying that an Archaka is bound to perform Archana for nothing. If all Archakas are only of the same spirit as defendants' witness No. 6, there will be no trouble in Hindu temples. It is because they are as a class recalcitrant and are not amenable to reason and control and want to exercise their authority in their own way under the assumption that they cannot be replaced by others, all the trouble arises. As I have already remarked the only sense in which the question can be viewed is that it can only be a voluntary offering judged from the standpoint of the devotee; and as the question referred is one from the standpoint of the devotee, I find that the offerings in the plaint temple on the evidence recorded by me are only voluntary and not compulsory.

This second appeal came on for final hearing on the 17th and 23th of April 1919 after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial.

Messrs. L. A. Govindaragava Aiyar and L. Venkatragava Aiyar, for the Appellant.—On the law of master and servant the plaintiff was not bound to pay the fine under protest. The fine may be prohibitive and the employer cannot rely on its non-payment in mitigation of damages.

The finding is that there is no custom of the temple requiring that the fine should be paid under protest.

The finding also is that an Archaka cannot seek employment of a different nature.

As to the income of the Archaka plaintiff being derived from voluntary offerings, the damages can fairly be assessed. It is only where the amount is so uncertain as to be incapable of proof that plaintiff cannot claim damages. In fact the District Munsif has assessed the amount.

Messrs T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and M. N. Krishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.—Plaintiff took two years to lay his claim after his exclusion from employment. His laches disentitles him to any damages.

Voluntary payments cannot be the basis for an award of damages. Plaintiff's income consisted entirely of voluntary donations by worshippers. See Krishnasami v. Krishnama Charyar (1), Ramessur Mookerjee v. Ishan Ohunder Mookerjee (2) and the English cases, Penn v. Spiers & Pond (3), Great Western Railway Company v. Helps (4) and Manubens v. Leon (5).

BALASUBRAMANIA SASTRI v. PONNUSAMI IYER.

JUDGMENT.—No objection has been argued to the lower Appellate Court's finding on the first point remanded. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff was under no obligation to pay the fine under protest and thus obtain the right to continue in service.

The question was next of plaintiff's duty to mitigate the damage to himself by making reasonable exertions to find other employment. The lower Appellate Court has held that he was not in default in this matter; and we accept its finding. It is now argued that his delay of over two years in suing involved a lack of diligence, which should mitigate or deprive him of his right to damages. Defendants, however, ejected him from his employment at their own risk and cannot now be heard to say that he should have taken steps to test the propriety of their conduct sooner—see Raghunath Singh v. Achutanand (6).

There is lastly the finding that the offerings comprising the income for loss of which compensation is claimed are voluntary. In face of the evidence of 1st defendant's agent as defendants' witness No. 8: "Devotees pay anything they like. If the Archakas decline to do Archana, they cannot be compelled to do it..... Archakas do not generally perform archanai without immediate payment or prospective advantage. Payments vary for the different kinds of archanai," no other conclusion is possible. We proceed on the footing that the payments to Archakas are voluntary, in the sense that their amount and the making of them at all is at the devotee's option.

On this finding it is argued for defendants that no compensation can be claimed by plaintiff for their loss, and there are no doubt some expressions in Indian decisions to support the view that voluntary payments cannot be the basis of an award of damages. But, read carefully, they seem to us to be reconcilable with the result of the English authorities, to which we shall refer, that the question is only whether the amount of damages can be assessed, the voluntary character of the income being immaterial, if an assessment of its amount can be made. In Krishnasami v. Krishnama Charyar (1), it is no doubt said that "damages cannot be given for the injury suffered by reason of the loss of voluntary offerings, because the injury is too remote and uncertain to be safely measured." But in that case, the damages were claimed as accruing owing to the loss of prestige sustained by certain worshippers from the interruption of their performance of the temple services by persons, who attempted to join, as officiants, in their recital of the ritual and the consequent diminution of offerings to the former. The facts there differed from those before us, because there was no question of the exclusion of the plaintiffs from the right to perform services, for the performance of which they might be paid directly; and in any case the judgment proceeded: "It is possible that other causes wholly unconnected with the wrong may have influenced the persons, who might have made such offerings, to withdraw their donations." No such suggestion has been made here and no evidence consistent with it has been given. Again in Ramessur Mookerjee v. Ishan Ohunder Mookerjee (2) the Court held on facts, which are not fully stated, that no suit would lie to recover damages based on uncertain and merely voluntary payments, such as those in question. These are the strongest cases for defendants and they can be explained consistently with the English decisions next to be referred to, on the ground that the Court held that the income could not in fact be ascertained, its voluntary character being no doubt an obstacle in the way of ascertaining it. Those English decisions are Penn v. Spiers & Pond (3), Great Western Railway Company v. Helps (4) and Manubens v. Leon (5). The two first mentioned were no doubt decided with reference to the definition of "earnings" in the Workmen's Compensation Act; but we have not been shown how that affects the principle involved, which is that, although part of the income in question consisted in 'tips,' which like the payments here to plaintiff were voluntary, it was, as it admittedly is here, in the contemplation of the parties that it would be received and that, as plaintiff was prevented by defendants' action from receiving it, he was entitled to claim it as damages.

The remaining question then is as to the amount of those damages, which are to be measured by the income plaintiff may reasonably have been expected to receive. The lower Appellate Court did not give a finding regarding them. But the matter was inquired into fully by the District Munsif at the trial; and, as the only evidence there, that of plaintiff, was not attacked in cross-examination, we think that we can act on it. Adopting the District Munsif's finding on this point, we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif with costs throughout.

agreement by, to share property with others—Sale certificate—Joint purchasers, names of, whether can be entered in certificate—Specific performance—Amendment of plaint, when to be permitted.

An auction purchase of a jote was made by the defendant alone and the earnest money was paid by him alone but instead of paying the balance of the purchase-money from his own pocket, he obtained a portion of it from the plaintiffs under an agreement that the plaintiffs would be joint purchasers of the jote with him.

Held, (1) that the names of the plaintiffs could not be inserted in the certificate of sale, because the person who was declared to be the purchaser after the bids were concluded was the person in whose name the certificate was to be granted under Order XXI, rule 94, of the Civil Procedure Code; [p. 727, col. 2.]

(2) that there having been no agreement before the sale, the second clause of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply to the case but that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim specific performance of the contract. [p. 728, col. 1.]

Where the facts upon which a plaintiff would be entitled to maintain a suit for specific performance of a contract are all stated in the plaint, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend the plaint and add a prayer for specific performance of the contract, although the plaint originally contained no such prayer and the Courts below did not try such a case. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Faridpore, dated the 26th of June 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Goalundo, dated the 20th November 1914.

Babu Khitish Chandra Neogi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of a $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share of certain lands which had been sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent and purchased by the defendant.

It was alleged that there was an agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendant that they should purchase the property in the names of all the three persons on payment of the price in equal shares, that the defendant should take from the plaintiffs the price in respect of two shares and should himself pay from his own pocket his share of the money, that the defendant accordingly took the shares of the money from the plaintiffs but purchased the property in his own name only, and that the plaintiffs having subsequently come to know of it, the defendant took the advice of lawyers and agreed to put in a petition (admitting therein the plaintiffs' title) in the record of the execution case, and stated that there would be no difficulty in future, that he actually put in such a petition but subsequently did not allow the plaintiffs to take possession of their shares.

The defence was a total denial of these allegations.

The Court of first instance found that the allegations made in the plaint were true and accordingly decreed the suit.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that "originally the purchase was made by the defendant No. 1 alone and the earnest money was paid by him alone The agreement to give shares to the plaintiffs was arrived at after the defendant had made the purchase on his own behalf." He was, however, of opinion that this did not make any substantial difference in the position of the parties relating to the purchase. He says: "For the purchase was not complete until the balance of the purchase money was paid, and the defendant had not acquired any right until this was done and until the sale was made absolute. So when the defendant, instead of paying the balance of the purchase money from his own pocket, obtained a portion of it from the plaintiffs, not as a loan but after admitting them to be joint purchasers of the jote, he could not claim to be the sole purchaser of the jote and could not deny the plaintiffs' right in the purchase. If he obtained the certificate of sale in his own name alone, it would amount to an act of fraud." He accordingly held that the defendant was estopped from denying the plaintiffs' title to a $\frac{2}{3}$ share of the jote. In the result the decree of the Court of first instance was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the suit is not maintainable, having regard to the provisions of section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code.

There is no doubt that the defendant was a person who claimed title under a purchase certified by the Court, and section 66, therefore, clearly applies to the case. The second proviso to the section says: "Nothing in this section shall bar a suit to obtain a declaration that the name of any purchaser certified as aforesaid was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser."

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that this case comes within the second clause, because it was fraudulent on the part of the defendant to have obtained a certificate in his own name instead of in the names of all the three persons, but we do not think that it can be brought under the second clause.

Order XXI, rule 84, says: "On every sale of immoveable property the person declared to be the purchaser shall pay immediately after such declaration a deposit of twenty-five per cent. on the amount of his purchase-money to the officer or other person conducting the sale, and in default of such deposit, the property shall forthwith be re-sold." Then, Order XXI, rule 94, says: "Where a sale of immoveable property has become absolute, the Court shall grant a certificate specifying the property sold and the name of the person who at the time of sale is declared to be the purchaser. Such certificate shall bear date the day on which the sale became absolute," so that the person who is declared to be the purchaser after the bids are concluded is the person in whose name the certificate is to be granted under rule 94. The names of the plaintiffs, therefore, could not be inserted in the certificate of sale.

There is no doubt that a petition was filed by the defendant in the execution case, in which it was expressly admitted that he had purchased the property on behalf of himself and the two plaintiffs and that he had taken their share of the money from them, but the fact that these statements were made in the petition filed by the defendant himself in Court on the day the balance of the purchase money was deposited negatives any case of fraud on the part of the defendant, as he made no secret of the fact that the purchase was made on behalf of all the three. The certificate, however, as we have already stated, could not be made in the names of all of them. The question is whether, under these circumstances, the suit can be maintained by the plaintiffs.

The case of a purchase by a member of a joint Hindu family from family funds stands on a different footing from the present case. In the case of Bodh Singh Doodhuria v. Gunesh Ohunder Sen (1) the Judicial Committee said that the provisions of the section cannot be taken to affect the rights of members of a joint Hindu family who by the operation of law, and not by virtue of any private agreement or understanding, are entitled to treat as part of their common property an acquisition, howsoever made, by a member of the family in his own name if made by the use of the family funds [see also the recent case of Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (2)]. The same principle applies, where the parties stand in the relation of partners and the purchase is made by a partner by the use of partnership funds.

In the present case, had it been found, as alleged in the plaint, that there was an agreement before the sale that the purchase would be in the names of the three persons, then the case could have been brought under sub-section (2) of section 66 of the Code. Then it might have been said that the name of the defendant had been inserted in the certificate of sale fraudulently or without the consent of the two plaintiffs. But the learned Subordinate Judge, as stated above, has found that there was no agreement before the sale. That being so, we do not think that the second clause of section 66 applies to this case.

We are referred to a decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and D. Chatterjee, J., in Noni Gopal Bosu v. Sures Ohunder Ghosh (3). But there the agent of the real owner purchased the property, and it was, therefore, a case of an agreement prior to the sale.

In the face of the statements made in the petition filed by the defendant, a copy of which is on the record of the present case, the plaintiffs are, prima facie, entitled to claim specific performance of the contract. But there was no prayer for specific performance of the contract in the plaint, nor has such a case been tried by the Courts below. We think, however, that the ends of justice require that the plaintiffs should be allowed to amend their plaint with a prayer for specific performance of the contract, as the facts upon which they would be entitled to maintain such a suit are all stated in the plaint.

The learned Pleader for the appellant contends that if the plaintiffs are allowed to amend the plaint, the defendant should be allowed to put in a fresh defence and the case tried de novo. We think that this should be done.

We accordingly set aside the decrees of the Courts below, remand the case to the Court of first instance and direct that Court to allow the plaintiffs to amend their plaint and allow the defendant also to put in fresh written statement and then try the case according to law.

Costs will abide the result.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1791 OF 1918.

TANGUTHUR NARASIMHAM—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

versus

SINGARAJU RAMIAH AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS, DEFENDANT No. 2 AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF DEFENDANT No. 3—RESPONDENTS.

Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act (II of 1894), ss. 6, 15—Submission of nomination by proprietor—Limitation, commencement of—Formal submission of unsigned nomination by proprietor's agent, validity of—Premature submission of nomination, effect of—Power to withdraw before acceptance by Collector.

In the case of the creation of a new office under section 15 of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act the starting point for the six weeks allowed for submission of nomination by the proprietor is the day on which all the requisite steps have been completed under section 6, or, in other words, the day on which the last step is completed. [p. 730, col. 1.]

As the power of choice of the person to be appointed to a new office created under the Act is given to the proprietor under section 15, he must exercise

TANGUTHUR NARASIMHAM v. SINGARAJU RAMIAH.

it himself and is prohibited from delegating it to another. But once the choice is made, it is competent to his agent to act for him in formally embodying his nomination in the form prescribed and signing it for him and submitting it. [p. 731, col. 2.]

A proprietor is not prevented from submitting his nomination in advance of a new office being created. Such a submission would take effect when the office is created, if not rejected by the Divisional Officer. [p. 731, col. 2.]

A nomination prematurely made may be withdrawn and a fresh nomination may be made after the office is actually created. [p. 731, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Nellore, in Appeal Suit No. 5 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Kavali, in Original Suit No. 793 of 1915.

FACTS.—On the amalgamation of certain proprietary villages, the Deputy Collector presumably directed the Tahsildar to send notice to the proprietors to appoint a man to the village office. The agent of the proprietors at once sent in a nomination on their behalf. The Deputy Collector rejected such nomination as incompetent in an agent and appointed the plaintiff in the place. The proprietors subsequently sent in their formal nomination of their agent's nominee, the 1st defendant. The present suit was for a declaration that the 1st defendant was not legally appointed and that the plaintiff was so appointed. The lower Appellate Court decreed the same. Defendant No. 1 appealed.

Mr. Patanjali Sastri, for Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for Defendant No. 1.—What a man can do can be lawfully done on his behalf by his agent.

A new vacancy has been created under section 15 of Madras Act II of 1894, and the agent of the proprietors sent in a nomination on their behalf within the six weeks under section 9. If the Revenue Officer was dissatisfied with the nominee, he had to direct the proprietors to appoint another man under section 11, sub-section (1). In any case he had no power to make the appointment himself in the face of these legislative provisions.

The formal nomination sent in by the proprietors is only a ratification of their agent's act and it does not matter that it was sent out of time.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Plaintiff.—The nomination sent by the agent was premature. Ordinarily the District Collector should take the initiative in issuing the notice to the proprietors. Hence the notice by the Tahsildar was incompetent and of no effect. See section 9. The nomination was also incomplete.

The nomination of the proprietors was too late as the six weeks had elapsed, and an appointment had been made as on default.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sues to declare that he is the properly appointed Karnam of Vinjamin under the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act, Act II of 1894, and that the appointment of the 1st defendant to that office is ultra vires and invalid.

This is a case to which section 15 of Act II of 1894 applies. Plaintiff was appointed by the Deputy Collector of Atmakur acting under clause (3) of that section. Unless that appointment can be held to be a valid one, plaintiff's suit must fail, and it will be unnecessary to consider whether the order of the District Collector setting aside that appointment and appointing the 1st defendant instead, which was confirmed by the Revenue Board, was ultra vires or not. The burden is on the plaintiff to establish the validity of his appointment in this case.

The Deputy Collector could act and make his own nomination under clause (3) only if the proprietor failed to submit his nomination to the office within a period of six weeks from the creation of the new office, if clause (1) applied or from the date of the Collector's notice under clause (2) if that clause applied. It is contended for the 1st defendant (appellant) that there was a proper submission of his name within time made by the proprietors and that it was, therefore, not open to the Deputy Collector to appoint his own nominee.

The procedure for the creation of a new office is laid down in section 6 of the Act. After the necessary preliminary steps are taken and the Board's sanction is obtained, the section directs that a notification about the grouping of the villages in connection with the creating of the new office shall be published in the District Gazette as well as in the village in question and a copy of it given to the proprietor. We are of opinion that in the case of the creation of a new office under section 15, clause (1), the starting point for the six weeks will be the day on which all the requisite steps have been completed under section 6 or, in other words, the day on which the last step was completed.

Having decided the starting point generally, we must see whether there was in this case a valid submission within the requisite period of a name for the office by the proprietors. The 1st defendant relies on Exhibit X as the proper submission for the purpose. It is dated 9th October 1914, and it recites that notice was given to the proprietors on 15th September 1914, that is, within six weeks prior to its date. It is not signed by the proprietors, but it purports to have been made by them and is signed by a person as their "agent and power of attorney holder." The 1st defendant is nominated in it for the office of the Karnam of Vinjain.

Several objections have been taken to its validity which we have to consider. To understand them fully, it is necessary further to mention that the notice recited in Exhibit X was sent to the proprietors by the Tahsildar of Udayagiri apparently under the orders of the Deputy Collector. The District Collector sent again to the proprietors what is described as "a formal notice" on 7th November 1914; these notices are not now produced. After the receipt of the second notice the proprietors sent another nomination Exhibit XI signed by one of them, wherein they again nominated the 1st defendant and in doing so referred to their previous nomination of him which their agent had submitted under their orders given to him by telegram Exhibit V and letter Exhibit IV.

Exhibit X was treated as "of no value" by the Deputy Collector as, according to him, "the proprietors' agent had no power to send such nominations or this office to give such notice of the changes in the village offices," and he refers to section 1 of Act IV of 1900, and section 15 (2) of Act II of 1894, as his authority. It may at once be observed that section 1 of Act IV of 1900 was in effect repealed by section 2 of the Madras Limited Proprietors Act, Act IV of 1911. Even otherwise section 1 would have had no bearing on the present case. Evidence makes it clear in this case that the choice in favour of the 1st defendant was really exercised by the proprietors and not by the agent. See Exhibits IV and V and the recital in Exhibit XI. It is a general principle of law that what can be done by a person can be done for him by a duly authorized agent, unless there is an express or implied prohibition against it. As the power of choice of the new officer is given to the proprietor under section 15 of Act II of 1894 and he has to exercise his own choice, there is an implied prohibition against his delegating that power. But we have not been referred to any section or rule or any other consideration preventing an agent from acting for the proprietors in formally embodying their nomination in the form prescribed for it and signing it for them and submitting it. If the Deputy Collector had any doubt of the agent's power to act on the principals' behalf, he should have called for proof; but we think he was not right in rejecting Exhibit X on the ground that it was not signed by the proprietors. It was further argued that as the proprietors themselves treated Exhibit X as invalid and submitted a fresh nomination, Exhibit XI, the former cannot be relied upon any more. But in Exhibit XI the proprietors refer to Exhibit X and confirm their first nomination and only purport to send Exhibit XI because they were made to understand that Exhibit X was not properly signed. If Exhibit X were otherwise valid, we think Exhibit XI cannot be taken as affecting its validity.

The next objection to Exhibit X is that it was sent in reply to an invalid notice, as it is argued that the notice sent in September was not a valid one because it was sent by the Tahsildar and not by the District Collector. The notice issued by the Tahsildar is not before us and we are not satisfied that it was an improper notice, which presumably it was not, being an official act. But even if it was an unauthorised notice, we do not think it will materially affect the case. Taking the notice by the Collector of the 7th November as the proper notice, it would merely follow that the nomination under Exhibit X was submitted a little too soon. So far as we can see, there is nothing to prevent a proprietor submitting his nomination in advance in anticipation of a new office being created. Such a submission, if received and kept on the file and not rejected by the authorities, would take effect when the office is created and the time for appointment comes. Section 15 (3) only provides for the latest date by which the submission should be made. It may be open to the proprietors to withdraw a nomination made prematurely and substitute a new nomination, but they did not do so in the present case. Such a power to withdraw may exist even with reference to a nomination made after the creation of the office till the nominee is accepted and appointed by the Divisional Officer. The power to withdraw, therefore, does not, in any way, affect the validity of a nomination made. The argument that Exhibit X was premature is thus of no force. It is not suggested that there was any starting point for the six weeks earlier than the Tahsildar's notice.

We think, therefore, that Exhibit X was a proper nomination of the 1st defendant and in sufficient compliance with the law and was within time, and it should have been accepted and acted upon by the Deputy Collector in the circumstances of this case. His nomination of the plaintiff to the Karnam office was, therefore, ultra vires and the plaintiff's suit based on it must fail.

The second appeal is, therefore, allowed and the decrees of the lower Courts reversed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal, second—Discretion of Court, exercise of, interference with, when permissible.

Where two Courts fully acquainted with the circumstances of a case, and before whom evidence could be, but was not, led, exercise a discretion, the High Court will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion. [p. 723, col. 1.]

In the course of the trial of a suit the case for the plaintiff was closed and the case of the defendants was reached late in the afternoon on a certain date. The junior Pleader for the defendant was absent at the time and the senior Pleader expressed his inability to go on with the case. The defendant was thereupon told that he should examine his own witnesses, which he declined to do. Upon this the Munsif declared the evidence closed and fixed the next morning for arguments. The next morning the Munsif was asked to vary his order of the previous day and record the defendant's evidence. He refused the application and proceeded to adjudicate on the case. The lower Appellate Court upheld the view taken by the first Court:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case, the High Court would not interfere with the discretion of the two lower Courts, who knew the circumstances of the case and before whom evidence could be given as to the Pleader's inability to go on with the defendant's case. [p. 723, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 16th of November 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 24th of September 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal (with him Babu Bhudhar Halder), for the Appellants.—Under the rules of the High Court, the sittings of Courts are regulated from 11 to 5—"all Courts shall ordinarily rise at 5 P. M." It is a matter of great hardship.

[Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Respondent.—It was a deliberate attempt to force the hand of the Court to accept further evidence next day.]

SWORUP MANDAL v. AYAN RAI KOWRA.

It was such a late hour. Another Pleader could not be easily available. My Pleader was ill. In the lower Court there was an affidavit by the client himself. My Pleader retired at 2 p. m., the other Pleader got ill. The case was heard at 5.45 p. m. It is not quite possible for me to compel Biswanath Babu, Pleader, to swear an affidavit. Would it not be reasonable to put off the case when one Pleader retired at 2, another was ill and it was so late as 5.45 p. m.? The Court should have taken evidence next day. There is no counter-affidavit, no suggestion to the contrary by the other side.

Babus Surenāra Ohandra Sen, Debendranarain Bhattacharjya and Biraj Mohon Mojumdar, for the Respondents.—If the Pleader had really been ill, the Munsif would certainly have accommodated him. It was merely a dodge. The defence Pleader was given to understand that defence would be taken up that day.

Dr. J. N. Kanilal in reply, submitted that he had no opportunity to adduce evidence. How could he conduct his case? It was an unusual hour to procure another Pleader.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the defendant against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 16th November 1916, affirming the decision of the second Munsif of the same place. The suit was brought for the purpose of establishing the plaintiff's title and recovery of possession of certain land. The question raised at the hearing of the present appeal has nothing to do with the merits of the case at all. The point taken is this; on the 9th September 1915, the trial of the case was proceeding in the Court of first instance and late in the afternoon—although I am told by my learned colleague that it is common in the Court of the Munsif—the plaintiff's case was closed as regards evidence and the case of the defendant was reached. According to the statement of the learned Vakil for the appellant, one of the junior Pleaders who had been engaged by the defendant had left the Court at that time for the purpose of attending a certain revenue case. I do not know why the junior Pleader should leave this case to attend a certain revenue case. But he left it in the charge, so I gather, of a gentleman called Mr. Biswambhar Nandi, who is a senior Pleader practising in the Courts there. The case being called on, Mr. Nandi, according to the record, expressed his inability to go on with the case at that time, and he having expressed his inability to go on with the case, the defendant was told that he should examine his witnesses himself, whereupon he said that he could not. Upon this the Munsif declared the evidence closed and fixed the next morning for the argument of the case. The next morning, the Munsif was asked to vary the order made on the previous day and allow the defendant not only to examine the two witnesses said to have been present in the Court premises on the 9th September, but to examine also three additional witnesses who were not present on the previous day. The Court refused that application and proceeded to adjudicate on the case. An appeal was then preferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and the learned Subordinate Judge upheld the view taken by the Munsif. The present case comes before us in second appeal, and we are asked to interfere with the discretion of two Judges who knew the circumstances of the case and before whom evidence could be given as to the illness of Mr. Nandi. Mr. Nandi presumably is a regular practitioner before these two learned Judges and I have no doubt that if he had informed the Judges what the nature of his complaint was and if they were satisfied that his illness was of the nature that is suggested before us, they would have given their best consideration to it. The fact that Mr. Nandi was attacked in the Court of the Munsif suddenly by illness would have been known to the learned Munsif himself. On the record there seems to be nothing except the petition preferred to the Munsif as to the illness of Mr. Nandi. The grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court stated that the Pleaders of the defendant were attacked with illness and that one of them left the Court at 2 o'clock and the other one was unable to continue the case at 5.45 p. m. That Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal says is a slip. At the same time neither the defendant nor any one else has come forward with an affidavit or otherwise stating that Mr. Biswambhar Nandi was attacked with a certain illness at 5.45 p.m. on the 9th September 1915, and was, therefore, unable to proceed with the case. If such had been the fact, no doubt it would have been stated by Mr. Nandi to the Munsif that he felt unwell and was unable to go on with the case and the Munsif would have adjourned the case.

Then we are asked that we should adjourn the case in order to get Mr. Nandi to file an affidavit that at 5.45 p.m. on the 9th September 1915 he felt unwell and was unable to proceed with the case, which was valued at Rs. 54. I do not think we should invite Mr. Nandi to put himself in that position. We are told by Dr. Kanjilal that he is a Pleader of considerable practice and to invite him to recollect in a case valued at Rs. 54 only instituted in the Court of the second Munsif at Khulna that he suddenly fell ill at 5.45 p.m. on the 9th September 1915, would be, I think, putting an undue pressure on his recollection. There were ample opportunities in the lower Courts and before this to obtain from Mr. Nandi his own statement as to what, in fact, did happen, and having regard to the view of the two learned Judges of the Courts below, I do not think that we should interfere in a case of this nature even if we had the jurisdiction, which it must not be taken that I assent to, on the ground that it has been established that the case of the defendant was closed owing to the unfortunate illness of his Pleader Mr. Nandi. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 7 (IX), 12—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 1—Suit dismissed for insufficiency of stamp—Appeal, whether lies—Suit for redemption or foreclosure for adjudged sum—Appeal—Court-fee payable.

An appeal lies from an order of a Court dismissing a suit or appeal on the ground that the plaint or memorandum of appeal is insufficiently stamped, where a question of law such as the interpretation of the Court Fees Act is involved. [p. 736, col. 1.]

In a suit for redemption or foreclosure of a mortgage where the question raised in appeal is the right to redeem or foreclose for an adjudged sum, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be governed by section 7, clause IX of the Court Fees Act, that is to say, will be according to the value of the principal mortgage money. If, however, the memorandum of appeal challenges the amount to be paid or received by the appellant, the fee will be assessed on the difference between the sum awarded (as payable or receivable) by the lower Court and that maintained as due in the memorandum of appeal. [p. 735, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 11th March 1919, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 30th November 1918.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. Har Dayal, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for foreclosure by the plaintiff-appellant. The principal money secured by the mortgage was Rs. 400. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 2,136, asking for a decree for this amount and in default for a decree for foreclosure. The defendants inter alia pleaded that the mortgage was fictitious and without consideration. They also denied execution. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on a finding against the genuineness of the bond and the giving of consideration. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge. She paid a Court-fee on the Rs. 400, principal mortgage money. The District Judge took the view that the Court-fee should be paid on Rs. 2,136 and gave the appellant two weeks' time to make good the deficiency. A day after the expiry of this period of two weeks the appellant put in an application saying that she could not pay the whole Court-fee ordered, but that her claim should be limited to a claim for Rs. 600, for the present, and that she was willing to pay another Rs. 15. The learned District Judge interpreted this to mean that the appellant wanted to have the appeal heard by instalments and dismissed the suit.

In appeal to this Court it is urged that the District Judge misunderstood the appellant's meaning. What the appellant meant was that she wanted to be allowed to limit her claim to Rs. 600, reserving the right to appeal against the decision of the District Judge as to the Court-fee payable. Granting that this was her meaning, I am of the opinion that such a claim could not be permitted. If the appellant had asked to amend her grounds of appeal so as to show that she only claimed Rs. 600 this might have been permitted, but she could not be allowed at the same time to reserve the question of the sufficiency of the Court-fee.

The main question for this Court to decide is whether the lower Court was right in holding that the appellant must pay a Court fee on Rs. 2,136, and not merely on Rs. 400. The Court-fee payable was an ad valorem fee under Schedule I, Article 1, of the Court Fees Act. The value of the subject matter in dispute in the original suit was the value of foreclosure to the plaintiff. Under section 7, clause IX, this value was to be computed according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage, i. e. Rs. 400. The question is whether section 7, clause IX, will apply to appeals. It has been held in "Reference under the Court Fees Act" (1) that section 7, clause IX, applies only to suits and not to appeals. This decision was followed by one of the Judges in Mahadeo Prasad v. Gorakh Prasad (2) and again in Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (3). On the other hand we have a ruling of Sir John Edge in Pirbhu Narain Singh v. Sita Ram (4) that section 7, clause IX, will apply where it is impossible to value the subject-matter. There appears to be no decision of this Court.

In the Madras ruling Sir Arnold White, the Chief Justice, based his decision on the premise that the question was whether section 7, clause IX, or Article 1 of the First Schedule of the Act was applicable for determining the fee payable in respect of a memorandum of appeal in foreclosure or redemption suits. Section 7, clause IX, provides that the amount of fee payable in redemption and foreclosure suits shall be computed according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage. Article 1 of Schedule I runs as follows:—

Ad valorem fees.
1. Plaint or memorandum of appeal (not otherwise provided for in this Act).	When the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed.	Amount.

Now neither of these two enactments have any effect unless read with section 6 of the Act, the material portion of which is—

"No document of any of the kinds specified as chargeable in the First or Second Schedule shall be filed unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee on amount not less than that indicated by either of the said schedules as the proper fee for such document."

This section again, if read alone with section 7, clause IX, would have no effect. We must refer to Article 1 of the First Schedule in order to make any fee payable. It does not, therefore, appear to me to be a question whether Article 1 or section 7, clause IX, is applicable but whether Article 1, so far as it deals with a memorandum of appeal, is or is not governed by section 7, clause IX. Sir Arnold White expressed the opinion that the word "Suits" in section 7, clause IX, could not be construed as including appeals. This opinion was based on the fact that section 7, clause IV (f), provides that the fee for accounts shall be according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal and also on the fact that section 16, which provided for payment of an additional fee where respondent in appeal took objection to unappealed part of the decree, "seems to show that the general policy of the Legislature was to make the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal the criterion for the purpose of computing the fee in appeal." As a conclusion he held that Article 1 did not apply to appeals in foreclosure and redemption cases owing to the words in that article "unless otherwise provided for." With all respect I cannot concur with this reasoning. Neither in section 6 nor in the schedules nor in any other part of the Act is the term "suit" used in contradistinction to the term appeal. See section 17 which runs:—

"Where a suit embraces two or more distinct subjects, the plaint or memorandum of appeal, &c."

The terms that are used in contradistinction to one another are the words plaint and memorandum of appeal, the Court-fee being chargeable on documents and not proceedings. A plaint is a document filed in one stage of the suit, a memorandum of appeal is a document filed in another stage. A suit is the general name given to proceedings whether in the Original or Appellate Court. The words in Article 1 "not otherwise provided for in the Act" appear to refer to special provision made by other articles in the schedules. The argument of Sir Arnold White, so far as it is based on the language of section 7, clause IV (f), or on section 16, appears to me to be inconclusive. The provision in the former that in suits for accounts the fee will be payable according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal does not indicate that a "suit" means only the proceedings in the Original Court unless the context showed the contrary. It was necessary to refer to the valuation both in the plaint and the memorandum of appeal because otherwise there might have been doubt which valuation was to be the basis of the fee. This provision, if anything, appears to go against Sir Arnold White's view. Again, section 16 (now repealed) merely indicated that the fee payable in appeal may be different from that payable in the original suit and does not appear to support Sir Arnold White's argument in any way. It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that Sir Arnold White's reasoning and the fact that his conclusion has been followed by the Courts, was largely induced by the difficulty and harshness in particular cases of adopting the conclusion that a memorandum of appeal should be stamped in a foreclosure and redemption suit with the same stamp as the original plaint, regardless of the effect on the relief in question of the Original Court's judgment. This difficulty, however, will not arise if section 7, clause IX, be construed to be applicable only where the question raised by the plaint or memorandum of appeal is the right to redeem or foreclose, apart from the right to redeem or foreclose for an adjudged sum. I do not think that this construction involves doing any violence to the language of the section. If this construction is adopted, the plaint must always be stamped according to the value of the principal mortgage money, because it must always ask for a decision that the mortgage is one that may be foreclosed or redeemed. In the case of memorandum of appeal if it impugns the lower Court's decision against redemption or foreclosure, the Court-fee will be again assessed according to the principal mortgage money. If the memorandum of appeal challenges the amount to be paid or received by the appellant, the fee will be assessed on the difference between the sum awarded (as payable or receivable) by the lower Court and that maintained as due in the memorandum of appeal. If such a memorandum of appeal maintains that the mortgage is not liable to be redeemed or foreclosed, it will be construed to mean that the appellant maintains that he is not liable to pay anything. Where the lower Court decides against redemption or foreclosure but goes on to fix the amount payable or receivable on the assumption that its decision against redemption or foreclosure may be quashed by the Appellate Court, the operative part of the lower Court's decree must be deemed to be the decision against redemption or foreclosure. The construction of the Act in this way is in accordance with general equity and common sense and does not appear to be in conflict with the decisions of this Court. See Mohammad Husain v. Syed Jahan Begam (5), Ram Adhin v. Hanuman (6), Ram Phal v. Deputy Commissioner, Bahraich (7), Basudeo Ban v. Sri Krishna Gir (8).

Another question that arises in this appeal is whether an appeal lies against the order of the lower Court dismissing an appeal for failure of the appellant to pay the Court-fee held due on the memorandum of appeal. In Rup Singh v. Mukhraj Singh (9) it was held, following the ruling in Ajoodhya Pershad v. Gunga Pershad (10), that although section 12 of the Court Fees Act prohibited a Court of Appeal taking up the question of the correctness of the lower Court's view as to the Court fee payable, nevertheless the Code of Civil Procedure, by providing for an appeal where a plaint or memorandum of appeal was rejected, must be deemed to override section 12 of the Court Fees Act. This ruling was again followed in Muhammad Sadik v. Muhammad Jan (11), where it was admitted that section 12 was inconsistent with the intention of the framers of the Code of Civil Procedure that there should be an appeal in every case falling within section 54 (now Order VII, rule 11, of the Code of Civil Procedure). These rulings appear to me to ignore the well-known rule that a subsequent general enactment does not affect a prior special enactment by implication. Lord Selborne in the case of Seward v. Vera Cruz (12) stated as follows:—

"There is a well-known rule which has application to this case, which is that a subsequent general Act does not affect a prior special Act by implication. That this is the law cannot be doubted, and the cases on the subject will be found collected in the Third Edition of Maxwell on the 'Interpretation of Statutes.' The general maxim is generalia specialibus non derogant, i. e., 'special provisions will control general provisions.' When the Legislature has given its attention to a separate subject and made provision for it, the presumption is that a subsequent general enactment is not intended to interfere with the special provision unless it manifests that intention very clearly. Each enactment must be construed in that respect according to its own subject matter and its own terms."

Nearly all the High Courts have, however, drawn a distinction between a case where the valuation depends merely on a question of fact and one where it depends on a question of law, declaring that section 12 does not bar an appeal in the latter case: see Studd v. Mati Mahto (13), Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath Tiwari (14) and Dada v. Nagesh (15). Although it appears to me that the words in the section: 'Every question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the Bengal Putni Taluks Regulation (VIII of 1819), ss. 8, 10, 13, 14—"Day," meaning of—Putni sale—Payment to officer of zemindar before sale, effect of—Notice, defective—Sale, validity of—Purchaser, position and rights of—Purchaser, whether necessary party to suit—Possession, whether can be given on reversal of sale—Appeal—Finding of fact, when can be disturbed.

A finding by a trial Court based solely on oral evidence adduced before it ought ordinarily not to be disturbed by a Court of Appeal. [p. 737, col. 2; p. 738, col. 1.]

The term "day" in the Putni Regulation, 1819, means a day reckoned in the manner prevalent in Bengal, that is, from sunrise to sunrise. [p. 737, col. 2.]

A payment to the officer of a zemindar of the full amount due for arrears of rent, made between 8 and 10 P. M. on the evening of the day antecedent to a sale under the Putni Regulation, is a valid payment and a sale held after such payment is made, is without jurisdiction. [p. 738, col. 2.]

A defective notice under section 8 of the Putni Regulation is fatal to the validity of the sale [p. 739 col. 2.]

A notice which omits to specify the lots to be sold and does not set out the order in which the sale is to take place, is a defective notice. [p. 739, col. 2.]

Where the purchaser at a sale under the Putni Regulation is a stranger to the proceedings, he is entitled, on the sale being set aside, to be indemnified against all loss at the charge of the zemindar or other person at whose instance the sale may have been made, such loss being measured by costs of litigation and interest on the purchase-money. [p. 740, col. 1.]

BEJOY KRISHA MOOKERJEE v. LAKSHMI NARAIN JIU.

Section 14 of the Putni Regulation contemplates that the purchaser is to be made a party to a suit to set aside a putni sale. If the purchaser has purchased on behalf of another or on behalf of himself and others, he must be deemed to represent all such persons and if it was he who took delivery of possession under section 15 of the Regulation, it is immaterial that a plaintiff asks not merely for reversal of the sale but also for restoration of possession on such reversal. [p. 740, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the second defendant in a suit instituted under section 14, clause 1 of the Putni Regulation, 1819, for reversal of the putni sale. Putni Mahal Sajnore appertains to Touzi No. 11 of the Burdwan Collectorate and is situate partly within Burdwan district and partly within Birbhum district. In respect of this putni, Rs. 6,928 is annually payable as rent by the plaintiffs to the first defendant, the Maharaja of Burdwan. Default was made in payment of rent for the Bengali year 1321, with the result that proceedings under the Regulation were instituted by the Zemindar. The putni was sold by the Collector of Birbhum on the 15th May 1915, corresponding to 1st Jaist 1322. The appellant offered the highest bid and became the purchaser for Rs. 14,500. On the 8th May 1916, the plaintiff instituted the present suit for reversal of the sale. The Subordinate Judge has found, first, that the arrears due had been paid by the plaintiffs to the officer of the Zemindar at Burdwan on the day previous to the sale and that no arrears were due when the sale was held at Birbhum on the 15th May 1915; secondly, that the notice required to be stuck up at a conspicuous part of the Collector's katchari was defective and misleading and was not served in accordance with section 8, clause 2, and section 10, paragraph 1, of the Regulation; thirdly, that the evidence of service of the notice at the katchari in the Moffasil is most unsatisfactory. On these grounds, the Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit, set aside the sale and directed that possession be restored to the plaintiffs, the purchase money to be refunded to the purchaser. He has also held that, in the circumstances disclosed, each party should bear his own costs. The purchaser defendant has appealed to this Court, and on his behalf the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge upon each of the three points mentioned has been rigorously attacked.

The first point involves the questions of the time of the payment and of its legal effect. It is not disputed that a sum of Rs. 4,158-10-6 was paid by the manager of the plaintiffs to the officer of the Zemindar defendant and was accepted by the latter as the full amount due; but the controversy has centered round the question of the precise time when the payment was made. The Subordinate Judge has held, on the evidence of the Deputy Manager of the Burdwan Raj and on the testimony of other witnesses, that the payment was made between 8 P. M. and 10 P. M. on the evening of the day antecedent to the sale. Mr. Das has criticised this evidence severely and has invited us to hold that the money was paid after midnight, probably a short while before morning. The payment must have been made before 6 A. M., as a telegram was sent at that hour to the Am-Muktear of the Zemindar at Suri, asking him to strike off the proceedings. Mr. Das has pressed his view on the Court in order to lay the foundation for an argument that a payment made after midnight is equivalent to a payment on the following day, that is, the day of sale, and that a payment so made is inoperative to stop the sale. It is plain, however, that when the Regulation mentions Bengali months and dates throughout, the Legislature must have intended that a day should be reckoned in the manner prevalent in Bengal, that is, from sunrise to sunrise. In this view, it becomes immaterial to decide, whether the money was paid between 8 P. M. and 10 P. M. in the evening or later on in the night. There are slight discrepancies in the evidence on this point: but Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter has rightly contended that in a matter of this description, where the issue involves a simple question of fact to be decided chiefly, if not solely, on oral evidence, a Court of Appeal should be slow to set aside the finding of the trial Judge who had the witnesses before him: Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co. v. Motilal (1), Dominion Trust Co. v. New York Life Insurance Company (2).

On the whole, we are not satisfied that the time of payment has been erroneously ascertained by the Subordinate Judge. The question next arises what was the legal effect of the payment actually made. Mr. Das has contended that there was in reality no unqualified payment, but only a conditional deposit. This argument is rested on the following endorsement made in the challan at the time of payment:—

"The amount being untimely paid, extra telegram is sent. The Raj Sarkar is not responsible, if the telegram does not reach the Raj katchari at Suri in time, or reaches it at a late hour, with the consequence that the lot is sold in auction sale; the amount will be received back without any objection and without interest."

We do not think the sum paid and accepted, though with a qualification, can be deemed a deposit. The intention of both parties was that the sum should be taken as an immediate payment; it was on such assumption alone that the Burdwan Raj could have directed the Am-Muktear at Suri to strike off the proceedings. No doubt, there was an arrangement that if a sale took place, in either of the contingencies mentioned, the sum would be returned; but that does not indicate that the acceptance of the money was postponed to await the event. It is not necessary for us to determine, what would have been the exact position of the putnidar, if either of the two contingencies contemplated had happened; whether in that event he would have been entitled to sue for reversal of the sale on the ground that the arrears had been paid, need not to be discussed. The fact is that neither of the contingencies contemplated happened; on the other hand, events took a turn which neither party had anticipated. The telegram reached the Raj katchari at Suri in due time, but through a mistake the code letter attached to the name of the sender was omitted. The consequence was that the Am-Muktear, when he received the telegram, hesitated to take action thereon. He telegraphed to Burdwan to make sure of the genuineness of the instructions. The Collector granted a short adjournment but the message in reply was not received within the time allowed. In these circumstances, we must hold that the sale took place after a valid payment had been made to the officer of the Zemindar. The sale held under such circumstances must be deemed to be a sale without jurisdiction. This view has been repeatedly held with regard to sale for arrears of revenue: Byjnath v. Seetul Pershad (3), Harkhoo Singh v. Bunshidhur Singh (4), Balkishen Das v. Simpson (5), Mahomed Jan v. Ganga Bishun Singh (6), Haji Buksh Ilahi v. Durlav Chandra (7). The principle has been applied to the case of a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act: Janakdhari Lal v. Mohant Gossain Lal (8), and has been regarded as equally applicable to sales under the Putni Regulation: Shuroop Chunder v. Pertab Chunder Singh (9), Ramsona v. Nabakumar Sinha (10). This position is clear from section 14, clause (1), which contemplates a sale, only if the balance claimed by the Zemindar on account of the rent of the putni remains unpaid upon the day fixed for the sale of the tenure. The second paragraph of the clause clearly contemplates that the fact that there was no balance due, may be urged as a ground in support of a suit for reversal of the sale. We need not accordingly discuss, whether a sale can be stopped by the putnidar by offer of the money to the Zemindar at the moment of sale. But it is clear that he cannot stop the sale at that stage by a deposit in the Collectorate. This was ruled by the majority in Kristo Mohun v. Aftabooddeen (11), which is an authority for the proposition that payment to stop the sale may be made into Court, either by a subordinate Talukdar under section 13 or by a putnidar who has applied for a summary investigation under section 14, clause (2).

The second point raises the question, whether the notice to be stuck up at a conspicuous part of the Collector's katchari was served in accordance with the Regulation. Section 8, clause (2) requires the Zemindar to present a petition to the Collector containing a specification of the balances due to him on account of the expired year from the putnidars. This petition must be stuck up in some conspicuous part of the Collector's katchari with a notice that if the amount claimed be not paid before the 1st Jaist following, the tenure of the defaulter will on that day be sold by public sale in liquidation. This must be read with section 10, which provides that at the time of sale the notice previously stuck up in the katchari shall be taken down and the lots be called up successively in the order in which they may be found in that notice. It is plain that section 10 contemplates a self-contained notice which comprises not only a specification of the arrears and a notification that the sale will be held on the 1st Jaist if the amount claimed be not paid before that date, but also a statement of the lots proposed to be sold in the order in which the sale will be held. Judged by this test, the notice in this case does not fulfil the requirements of the Regulation. The notice does not specify the lots to be sold (except one property which is not the subject-matter of this suit), and, it necessarily follows, does not set out the order in which the sale was to take place. The notice was framed on the assumption that the requisite information might be obtained from the petition which also is required to be stuck up under section 8, clause (2). The view we take as to the contents of a notice under section 8 is in conformity with that adopted by this Court in the cases of Rajnarain v. Anant Lal (12), Bejoy Ohand v. Atuly Charan Bose (13) and Hariharnath Das v. Rajanikanta (14). We have examined the records of the last two cases and have found that the notices which were then pronounced defective were of the same form as the notice in this case. It is difficult to understand why notwithstanding those decisions, the same defective form should continue to be used, leading inevitably to expensive litigation and cancellation of sales. It may further be pointed out that the importance of strict conformity with the requirements of the Regulation in respect of the notice mentioned in sections 8 and 10 has been emphasised on more than one occasion by this Court as also by the Judicial Committee: Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini Dasi (15), Ahsanulla v. Haricharn (16) affirming the decision of the High Court in Ahsanulla v. Hurri Ohurn (17), Rajnarain v. Anant Lal (12), Hurro Doyal Roy v. Mahomed Gazi (18), Maharaja of Burdwan v. Tarasundari Debi (19). We are of opinion that the notice under section 8 was defective and this by itself is a fatal objection to the validity of the sale.

The third point raises the question of the service of the notice required to be served by section 8 at the katchari of the defaulter. The Subordinate Judge has held that the alleged service of the notice in the Moffusil is not satisfactorily made out. His conclusion is that the notice was duly served at the Sudder katchari of the Zemindar but not duly served at the katchari of the Collector or in the Moffassil katchari of the putnidar. We have examined the evidence and have arrived at the conclusion that the proof of service in the Moffussil is by no means above suspicion; there is considerable doubt as to the genuineness of the signatures on the receipt and some of the witnesses do not fall within the category of substantial persons: Ram Sebuk v. Monmohini Dossee (20).

The conclusion follows that the sale must be set aside, not only because no arrears remained unpaid upon the day fixed for the sale, but also because two of the notices prescribed by the Regulation have not been duly served. Mr. Das has argued that the Court is bound to take into account the fact that the purchaser at the sale is a stranger to the proceedings and he has pressed us to take the view that in such circumstances the sale should be maintained and damages paid to the putnidar by the Zemindar. This contention cannot possibly succeed in view of the provisions of the Regulation: Mobaruck Ali v. Ameer Ali (21). A sale under the Putni Regulation stands on an entirely different basis from a sale for arrears of revenue. Section 14 does not restrict the right of suit to narrow and specified grounds. The validity of the sale may be successfully challenged on proof that the conditions prescribed by the Regulation have not been fulfilled, and the numerous decisions in the reports show that the Court has exacted conformity, on the part of the Zemindar, with the statutory requirements. The purchaser, though a stranger, is only entitled to be indemnified against all loss at the charge of the Zemindar or other person at whose instance the sale may have been made; such loss would ordinarily be measured by costs of litigation and interest on the purchase money: Mobaruck Ali v. Ameer Ali (21), Bykunt Nath Singh v. Mahtab Ohand (22), Bejoy Ohand v. Amrita Lal (23).

Mr. Das has finally argued that the suit was not properly constituted, inasmuch as the members of the joint family of which the purchaser was a member had not been added as parties. There is no force in this contention. Section 14 contemplates that the purchaser is to be made a party. If the purchaser has purchased on behalf of another or on behalf of himself and others, he must be deemed to represent all such persons, and as it was he who took delivery of possession under section 15, it is immaterial that the plaintiff asks not merely for reversal of the sale but also for restoration of possession on such reversal.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge must consequently be confirmed, subject, however, to variation in two respects.

The purchaser defendant will obtain from the Zemindar defendant (a) interest on the purchase money Rs. 14,500 at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the payment (23rd May 1915) to the date of reversal of the sale, that is, the date of the judgment of the lower Court (4th October 1917), and (b) costs in the lower Court; these sums will carry interest from 4th October 1917 to date of realisation; subject to these modifications, the appeal will stand dismissed. The appellant will pay to the plaintiffs-respondents the costs of this appeal and will recover from the Zemindar respondent half the costs of the appeal.

*Appeal dismissed;
Decree varied.*

*Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 43, 46, 93
—Inventory, failure to file—Creditor who sets Court in motion, whether 'person aggrieved'—Right of creditor to ask for commitment.*

The duties imposed by the provisions contained in section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act are of a disciplinary character, and if a debtor fails to carry them out, the person, if any, who is really aggrieved is the Court to which proper assistance has not been rendered by the debtor and not any person who sets the Court in motion. [p. 742, col. 1.]

A creditor, therefore, has no right to ask for the committal of the debtor for the latter's failure to file an inventory. [p. 742, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Ramnad, dated the 15th September 1917, in Interlocutory Application No. 165 of 1917, in Insolvency Petition No. 37 of 1914, on the file of the Official Receiver, Ramnad, (Insolvency Petition No. 15 of 1914 on the file of the said District Court, Ramnad).

FACTS.—Appeal under section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act against an order of the District Judge rejecting an application under section 43 praying that the insolvent be sent to jail.

PALANIAPPA CHETTY v. SUBRAMANIAN CHETTY.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, A. Ramaswami Aiyar and K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Respondent.—No appeal lies as the appellant is not a "person aggrieved" under section 46, sub-clause (2). See Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1), followed in Ladu Ram v. Mahabir Prasad (2), Digendra Chandra Basak v. Ramani Mohan Goswami (3).

Mr. Patanjali Sastri, for the Appellant.—A person who is refused something which he is authorised to ask under a Statute is a "person aggrieved." Alagappa Chettiar v. Nagaratna Mudaliar (4), following Sidebotham, Ex parte; Sidebotham, In re, (5) and other English cases. Compare section 104 (2) of the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883 and sections 108, 154, 156 of the Act of 1914. The same view has been held in Official Assignee of Madras v. Rama Chandra Iyer (6), Thiruvengkata Chariar v. Thangayi Ammal (7), Hanseswar Ghosh v. Rakhal Das Ghose (8). The case in Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1) went on the notions of Criminal Jurisprudence. Digendra Chandra Basak v. Ramani Mohan Goswami (3) hesitates to follow Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1). Further, there were full enquiries of which there was none in this case.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.—In order to render the petitioner a "person aggrieved," the intention must be to get at some property concealed by the debtor or otherwise to benefit the estate of the debtor. Nothing is gained by getting the debtor sent to jail. So Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1) applies.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—A creditor can appeal if his application for getting the debtor adjudicated an insolvent is rejected, even though the estate is not affected either way by such rejection.]

Such petitions, being for administration of the estate, stand on a different footing as the Court is bound to assist the creditors.

No creditor has a right to get the debtor sent to jail. Hence there is no right infringed.

Mr. Patanjali Sastri, in reply.—I have a right to apply under section 43 to ask the Court to take action if my allegations are proved. The Court's refusing to hear me is an infringement of my right.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of Ramnad dismissing an application presented by the appellant before us under section 93 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

A preliminary objection was taken by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar that the appellant is not a person "aggrieved" within the meaning of section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and, therefore, that this appeal does not lie. He cited Iyappa Nainar v. Manikka Asari (1), which is a decision directly in point. Some of the reasons given by the learned Judges in that case do not commend themselves to us, but we think that the conclusion of the learned Judges is right. Section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which enables the Court to call upon the insolvent to produce his books and to give inventories of his properties, etc., was intended to facilitate the work of the Court in finally adjudicating on the extent of the properties which are to be distributed among the various creditors. By the failure of the insolvent to produce his books, etc., it is the Court that is aggrieved. It is true, as was contended by Mr. Patanjali Sastri, that the creditor is undoubtedly interested in seeing that the books are produced and that the proper inventory is taken. That is the reason why he is given the privilege of setting the Court in motion. If the language of section 13 is compared with that of section 43 to which Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar drew our attention, the position is fairly clear. The language in section 13 is "the Court may, either of its own motion or on the application of any creditor, make one or more of the following orders," etc., there is no corresponding provision in section 43 which entitles the creditor to set the Court in motion. No doubt, ordinarily the Court which has other duties to perform should not be expected to suo motu make enquiries of the kind mentioned in section 43. On that account, the would avail itself of any assistance that may be given to it by the creditor who brings to its notice the delinquencies of the debtor, but that would not give a right to the creditor to say that the debtor must be committed to jail, and that by not sending him to jail he is in any way aggrieved. We think that, as was pointed out in Thiruvengkata Ohariar v. Thangayi Ammal (7) and in Alagappa Ohettiar v. Nagaratna Mudaliar (4), the correct definition of the expression "person aggrieved" is that given in Sidebotham, Ex parte; Sidebotham, In re (5). Mr. Patanjali Sastri contended that in the present case the creditor whose application was refused would come within the definition as given by Lord Justice James. He particularly drew our attention to this language in that definition, namely, "a person who has suffered a legal grievance or who has been wrongfully refused something." The word "wrongfully" indicates that there is a right which has been violated and as we pointed out at the outset, a creditor has no right to set the Court in motion although the Court may avail itself of the assistance which he may render. We are in agreement with the statement of the law as laid down in Ladu Ram v. Mahabir Irasad (2), wherein it is pointed out that the duties imposed by the provisions contained in section 43 are of a disciplinary character and that the person, if any, who is really aggrieved is the Court to whom proper assistance has not been rendered by the debtor and not any person who sets the Court in motion. We express no opinion on the merits of this case as the matter has not been argued before us.

The preliminary objection that there is no appeal to this Court must be upheld and the appeal is rejected with costs.

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Akhra, whether can be owned by community as a whole—Suit by community with respect to akhra, maintainability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 8.

The fact that a community has owned an akhra and its properties from time immemorial through panchayats, points to a legal origin although no grant is set up; that community, therefore, has a right to hold and manage the property and to maintain suits with respect to the akhra through panchayats. [p. 748, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Dacca, dated the 23rd of November 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 6th of October 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babu Kshitish Oh. Neogy), for the Appellants.—The defendants are appellants. This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of possession of an Akhra of certain deities together with the lands, buildings, etc., on declaration of title of the plaintiffs, Dhobi community of Narainda in the town of Dacca.

The question is, whether a community which is not a corporation can own property. My submission is that a Dhobi community cannot be a juristic person according to law. A deity may be a juristic person, but not a Dhobi community. The suit must, therefore, fail.

Secondly, the community, cannot claim adverse possession either by prescription or by long possession, the community being a fluctuating community.

Thirdly, the community, including men, women and children, cannot be treated as a corporation, it being a fluctuating community.

Under Order I, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs may institute the suit but the cardinal point is, whether they had any status to represent the community.

PROBHAT CHANDRA SEN V. HARI MOHAN DHUPL.

Fourthly, the Dhobi community claim the land as a property of the deity Kalachand, though they do not possess the character of Shebait.

The defendants, father and son, claim the same by purchase as well as by the right of Shebait.

Fifthly, documents which are not admissible in evidence were admitted by the lower Court. The entry in Chitta is for the similar reason inadmissible in evidence.

Sixthly, the question is, whether a person can represent a class.

Salmond's Jurisprudence, 4th Edition, 279, referred to.

"A legal person....." page 293.

Seventhly, there may be any number of joint tenants and tenants in common, but there cannot be any undefined number of fluctuating body.

Goodman v. Mayor of Saltash (1).

Also page 277 of Salmond's with heading 'Legal Status of Unborn Person.' Rivers v. Adams (2).

'A corporation never dies.' A trustee may die but another will come in next day. But this is not the case where the community is fluctuating.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—In Lutchmeput Singh v. Sadaulla Nushyo (3) that case is referred to. Navroji v. Kharsedji (4) referred to.]

That case is distinguishable. It is not a suit for ejectment as understood by English Law.

This is a suit for recovery of possession, where the plaintiff can only succeed if he can prove his title.

The whole object was to vindicate the rights of management and not for possession.

Navroji v. Kharsedji (4) referred to.

In that case the learned Judge confines himself within the facts of that particular case and does not establish a general proposition of law. The present suit is based on ownership alone, while that case is not so.

An undefined, indefinite, fluctuating number of persons can have no right.

If the English Law on this point is based on any technicality, the Court of this country is not bound to follow it but otherwise it must.

In the case of a corporation one person would be the owner in the eye of law.

The same would be the result in the case of trustees.

There would be no continuity in the case of a fluctuating community.

Dhunput Singh v. Paresh Nath Singh (5), Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Paresh Nath Singh (6).

Civil Procedure Code, by Woodroffe, page 539, New Edition, referred to.

In Dhunput Singh v. Paresh Nath Singh (5) the only point was whether Order I, rule 8, was applicable and the present question was not decided there.

Some distinction must be drawn somewhere. A community cannot be allowed to be represented in any way which is not valid according to law.

The documents produced by Dhobis are no evidence in this matter.

It was a mere tenancy-at-will and no statement made by Dhobis would be admissible in evidence.

Registered document of a conveyance in which the appellant was not a party is inadmissible in evidence.

As regards limitation there was no finding how the learned Sub Judge came to that finding against the appellant.

How is it possible to divide the point of law about possession by a fluctuating body?

Mr. B. Chuckerbutty (with him Babu Surya Kumar Guha), for the Respondents.—Custom in this country is transcendental law and there is a great difference of juristic ideas on this point in India and Europe. Even in Europe and particularly in Russia the legal conceptions are different.

It has been proved that the Akhra belongs to the plaintiffs.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—The question is whether the community is entitled to institute the suit.]

PROBHAT CHANDRA SEN v. HARI MOHAN DHUPI.

Without the law of the Companies Act in this country there are also other laws. A Mitakshara family is a fluctuating body and is also recognised in law as a corporate body.

As pointed out by Sir Henry Mayne in his book on 'Law and Customs', the village community in India has undergone different interpretations from that of Europe.

In Navroji v. Kharsedji (4) the case of the Parsi community has been referred to.

Findings of facts in second appeal must not be challenged.

The defendants are spoliators, intruders and robbers.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—The question is whether the property belongs to the community or to the Thakur.]

In this case there is no dedication to the deity. It was owned by the community.

It has been decided by both the Courts that this Akhra was managed by the community from generation to generation.

Navroji v. Kharsedji (4) referred to.

In the plaint the prayer for the Dhobi community is only to maintain the Akhra and to manage it.

There is an institution which belongs to the Dhobi community and the Panchayat is entrusted with the power of management.

The Panchayats may be legally called trustees of the said estate in order to save it from thieves, robbers and spoliators.

The case of Navroji v. Kharsedji (4) has been followed in Budree Das v. Ohooni Lal (7).

In Jivanji Jamshedji v. Burjorji Naserwanji (8) all these cases have been referred to.

The present case is very much stronger than Jivanji Jamshedji v. Burjorji Naserwanji (8) in facts as well as in principles.

In Navroji v. Kharsedji (4) the principle has been explained and it is applicable in this case.

The Panchayat was appointed long before.

Sevatha Muthu Asari v. Rev. Musquita (9) referred to.

This was a case of the Roman Catholic community.

Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Paresk Nath Singh (6) and Salmond's Jurisprudence, page 289, 4th Edition, and page 186, "owner less right—"referred to.

The documents adduced are perfectly good evidence and the lower Court was right in holding them as admissible.

Samaraddi v. Shama Charan Sen (10) referred to.

It is admissible as being a recital in the document.

As regards limitation it is a finding of fact that there was limitation as found by the lower Court.

Sir Rash Pehari Ghose, in reply.—I submit my learned friend has not been able to cite any authority to show that property can be owned in this country by any particular caste or castes. We are not dealing with any particular village community. In conceding that a village community can own land I mean that the village community as understood in Roman Law.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—From the decision of the Bombay cases it may be said that the village community can represent itself and institute a suit.]

I am not aware of any case in which the village community had set up such a right.

The main question is, whether the Dhobi community of that particular locality can own or has owned any land, whether they had any title to the land.

The decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins is clearly distinguishable. That was not a suit for khas possession or declaration of title. That was a suit whether management could be made in a particular way.

The Bombay decision of Justice Chaudhary is clearly distinguishable.

The question before your Lordships was not raised at all.

So is the case of Budree Das v. Ohooni Lal (7) clearly distinguishable.

This is really a case of first impression.

The Dhobi community or their representatives do not claim under any grant. What they rely on is adverse possession from generation to generation.

You cannot acquire a title by prescription. I am using it in a legal sense.

A who is in possession is ousted by B who does not claim under A.

PBROBHAT CHANDRA SEN v. HARI MOHAN DHUPL.

B may be ousted by O who does not claim under B.

It is essential to the acquisition of title that there must be a regular devolution of title.

This was decided by the Judicial Committee in Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (11).

In order that a title may be acquired there must be a regular devolution of title. Suppose a man—a Dhobi—lives at a place, has he any interest in the land? There cannot be any question of succession.

The only title the plaintiffs have tried to establish is merely by adverse possession.

That is the only point found in their favour by the first Court.

The real point has not been appreciated by either of the Courts.

I do not dispute that their representative can bring the suit.

The first point is, whether they had any title in it.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—What would be the legal effect of such possession?]

They cannot rely on adverse possession unless they establish their title.

There are innumerable difficulties in recognising a fluctuating body as a juristic person.

In the plaint the plaintiff says that the land does not belong to the deity.

The lower Court says that it is neither party's case that the land belongs to the Thakur.

The question narrowed down comes to this—Are the Dhobi community as such entitled to own the property? Even if they have any right they have not been able to establish their title. Privity of the title has not been proved.

As regards admissibility of evidence the opposite party has cited Samarajdi v. Shama Oharan Sen (10).

I admit I speak with diffidence whether that case is applicable here.

He has to give boundaries distinctly. Merely a statement that the Dhobi Akhra is in the boundary line is not sufficient to prove the title.

The question thus comes to this: (1) whether the Dhobi community as such can own property; (2) whether they have established their title—whether the evidence adduced is admissible on the point.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs as Panchayets and members of the Dhobi community of Narinda in the Town of Dacca for recovery of possession of an Akhra of certain Thakurs together with the lands, buildings and moveable properties appurtenant thereto on declaration of the rights of the said Dhobi community to the same.

It is alleged by the plaintiffs that the Akhra has been in existence on the Lakheraj land of Schedule (ka) from time immemorial for the worship of certain Thakurs, which has been installed by the ancestors of the Dhobi community of Narinda, that the Akhra and the adjoining lands, buildings and structures appertaining to the same have been in "the ownership, possession, management and control of the Dhobi community of Narinda in succession to their ancestors and that by virtue of adverse possession for a period far exceeding 12 years in succession to their ancestors from time immemorial the Dhobi community of Narinda have acquired an indefeasible right to the properties," and that "the Panchayets appointed by the Dhobi community have all along been vested with the right and ownership as also with the power of exercising acts of ownership and possession and of controlling and managing the said Akhra and all properties appertaining thereto as also the appointment and dismissal of the priest and Shebait for performing the worship of the deities." It is further alleged that one Hari Das Babaji was the former Pujari, but he was dismissed by the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 6 was appointed in his place, that the defendant No. 1 in 1905 purchased a bari to the north of the Akhra, and in collusion with the defendant No. 6, opened a passage over the Akhra; this led to disputes and criminal proceedings. The plaintiffs dismissed the defendant No. 6, appointed another person as Pujari in his place, and brought a title suit against the former for establishment of title to and possession of the Akhra and the properties belonging to it, which was decreed, but the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 in collusion with the defendant No. 6 offered resistance to plaintiffs obtaining possession, which led to the institution of the present suit.

The defendants denied the title and possession of the Daobi community. They pleaded inter alia that the Akhra together with the properties appertaining thereto belonged to the Bairagis whom the plaintiffs called Pajaris, and not to the Dhobi community, that the Akhra site was in a Taluk which on a partition fell to the share of certain Ghoses who took a kabuliyat from Hari Das and subsequently allowed the defendant No. 6 to continue in possession as a tenant-at-will, and that the defendant No. 1 took a Miras settlement of the land from the Ghoses and purchased the huts of the Akhra from the defendant No. 6.

The Courts below concurred in holding that the Akhra and the properties belong to the Dhobi community and the suit has been decreed.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have appealed. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that a community consisting of a fluctuating body of persons is not a juristic person, and cannot be owners of property. We have been referred to Salmond's Jurisprudence, 4th Edition, page 290, where the learned author in dealing with the "Uses and purposes of incorporation" says:—"With a single individual the law knows well how to deal, but common ownership is a source of serious and manifold difficulties. If two persons carry on partnership or own and manage property in common complications arise, with which nevertheless the law can deal without calling in the aid of fresh conceptions. But what if there are fifty or a hundred joint owners? With such a state of facts legal principles and conceptions based on the type of individual ownership are scarcely competent to deal. How shall this multitude manage its common interests and affairs? How shall it dispose of property or enter into contracts? What if some be infants or insane or absent? What shall be the effect of the bankruptcy or death of an individual member? How shall one of them sell or otherwise alienate his share? How shall the joint and separate debts and liabilities of the partners be satisfied out of their property? How shall legal proceedings be taken by or against so great a number? These questions and such as these are full of difficulty even in the case of a private partnership if the members are sufficiently numerous. The difficulty is still greater in the case of interests, rights or property vested not in individuals, or indefinite associations of individuals but in the public at large or in indeterminate classes of the public."

Reference was also made to Rivers v. Adams (2). In that case it was held that a right claimed by the inhabitants of a parish to cut and carry away for use as fuel in their own houses faggots or baskets of the under-wood growing upon a common belonging to the lord of the manor is a right to a profit a prendre in the soil of another, and that such a right cannot exist by custom, prescription or grant unless it be a Crown grant which incorporates the inhabitants.

It is contended that an unincorporated body of persons can hold property jointly only by appointment of a trustee. The difficulties in the way of a fluctuating body of persons holding property jointly are many and are pointed out in the passage in Salmond's Jurisprudence quoted above, yet there are instances of a body of unincorporated persons jointly owning property in India. As observed by Mayne in Hindu Law, paragraph 222: "Individual property is the rule in the west, corporate property is the rule in the east." There are the village communities who own property in a manner not consistent with modern notions of individual ownership. Then there is the Mitakshara joint family.

Some of the objections pointed out by Salmond quoted above may be urged against them.

Ownership of property by a fluctuating body of persons is recognised in the Hindu Law. In Yajnavalkya, Chapter II, v. 187, it is stated "whoever appropriates what belongs to the community shall be made to forfeit his property and be banished the realm." The commentary in the Mitakshara on this verse is "whenever appropriates what belongs to the community, i.e., anything which is the common property of all the villagers collectively and the like bodies."

We have, however, to consider the law of property not as held down in Manu or Yajnavalkya, but as it is now recognised and administered.

That property may belong to a village is recognised by the Judicial Committee in the case of Sivaraman Ohetri v. Muthaya Ohetri (12). There a village tank was the common property of and used by all the inhabitants, of whom one family on the ground of improvements and additions made by their ancestor with the general acquiescence of the village claimed against the rest the exclusive right of repairing the tank at their own expense. It was held upon the evidence that the right belonged not to the plaintiff exclusively but to the village. It is to be observed, as pointed out in the judgment, that the plaintiffs did not assert that they were owners of the tank in any full or proper sense of the term, and the right in dispute was to contribute to the repairs of the tank. It was not an action for establishment of title to or possession of the property. But the fact that a property may belong to the village is recognised.

The right of resident cultivators of a village to a free pasturage over the waste lands of the village was upheld by the Judicial Committee in the case of Bholi Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. (13), where Lord Macnaghten observed as follows: "It appears to their Lordships that on proof of the fact of enjoyment from time immemorial there could be no difficulty in the way of the Court finding a legal origin for the right claimed. Unfortunately, however, both in the Munsif's Court and in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, the question was overlaid, and in some measure obscured by copious references to English authorities, and by the application of principles or doctrines more or less refined founded on legal conceptions not altogether in harmony with eastern notions."

In the case of Navroji v. Kharsedji (4), a question arose as to the right of management of the Parsi Atash Behram (fire temple) belonging to the Parsi community. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in dealing with the argument that the suit was based on ownership and that a fluctuating body of persons, such as the plaintiffs claimed to represent in that suit, was incapable of holding property observed: "we are not prepared to assent to the proposition that in this country a body such as we have represented before us is incapable of holding property, for even if we pass by the alleged ownership of property by a caste as not being definitely established, there can be no doubt that the village community is capable of property," and referred to Yajnavalkya, Chapter II, v. 187, and the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the Madras case cited above. The suit, however, was not in the nature of ejectment. It was a suit to restrain interference with the management of trust property, and the learned Chief Justice said: "It is a mistake to say that the suit is based on ownership alone, from the plaint it is clear this is not so. The allegation in the plaint is not only that the Atash Behram is vested in the Parsi inhabitants of Udwada but that they have from time immemorial managed the same and exercised absolute authority in regard to the maintenance and administration thereof as a place of Zoroastrian worship and observances," and again: "It apparently is opposed to the notions of the Parsi community that the Iran Shah should be regarded as capable of, or the subject of, ownership, but even if there be difficulty or doubt as to its ownership, it is obvious that there must be some one entitled to protect from improper invasion that which for brevity we will call the temple property, and it appears to us that those who can predicate of themselves that they have exercised the management, authority and supervision alleged in the plaint are so entitled."

A later case in the Bombay High Court Jivanji Jamshedji v. Burjorji Naserwanji (8) however, was one for ejectment. It appears that the Parsi Panchayet at Bombay appointed a committee to manage the property of the Parsi Anjuman at Surat. The committee managed the property for a very long time—sixty years—with the authority and the acquiescence of the Parsi Anjuman. Subsequently the defendant having trespassed on the property the committee sued him in ejectment. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs had no right to sue for the recovery of the property as they were neither the owners nor the nominees of the Anjuman. It was held that the plaintiffs, being in possession for a long time with the authority and acquiescence of the owners, namely, the Parsi Anjuman at Surat, were entitled to recover possession from a trespasser, and the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Navroji v. Kharsedji (4) was relied upon. But it was common case that the Parsi Anjuman was the owner, and the only question was whether the plaintiffs as the committee managing the property with the authority of the owner were entitled to succeed.

The cases of Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Paresh Nath Singh (6) and Budree Das v. Ohooni Lal (7), cited on behalf of the respondents, do not throw any light upon the present question. The first was a suit for a declaration that the act of demolition by the defendants of certain steps in Pareshnath Hill (constructed by the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 as representatives of the Digambari sect of Jains under permission obtained from the plaintiff No. 1, the owner of the hill) was wrongful and for injunction and damages. No question of title of the Jain community to any property arose in that case and it was not a suit in ejectment.

In Budree Das v. Ohooni Lal (7) the suit was brought by the plaintiffs, first, in their capacity as trustees of the Sitambari Panchayet Jain Temple, secondly, on behalf of themselves and other members of the Sitambari Jain community of Calcutta, and thirdly, in their individual capacity as members of such community for declaration that the defendants were not trustees of the temple and its properties and the plaintiffs were such trustees, that the defendants may be ordered to make over possession of the temple and properties to the plaintiffs as such trustees, and in the alternative for the appointment of new trustees and for other reliefs, and the question was whether the suit came within the purview of section 539 of the Civil Procedure Code. The question raised in the present case did not arise in either of the two cases cited above. In the latter case there was a prayer for an order to make over possession to the plaintiffs but only as trustees.

It appears, however, that the right of a fluctuating body of persons, such as the residents of a village, to property or to right of pasturage has been recognised by the Privy Council, and although there is no case in which the right of a particular caste or community to hold property (except in the case of Jivanji Jamshedji v. Burjorji Naserwanji (8) in which the right of the Parsi Anjuman to hold property was not disputed) has been decided, there are observations tending to show that such body of persons is capable of owning property [see the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Navroji v. Kharsedji (4) cited above].

It is pointed out on behalf of the appellants that the right claimed by the plaintiffs is not based upon any grant, but upon prescription. A right by prescription (by adverse possession) cannot be acquired unless there is privity of title. In the case of a fluctuating body of persons, a body incapable of succession, there cannot be a prescription. See Rivers v. Adams (2). The Dhobi community of Narinda, Dacca, being a fluctuating body, there cannot be such a privity of title as is essential to the acquisition of a right by adverse possession.

The Courts below, however, have found that it has been satisfactorily proved that the Akhra was established generations ago by the Dhobi community of Narinda, that the Akhra and its properties belong to that community and that the Akhra has existed from time immemorial. Although a grant has not been set up, the fact of the right to the Akhra and its properties having been enjoyed by the Dhobi community from time immemorial points to a legal origin. It is found that the Panchayets of the Dhobi community manage the Akhra and its properties. The position of the Panchayets appears to be analogous to that of the plaintiffs in the two Bombay cases cited above.

Without deciding the broad question whether a particular caste or community can own property (a question not free from difficulty), we think that having regard to the facts found in the case, viz., that the Dhobi community of Narinda has been owning the Akhra and its properties from time immemorial through Panchayets, it must be held that they have a right to hold and manage property and maintain suits with respect thereto through Panchayets.

The plaintiffs, the present Panchayets, obtained leave to proceed with the suit on behalf of the Dhobi community after service of notice under Order I, rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is not disputed that the plaintiffs have the right to represent the community in the suit if the Dhobi community are owners and can hold property.

VENKATAPATHI NARAYANI v. GADDAM CHOWDENNA.

Two other questions were also raised on behalf of the appellant. The first is that some of the matters mentioned in the judgment of the Court of Appeal below are not evidence against the defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge referred to the fact that a petition of the defendant No. 6 objecting to the name of Rakhai (who claimed under a deed of gift from Hari Das being recorded in the Municipal Registers in respect of the holding comprising the Akhra) was signed by the defendant No. 6 and verified by him and some Dhobis of Narinda, and said "that fact and the contents of the petition of objection show that the Dhobis were interested in the objection and in the Akhra and its properties and that the Panchayet of the Dhobi community had dismissed Haridas and appointed the objector as the Shebait." It is contended that any statements of the Dhobis in support of their title cannot be evidence against the defendants. But the learned Subordinate Judge did not use the fact or the petition of objection mentioned above in proof of the title of the plaintiffs, but only as showing that the Dhobis had dismissed Hari Das and were interested in the Akhra.

Objection is also taken to the Subordinate Judge's having used the description of boundaries given in the conveyance of strangers in favour of the plaintiffs. But there is some authority in support of the view that they are evidence. See Abdullah v. Kunj Eehari Lal (14), Imrit Ohamar v. Sirdhari Pandey (15), and the Court below refers to other ample evidence.

The last point taken is, that there is no finding on the question of limitation by the lower Appellate Court. But the Court of first instance decided the question in favour of the plaintiffs, and the question does not appear to have been raised or pressed before the Appellate Court.

The appeal must, therefore, fail and is dismissed with costs.

Where a suit for rent instituted in a Revenue Court is dismissed on appeal under section 77 of the Madras Estates Land Act only on the ground that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction as to the questions raised in the pleadings but without any adjudication on the merits, the plaintiff has the right to prefer a second appeal to the High Court. Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 27 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Sub-Collector, Tirupathur, in Summary Suit No. 14 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. R. Ganapathy Aiyar, for the Respondents, raised the preliminary objection that no second appeal lay. The decision of the lower Appellate Court is not a decree within the meaning of section 3, Civil Procedure Code. The Revenue

SHEIKH NASRAT v. KALI DAS.

Court dismissed the suit for rent on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to adjudicate on the matters mentioned in the plaint. See Venkata Ramayya Appa Row v. Veeraswamigadu (1). Section 100, Civil Procedure Code, has no application.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Appellant.—The decision of the lower Appellate Court is a decree. It has decided that the plaintiff cannot enforce his claim for rent. Against that decree there is a second appeal.

The lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that it had no jurisdiction. It had only to go by the pleadings and it was bound to decide all questions necessary for the proper determination of the matters in dispute.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken that no second appeal lies. The decree of the lower Appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiff's suit for rent under section 77 of the Estates Land Act (Madras Act I of 1908), though it did so solely on the ground that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to decide the validity of the resumption relied on by the plaintiff for his claim, which was denied by the defendant, and no finding was arrived at on the merits of the claim. This is not a case falling under Chapter XLIII of the old Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) or the corresponding Order XLIII of the new Code (Act V of 1908), the applicability of which to suits in the Revenue Courts is excluded by section 192 of the Estates Land Act.

The decision in Venkata Ramayya Appa Row v. Veeraswamigadu (1) on the question of the maintainability of the second appeal, therefore, does not apply. It is, however, suggested that the decision of the lower Appellate Court will not fall within the definition of a decree in the Code of Civil Procedure and hence section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which alone gives the right of second appeal to this Court, does not apply. We think this argument is unsound. The definition of a decree is wide enough to include the decree in the present case. The learned District Judge has adjudicated that so far as the trial Court as well as his own Court as a Court of Appeal from the Revenue Court are concerned, the right of the plaintiff to the rent claimed is not enforceable; that is conclusive so far as those Courts are concerned, so long as the decree stands. We must, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

On the merits the judgment of the learned District Judge cannot be supported. On the allegations of the plaintiff the suit was cognizable by the Revenue Court alone and that Court was, therefore, bound to decide for itself any question necessary for the disposal of the case, whether its decision on the point would finally determine the question between the parties so as to make it res judicata or not. The observations in Venkata Ramayya Appa Row v. Veeraswamigadu (1) are clearly in point and the decision in Sethurama Aiyangar v. Subbiah Pillai (2) is also exactly in point. The cases in Prosunno Oommar Paul v. Koylash Ohunder Paul (3), Khugowlee Singh v. Hossein Bux Khan (4) and Mohammad Abul Husan Khan v. Prag (5) cited by the learned Judge have no bearing on the question before us. Following the Madras rulings we must set aside the decree of the District Judge and remand the appeal to him for a fresh disposal according to law. Costs here will abide and follow the result.

There will be an order for refund of Court-fees paid in second appeal.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. O. of 1885), ss. 18, 20,

SHEIKH NASARAT V. KALI DAS.

147A—Raiyat holding at fixed rent—Sub-lease, whether transfer—Sub-lessee, whether can acquire occupancy right—Compromise decree not in accordance with law, effect of.

The grant of a sub-lease by a *raiya*t holding at fixed rent is a transfer of an interest in the holding within the meaning of section 18 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 751, col. 2]

A person holding under a *raiya*t at fixed rent is not debarred from acquiring a right of occupancy. [p. 751, col. 2.]

A tenant who has been in possession of a holding for a long time and has acquired a right of occupancy, cannot by any agreement contract himself out of that right, nor can a compromise decree not passed in accordance with the provisions of section 147A of the Bengal Tenancy Act have that effect. [p. 752, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 23rd of January 1918, reversing that of the Officiating Munsif, 4th Court at Netrakona, dated the 25th of January 1917.

Babu Ananda Charan Karkoon, for the Appellant.

Babu Sasanka Jiban Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for ejectment in accordance with the provisions of section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff's case is that he is a *raiya*t and the defendant is his under *raiya*t, and that the defendant holds under a written lease the term of which has expired. The first Court held that the plaintiff was a tenure-holder and the defendant was an occupancy *raiya*t, and upon that view of the case dismissed the plaintiff's suit. In appeal the decree of the first Court was reversed.

It appears that in the Record of Rights the defendant is described as an occupancy *raiya*t. The learned Subordinate Judge who disposed of the appeal was of opinion that the presumption arising out of this entry had been rebutted by the fact that there was other evidence showing that the plaintiff was a *raiya*t at fixed rent and that the defendant was necessarily an under *raiya*t and liable to ejectment.

It is argued on behalf of the defendant-appellant that having regard to the provisions of section 18 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the plaintiff, even assuming that he was a *raiya*t, being a *raiya*t at fixed rent is in the position of a tenure-holder in relation to his sub-lessees. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on section 18 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and on a decision of this Court reported as Hari Mohan Pal v. Atal Kris'na Bose (1). It was held in that case that a *raiya*t holding at fixed rent has authority to grant a permanent lease. It seems to me that if he has such authority, there is no reason why a person holding land under him be debarred from acquiring a right of occupancy. In this case the finding of the first Court is that the defendant has been in possession for a long time and that finding has not been displaced by the lower Appellate Court. It has been argued on behalf of the respondent that section 18 has the effect of placing a *raiya*t holding at a fixed rent in the same position as a tenure-holder only in respect of transfer and succession and that the grant of a sublease does not amount to a transfer. It seems to me that the grant of a sublease is a transfer of an interest in the holding and, therefore, section 18 applies. Upon this view of the case I hold that the Court below was wrong in holding that the presumption arising from the entry in the Record of Rights was rebutted by proof that the plaintiff was a *raiya*t at fixed rent.

It has also been argued on behalf of the respondent that there was a litigation in the year 1910 or 1911 between the plaintiff and the defendant, that in that suit plaintiff sought to evict the defendant from the holding, that the defendant accepted the position of Korfa tenant or under-*raiya*t and agreed to leave at the expiry of the term from that date, and in pursuance of that compromise there was the kabuliyat executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff upon which the present suit is based. It is contended that the compromise decree is binding on the parties. This compromise decree does not seem to have been relied upon by the plaintiff in the Court below. The document is not mentioned in the judgment of the lower Court, and the reason probably was that it was not shown that any decree was passed in conformity with section 147A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Judge who passed the decree does not appear to have recorded in writing that in his opinion the terms of the compromise were such that if embodied in a contract they could be enforced under the Act. If the defendant had been in possession of the holding for a long time and had acquired a right of occupancy, it is clear that he could not by any agreement contract himself out of that right, nor could a compromise decree not passed in accordance with law have that effect.

(1) 23 Ind. Cas. 925; 19 C. W. N. 1127.

PORAN CHANDRA v. INDRA SENI.

On these grounds I decree this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885, s. 8) (1)
—Raiyat holding under-lease, not for fixed period—
Surrender of holding, validity of—Registered instrument, whether necessary—Suit to recover holding from persons to whom it has been let, maintainability of.

A raiyat holding under a lease which is not for a fixed period can surrender the holding under section 86 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Such surrender need not be by an instrument, even though the tenant held under a registered lease. [p. 752, col. 2.]

When a raiyat surrenders his holding and the surrender is accepted by the landlord who enters into possession, the tenant cannot sue to recover the holding from persons to whom the landlord has let it after the surrender. [p. 753, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Midnapore, dated the 30th of January 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 29th of July 1915.

Babu Peary Mohon Chatterjee, for the Appellants.

Babus Atulya Chandra Bose and Nitish Chandra Lahiri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the lands which were surrendered by them in favour of the landlord and which the latter settled with the defendants.

The land constituted a raiya holding, and though it was held under a lease, it was not for a fixed period. Under section 86, clause (1), therefore, the raiya could surrender the holding. He did in fact surrender it and the surrender was accepted by the landlord.

There is no doubt that a surrender can be effected without an instrument at all [see the cases of Khankar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafez (1) and Brojonath Sarma v. Maheswar Gahani (2)]. This proposition is not disputed. But the learned Pleader for the appellant contends that as the original lease was a registered one, the surrender must, under the provisions of section 92, proviso 4, of the Evidence Act, also be a registered instrument. He relies upon the case of Sarat Chandra Sinha v. Naritya Gopal Biswas (3), where it was held that the lease having been a registered one, oral evidence was not admissible to prove a surrender and abatement of rent. But in that case possession was not given up. The landlord sued to recover possession on the allegation that there was an oral surrender of a portion of the tenancy and a reduction of rent, and it was accordingly held that the original lease having been a registered one, oral evidence was not admissible to prove the surrender and the subsequent variation in the rent. Besides it does not appear what the nature of the tenancy was in that case.

In the present case, as stated above, the tenancy was a raiya holding. It is found by both the Courts below that the plaintiffs and their co-sharers surrendered the holding and gave up possession in favour of the landlord, who accepted the surrender, and entered into possession and let out the lands to the defendants who have since then been in possession.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Private sale after Court auction but before confirmation—Right of purchaser and judgment-debtor to set aside sale—"Owning the property," meaning of.

A purchaser at a private sale from a judgment-debtor after the Court auction but before its confirmation is entitled to apply to set aside the sale under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, but the judgment debtor who has parted with his rights is debarred from so applying [p. 754, col. 1.]

The words "owning the property" in rule 89, Order XXI, of the Civil Procedure Code mean owning on the date of the application and not owning on the date of the Court auction sale. [p. 754, col. 1.]

Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan, 13 Ind. Cas. 134; 34 A. 186; 9 A. L. J. 19, not followed.

Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Kunnanchankarath Sankaran Nair, 18 Ind. Cas. 579; 24 M. L. J. 205; (1913) M. W. N. 101; 13 M. L. T. 123, Adapa Subbarayadu v. Tippabhotla Lakshminarasamma, 22 Ind. Cas. 193; 38 M. 775; 15 M. L. T. 98; (1914) M. W. N. 147; 1 L. W. 59, followed.

Per Spencer, J.—When both the judgment-debtor (who has sold the property after Court auction) and the private purchaser jointly apply to set aside the sale, there is no reason to refuse their joint application. The right to apply depends on whether the judgment-debtor has actually sold his interest unconditionally on the sale being set aside and has thus divested himself of all further interest in the property or has only agreed to sell it on that condition. [p. 755, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Kistna, in Execution Appeal No. 731 of 1917, in Execution Petition No. 60 of 1916, in Original Suit No. 3 of 1912.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Chenchiah (for Mr. T. Prakasam), for the Appellants:—The auction-purchaser has no locus standi to apply to set aside the sale under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code. He is not a person owning such property at the date of the sale, as his purchase was after the sale. The judgment debtor also could not apply as he has parted with his interest in the property.

Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (1), Pandurang Laxman Uphade v. Govinda Dada Uphade (2).

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents:—The private purchaser after the Court auction sale does come within the expression "person owning such property." It has to be noted that at the date of his sale the auction sale was not confirmed. The person "owning such property" in Order XXI, rule 89, means owning the property on the date of the application.

Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Kunnanchankarath Sankaran Nair (3), Adapa Subbarayadu v. Tippabhotla Lakshminarasamma (4).

In any event there is no objection to both the judgment-debtor and his vendee applying.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The decree holder and the Court auction-purchasers are the appellants before us.

The application under Order XXI, rule 89, to the lower Court to set aside the Court auction sale was made jointly by the judgment debtors and persons who purchased the property from them privately after the Court auction sale.

The short question for decision in this case is whether a private purchaser from the judgment-debtor after the date of the Court auction sale but before the Court auction sale was confirmed can apply under Order XXI, rule 89, (old section 310-A) to have the Court auction sale set aside and if he cannot come in, can the judgment-debtor do so.

The question may also be formulated in extenso as four separate questions thus:—

1. Does such a private purchaser come within the meaning of the expression "person owning such property" in Order XXI, rule 89? In other words, does the fact of the existence of the unconfirmed Court auction sale prevent the subsequent private purchaser from "owning the property," that is, becoming the owner thereof by such purchase?

2. Even if he is a person "owning the property," as he did not own the property on the date of the Court auction sale, is he disentitled from claiming the benefit of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 89? In other words, does the expression "owning such property" in Order XXI, rule 89, means "owning property on the date of the application" or "owning it on the date of the Court auction sale?"

3. Further, do the words "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale" in Order XXI, rule 89, govern the expression "owning such property" or only the expression "holding an interest therein?"

4. Is the judgment-debtor who has sold away his rights after the Court auction sale debarred from applying under Order XXI, rule 89, because he had no interest on the date of the application and is the private purchaser from him also debarred, because he owned no interest on the date of the Court auction sale or "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale?"

Very learned arguments were advanced by Mr. Chenchiah for the appellants on all these questions and numerous cases were quoted. I am free to admit that many of the arguments were cogent and do raise considerable difficulties and doubt.

But this is pre-eminently a question where the principle of stare decisis should be followed and we have got the well-considered decision of this Court in Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Kunnanchankarath Sankaran Nair (3) (Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ.) to the effect that the private purchaser can come in under Order XXI, rule 89, and that the phrase "by virtue of a title acquired before such sale" does not govern the words "person owning such property." We have also got the decision of this Court in Adapa Subbarayudu v. Tippabhotlallakshmi Narasamma (4) that the judgment-debtor who has sold away his property cannot apply, as he had no interest in the property on the date of the application.

There are, doubtless, observations in Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (1) and Pandurang Laxman Uphade v. Govinda Dada Uphade (2) differing from the opinion expressed in the above decisions of this Court. I may add that those two decisions themselves in Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (1) and Pandurang Laxman Uphade v. Govinda Dada Uphade (2) take different views on some of these points. While Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (1) takes the rather startling view (formulated in my 4th question above) that neither the judgment-debtor nor the private purchaser is entitled to apply, Pandurang Laxman Uphade v. Govinda Dada Uphade (2) takes the no less startling view that the judgment-debtor who has absolutely no legal rights in the property on the date of the application to set aside the Court auction sale is still entitled to apply. I do not think it necessary to deal in detail with the several weaknesses (if I may say so with great respect) in the reasoning in the decision in Pandurang Laxman Uphade v. Govinda Dada Uphade (2). I do not also think it necessary to deal with the other Calcutta decisions quoted by the learned Advocate, the most important of which was dissented from in Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Kunnanchankarath Sankaran Nair (3).

I would, following the views enunciated in the decisions of this Court, answer the four questions thus:—

1st question:—The private purchaser does come under the expression "person owning such property." The unconfirmed Court auction sale does not prevent the judgment-debtor from parting with the ownership by private sale.

2nd question.—I think the words "owning the property" means owning on the date of the application and not "owning on the date of the Court auction sale."

3rd question.—The words "by virtue of a title" do not govern the expression "person owning such property" but only the expression "holding an interest therein."

4th question.—The judgment-debtor who has sold away his rights is debarred, but not the private purchaser from him.

The appeal is, in the result, dismissed with costs of the private purchaser, respondent.

SPENCER, J.—Whether the judgment-debtor or the purchaser from such judgment-debtor, after the auction sale has been held but before it has been confirmed, is the person who should apply under Order XXI, rule 89, to have the sale set aside on deposit of the purchase-money depends, in my opinion, on whether the judgment-debtor has actually sold his interest unconditionally on the sale being set aside and has thus divested himself of all further interest in the property or has only agreed to sell it on that condition. When both the judgment-debtor and the private purchaser jointly apply, I can see no reason to refuse their joint application. I would not go so far as the learned Judges in Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (1) have gone on this point in declaring that neither can apply under rule 89. I prefer to follow the decision of this Court in Anantha Lakshmi Ammal v. Kunnanchankarath Sankaran Nair (3), which decided that a purchaser could apply. An application, such as this is, obviously is for the benefit of the judgment debtor who takes the last chance of saving his property or some benefit from what is left of it, and I consider that the objection raised in Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (1) to property being saved for the benefit of persons other than the judgment-debtor is thus avoided [see also the observations in Panturang Laxman Uphade v. Govinda Dada Uphade (2) in the judgment of Batchelor, J.]. The object of obtaining good bids at auction sales there considered to be an object of the Legislature in enacting this rule can usually be ensured by allowing the decree-holder to bid at the auction.

I agree that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 82

92—Executor, suit for rent by—Co-executors, whether must be joined as plaintiffs.

Probate of a Will was granted to the two executors named therein. One of them instituted a suit for rent and joined his co-executor, who resided out of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was brought, as defendant:

Held, that there was no flaw in the frame of the suit on the ground that the two executors did not both join as plaintiffs. [p. 756, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Jessore.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Ohandra Basak (with him Babu Kshetra Mohan Ghosh), for the Petitioner.—The plaintiff is the petitioner, who instituted a suit for rent which has been dismissed by both the Courts. Plaintiff brought this suit in his capacity of executor. There was another executor also who joined with the plaintiff in obtaining the probate of the testator's Will. The ground of dismissal was that one of two executors could not bring a suit alone in that capacity. I submit that that view is not correct. One of several executors can bring such a suit. See sections 82 and 92 of the Probate and Administration Act, which clearly entitle one of several executors to bring an action for the proper management and benefit of the testator's estate. Then the Courts below also erred in overlooking the fact that the co-executor did not reside within the limits of British India. Hence Order XXXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, would be applicable. The cases Lachman Das v. Chaturbhuj Das (1) and Satya Prashad Pal Chowdhury v. Motilal Chowdhury (2) relied on by the Courts below are clearly distinguishable. The suit is, therefore, perfectly maintainable.

Babu Hemendra Nath Sen, for Opposite Party.—I submit the Courts below were right in their view. All the executors must join whenever any suit is to be brought in relation to the estate of the testator. That is also supported by the English Law. See Williams on Executors (10th Edition), page 752. The cases cited by the lower Courts apply to this case.

Dr. S. C. Basak briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule arises out of a suit for rent which has been dismissed

JHANDI LAL v. SHIAM LAL.

by both Courts on the ground that the plaintiff as one of two executors who obtained probate can not sue alone. No Indian case bearing on this point has been cited by either party. The Court of first instance relied on the decision of the Allahabad Court in Lachman Das v. Chaturbhuj Das (1) and the lower Appellate Court relied on the case of Staya Prasad Pal Chowdhry v. Motilal Pal Chowdhry (2). But neither of these cases is relevant to the point that arises in this case. Section 82 of the Probate and Administration Act provides: "After any grant of probate ...no other than the person to whom the same shall have been granted shall have power to sue or prosecute any suit or otherwise act as representative of the deceased." Section 92 of the same Act provides: "When there are several executors...the powers of all may, in the absence of any direction to the contrary in the Will...be exercised by any one of them who have proved the Will."

For the petitioner it is contended that section 82 empowers one of two persons to whom the probate has been granted to bring a suit and section 92 also empowers one such person to exercise the powers of all under section 82. For the opposite party it is contended that section 82 means that where more persons than one have taken probate, no person other than those persons can bring a suit and that section 92 is only applicable to the case where several executors have been appointed and only one of them has proved the Will. Reference has been made to the English Law on the subject and we find in Williams on Executors, 10th Edition at page 725, that if there are several executors appointed by the Will they must all join in bringing actions at law: if one of several executors will prove the Will and sue alone the defendant may apply to the Court to order that the other executor or executors should be joined as co-plaintiffs. But in a footnote it is pointed out that this rule is subject to showing that the party whose joinder is claimed is alive and within the jurisdiction. In the present case evidence has been given, and it is not disputed on behalf of the opposite party, that the co-executor is in the service of the Nepal Government, that is to say, he is out of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was brought.

Having regard to this fact and also that the provisions of Order XXXI, rule 2, had been complied with, since the other executor has been made a party to the suit and joined as a defendant, I am of opinion that there is no flaw in the frame of the suit on the ground that the two executors did not both join as plaintiffs.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case remanded to him for hearing on the other points that arise in the appeal before him and disposal according to law.

Cost of this Court will abide the result. Hearing fee is assessed at one gold mohur.

Rule made absolute.

Where in a pre-emption decree the plaintiff is directed to pay the pre-emption price within a specified time, but, without doing so, he prefers an appeal against the amount fixed, the fact that he has not complied with the terms of the decree as to payment, is no ground for dismissing the appeal without going into the merits. Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 3rd May 1918.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. Riza Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The pro-

erty, according to the sale-deed, had been sold for the sum of Rs. 700. The plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, maintained that the actual price paid was only Rs. 300 and sought to pre-empt on the payment of that sum. The Court of first instance held on the evidence that Rs. 700 had actually been paid by the vendee. It, therefore, gave the plaintiff a decree conditional on his paying into Court the sum of Rs. 700 within a period of 60 days. The plaintiff, being dissatisfied with this decision as to consideration, appealed to the lower Appellate Court. He did not pay the sum of Rs. 700 into Court within the 60 days. While the appeal was pending, he asked the Appellate Court by a miscellaneous application to grant an extension of time. This the Court refused to do, and rightly refused. It could not vary the decree of the first Court on a miscellaneous application. It could only vary that decree by hearing and deciding the appeal. When the appeal came up for hearing, the lower Appellate Court directed the appeal to be struck off without going into the merits at all. The sole basis for its order was that the plaintiff had failed to pay the sum of Rs. 700 into Court within the period of 60 days allowed by the Court of first instance. The plaintiff, therefore, comes here on second appeal. The decision of the Court below is obviously incorrect. The matter is already covered by a decision of this Court in the case of Khurshed-un nissa v. Alim-un nissa (1). The Appellate Court ought to have gone into the merits of the appeal, as the appeal was directed solely towards the condition laid down by the Court of first instance. If the Appellate Court had found on hearing the appeal that a sum less than Rs. 700 had been the actual consideration, it would naturally have extended the time for payment. The appellant is entitled to a decision on the question of the amount of consideration. We do not think it necessary to send the case back to the lower Appellate Court for a decision on the point. The evidence is on the record before us and it will save time and expense for us to take up the issue and decide it ourselves. The Court of first instance rightly laid the onus upon the defendants of proving the actual consideration paid in view of the evidence produced by the plaintiff in respect to the market value. The defendants produced the document with its endorsement. One of them went into the witness-box, and an attesting witness was also called. It was clearly established that Rs. 675 at least was paid in the presence of the Sub-Registrar. The evidence of the plaintiff's own witnesses shows that the profits of the property are approximately Rs. 28. So that the vendee was buying his property at a profit of 4 per cent. only. This is by no means an unusual occurrence in this country and in this Province, more especially where the land is cultivated by the owner thereof. We think that the decision of the Court of first instance was correct and that the sum of Rs. 700 was actually paid by the vendee for the property. In this view, therefore, the appeal to the Court below was bound to fail. We are asked to extend the time. To extend the time now would be to vary the decree of the Court below, and we can see no justice in doing so, for that would be equal to allowing the appeal in part. The plaintiff clearly was not ready with his money when he sued, as he ought to have been, and litigation of this description is not to be encouraged. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal. The respondent will have his costs in both this and the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal dismissed.

MURUGAPPA MUDALIAR v. MUNUSWAMI MUDALI.

The High Court will not interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, with a mere error of law.

The dismissal of a suit for rent on the ground that the holding of which rent is claimed consisted of two plots but only one was described in the plaint, is an error of law.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Hemendra Chandra Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal is against a decree dismissing a rent suit and the appeal is valued at Rs. 15-1-1 ganda. The learned Pleader for the appellant has been unable to show that any of the questions mentioned in section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that would make this decree appealable to this Court has been decided in the lower Courts and I must, therefore, hold that no appeal lies.

The appellant has also obtained a Rule but there has been no error of jurisdiction to justify me in exercising my revisional powers. Reference has been made to the case of Raichandra Lal Goswami v. Hira Lal Bag (1). That case is clearly distinguishable, as the Munsif dismissed the case before the date fixed for hearing without taking any evidence. Here the case has been decided after full trial and dismissed on the ground that the holding for which the rent was claimed consisted of two plots but that only one had been described in the plaint. If any error was committed by the lower Appellate Court, I do not say that any error was committed, that error was an error of law and not of jurisdiction.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. The Rule is discharged.

I make no order as to costs in the Rule.

The general rule regulating the relationship of principal and surety contained in sections 134 and 139 of the Contract Act applies to all cases of contract, including those relating to negotiable instruments. [p. 759, col. 1.]

In a suit on a promissory note endorsed over by the payee to the plaintiff against the debtor, endorser and another surety, the plaintiff exonerated the principal debtor:

Held, that there was a reservation of the plaintiff's intention to prosecute his remedies against the other two and that a decree could be passed against them. [p. 760, col. 1.]

Section 134 of the Contract Act does not, in terms, depart from the rule of English Law as to the reservation of remedies against the sureties. [p. 760, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal No. 13 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 3 of 1914, (Original Suit No. 7 of 1913 on the file of the District Munsif, Conjeevaram.)

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Krishnaswami Iyengar, for the Appellants.—When the claim against 1st defendant was withdrawn, the 2nd and 3rd defendants were exonerated from liability. The rule laid down in section 134 of the Contract Act applies to contracts on negotiable instruments. The lower Appellate Court is wrong in saying that the section does not apply to the Negotiable Instruments Act. The English Law as to the reservation of rights against the surety should not be introduced in section 134. The language of the section does not warrant such introduction.

Under Order IX, rule 5, it is open to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit within the period of limitation.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents:—The release of 1st defendant does not affect the plaintiff's right to continue the suit against 2nd and 3rd defendants. They are not discharged. Especially, where in the progress of the suit the claim against one defendant only was withdrawn, the plaintiff must be deemed to have reserved his right to proceed against the other defendants. Bateson v. Gosling (1.)

Section 134 of the Contract Act is not inconsistent with the rule of English Law.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was brought on a promissory note executed by a deceased agent of 1st defendant to the 3rd defendant. The latter endorsed it to the plaintiffs. The 2nd defendant executed an agreement, Exhibit B, at the time of the endorsement of the note undertaking to be liable for the amount of the note. The suit was against all the three defendants on the note. In the course of the suit plaintiff withdrew his claim against 1st defendant. Thereupon a decree was passed against the other two defendants. This appeal is against that decree.

Mr. Krishnaswami Iyengar, in his learned argument, contended before us that as the principal debtor, the 1st defendant, has been exonerated, the other two defendants are also discharged from the liability and that there should be no decree against them. He relied upon the language of section 134 of the Indian Contract Act. We may say at once that we do not agree with the lower Appellate Court that sections 134 and 139 of the Indian Contract Act do not apply to the Negotiable Instruments Act. The general law regulating the relationship between principal and surety is contained in the Contract Act and would apply to all cases of contract. Therefore, we do not base our decision upon the view taken by the District Judge that the Indian Contract Act has no application to suits of this description. The real question is whether the release of the 1st defendant during the trial of the suit destroys the right of the plaintiffs to proceed against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. There is no doubt that under the English Law the discharge of the principal debtor where there is a reservation to proceed against the sureties would not affect the right of suit against the sureties. That has been laid down by that eminent Judge, Willes, J., in Bateson v. Gosling (1). He says, after examining the earlier authorities: "It must, therefore, now be taken to be settled that where the principal has entered into a deed of arrangement containing a release subject to the reservation of the creditor's right of recourse against the surety the latter has no right to raise the objection." If, however, there is an absolute and unconditional release, the remedy against the surety is gone because the debt is extinguished. The reason that the surety cannot in such a case be sued is, that it would be a fraud upon the rest of the creditors, as is pointed out in Lewis v. Jones (2) where there is a note of Mr. Gresswell which has sometimes been erroneously attributed to Holroyd, J., in which the matter is very fully considered. Two points have been raised with reference to this judgment. One is that there is no reservation in this case. We are unable to agree with the learned Vakil on this point, because, where a suit is brought against three persons and it is withdrawn against one, there cannot be a more express reservation of the plaintiff's intention to prosecute his remedies against the other two. Therefore, we must hold that there has been a reservation of the right to proceed against the two sureties. The other point is whether this principle of English Law can be introduced into section 134 of the Contract Act. The learned Vakil contended that there is nothing in the language of section 134 which would warrant the introduction of the principle of reservation enunciated in Bateson v. Gosling (1). The principle of applying English Law to the provisions of the Indian Contract Act was considered by Sir Arnold White in Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Padayachi (3). The learned Chief Justice there says with reference to the question whether a deposit can be recovered back when the contract has fallen through: "I agree that the question must be determined with reference to the provisions of the Indian Contract Act and that if they are in conflict with the English Law as laid down in the English authorities, we must follow the Statute. I think, however, it may safely be premised that in a question such as this it was not the intention of the Legislature to depart from what was understood to be the English Law at the time the Indian Contract Act was passed." Miller, J., uses similar language. Wallis, J., as he then was, who differed from Sankaran Nair, J., is equally clear on the question. Therefore, in considering the Indian Contract Act, we have to see what was the state of the law when the section was introduced. If we ascertain the state of English Law and if we find that the Indian Law does not in terms depart from the rule of English Law, according to the principle laid down by the learned Chief Justice, we would be justified in saying that the Indian Law carried out the rule as enunciated by eminent Judges in England. Applying that principle, we must hold that the law which Wallis, J., regarded as settled in England just before the passing of the Contract Act must be taken to have been in the mind of the Legislature in enacting section 134 of the Indian Contract Act. Therefore, we have come to the conclusion that there has been a reservation of right as against the sureties and there is nothing in the terms of section 134 of the Indian Contract Act which is inconsistent with the rule of law as understood in England; we must hold that the remedy against the sureties is not affected. Moreover, on principle it seems to us that the same conclusion is deducible. As was pointed out by Kelly, C. B., in Cragore v. Jones (4), the rule why a surety is held to be discharged from liability where there is a release of the principal debtor is "If the creditor, without the consent of the surety by his own act destroy the debt, or derogate from the power which the law confers upon the surety to recover it against the debtor in case he shall have paid it to the creditor, the surety is discharged;" consequently, so long as there is the possibility of the surety having recourse to the principal debtor for payment or for contribution the debt itself is not extinguished and the right to proceed against the surety is not affected. That must be taken to have been the principle which underlies the decisions in Nathabhai Tricanlal v. Ranchodlal Ramji (5), Shaik Ali v. Mahomed (6), although, no doubt, in those cases the creditor gave up his remedy against the principal debtor because he could not be served.

Mr. Krishnaswamy Iyengar drew our attention to Order IX, rule 5, which gives a right of suit against a person exonerated if the plaintiff is able to bring a suit within the time allowed by law. But that could not affect the principle which underlies the decisions in the two Bombay cases. The mere giving up a right in Court against a principal debtor would not affect the right of the plaintiff to obtain a decree against persons against whom he reserved the right. Further, the principle of English Law is recognised in section 39 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. It follows a fortiori that this principle which reserves to the plaintiff the right to proceed against the surety, while giving up his right against the principal debtor, is applicable in the present case.

We do not agree with the Vakil for the respondent that there is a case of the Court exonerating the defendant and not the party himself exonerating him. The Court is not in any way interested in refusing to give a decree against the other party. We must take it that there was an exoneration by the plaintiff himself of the principal debtor. We are of opinion that the decision of the lower Court is right and we must dismiss the appeal. We make no order as to the costs of the 1st defendant. As regards other respondents there will be one set of costs.

In removing an animal from premises in order to prevent its causing damage no more injury should be inflicted than is reasonably necessary for the purpose. The infliction of excessive injuries will render the person inflicting them liable in an action for damages.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the defendants against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of the Court of the Assam Valley Districts, dated the 31st March 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif at Jorhat. The plaintiff brought the suit (to recover damages for injuries inflicted on his elephant and for consequential damages by reason of his being deprived of the services of his elephant. The facts found by the Judge are these:—This elephant had been turned out under a state of partial control by having its feet tethered on to the grazing ground belonging to the plaintiff. The elephant was not properly secured: that is the finding, and the elephant went to the property of the defendants and caused damages. So, the plaintiff being guilty, in the opinion of the learned Judge, of negligence in turning out his elephant without being properly secured, the defendants were entitled to use force to remove the elephant from their premises and to prevent it from committing damage to their property. Up to that extent, the learned Judge seems to me to have found in favour of the defendants. But what the learned Judge has found then is this: He found, to my mind in distinct terms, that the injuries inflicted upon the elephant were excessive and were not such as were requisite or necessary for preserving the rights of the defendants. Of course, the defendants were not entitled to inflict injuries more than what were reasonably necessary for the purpose of preserving their property and for removing the plaintiff's elephant from their property. The injuries were inflicted, according to the findings of fact, by Kali, Dao and fire. Injury by spear might have been an act done on the spur of the moment, but the blow from the Dao and the mischief by fire were matters that would take some time having regard to the nature of the elephant's hide. I think the learned Judge was clearly right in finding that the injuries were excessive and that, therefore, the elephant had been damaged and the plaintiff was deprived of its services owing to this excessive act of the defendants. In that view of the case, the present appeal must fail and be dismissed with costs.

tion to continue appeal as pauper, maintainability of —Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 171, 181.

Even if an Appellate Court has power under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to allow an application by an appellant to continue his appeal as a pauper, such power should be exercised subject to the conditions imposed by the proviso to Order XLIV, rule 1, i. e., it should be rejected where, from a perusal of the memorandum of appeal, there is no reason to think that the decree is contrary to law or some usage having the force of law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust. [p. 763, cols. 1 & 2.]

Quære.—Whether an Appellate Court has jurisdiction to allow an appellant to continue as a pauper an appeal originally filed with the prescribed Court-fee.

Obiter.—An application for permission to continue an appeal as a pauper would probably be governed by Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 763, col. 1.]

Appeal No. 278 of 1914 purporting to be against the 3rd preliminary decree, but since converted by the order of the High Court, dated 6th December 1918, into an appeal against the final decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 371 of 1910.

Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1063 of 1919, praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to extend the time granted for the petitioner appellant to pay the additional Court-fee on the Memorandum of Appeal No. 278 of 1914, presented against the final decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 371 of 1910.

Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1655 of 1919 put in under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, praying that for the reasons set forth in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to exempt the petitioner, the appellant in the appeal, from paying the additional Court-fee directed to be paid on the Memorandum of Appeal No. 278 of 1914 against the final decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 371 of 1910.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar (with him Messrs. K. P. Madhavi Row and K. P. Lakshmana Row), for the Appellant.—The Court has power under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, though not under the provisions of Order XLIV, rule 1, to allow a person to continue an appeal as a pauper when he is not able to pay the additional Court-fee required of him. It is a general section which provides generally for cases of hardship and invests Court with inherent powers.

Mr. C. Krishnamachariar, for the Respondents.—The provision directly applicable is Order XLIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, and it does not apply to the present case. Section 151 should not be invoked in aid of exemption to pay the Court-fee. Even if the section is applicable, it should be read subject to the conditions in Order XLIV, rule 1, and there is no question here of the decree being against law or being otherwise unjust.

ORDER.—Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1655 of 1919 is an application under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, praying that the petitioner may be allowed to continue an appeal as a pauper (the appeal having been filed long ago as an ordinary appeal in the regular course), so that the petitioner may be exempted from payment of the additional Court-fee of Rs. 2,900 and odd which he would have to pay if the appeal was prosecuted further as an ordinary appeal.

Appeal No. 278 of 1914 was filed in the first instance against the so-called third preliminary decree passed on the 20th April 1914 in the Ramnad Subordinate Judge's Court and the appeal was presented on the 3rd of August 1914. The appeal has been since converted by an order of this Court, dated 6th December 1918, into an appeal against the final decree passed by the Ramnad Court on the 29th of October 1914, which followed the judgment of the same date (29th October 1917), the judgment or order passed (a third preliminary judgment) on the 20th of April 1914 being treated as part of this final judgment of the 29th of October 1914. The petitioner (appellant) was directed on the 6th of December 1918 to pay the additional Court-fee within two months, but he has not yet paid the same though it is nearly nine months since that order was passed. He put in several applications for extension of time and the latest of those applications is Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1063 of 1919, which we may at once dismiss as he is unable to pay the balance Court-fees and as it is, therefore, not pressed.

BASANTA KUMAR SARKAR v. SUKHOMOY MONDAL.

The present application in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1655 of 1919 was filed on the 14th of July 1919, and it is not disputed that the petitioner is a pauper. This application does not fall under Order XLIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, as the appeal has already been failed as an ordinary appeal and hence the petitioner has been obliged to invoke our powers under section 151, Civil Procedure Code. The first question, therefore, is whether we have got jurisdiction under that section to allow a person to continue an appeal as a pauper. The decisions in Nirmul Chandra Mookerjee v. Doyal Nath Bhattacharjee (1), Revji Patil v. Sakharam (2) and Thompson v. Calcutta Tramway, Co., Ltd. (3) support the petitioner's contention that we have got the power to allow the prosecution of an appeal to be continued in forma pauperis. There may, no doubt, result an anomaly in holding that such a power exists because while under Article 170 of the Limitation Act a person who puts in an application for leave to appeal as a pauper has got only one month's time from the date of the decree appealed from, an application under section 151 for permission to continue an appeal as a pauper would be probably governed by the general Article 181, "three years for applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere." It seems again not advisable to express a final opinion on this question involving liability for the payment of Court-fees due to Government (in which the Government, therefore, is interested) without giving notice to and without hearing the arguments of the Government Pleader. Assuming for the sake of argument that we have got the power, it is clear that we should exercise our discretion subject to the conditions imposed by the proviso to Order XLIV, rule 1 on a Court to which an application is made by a person to allow him to appeal as a pauper; that is, unless from a perusal of the appeal memorandum, of the judgment and decree appealed from, there is no reason to think that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law, or otherwise erroneous or unjust, the Court is bound to reject the application. We have read through the appeal memorandum and the judgment and decree appealed from, including in the word "judgment" the order of the 20th April 1914, and we have also taken the assistance of the Vakils on both sides to understand what we have read, and we are not satisfied that the decree is contrary to law or to any usage having the force of law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust. We shall, therefore, dismiss this petition also. There will be no order as to costs in either of the petitions.

As the extension of time to pay Court-fees has expired, the appeal will stand rejected with costs.

RAM PARSAN UPADHYA V. NAGESHAR PANDE.

The plaintiffs' father purchased the land at an auction sale in execution of a decree and let out the lands to the father of the present defendants Nos. 1-4 and the remaining present defendants. In 1911 an ex parte rent decree was obtained against the present defendants by the plaintiffs, which was not executed. A part only of the decretal amount was realised, as would appear from the endorsement at the back of the decree. The defendants having again defaulted the present suit was brought. The defendants appeared this time and in their defence denied the relationship of landlord and tenant. The learned Munsif held that inasmuch as there was no evidence of realisation of rent and the ex parte rent decree of 1911 was not executed in time, there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. My submission is that the learned Munsif failed to give proper weight to the ex parte decree, which operated as res judicata on the question of relationship of landlord and tenant. The defendants have neither proved that the relationship ceased after the ex parte decree, nor have they impeached the decree which they could have done under section 44 of the Indian Evidence Act. The ex parte decree operates as res judicata upon the question of landlord and tenant. It does not lose its conclusive character because it is not executed. Where once the relationship of landlord and tenant is established, the mere fact of non-payment of rent is not sufficient to show that the relationship has ceased. See Raj Kumar Roy v. Alimaddi (1), Mahammad Gowhar Ali v. Samiruddin Sheikh (2).

Babu Surjya Kumar Guha, for the Opposite Party.—My submission is that the ex parte decree did not operate as res judicata on the question of the relationship of landlord and tenant. The plaintiffs never realised rent from us. We all were not parties to the previous decree, which was never executed. We hold a different land under a different landlord. No question of res judicata can arise. The case in Raj Kumar Roy v. Alimaddi (1) is not applicable. The Rule should be discharged.

(1) 16 Ind. Cas. 911; 17 C. W. N. 627.

(2) 22 Ind. Cas. 383; 18 C. W. N. 33 at p. 37.

JUDGMENT.—I think this Rule must be made absolute. The suit has been dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the defendants. My attention has been drawn to the fact that there was a previous rent decree to which all the defendants were parties. The learned Judge refers to this decree, but says that it is not shown that any payment was made towards the satisfaction of this decree. It seems to me, on the authority of the decisions of this Court in the case of Raj Kumar Roy v. Alimaddi (1) and in the case of Mahammad Gowhar Ali v. Samiruddin Sheikh (2), that a rent decree though only ex parte is res judicata on the question of the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant. The case must be remanded to the Court below for the determination of the other issue, namely, what was the amount of rent payable by the defendants as rent.

The decree of the Small Cause Court is, therefore, set aside and the case sent back to that Court for being tried in accordance with law. The parties will be allowed to adduce such evidence as they may think it necessary to prove their respective cases regarding the amount of rent. The Rule is made absolute with costs. The hearing fee is assessed at one gold mohur.

Rule made absolute.

RAM PARSAN UPADHYA v. NAGESHAR PANDE.

The fact that an appeal is pending against a decree is no ground for rejecting an application to review the judgment on which such decree is based. [p. 765, col. 2]

Petitioner applied to the trial Court for a review of its judgment, and about the same time preferred an appeal against the same order. The trial Court refused to hear the application for review, on the ground that an appeal was then pending against the order which it was asked to review. Petitioner then moved the High Court in revision and during the pendency of his petition, his appeal was disposed of:

Held, that though the order refusing to hear the application for review was erroneous, yet as upon disposal of the appeal the decree of the trial Court no longer existed, the final decree being that of the Appellate Court, there was no order which the High Court could set aside. [p. 765, col. 2.]

Civil revision from an order of the Munsif, Bangsaon, dated the 31st of May 1919.

Messrs. Jang Bahadur Lal, Lakshmi Narain and Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Applicant.

Mr. Iswar Saran, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that there are three brothers called Rameshar Pande, Nageshar Pande and Sri Ram Pande who, according to the allegation of Nageshar Pande, the plaintiff, are members of a joint and undivided Hindu family. Rameshar Pande and Sri Ram Pande, two of the brothers, executed a deed of sale in respect of some of the family property in favour of Parmanand Tewari. One Ram Parsan Upadhyia sued to pre-empt the sale and obtained a decree. After the passing of the pre-emption decree, Nageshar Pande brought the suit out of which this application for revision has arisen, for a declaration that the sale by Rameshar Pande and Sri Ram Pande in favour of Parmanand Tewari was invalid and that the decree of Ram Parsan Upadhyia on the ground of pre-emption was also invalid and inoperative. Nageshar Pande impleaded as defendants in the case his two brothers Rameshar Pande and Sri Ram Pande, the vendors, Parmanand Tewari, the vendee, and Ram Parsan Upadhyia, the pre-emptor. The claim was resisted on various grounds. It was decreed by the learned Munsif of Bangsaon, on the 10th of January 1919. Ram Parsan Upadhyia, the pre-emptor, filed an application before the learned Munsif for review of judgment on the 12th of February 1919. Two days after Ram Parsan filed an appeal in the District Judge's Court from the decree of the learned Munsif. The application for review was heard and disposed of on the 31st of May 1919. The learned Munsif held that as an appeal had been filed by Ram Parsan, which appeal was pending at the time, the application for review was not maintainable. He accordingly dismissed it on the 31st of May 1919. On the 4th of July 1919 Ram Parsan came up in revision to this Court, alleging that the pendency of appeal on his behalf in the Court of the District Judge was no ground for the rejection of his application for review by the learned Munsif. On the 7th of July 1919 a learned Judge of this Court admitted the application and issued notice to the other side to show cause. About a week after, namely, on the 15th of July 1919 the appeal of Ram Parsan was heard by the learned District Judge and disposed of. The appeal was dismissed. It is contended on behalf of Ram Parsan, the applicant before this Court, that the order of the learned Munsif of Bangsaon rejecting his application for review is erroneous on the face of it in view of the case-law on the subject. The applicant relies upon the following cases:—Chenna Reddi v. Pedda Obi Reddi (1), Narayan Purshottam v. Laxmibai Datto Bhagwan (2) and Partap Singh v. Jaswant Singh (3). The case-law, is no doubt in favour of the contention for the applicant, but the circumstances of the three cases relied upon by the applicant were quite different to those in his case here. In the cases relied upon the appeal had not been disposed of. In the present case the application of Ram Parsan before this Court has come up for hearing after the disposal of his appeal by the learned District Judge. The decree of the learned Munsif no more subsists. The final decree in the case is that of the learned District Judge.

No doubt the order of the learned Munsif rejecting the application for review was erroneous. It would, however, serve no useful purpose now to set aside that order, inasmuch as the decree sought to be reviewed Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki, dated the 9th September 1918.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan and Mr. Basudeo Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for Respondent No. 2.

Mr. Wasim, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—The suit which has given rise to these appeals was brought to enforce a mortgage-deed effected by Taid Husain in favour of Ajudhia Prasad on the 1st November 1906. The plaintiff is the son of Ajudhia Prasad. The property mortgaged comprised shares in 3 villages known as Murliganj, Garhi Rakhman and Rasulabad. The said villages belonged to Khairat Husain, who died leaving two daughters, Musammât Tahir-un-nissa and Musammât Tayebunnissa, each of whom became entitled to a half share under the Shia Law. The half share of Musammât Tayebunnissa was entered in the names of her four sons, Jawed Husain, Taid Husain, Said Husain and Rashid Husain. On the 7th December 1883, Musammât Tahir-un-nissa executed an agreement in favour of Jawed Husain allowing the latter to remain in possession of her 8-annas share in the said villages subject to his paying her an annual allowance of Rs. 500. On the 16th June 1886 a similar agreement was executed by Said Husain in favour of Jawed Husain, allowing the latter to hold the entire property subject to his paying him an allowance of Rs. 125 per year.

On the 21st December 1895 Jawed Husain mortgaged the said villages with Raja Tasadduk Rasul Khan of Jahangirabad. He stated in the mortgage-deed that by virtue of a private settlement between him and his co-sharers and certain agreements executed by Musammât Tahir-un-nissa and Said Husain he was in possession of, and had dominion over, the said villages with an absolute right of transfer and that in order to pay off certain debts and meet other private necessities he was mortgaging the same in their entirety (Exhibit B1). The mortgage-deed was attested by Taid Husain and Rashid Husain, two of the brothers of the mortgagor. Their attestations were apparently obtained because their names were entered in the revenue papers as holding the said villages jointly with the mortgagor. The mortgagee subsequently obtained a decree in pursuance of a compromise to which Taid Husain and Rashid Husain were parties (Exhibit B3), and in execution of that decree brought to sale in separate lots a one-anna share of Taid Husain in the said villages, which was purchased by Musammât Maqsd-un-nissa the wife of Taid Husain, and the remaining one-anna share of Taid Husain in the same which was purchased by Ainul Hasan, one of his relations.

Musammât Maqsd-un-nissa and Ainul Hasan claim that the plaintiff is estopped from denying the title of Jawed Husain to mortgage the villages in question with Raja Tasadduk Rasul Khan. The Court below has found in their favour and declared that they would be entitled to priority as against the rights enforceable by the plaintiff.

We have examined the evidence adduced in the case and agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in finding that Taid Husain had represented that Jawed Husain had a right to mortgage the entire villages in question, and in token of his consent attested the mortgage deed which Jawed Husain had executed in favour of Raja Tasadduq Rasul Khan. The evidence has been discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge and we see no sufficient reason to disbelieve it. In the petition of compromise filed in the suit brought by the Raja to enforce his mortgage, Taid Husain agreed that the two annas share of Jawed Husain might be sold first and that if it did not prove sufficient to pay the decretal money, the two annas share held by Taid Husain should be sold and that if that too proved insufficient, the remainder of the decretal debt shall be realizable from the two annas share of Rashid Husain in the villages mortgaged (Exhibit B3). Taid Husain deposes that the custom of his family was that the eldest member remained the owner of the property and the junior members received maintenance. In response to an enquiry as to succession made by the British Government in 1860 Tafazzul Husain, with whom the first settlement of these villages was made, stated that he wanted that the property granted to him should continue in his family entire and without partition according to custom and that the younger brother should be entitled to get maintenance from the Gaddinashin or the person in charge of the property (Exhibit C35). In the Khewat prepared at the Settlement for 1272 Fasli the names of Tafazzul Husain and his brother Khairat Husain were entered as co-sharers living jointly and holding the said property in equal shares. On the death of Tafazzul Husain without issue the latter became the sole owner of the said villages. After the death of Khairat Husain the brothers of Jawed Husain, including Taid Husain, apparently allowed Jawed Husain to represent himself as the sole owner of the property mortgaged and on the faith of that representation helped him to obtain a loan from Raja Tasadduq Rasul Khan. The plaintiff as the subsequent mortgagee is bound by the representation so made and is estopped from challenging the validity of the mortgage so far as it affects the share which was afterwards mortgaged with him by Taid Husain. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sarat Ohunder Dey v.

Gopal Ohunder Lahu (1): "What the law and the Indian Statute mainly regard is the position of the person who was induced to act, and the principle on which the law and the Statute rest is that it would be most inequitable and unjust to him that if another by a representation made or by conduct amounting to a representation has induced him to act, as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it." The contesting defendants have stepped into the shoes of the mortgagee and the mortgagor and are entitled to claim the benefit of that estoppel as against Taid Husain and his subsequent transferee.

It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff that the decree passed by the Court below does not give effect to the right of the plaintiff to redeem the property purchased by the contesting defendants on payment of a proportionate amount of the money due on the mortgage of the 21st December 1895 or to his right to sell the said property if he so liked, subject to a prior charge in favour of the said defendants. The present suit is not framed so as to justify a decree being passed for the redemption of the mortgage effected by Jawed Husain. The plaintiff can be allowed a right to sell the disputed property subject to the proportionate liability for the prior mortgage effected by Jawed Husain. The contention of Musammam Maqsood-un-nisa is that she is entitled to the entire purchase-money paid by her or at all events to the entire mortgage money due on the said mortgage, but these matters cannot be properly decided between the representatives of the mortgagor inter se except in a suit properly framed for the purpose.

The appeals are, therefore, dismissed with costs. The cross objections are also disallowed, except in so far that the decree will contain a direction that the plaintiff will be entitled to bring the mortgaged properties held by the contesting defendants to sale in case of non-payment of the decretal money which may be found due to him, subject to a proportionate liability for the money

Custom—Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, of wishes of co-sharers, whether proof of custom—Appeal, second—Finding of fact based upon one piece of evidence alone, whether binding.

Where an entry in a wajib-ul-arz dealing with pre-emption records the wishes of the co-sharers as to what should happen in the future, such entry is not binding on the members of the co-parcenary body as a village custom, nor is such entry proof of the existence of the custom of pre-emption.

Where an Appellate Court bases a finding of fact upon one piece of evidence alone without considering the whole of the evidence bearing upon the point, the finding is not binding in second appeal.

Second appeal against the decree of the Second Additional Judge, Aligarh, dated the 23rd of August 1917.

Mr. Kailash Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption based upon village custom. The Courts below have both held that the existence of the custom was established. The plaintiff produced one wajib ul-arz and he called two witnesses. The defendant called other witnesses. As far as the oral evidence is concerned, it merely consists of a parrot like repetition on the one side that the custom existed and on the other side that the custom did not exist. The defendant also attempted to show that sales to strangers had taken place. The first Court on a consideration of the evidence as a whole decided in favour of the plaintiff. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court shows that that Court considered nothing else but the wajib ul-arz. It held that the wajib ul-arz clearly recorded a custom under which the plaintiff was entitled to pre-empt and it upheld the decision of the first Court. If the decision of the Court below had been based upon all the evidence on the record, we might perhaps have been bound by its finding as a finding of fact, but in the present case its decision is clearly based upon the one document alone. A reference to that document will show clearly that far from a custom being recorded by the co-sharers, they were expressing their own wish as to what should happen in the future. The co-parcenary body consisted of Thakurs, one Bohra and two or three Muhammadans, and the document merely states that among Thakurs and Bohras a certain rule was observed for pre-emption and that among the Muhammadans, the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption prevailed. Clearly this was no village custom binding upon the members of the co-parcenary body nor was it a case of two customs existing side by side as the lower Appellate Court has said. We have examined the oral evidence in the case. As evidence it has no weight whatsoever. This case is very similar to that of Second Appeal No. 1565 of 1917 decided on the 15th of February 1919 in this Court. We think that the evidence on the record is utterly insufficient to establish any custom of pre-emption in this village. We, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside the decrees of the Courts below. The suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 497—Bail—Non-bailable offence—Court, duty of.

In considering an application for bail from a person accused of a non-bailable offence, the Court must be satisfied by an examination of the investigation inquiry or trial, whether or not there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed such offence. In the latter case, the accused should be admitted to bail, but not in the former.

Application for bail under section 498 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Mr. S. O. Mukerji, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for admission to bail. The applicants are under trial for an offence under section 408, Indian Penal Code. On turning to Schedule 2 attached to the Code of Criminal Procedure, it will be found that offences under section 408 are not bailable offences. The Magistrate in charge of the case has refused bail. A case of this nature has to be dealt with under section 497 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Paragraph 2 of that section lays down that if it appears to a Court at any stage of the investigation, enquiry or trial that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed such offence but that there are sufficient grounds for further enquiry into his guilt, the accused shall, pending such enquiry, be released on bail. From this it seems that the law requires that the investigation, enquiry or trial which is proceeding should be examined and that before admitting to bail this Court should come to the conclusion that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed such offence. Further that the person accused of such an offence is not to be released if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has been guilty of the offence charged. The affidavit before me which supports the application for bail contains absolutely no reason whatever why the accused should be admitted to bail. It does not help me in coming to any conclusion whether the accused have or have not been guilty of a non-bailable offence. In the arguments addressed to me all that I have heard is that a case was instituted in the Court below charging these same accused with an offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code. The matter was considered and the applicants admitted to bail. It is stated that the offence under section 408 hardly differs from that under section 420. I am unable to follow this inference. I see no reason to interfere and dismiss the application. The applicants must surrender to their bail and undergo the remainder of their sentences.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 239—
Joint trial of several accused for offences not arising

If accused persons have been wrongly tried together in respect of offences which cannot be jointly tried together legally in point of law, the conviction so obtained against them is illegal and void and cannot stand. It is not a mere irregularity; it is a question of substance, and not of form. [p. 771, col 1.]

If several accused start together for the same goal, this suffices to justify their joint trial under section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code, even if incidentally one of those jointly tried has done an act for which the others may not be responsible. [p. 771, col 2.]

The foundation for the procedure laid down in section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code is the association of two persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end. [p. 771, col. 2]

Community of purpose or design and continuity of action are essential elements of the connection necessary to link together different acts into one and the same transaction. In such cases the acts alleged to be connected with each other must have been done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as accessory thereto. [p. 772, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Cuttack, dated the 28th June 1919, affirming that of the Deputy Magistrate, Cuttack, dated the 4th June 1919.

Mr. S. A. Asghar (with him Mr. Gajendra Prasad Das), for the Petitioners.

Mr. Manohar Lal (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The three accused before us as petitioners in the present application were respectively charged with offenses under section 354 of the Indian Penal Code and under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code. Accused No. 1 was the only accused charged with the commission of an alleged offence under section 354; and accused Nos. 2 and 3 were charged with the commission of an offence under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code.

Both offences are alleged to have taken place on the 6th April 1919 at or between the hours of 7 and 8 P. M.

Shortly summarised, the evidence in the case appears to be as follows:—Accused No. 1 entertained sexual designs on a lady called Khiradmani, who was the wife of the complainant; that on the evening in question seeing this lady passing through her garden not far from the fence which separated her house from that of the accused No. 1, the accused No. 1 seized her and endeavoured to forcibly retain her in his custody for an immoral purpose. The woman resisted, and called out for assistance. The incident took place not far from the house of Musammât Khiradmani herself; and accordingly her husband and her aunt, hearing the cry of help uttered by Musammât Khiradmani, immediately came to her assistance.

Now up to this period of time accused Nos. 2 and 3 were not in any way connected with the accused No. 1. There is no evidence on the record to suggest or prove that accused Nos. 2 and 3 were particeps criminis with the accused No. 1 in his acts or purpose relative to the assault which he committed upon Musammât Khiradmani.

Musammât Khiradmani's husband having appeared upon the scene he immediately attacked the accused No. 1; and apparently as the complainant seized the accused No. 1 and got into hand grips with him, accused Nos. 2 and 3 appeared for the first time upon the scene. Accused Nos. 2 and 3 are the servants of the accused No. 1, and evidently their intention was to free their master from the assault which was then being committed upon him by the complainant.

These are the only facts which it is necessary to state to dispose of the legal matter of objection taken before us with regard to the validity of the conviction of the accused.

The three accused were all tried jointly, upon joint charges. One charge was only referable to accused No. 1, and the other charge was referable against accused Nos. 2 and 3 jointly.

The point taken on behalf of the petitioners is that in this case the law does not justify or permit a joint trial of accused Nos. 2 and 3 with accused No. 1; because it is alleged that the respective offences with which the accused were charged were not offences arising out of the same or in the course of the same transaction.

The general law as to the trial of accused persons is embodied in section 233 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and section 233 provides that "For every distinct offense of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge, and every such charge shall be tried separately except in the cases mentioned in the subsequent sections."

Such being the general law, the exceptions that follow must be strictly construed so as not to defeat the right of independent trial conferred by the general law.

Now amongst the exceptions to the general rule laid down in section 233 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is the class of exception provided by section 239.

Section 235 is very much akin in phraseology with section 239. Section 239 appears to be wider in scope than section 235; but in the main the underlying principle and intention governing these sections seems to be common. Section 239 provides that "When more persons than one are accused of the same offence or of different offences committed in the same transaction,....they may be charged and tried together or separately as the Court thinks fit."

TEPANIDHI GOBINDA CHANDRA v. EMPEROR.

If accused persons have been wrongly tried together in respect of offences which cannot be jointly tried together legally in point of law, the conviction so obtained against them is illegal and void and cannot stand. It is not a mere irregularity; it is a question of substance, and not of form.

The ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council has laid the contest regarding this question at rest; and it is not open now to debate or discussion notwithstanding the earlier decisions in the Calcutta High Court.

What we have to consider in the present case is whether the offence charged as against the accused Nos. 2 and 3 was an offence arising out of the "same transaction" in respect of the main offence charged against the accused No. 1; if not, then the right of joint trial did not arise, and the trial would be illegal.

It is conceivable that if persons were tried together, who ought not to have been so tried, that prejudice might accrue to an accused person which would be contrary to the spirit of fair trial.

Everything depends on the construction of section 239, upon the meaning and interpretation to be attributed to the words "in the same transaction," or "in the course of the same transaction," as used in the illustrations to section 239.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate contends that one and the same transaction means, as I gather, any state of circumstances that may exist, whereby one crime may have been committed which in some way may directly or indirectly be connected with another; that design and purpose do not form an essential ingredient in considering whether the transaction out of which two crimes may have been committed as a test and criterion for ascertaining if the several crimes so committed arose out of the same transaction. The authorities on the construction of section 239 and its cognate sections in this chapter of the Criminal Procedure Code leave one under very little doubt as to the interpretation to be given to section 239.

The cases mainly relied upon are Emperor v. Jethalal (1), Emperor v. Datto Hanmant Shahapurkar (2) and Ohoragudi Venkataadri v. Emperor (3).

Out of these three cases I think the law as to the construction of section 239 is best enunciated by the decision of the learned Judges in Emperor v. Datto Hanmant Shahapurkar (2). The learned Judges say at page 54 of the report as follows:—

"The word 'transaction' is unfortunately not defined in the Code and the meaning to be attached to it must be gathered from the context in which it occurs in various sections and illustrations."

"According to its etymological and dictionary meaning the word 'transaction' means 'carrying through' and suggests, we think, not necessarily proximity in time so much as continuity of action and purpose. The same metaphor implied by that word is continued in the illustrations where the phrase used is 'in the course of the same transaction'. In section 215, the phrase is used in a connection which implies that there may be a series of acts. Illustration (f) to that section indicates that the successive acts may be separated by an interval of time and that the essential is the progressive action, all pointing to the same object. In section 239, therefore, a series of acts separated by intervals of time are not, we think, excluded, provided that those jointly tried have throughout been directed to one and the same objective. If the accused started together for the same goal this suffices to justify the joint trial, even if incidentally one of those jointly tried has done an act for which the other may not be responsible."

"We think the foundation for the procedure in that section is the association of two persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end."

A brief quotation may also be made from Ohoragudi Venkataadri v. Emperor (3) from the judgment of the learned Judge who delivered the judgment of the Court:—

(1) 29 B. 449; 7 Bom. L. R. 527; 2 Cr. L. J. 480.

(2) 30 B. 49; 7 Bom. L. R. 633; 2 Cr. L. J. 578.

RAM CHANDER v. EMPEROR.

"Now what is the nature of the connection contemplated between different acts which would bind them into the 'same transaction'? The idea conveyed by the words 'same transaction' seems to be obvious enough and it may be doubted whether it can be compendiously expressed in simpler and clearer language."

"I think—and this seems to be the effect of the decisions—that at least in a certain class of cases—the present case is alleged to be within that category—community of purpose or design and continuity of action are essential elements of the connection necessary to link together different acts into one and the same transaction. In such cases the acts alleged to be connected with each other must have been done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as accessory thereto or perhaps as suggested by the circumstances in which the acts in pursuance of the original design were done and in close proximity of time to those acts."

Many other decisions to like effect might be cited from the rulings of the Calcutta High Court. It is needless to refer to them, because speaking generally they all conform in principle with the authorities cited above.

In our opinion the several authorities already referred to lay down with accuracy and precision the correct legal principle to be applied in interpreting and construing section 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and accordingly we apply the principle deducible from the authorities cited to the facts of the case now before us.

It cannot be said on the evidence in this case to which I have already referred that there was any continuity of action or purpose between the act or acts committed by the accused Nos. 2 and 3 and the main principal act committed by the accused No. 1. If the Crown had been able to show by evidence some association between the accused No. 1 and accused Nos. 2 and 3, acting for a common purpose in execution of a common design between the three accused, then I think the charges against the respective accused might have been jointly tried and might have been disposed of together.

But inasmuch as no such evidence was given, it appears to us on the true interpretation of the law that the accused persons in this case, the petitioners before us, have not been tried in accordance with the law, and that their joint trial was illegal, and consequently it becomes our duty to set aside the conviction of all the accused as recorded by the learned Sessions Judge of Cuttack.

The learned Judge did not take into his consideration the question of separate trial of the accused; the accused never took the point before the learned Judge, and of course he is in no wise to blame; but in our opinion the omission of the accused to urge the illegality of their joint trial before the learned Sessions Judge does not debar them from asserting such right before us here now in revision.

Accordingly we set aside the conviction of the accused Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and direct that they be separately retried on the charges which have been separately preferred against them.

Re-trial ordered.

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 1st September 1919.

Mr. A. P. Dubé, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Eight persons, all Karmis, were convicted by a Magistrate of the first class of rioting and causing grievous hurt, and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment and to pay fines. On appeal the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Mirzapur altered the conviction to one under section 147 read with section 323 of the Indian Penal Code.

On revision before me it was argued that this trial was barred by the provisions of section 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It appears that there was a riot of some sort between certain Brahmins and certain Kurmis. The Police challaned the Brahmins. Thereupon one Dina Nath, a Brahmin, filed a complaint in the Court of Muhammad Mahboob Alam, a Magistrate of the third class, charging all the present applicants with rioting with the common object of causing hurt to the Brahmins. That learned Magistrate convicted four of the accused and acquitted six. He consequently held that no charge of rioting had been made out and passed his order under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code against four only of the Kurmis. This was on the 14th of May 1919. These four persons appealed to the District Magistrate, who dismissed their appeals and went on to direct that each of the four appellants should execute a bond to keep the peace under section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Thereafter one Ramchander, another Brahmin, filed a complaint on which this trial was held. It is argued that the facts which were the subject of enquiry in the first trial before Muhammad Mahboob Alam are exactly the same as the facts which were enquired into in this trial and the persons accused are the same. It seems to me, therefore, that under the provision of section 403, clause 1, they cannot be tried again. The result is that I allow this application. I set aside the convictions and direct that the accused be set at liberty and the fines, if paid, be refunded to them.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dated the 18th September 1919, dismissing the appeal of the petitioners from their conviction and sentence by the Deputy Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 29th August 1919.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. H. P. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the setting aside of an order passed by the Deputy Magistrate of Monghyr convicting the petitioners, and sentencing Mahesh Dutt Singh to a fine of Rs. 100 and the rest of the petitioners to a fine of Rs. 50 each under section 147 of the Penal Code.

The petitioners were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly who met together with the common object of looting by force the crops standing on plot No. 124 in village Chandanpura. It seems that originally this holding belonged to the petitioners and was sold by them and bought by Jhangu who, however, could not get possession at first, with the result that in the survey record it was entered in the name of one Ramlal, one of the defence witnesses. The purchaser Jhangu then instituted a suit to have the Record of Rights corrected and to be put in possession of the land. He obtained a decree against the present petitioners and was put in possession by the Court. In the holding there was a plot No. 124 measuring 1.36 acres. This plot formed one of the plots which Jhangu had claimed in the plaint in this suit, but in the decree and in the Dakhal-dahani the area of the plot was given as .36 instead of 1.36. The petitioners apparently came and looted the crops of this plot No. 124 on the ground that in the FAQIRAY LAL v. EMPEROR.

Civil Court possession only of .36 of the plot had been given to Jhangu. It may be mentioned that Jhangu's suit had been decreed in full and that the petitioners were parties to that suit, and, therefore, they can be taken to have had information what land was covered by it. Furthermore, there had been cases under sections 144 and 107 concerning the same land. The Deputy Magistrate found that the petitioners had come in to this land, looted the crops and used force, and convicted them as above mentioned under section 147.

There had been a separate charge of theft, but no separate sentence under section 379 was found to be necessary. The learned Sessions Judge upheld the conviction and sentence on appeal.

The chief points put forward by the learned Vakil in this Court are (1) that the petitioners acted bona fide, being misled by the mistake in the decree and Dakhal-dahani, (2) that neither of the Courts have come to a finding as to the common object of the assembly or definite findings as to the details of the offence charged.

With regard to the first ground the matter has, I think, been satisfactorily considered and dealt with by the lower Courts, and it is quite clear that the petitioners must have known that the mistake in the decree was merely a clerical one, and that the decree was meant to cover the whole plot, also that possession had been made over to Jhangu of the whole plot, though only an area of .36 was mentioned in the Dakhal-dahani.

With regard to the second ground, it is quite true that in neither of the judgments of the lower Courts is there a finding as to the common object of the assembly, or of the fact that the petitioners were members of an unlawful assembly. The learned Sessions Judge merely says: "I am satisfied that rioting did take place and that the crop was looted as stated by the complainant," while all that the Deputy Magistrate says is: "From the evidence on the record I come to the conclusion that he (the complainant) was disturbed in possession of the land at the time of reaping, and the accused did commit the offence with which they are charged."

The learned Vakil cited the case of Poresh Nath Sircar v. Emperor (1) where, however, the common object found differed from the common object charged against the accused. Certainly in this case there is no finding as to the existence of an unlawful assembly in either judgment which satisfies the requirements of the law. The petitioners, however, were charged with theft, and it is made out and proved that they committed the theft, and the Courts found them guilty of that offence though no separate sentence was passed under section 379, Indian Penal Code.

I set aside the conviction and sentences passed under section 147 and confirm the conviction under section 379 and under that section sentence them to the period of imprisonment they have already undergone, and Mahesh Dutt Singh to pay a fine of rupees one hundred or in default one month's rigorous imprisonment and the rest of the petitioners to pay a fine of rupees fifty each or in default two weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

Order accordingly.

It is not only not objectionable but in many cases highly advisable that a Magistrate trying a criminal case should himself inspect the scene of occurrence, in order to understand fully the bearing of the evidence given in Court; but if he does so, he should be careful not to allow any one on either side to say anything to him, which might prejudice his mind one way or another. Application for transfer of the case from the Court of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Lucknow, dated the 29th May 1919.

Mr. Mumtaz Hussain, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This is an application for the transfer of a criminal trial pending in the

ENAYET KARIM v. EMPEROR.

Court of a Magistrate of the First Class at Lucknow. There are nine accused. Their allegation is that the trying Magistrate went to the village where the alleged occurrence is said to have taken place, without informing the accused or their Pleaders, and not only saw the house of the deceased Bholai but made enquiries from various persons as to the facts of the case, including the nature of the entries which the Patwari had made in his papers, but made no written record thereof.

It is admitted by the learned Counsel for the applicants that two of the accused Muhammad Khan and Ibrahim, who lived in the village, reached the place where the Magistrate was making the enquiry, soon after his arrival; but there is nothing to show that the other accused had any information that such an enquiry was intended to be made at the village. The learned Government Pleader admits the general correctness of the allegations made in paragraph 5 of the petition and states that the trying Magistrate has no objection to the case being transferred, if this Court thinks that a transfer is desirable. As pointed out in Lalii, In the matter of the petition of (1) and Atiar Rai v. Emperor (2), it is not only objectionable, but in many cases highly advisable, that a Magistrate, trying a criminal case, should himself inspect the scene of the occurrence in order to understand fully the bearing of the evidence given in Court; but if he does so, he should be careful not to allow any one on either side to say anything to him, which might prejudice his mind one way or the other. In this case the learned Magistrate went out of his way in making enquiries on the spot in order to satisfy himself how the facts stood, without previous notice to seven of the accused and in their absence. It is possible that the learned Magistrate may be able to shake off the impression which that enquiry may have made on his mind, if it was unfavourable to the accused, and confine himself during the trial to the evidence which may be recorded in Court, but it is not likely that the accused would have the same confidence which they would have had, had no such enquiry been made. It is desirable, therefore, that the case should be transferred to some other Magistrate competent to try the same.

The application is allowed and the District Magistrate directed either to try the case himself or send it for trial to any other Magistrate subordinate to him who may be competent to try the same.

Application allowed.

Where the evidence against a person charged with an offence under section 147, Penal Code, is open to doubt, his conduct sometime after the occurrence cannot be taken to be such evidence of conduct under section 8 of the Evidence Act as can be used against him in the case. [p. 777, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur, dated the 30th September 1919.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner which was as follows:—

"Ten persons, all constables of the Daltonganj Thana, have been tried for rioting and other offences, of whom three have been acquitted. The other seven, who have been convicted of rioting only and sentenced each to three months' rigorous imprisonment and fine, now appeal.

The affair arose out of a party of constables, 5 or 6 in number, having a dispute with Gajadhar Lal, a merchant of Daltonganj town, regarding the sum to be paid for some rice which the constables were wanting to purchase. While the dispute was going on, some more constables arrived with sticks and there followed a somewhat one-sided fight in which the constables beat Gajadhar Lal and his brothers and some other shopkeepers, themselves escaping without injury.

Ten of the shopkeepers received injuries, more or less severe, which were medically examined the same day by either the Civil Surgeon or Assistant Surgeon. These men were Jagmohan (P. 6), who received three injuries including a broken arm, Lalji (P. 5) three injuries, Sitaram (P. 9) one injury, Boudh (P. 2) four injuries, Khublal (P. 3) two injuries, Lochi (P. 8) one injury, Gajadhar (P. 1) five injuries, Dukhi (P. 4) four injuries, Deyal (P. 7) two injuries.

Of the above Boudh and Khublal are the brothers of Gajadhar. All the injured men sell grain in the Daltonganj Bazar, except Jagmohan who sells sweetmeats.

The occurrence took place in the morning publicly and is conclusively proved by the above named and other witnesses. The common object of the constables as set forth in the charge of rioting is 'to terrorize by means of criminal force the shopkeepers of Daltonganj Bazar to sell articles at a cheaper rate to the constables.' This comes within the fifth clause of section 141. The long list of injured shopkeepers indicates that this probably was the common object. Another view is that the constables who came up later realised that there was a quarrel between the first batch and the grain dealers and rallied to the support of their comrades, beating any one of the opposite party who crossed their path without any clear idea of the details of the quarrel. In that case their common object was voluntarily to cause hurt which comes within the third clause of section 141 (vide section 40). In any case the offence committed was rioting. It is not suggested that there was the smallest excuse for the constables. The defence of each of them is that he individually was not present. The only point for consideration accordingly is the matter of identification.

Soon after the occurrence the Deputy Commissioner paraded the constables found at the Thana and invited such of the injured men as he found to come and identify the assailants. He took notes of what happened. He held another test of the same kind at his bungalow the same day, at which some more constables were present. Next day another identification was held by Babu Kshitish Chandra Sarkar, Deputy Magistrate.

Enayet Karim was present only at the first and third identification tests. At both of these and in Court Gajadhar and his brother Khublal identified him. They assign him the most prominent part at the beginning of the affair. Their minds were then clear and they are not likely to be mistaken about him.

Madar Bux was present at the first and third test. Gajadhar and Khublal identified him too on both occasions, and in Court Gajadhar says he was the man who gave the first blow a slap. Boudh also identified him at the first test and in Court but left him out at the third identification.

Raghunandan Dube was present at the first test, but apparently not at the second and third. Lalji and Rameshwar identified him on that occasion and in Court. The former says he was the man who struck him.

Ali Bux was present at the first and third tests. On both these occasions and in Court he was identified by four witnesses, namely, Gajadhar, Dukhi, Lochi, Sitaram.

Muhammad Hussain was present at the second and third tests. Dukhi identified him on both occasions and in Court. Parmeswar who was not present at the third test, identified him at the second test and in Court. Boudh identified him in Court but has not done so previously.

Hafiz Khan was present at the second and third tests. Gajadhar identified him at both and in Court. Khublal missed him at the second test but identified him at the third test and in Court. Boudh identified him only in Court.

Banslochan Singh was present at the second and third tests. Gajadhar and Dukhi identified him at both these and in Court. Govind Ram, who was absent at the third test, identified him at the second test and in Court. Jagmohan identified him only in Court.

The number of constables present at the three tests was respectively 42, 22 and 66. The identification is proved to have been independently made by the witnesses owing to the precautions taken in each case. The witnesses, moreover, have on the whole shown considerable caution in the way they identified. That being so, the fact that two of the witnesses independently agree in identifying an individual is in itself very strong evidence against that individual.

It is not clearly proved that the witnesses made any mistakes except in the case of Rambahadur, one of the men acquitted. The Magistrate has accepted the defence evidence that he was at the Treasury at the time of occurrence, but at the second test Gajadhar and Govind identified him. Whether or not he resembles some other constables in appearance does not transpire. The fact of this wrong identification, however, should lead us to treat the evidence of Gajadhar and Govind with somewhat more caution than that of the other witnesses. Making full allowance for that, I do not think the evidence of identification, pure and simple, is shaken except in the case of Hafiz Khan. If there were no other evidence against Hafiz Khan, I should be inclined to give him the benefit of the doubt. Other evidence is forthcoming, however, from Babu Kshitish Chandra Sarkar about an occurrence which took place in the course of the third test identification. Hafiz Khan was then ringleader of a party of the constables who made a demonstration. He announced that the constables as a body would all go to the Bazar again and loot so that they could all be tried together. He actually started to go off with his following, but was checked before he left the Thana compounds. Leaving out of consideration any remark of a confessional nature that he made at the time, this conduct is hardly consistent with his innocence.

The evidence of alibi has been fully dealt with by the Magistrate. I consider it to be worthless so far as the present appellants are concerned and I think there is no reasonable doubt of the guilt of any of them.

The appeals are accordingly dismissed."

Messrs Sami and Athar Hussain, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown,

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule issued on the Deputy Commissioner of Daltonganj to shew cause why the conviction of the accused Hafiz Khan should not be set aside, and why the case of the petitioner Banslochan Singh should not be considered by the Judicial Commissioner.

The two petitioners are constables who were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Daltonganj and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment each and to pay a fine of Rs. 20. They and others were found guilty of being members of an unlawful assembly met together with the common object of terrorising the shopkeepers of Daltonganj with a view to making them decrease the price of rice.

On appeal the learned Judicial Commissioner upheld the conviction of these two petitioners and they have now come up to this Court, on the ground that the learned Judicial Commissioner in appeal had, in the case of Banslochan, not properly considered the evidence, and in the case of Hafiz Khan, had expressed doubt as to his presence in the unlawful assembly.

In the case of the petitioner Hafiz Khan the Rule must, I think, be made absolute. The learned Judicial Commissioner agrees that the presence of this man at the unlawful assembly is open to doubt and that he would be inclined to give him the benefit of the doubt, were it not that during the course of a test identification during the investigation into the offence, Hafiz Khan was a ringleader of the constables and made a demonstration. This conduct of the petitioner, sometime after the occurrence, cannot be taken to be such evidence of conduct under section 8 of the Evidence Act as could be used against him in a charge under section 147, Indian Penal Code.

With regard to Banslochan Singh, in the first place it has been argued that the Judicial Commissioner did not consider his case, but when the Rule was issued it was probable that certain portions of the Appellate Court's judgment were not called to the attention of this Court. That judgment shows clearly that Banslochan's case was considered. It was found that he had been identified on two occasions by three persons at test identification and that though the learned Judi-

SURENDRA NATH v. EMPEROR.

Chief Commissioner stated elsewhere that the evidence of two of the persons who identified him must be received with caution, it is clear that he was satisfied that with regard to this man the evidence was sufficient. He says for instance: "I do not think the evidence of identification, pure and simple, is shaken except in the case of Hafiz Khan." It is further contended that the case against Banslochan Singh should not succeed, because the lower Appellate Court came to no definite finding as to the common object of the assembly. He said that it was probable that the common object was to terrorise the shopkeepers by a show of criminal force to reduce their prices, but another view might be taken that later on the other constables came and joined the assembly only with the object of supporting their comrades without knowing the details of the quarrel. I gather from this that the learned Judicial Commissioner meant that he found that the object was to terrorise the shopkeepers, though another view might be put forward with which he was not altogether in agreement. In any case I am of opinion that the judgments of both the lower Courts sufficiently show that when the beating took place by the constables, there was a dispute as to the price of rice and that the members of the assembly were trying to force the shopkeepers to reduce their prices. The common object, I think, was the same throughout. I can see no reason to find that Banslochan Singh was not rightly convicted or that his case was not properly considered.

The Rule, so far as it concerns him, will be discharged. The conviction and sentence of Hafiz Khan will be set aside and he will be set at liberty. Banslochan Singh will surrender to his bail and serve out the rest of his sentence.

Rule partly discharged.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 271 of 1919.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 118—Security for good behaviour—Statements of approvers in dacoity cases, value of—Corroboration, whether necessary—General repute, Police suspicion, whether can be made basis of—Evidence of good character, value of.

The Police, having failed to establish the guilt of the accused in regard to three specific charges of dacoity, instituted proceedings against the accused under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, that the Magistrate was not wrong in initiating proceedings under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code but, in such circumstances, the evidence against the accused must be very satisfactory before security can be demanded of him under section 118 of the Code. [p. 779, col. 1.]

Statements of approvers in different dacoity cases implicating the accused in a proceeding under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code ought to be left out of consideration, if there is nothing to corroborate them. [p. 779, col. 2.]

Where in a proceeding under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code the prosecution witnesses for general repute say that they believe the accused to be a thief or a dacoit, but in cross-examination they admit that their suspicion is the outcome of house searches and arrests by the Police, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the admission by the prosecution witnesses as to the origin of their suspicion. Where there is positive evidence for the defence that the accused is a good man, it is not a sufficient reason for casting it aside to say that proof of malice against the accused on the part of the prosecution is wanting. JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The petitioner Surendra Nath Manna has been bound down under section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code in his own bond of Rs. 800 with two sureties in the sum of Rs. 200 each to be of good behaviour for three years.

It appears that there were numerous dacoities in the neighbourhood of petitioner's village in the year 1915. One of these dacoities was committed at Rajipur in December and a man named Bahir Das Bagdi was arrested; he made a confession implicating the petitioner, and the latter was arrested some time in January 1916: he was committed to the Sessions, and in February 1917 he was acquitted by this Court on a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, being made by the Sessions Judge. The same Bahir Das Bagdi named the petitioner as an associate in a dacoity at Shamserpur, which took place on January 19, 1916: and the petitioner was committed to the Sessions on that charge also: he was acquitted in June 1916.

In May 1918 there was a dacoity committed in the village of Joynagar and a man named Ashu Bagdi was arrested: he made a confession implicating the petitioner, and the latter was arrested on May 12, 1918: he remained in custody until July 6, 1918, when he was discharged, but on the same day the present proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, were initiated.

These facts are important. The petitioner spent the whole of 1916 either in custody or on bail awaiting a final decision upon the charge of dacoity, and he was arrested again in May 1918 and kept in custody for nearly two months, again upon a charge of dacoity. The Police have, therefore, failed to establish his guilt in regard to three specific charges, and immediately on their third failure the present proceedings have been begun.

The first ground on which the Rule was issued challenges the propriety of this course of action, but I do not think we ought to go so far as to hold that the Magistrate was wrong in instituting these proceedings, but it is, to my mind, clear that in such circumstances, the evidence against the accused must be very satisfactory before security can be demanded. The other four grounds attack the evidence, and amount to this, that the evidence does not establish the fact that the petitioner is a thief or a dacoit.

The first criticism is that the petitioner has been acquitted of the charges connected with the dacoities at Rajipur and Shamserpur, and discharged in regard to the dacoity at Joynagar, and, therefore, the evidence of the approvers to the effect that he did take part in those dacoities ought not to have been admitted. That is true as regards the Rajipur and Shamser-pur dacoities, but Bahir Das Bagdi names several other dacoities in which he says that Surendra took part. Ashu Bagdi does the same. With regard to these other dacoities I think the learned Magistrate was quite wrong in holding that there was any corroborative evidence, that is to say, as against the petitioner. He mentions the finding of a sword in Surendra's tank in 1918, which was identified by the complainant in the dacoity case at Khedah, but it does not appear that the disappearance of a sword was mentioned to the Police. The witness (P. W. No. 6) is most unsatisfactory: he contradicts himself about the recovery of some earrings in a way which makes it impossible to believe him. (Parenthetically I may remark that one part of his statement is pure hearsay and should not have been admitted.) The injury on Manik's person the sword found in Manik's bedding and the notes found on Manik's person lend no corroboration to the approvers as against Surendra the petitioner. Lastly the learned Magistrate alludes to the evidence given by some goldsmiths, P. Ws. Nos. 91, 92, 93. The two latter who melted the gold say that they told the Police at once: they are not friends of Surendra, and there is no reason why they should be chosen for such a compromising job. I should be disposed to regard their evidence as ludicrous. As this is all the evidence to corroborate the approvers so far as Surendra is concerned, I think statements of the approvers ought to have been left out of consideration, and it follows that there is nothing to connect Surendra with any particular dacoity.

The prosecution has further tried to show that Surendra has spent money lavishly on wine and women, but it is clear that he was at one time well-to-do, and he may quite possibly have raised the money in a legitimate way. The same evidence is used to prove association with bad characters. I think only one ex-convict is mentioned in the evidence, Gonesh Shou. The learned Magistrate refers to the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 102 to 107 but what they say is not very clear, and amounts to little more than that Surendra is leader of a gang, among whom are some men who were convicted in 1917. The other evidence is merely that Surendra lived a dissipated life in company with men beneath him in social status. Of course, such evidence has its value but it does not carry the case far.

Lastly evidence of general repute is assailed, and a two-fold criticism is made, firstly, that much of the unfavourable evidence results entirely from the action taken by the Police and secondly, that the favourable evidence given by one or two prosecution witnesses and by many defence witnesses has been brushed aside in a most summary manner.

I think both these objections must be sustained. It is true that a great many people from Surendra's own village of Ramnarayanpur and from adjoining villages say that they believe him to be a thief and a dacoit, but over and over again they say in cross examination that their suspicion is the outcome of the house searches and the arrests. The learned Magistrate has not attempted to make allowance for these admissions. It is, of course, very difficult for a witness to say what his grounds are for suspecting a neighbour, if he cannot give concrete instances of suspicious conduct, but when the witnesses admit that one reason at least was in fact that the Police suspected Surendra, the accused ought to have the benefit of the admission. In the circumstances of this case it is particularly necessary that regard should be paid to the origin of the suspicion, for villagers are only too ready to believe that there must be something to justify repeated arrests and house searches.

Then as to the defence evidence the learned Magistrate says there is no satisfactory evidence to show that the case is due to party feeling and quotes two witnesses who say that there is no daladali in the village. He does not consider that if there is no daladali, it is a very remarkable fact that so many witnesses are ready to give Surendra a good character. Some witnesses, however, say that there is daladali and that Umesh Chandra Kar P. W. No. 28 is head of one party. P. W. No. 82 admitted that Umesh made him attend as a witness. It seems, therefore, quite possible that there is a quarrel in the village. But be that as it may, there is the positive evidence that Surendra is a good man, and it is not a sufficient reason for casting it aside to say that proof of malice is wanting.

From this review of the evidence and of the Magistrate's judgment, my conclusions are that the judgment is vitiated by three main defects, first, that various statements have been treated as corroborative of the approvers which, even if true, do not corroborate them as against Surendra; secondly, that the Magistrate has failed to take into his consideration the admitted effect of the house searches and arrests in originating the general repute which is said to attach to the petitioner and thirdly, that the Magistrate has omitted to consider the volume of evidence directly in favour of the petitioner.

On these grounds I think the order requiring the petitioner to give security must be set aside.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Order set aside.

In order to convict a person of being in illegal possession of contraband goods, it is necessary to fix him with knowledge of their existence in the place where they were found. If the place is one in which several persons have an equal right of access, the goods cannot be said to be in the possession of any one of them. [p. 781, col. 1.]

Messrs. K. N. Chowdhry, H. L. Nandkeolyar, Gourchandra Pal and Baranasi Prosad Jajunwala, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—It seems to me that this application can be disposed of on a very short point. The petitioner, who is a rich Marwari and the proprietor of three shops, has been convicted of illegal possession of cocaine. It appears that at the time of the search, the Excise Sub-Inspector took with him a large number of persons, many of whom have not been examined in the case, and that the cocaine was discovered on a shelf, two or three cubits from the western door leading to the verandah. The learned Sessions Judge, discussing the evidence in the case, says as follows:—"The question is whether the appellant must have been aware of its existence or whether it could have been introduced into his shop unknown to him or his servants." I accept the first portion of the investigation which the learned Judge proposes for himself, but not the second. It seems to me that the petitioner can hardly be convicted if the cocaine was introduced into the shop unknown to the petitioner, but not unknown to his servants. In the case of Jogriban Ghose v. Emperor (1) the late Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court said as follows: "It is well established, and is an elementary rule founded on common sense, that where the place in which an article is found is one to which several persons have equal right of access, it cannot be said to be in the possession of any one of them." The place where the cocaine was found is a shelf, two or three cubits from the door leading to the verandah. It seems to me that the servants of the petitioner had equal right of access to the shelf, a view which the learned Judge seems to accept. From the position of the shelf, it was equally accessible to outsiders. That being so, it is impossible to convict the petitioner. I would accordingly set aside the conviction and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899), ss. 559 (52), 561—Bye-laws of Calcutta Corporation regulating hours of closing theatres, whether ultra vires—Abetment of offence under bye-law, whether punishable—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 40.

The bye-laws of the Municipal Corporation of Calcutta prescribing the hour of closing theatres and the section of the Calcutta Municipal Act providing a penalty for the breach of any bye-law, are not ultra vires. [p. 783, col. 2.]

The Calcutta Municipal Act is a local and special law and section 40 of the Penal Code applies to the abetment of an offence which is thereby made punishable. [p. 784, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Sir B. C. Mitter (with him Babu Bepin Chandra Mallick), for the Petitioners in Criminal Revision No. 732 of 1919. The petitioners before your Lordships, who are actors in a theatre, have been sentenced to pay a fine by the Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta for continuing a theatrical performance later than 1 A.M. in breach of the Theatre Bye laws, rules 83 and 85 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. I submit that the conviction is bad in law inasmuch as rule 25 of the Theatre Bye laws is ultra vires and, moreover, the actors, who at most can be fined only as abettors of an offence, if any, cannot be punished by a Municipal Magistrate who has no power to try an offence of abetment. The abetment sections of the Indian Penal Code cannot be made to apply to an offence created by a bye-law framed under the Calcutta Municipal Act. Section 561 of the Calcutta Municipal Act is ultra vires, as it purports to create an offence and is not in the nature of a ministerial act. The Bengal Legislature has no power to delegate such authority to a Municipality or its General Committee. The Municipality has no power under the Theatre Bye laws to regulate the time of a theatrical performance. The bye-law fixing the time limit of a theatrical performance is also unreasonable. See Halifax Theatre de Luxe v. Gledhill (1), London County Council v. Bermondsey Bioscope Co. (2).

The breach of a Municipal bye-law may be an offence within the meaning of section 40 of the Indian Penal Code. The Calcutta Municipal Act is not a special or local law within the meaning of section 40 of the Indian Penal Code and, therefore, the abetment section of the Penal Code does not apply to an offence committed by the breach of a Municipal bye-law. Lastly I submit that section 628 of the Calcutta Municipal Act gives power to the Local Governments to appoint a Magistrate for the trial of offences against the Municipal Act and the rules, bye-laws and regulations made thereunder, and as abetment has not been specifically referred to in section 561, the Municipal Magistrate so appointed is not empowered to try cases of abetment. Refers to Amrita Lal Bose v. Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta (3).

Mr. Camell (with him Babu Monmathanath Mukherjee), for the Opposite Party.—Section 561 of the Calcutta Municipal Act is not ultra vires. Refers to 24 and 25 Viet. c. 67, sections 22, 42, 44. The Statute gives ample authority to the Government of Bengal to pass such an Act as the Calcutta Municipal Act and to empower the General Committee of the Municipality to frame bye-laws. Refers to Empress v. Burah (4), Hodge v. Reg. (5), Powell v. Apollo Candle Co. (6).

Section 40 of the Indian Penal Code makes everything punishable under a local or special law an "offence." See also section 4, clause (c), of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The actors who take part in a theatrical performance after 1 A. M. in breach of the Municipal bye-law, are really in the position of principals and the question of abetment hardly arises. Even if the actors be regarded as abettors, section 40 read with sections 109 to 114 of the Indian Penal Code makes the abettors also punishable. There is no force in the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioner that a Municipal Magistrate is not empowered to try cases of abetment. If it is to be held that the principal is punishable under the special law by the Municipal Magistrate but not the abettor, the most extraordinary result would follow, that for the trial of the principal offence the Municipal Magistrate would have jurisdiction but the abetment would have to be tried by another Magistrate taking cognizance of offences under the Indian Penal Code. Besides in the present case the Municipal Magistrate was also a Presidency Magistrate.

Sir B. O. Mitter briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—In the first case the petitioner, who is an actor, has been fined Rs. 10 for continuing a theatrical performance later than 1 A. M. on the 31st March last in breach of the Theatre Bye-laws, rules 33 and 85 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. A Rule was issued by this Court. The grounds urged were (1) that bye-law 85 is ultra vires, (2) that the abetment sections of the Penal Code do not apply to an offence created by a bye-law framed under the Calcutta Municipal Act.

In the second case both the petitioners are actors and have been fined Rs. 20 each for committing a similar breach of the same bye-laws, and a Rule was issued on the same grounds. Both the matters have been heard together.

Under section 559, sub-clause (52), of the Calcutta Municipal Act III of 1899, the General Committee of the Municipality is empowered to make bye-laws for the regulation of theatres and other places of public resort, recreation or amusement. Section 561 lays down that in making a bye-law under section 559 the General Committee may provide that a breach of it shall be punishable with fine which may extend to Rs. 20 in some cases and to Rs. 10 in others. Under the power so given the following bye-laws have been framed:—

HOUR OF CLOSING THEATRES:—Bye-law 82: "No performance shall be continued later than 1 A. M. unless with the special permission of the Chairman for any particular occasion."

THE PENALTY CLAUSE is Bye-law 85:

PROBODH CHANDRA v. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

"Every person guilty of a breach of any of the bye-laws shall be punishable" as provided in section 561 (quoting the words of that section).

It is contended that section 561 is ultra vires, as it creates an offence and is not in the nature of a ministerial act and the Bengal Legislature has no power to delegate such authority to a Municipality or its General Committee, that there is no power under the bye-law to regulate the time of a performance, that is to say, there is no authority to fix a time limit. It is also argued that the bye-law as framed is unreasonable. Reliance has been placed upon Halifax Theatre de Luxe v. Gledhill (1) and also London County Council v. Bermondsey Bioscope Co. (2) in support of the last point. We are unable to accept these contentions. The first case above cited does not support the view that a time limit may not be fixed, and we do not find anything unreasonable in such a bye-law. 24 and 25 Vict. c. 67, section 22, lays down the extent of the power of the Governor-General to make laws and regulations. Section 42 of the same Statute lays down the extent of the powers of Governors of Bombay and Madras in Council to make laws and regulations. Section 44 provides that the Governor-General may establish Councils for making laws and regulations in the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal. By a proclamation in 1862 such Council was established in Bengal. The Statute as extended gives ample authority to the Government of Bengal to pass such an Act as the Calcutta Municipal Act and to empower the General Committee of the Municipality to frame bye-laws. It is clear that the General Committee has clear authority to make breaches of the bye-laws punishable. The power of the Government is very clearly put in Empress v. Burah (4), which holds that when the Indian Legislature has power expressly limited by the Act of the Imperial Parliament which created it, it can, of course, do nothing beyond the limits which circumscribe these powers. But, when acting within the limits, it is not in any sense an agent or delegate of the Imperial Parliament, but has, and was intended to have, plenary powers of Legislation, as large, and of the same nature, as those of Parliament itself.

Where plenary powers of Legislation exist as to particular subjects, whether in an Imperial or in a Provincial Legislature, they may be well exercised, either absolutely or conditionally. Legislation conditional on the use of particular powers or on the exercise of a limited discretion, entrusted by the Legislature to persons in whom it places confidence, is no uncommon thing, and in many circumstances it may be highly convenient. Their Lordships refer to the British Statute Book as abounding with examples of it and say there is nothing in the Statute which limits such power so far as the Indian Legislature is concerned. In this connection the Public Health Act of 1875, 38 and 39 Vict. c. 55, section 1 & 2, the Municipal Corporation Act of 1882, 45 and 46 Vict. c. 60, section 23, the Local Government Act of 1888, 51 and 52 Vict. c. 41, section 15, may be referred to. Similar penalties as those now under consideration are provided therein.

In Hodge v. Reg. (5) their Lordships lay down that it is not a question of an application of the principle "delegatus non potest delegare" in a similar case and that within the limits of subjects and area the local Legislature is supreme and has the same authority as the Imperial Parliament would have had under like circumstances to confide, to a Municipal institution or a body of its own creation, authority to make bye-laws or resolutions as to subjects specified in the enactment, and with the object of carrying the enactment into operation and effect. They also held that penalties might be properly imposed.

A similar question arose in Powell v. Apollo Candle Co. (6), in which their Lordships have held that a Colonial Legislature is not a delegate of the Imperial Legislature. It is restricted in the area of its powers, but within that area it is unrestricted and not acting as an agent or delegate. We have no hesitation in holding that the bye-laws and the penalty provided in the Calcutta Municipal Act are not ultra vires.

Next comes the question of abetment. It is argued that a breach of the bye-law is an offence as defined in section 40 of the Indian Penal Code, but that the Calcutta Municipal Act is not a special or local law under that section. We are unable to accept that view. The Calcutta Municipal Act is a special and local law and the provisions of section 40 apply to abetment of the offence which is thereby made punishable.

It is next argued that section 628 of the Calcutta Municipal Act alone gives powers to the Local Government to appoint one or more Magistrates for the trial of offences against the Act, and the rules, bye laws and regulations made thereunder, and as abetment has not been specifically referred to in section 561, the Magistrate so appointed is not empowered to try cases of abetment, and since the conviction of the petitioners is upon the abetment sections of the Penal Code taken with the offence under the bye-law, it is unsustainable in law. We are unable to accept this contention. The Magistrate who tried the petitioners in this case is not only a Municipal Magistrate but also a Presidency Magistrate, and he has ample power to deal with the matter. It is difficult to avoid the conclusion that if a breach of the bye-law is an offence as defined in the Penal Code, sections 109 to 114 made the abettors also punishable. The actors who take part in a performance after 1 A. M. seem to us to be in the position of principals and the question of abetment hardly arises, but even if they be considered as abettors, we are of opinion that they have been justly convicted. The observations referred to in Amrita Lal Bose v. Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta (3) are in the nature of obiter, as the question was not before the Court at that time. We think that the grounds upon which the Rules were issued fail and, therefore, they ought to be and are accordingly discharged.

Rules discharged.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—
Security to keep peace, when to be demanded—
Consent of accused, whether sufficient—Evidence, independent, whether necessary.*

To justify an order to furnish security to keep the peace, there must be evidence on the record that the persons from whom security is demanded are likely to commit a breach of the peace. The mere consent of the persons to be bound down is not sufficient: the fact of a likelihood of a breach of the peace must be established by independent testimony on oath.

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Basti, dated the 4th September 1919.

Mr. Satya Ohandera Mukerji, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In the face of the authorities I must allow this revision and set aside the order against these four people for giving bonds in Rs. 500 with two sureties. The law is quite clear that the Magistrate must have evidence upon the record that they are persons likely to commit a breach of the peace. It would be better that he should do so even though the accused were prepared to admit that they were likely to cause a breach of the peace. But in any case the consent given in this matter is really no consent at all. To entitle the Magistrate to act upon consent in such a case as this he must, if it is open to him to act upon consent at all, obtain a full admission from each of the persons called upon to show cause that he is likely to commit a breach of the peace, and the circumstances under which or reasons why he is likely to commit a breach of the peace, and that he fully understands that it is for that reason that he is to be bound over and that if he fails to find the sureties, he may have to go to prison. An admission of that kind clearly made by a person who has to show cause becomes evidence in the case, and there would be on the record some fact at any rate tending to show that the persons against whom the order is proposed to be made are likely to commit a breach of the peace. But having regard to the authorities I think it would always be better that the Magistrate should have the facts established by independent testimony on oath, which ought not to be difficult if he has already been furnished with grounds for beginning the proceedings at all. I allow the application and send the case back to the Magistrate to be dealt with according to law.

Application allowed.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. J. W. Chippendale, for the Appellants.—Under the provisions of section 68 (b), Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagee has the right to sue the mortgagor for the mortgage money where the mortgagee is deprived of the whole or part of his security on account of the wrongful act or default of the mortgagor. The cause of action arises when the money becomes re-payable. Nowhere in the plaint does the plaintiff say that I deprived him of his security—the plaint is silent thereto, so that he could sue me for a personal decree. Under the circumstances a personal decree should not have been passed.

[FLETCHER, J.—You are bound by your covenant. You cannot destroy the mortgage security.]

It was a non-transferable holding. The rights conferred by sections 65 and 68 of the Transfer of Property Act apply only in cases where the mortgage money has not become due in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed.

[FLETCHER, J.—The Act means what it says.]

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazrah (with him Babu Tarakeswar Roy), for the Respondents, preferred a cross objection and submitted that the rate of interest which the lower Court had decreed was without any rhyme or reason. There was no issue as to the rate of interest, and no evidence directed on this point. I want the contractual rate. There was no coercion or undue influence.

Mr. J. W. Chippendale referred to Gopeswar Saha v. Jadab Chandra (1) saying that the rate of interest was hard.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the first defendant against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of the 24 Pergunnas, dated the 14th February 1917, modifying the decision of the Mansif at Baruipur. The plaintiffs brought the suit for recovery of certain money in terms of a mortgage deed and also for interest. That is how they described it in the plaint. The facts are these:—The plaintiffs got the mortgage in 1902. The date for re-payment of the mortgage money was the 17th October 1908. The present suit was not instituted till the 5th November 1914. The mortgaged property consisted of three plots of a non transferable occupancy holding, and the defendant No. 1, in breach of the duty that he owed to his mortgagees, purported to transfer two of the mortgaged plots which entitled the landlord to re-enter and to forfeit two plots of the mortgaged property. In these circumstances, the learned Subordinate Judge points out that, under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiffs were entitled to sue for the mortgage money. The argument that has been advanced on behalf of the appellant is that the rights conferred by sections 65 and 68 of the Transfer of Property Act apply only in cases where the mortgage money has not become due in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed. There is no warrant for such a suggestion and the terms of the Act appear to me not to support such an argument. The Act means what it says and no such limitation is to be placed upon the sections as has been suggested by the learned Vakil for the appellant. In that view of the case it is quite clear that the learned Judge was right when he said that the mortgagees having been deprived of these two plots of the mortgaged property by the act of the mortgagor, were entitled to recover the mortgage money from the mortgagor. In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was clearly right. No other point has been urged in this appeal. The present appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

There is a cross objection preferred by the plaintiffs and the question involved in the cross-objection is this: The plaintiffs say that the Court ought to have awarded to them interest as provided by the contract between the parties. The interest provided for by the contract is no doubt high, 24 per cent. per annum, but it is not suggested, nor has it been proved or found, that any coercion or undue influence was exercised by the plaintiffs in order to obtain this stipulation as to interest. No issue was settled in the first Court as to the rate of interest, nor was any evidence given on either side, and it was only when the case came to the lower Appellate Court that the learned Judge stated that having regard to the decision of this Court reported as Gopeswar Saha v. Jadab Ohandra (1) the interest in the present case must be taken to be hard and unconscionable. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in some recent judgments, those provisions about the interest being hard and unconscionable do not apply in this country. The law relating to this matter has been codified in the Indian Contract Act, and the Court cannot go outside the statutory provisions and follow some rules or supposed rules that have been applied in certain cases by the Courts of Equity in England. There is no reason why the parties should not be held to the bargain originally entered into between them and why the rate of interest stipulated between them should not be allowed; I think, therefore, that we should allow the cross-objection and declare that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover interest on the principal sum secured by the mortgage deed at the rate stipulated therein and remit the case to the Court of first instance to ascertain what amount is now actually due on this footing. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs in the cross-objection.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

Custom—Pre-emption—Village confiscated by Government—Settlement record, entry in, value of.

Certain villages were confiscated by Government in 1857 and were subsequently settled with other persons. In 1860 and 1870 entries were made in the Settlement Records that the custom of pre-emption existed in the villages:

Held, (1) that when the Government became the sole owner of the villages in 1857, the old custom ceased to exist: [p. 787, col. 1.]

2) that a new custom could not have sprung up between 1857 and 1860 or between 1860 and 1870; [p. 787, col. 1.]

(3) that, therefore, the entries in the Settlement Records were not sufficient to prove the existence of the custom of pre-emption, [p. 787, col. 1.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 2nd May 1918.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mangal Prasad Bhargava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question in this appeal is whether the evidence on the record is sufficient to establish the existence of the custom of pre-emption. The village in question formerly belonged to certain ladies. After the mutiny of 1857 Government confiscated the village and subsequently made a settlement thereof with other persons. It is obvious that when the property was in the hands of the Government, there were no owners except Government and no custom of pre-emption could possibly have then existed. Three years later, that is in 1860, when a Settlement Record was made, there was actually recorded the existence of a custom of pre-emption. This record is obviously incorrect, for whatever might have been the previous state of affairs before the confiscation, the old custom could no longer have continued to exist while the property was in the hands of Government. Obviously a custom could not have arisen between 1857 and 1860. In the year 1870 another Settlement Record was made in which the custom was again recorded. At the last Settlement no record of custom whatever was made. In the year 1893, there was a sale in reference to which a claim for pre-emption was made successfully, though whether it was based on custom or on contract is not shown. In 1902 there was another pre-emption case in which the suit was withdrawn. In 1909 there were two other sales in respect to which two suits were brought, and both of them were dismissed on the ground that no custom existed. On this evidence the Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that the custom was not established. The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the facts disclosed the existence of a custom. In our opinion the decision of the Court of first instance was correct. The entries made in 1860 and 1870 are clearly not good evidence of custom, as we have shown above. We allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Rent decree obtained by co-sharer landlord—Sale of

Where a co-sharer landlord purchases a holding sold in execution of a decree obtained by himself for his share of the rent, his co-sharer landlords are entitled to joint possession to the extent of their shares in the Zemindari. But they would not be so entitled if the decree in execution of which the holding is sold is a decree under section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In such a case they would only be entitled to fair rent to the extent of their shares. [p. 787, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Officiating District Judge, Raugpur, dated the 1st and 5th of February 1918 respectively, reversing those of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 20th and 27th of November 1916 respectively.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakerbutty (with him Babu Atul Chandra Gupta), for the Appellants.—The defendants are appellants. The appeals arise out of six suits brought by the same plaintiff against some defendants for joint possession, on the allegation that he as a joint owner was entitled to joint possession. The defence was that the defendant was an auction-purchaser and as such he was entitled to his share of rent. In Second Appeals Nos. 974, 1183—85, the decree in execution of which I purchased the holding was for the entire rent. In Second Appeals Nos. 994 95 both the co-sharers obtained rent decrees against the tenants and the defendant was the purchaser. The suits were all dismissed by the first Court. The Court of Appeal below decreed the suits. My contention is if it is a decree for entire rent, no notice is necessary even after the amendment of section 148 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. See Chandra Sekhar

BEPIN CHANDRA ROY v. PROFULLA NARAIN ROY.

Patra v. Rani Manjhee (1). The purchase in this case was before the amendment. The decree obtained by the co-sharer was for entire rent. Therefore, it was a rent decree and under section 65, Bengal Tenancy Act, the holding passed to the defendant. Therefore, defendant would be entitled to exclusive possession of his share. The case of Girish Chandra Chowdhury v. Kedar Chandra Roy (2) relied upon by the lower Appellate Court has no bearing on the present case. As regards the other two appeals, I do not press them.

Babu Prokash Chandra Mazumdar, for the Respondents.—Though the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is brief, it is clear that he held that the decrees were not rent decrees. In none of the cases has any one of the decrees been produced. My prayer was two fold, viz, khas possession and equitable share of rent. The first Court did not give effect to them. If I am not allowed khas possession, I must be entitled to some relief in equity.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakerbutty briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—These six appeals arise out of six suits for joint possession of certain occupancy holding, which were purchased by the defendant who is a co-sharer of the plaintiff in a Zamindari. Plaintiff's case is that these occupancy holdings are non-transferable and that the defendant by purchase thereof at auction sales did not acquire any right to the same and that, therefore, he (the plaintiff) was entitled to get joint possession to the extent of his share in the Zamindari. The Court of first instance found in four of the suits (which gave rise to Second Appeals Nos. 974 and 1183 to 1185 of 1918) that the decrees in these cases were passed in suits brought by one of the co-sharer landlords as plaintiff, but that they were decrees for the entire rent payable to both the co-sharers and that the other co-sharer was made a party defendant in the suits. The Court accordingly held that the decrees in execution of which the occupancy holdings were sold were decrees for rent and that, under these circumstances, the plaintiff could not get a decree for joint possession as against the defendant. It should be mentioned that the plaintiff made an alternative prayer in the plaint for assessment of fair rent in the event of the Court holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to get possession. The Court of first instance did not deal with this alternative case, being of opinion that it should be gone into in another suit. On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned District Judge without going into the nature of the decree held that the plaintiff was entitled to joint possession, and accordingly gave a decree to the plaintiff for joint possession of the lands. The defendant has appealed to this Court.

The whole case turns upon the question whether the decrees in execution of which the holdings were sold were decrees for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act, with the consequences attaching to such a decree. It was pointed out by the learned Pleader for the appellant before us that in two of the cases, namely, Appeals Nos. 974 and 1184 of 1918, the decrees for rent were obtained by one of the co-sharers for his share of the rent. That being so, the plaintiff is certainly entitled to joint possession of the lands comprised in these two cases. With regard to the remaining two cases, namely, Appeals Nos. 1183 and 1185, it is stated on behalf of the appellant that the decrees for rent, although obtained by one of the co-sharers as plaintiff, were for the entire rent and that the other co-sharer landlord was made a party defendant. In the other two cases, i.e., Nos. 974 and 975, it is stated that both the co-sharers jointly obtained decrees against the tenant. Now if the decrees for rent were obtained jointly by both the co-sharers or by one of the co-sharers making the other co-sharer a party to the suit and for the entire rent of the holding, in either of these two cases, the decree being a decree for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act, the sale held in execution of such a decree passed the holding to one of the co-sharer landlords as it would to a stranger; and in such circumstances the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for joint possession. The cases must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question mentioned above may be gone into and the cases disposed of. If the lower Appellate Court finds that the decrees were decrees for rent, that Court will send the cases back to the Court of first instance for assessment of fair rent and in that event, both parties will be entitled to adduce evidence on the question of fair rent.

(1) 3 C. W. N. 386.

(2) 27 C. 473; 4 C. W. N. 569.

TIKARAM V. RAM CHANDRA.

The result is that Appeals Nos. 974 and 1184 are dismissed with costs. There will be one set of hearing fee for both the appeals. In the other four appeals, namely, Nos. 1183, 1185, 994 and 995, the decrees of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and the cases are remanded to that Court to be dealt with according to observations made above. In these four cases costs will abide the result.

Order accordingly.

The dismissal of a suit in terms of Order IX, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, is not intended to operate in favour of the defendant as res judicata. [p. 790, col. 2.]

The application of the principle of res judicata cannot be avoided by a defendant on the ground that he did not appear at the trial, but the conclusive effect of the decision must be confined to the point actually decided in the suit. [p. 791, col. 1.]

Modhusudan Shaha Mundul v. Brae, 16 O. 300 (F. B.), followed.

The position might, however, be different if the trees are planted by the person claiming the right to cut them or by his forefather, the principle embodied in section 108 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act being applicable to such a case. [p. 791, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, in Civil Appeal No. 71 of 1914, dated the 30th November 1914, arising out of Civil Suit No. 117 of 1910, on the file of the Subordinate Judge, Balaghat, dated the 28th February 1914.

Mr. A. J. Balm, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Tikaram, the appellant in this Court, is the great-grandson of one Chimna, who in 1258 Fasli (1848-49 A. D.) obtained from the predecessor in title of the respondents a lease of Mauza Singola in the Bhadra Zemindari. The respondents are the inferior proprietors of the village, the superior proprietor being the Zemin-dar.

The suit out of which this second appeal arises was instituted on the 4th November 1910 by the appellant's father, Pandurang, who claimed to be perpetual lessee of the village and entitled as such to all timber. The defendants were said to have no rights over the jungle and against them damages were asked for in respect of timber felled between the years 1905 to 1910, both inclusive. The relief claimed included also an injunction restraining the defendants from cutting any timber in future.

At the 30 years settlement in 1865, there was no jungle, either dochand or fazil, in the village. At the current settlement the plaintiff's father, Pandurang, was given protected status. For the purposes of this appeal it must be taken that such timber as the defendants felled or is still standing was of spontaneous growth.

The trial Judge found the lease to be a perpetual one by reason of certain decisions in previous suits between the inferior proprietor, Saku Bai, on the one hand and the plaintiff's grandfather, Gondu, on the other and held that the plaintiff as perpetual lessee was entitled to all timber and forest in the village. The injunction prayed for was granted and the defendants were ordered to pay Rs. 107 as damages, part of the claim for money being dismissed as time-barred.

In appeal the District Judge held that the previous decisions did not operate as res judicata and that the plaintiff had no right to any timber. The decree of the trial Judge was accordingly reversed and the suit dismissed in toto.

In second appeal the plea of res judicata is again pressed on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant. The history of the previous litigation is given in paragraphs 9 to 14 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment. No question whatever was decided in the earliest suit (No. 99 of 1873) in which Saku Bai sought to eject Gondu on the ground that his lease had expired. The claim was dismissed on the 16th June 1874, under section 114, Act VIII of 1859, the plaintiff being absent and unrepresented while the defendant was present. An account of the various proceedings before and after decree will be found in Exhibit P.16, a copy of the Commissioner's appellate judgment in Suit No. 8 of 1885, in which Saku Bai made a second attempt to eject Gondu, again alleging that his lease had expired many years back and that he refused to vacate. The Commissioner's judgment makes it perfectly clear that he dismissed the suit of 1885 because section 114, Act VIII of 1859, expressly precluded the plaintiff from bringing a fresh suit on the same cause of action. Saku Bai's third attempt at ejectment was made in Suit No. 89 of 1885, but failed as appears from Exhibit P.20, copy of the judgment delivered on the 6th August 1886. It was held that beyond issuing a notice to quit under section 106, Transfer of Property Act, Saku Bai had done nothing to change her position with reference to her Thekedar and that the Commissioner's decision in Suit No. 8 of 1885, therefore, operated as res judicata.

So far as these three suits are concerned, I am clearly of opinion that they in no way settle the question whether the appellant was not a perpetual lessee. It was held by the Privy Council in Ohand Kour v. Partab Singh (1) that the dismissal of a suit in terms of section 102, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, the counterpart of section 114 in the Code of 1859, was plainly not intended to operate in favour of the defendant as res judicata. The judgment of their Lordships goes on (at page 102) to describe the effect of sections 102 and 103 taken together as follows:—

"They impose a certain disability upon the plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed. He is thereby precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. Now the cause of action has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant, nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour."

There has never been a decision that the Thekedar was a perpetual lessee and consequently there can be no application of section 11 of the present Civil Procedure Code to the issue whether he is or is not such a lessee.

A fourth suit remains to be noticed, namely, No. 63 of 1884. The record of this has been destroyed and all our knowledge of it is derived from the register of Civil Suits of which Exhibit P.13 gives the relevant extract. Exhibit P.6 is said to be a copy of the plaint, but it is a private document and as the trial Judge pointed out in the 13th paragraph of his judgment, there is no adequate proof that a plaint in the same terms was actually filed. Exhibit P.13 shows merely that Gondu sued Saku Bai for Rs. 102 8-0 as "damages in respect of the forest of Manza Singola," obtained an ex parte decree for Rs. 102 8 0 and costs and recovered his claim in full upon an application for execution. Now a defendant cannot avoid the application of the principle of res judicata by saying that he did not appear at the trial, but the conclusive effect of the decision is confined to the point actually decided: See Modhusudan Shaha Mundul v. Brae (2). And without the pleadings and issues we cannot be sure of the basis laid by Gondu for his claim. He may have sued because some action on the part of Saku Bai had infringed his right of nistar and the claim may have had no reference to timber or even trees of any kind. It certainly cannot be assumed that the plaint included a prayer for declaration of Gondu's exclusive title to the jungle as a whole. Nor can we be sure that any timber existed so far back as 1884. For the appellant paragraph 16 of the defendant's written statement, dated the 2nd March 1911, is relied on as amounting to an admission that Gondu set up exclusive title, but I am unable to extract any such admission from the words employed, though they doubtless indicate misapprehension regarding the effect of an ex parte decree.

In my opinion the question whether the appellant is a perpetual lessee is not res judicata. Apart from the previous decisions there is admittedly no basis for a finding in his favour on the point. Qua thekedar he has not, in the absence of any contract or local usage to the contrary, any right to fell timber, nor does the mere grant of protected status confer on him any right to cut down trees and appropriate them to his own use, if he had no such right before the grant of that status: See Jaswant Singh v. Musammatt Jasoda (3) in which all the case-law on the subject is reviewed. There was no jungle at all when the lease was originally given and the parties could not then have contemplated the lessee having the exclusive right to fell timber. Had the appellant or any forefather of his planted the trees cut down, the position might be different, the principle embodied in section 108 (h), Transfer of Property Act, being applicable as was held in Sitabai v. Shambhu Sonu (4). Where, as in the present case, the trees are of spontaneous growth there appears to be no equity in the lessee's favour.

In so far then as the appellant's claim to damages and an injunction rests on exclusive title to the trees cut it has, in my opinion, been rightly dismissed. He relies, however, on adverse possession since the decision in Gondu's favour of Suit No. 63 of 1884. It is said that if Gondu had no title to trees before that decision, he and his descendants acquired one by adverse possession since its date. This is a new plea of which no trace can be found in the pleadings. I have already pointed out that we have no sure indication of the right upon which Gondu based his suit for damages or that his claim related to trees at all. Without an issue on the new point and evidence showing that Gondu asserted an exclusive right to fell trees and prevented his lessor from felling any, a finding that the appellant has acquired an exclusive title to trees could not be reached. It has further to be observed that Saku Bai is shown to have died within 12 years of the commencement of this litigation, so that if section 28 of the Indian Limitation Act was to be relied on. Article 141 of the Limitation Schedule would not admit of its application.

No damages have been claimed on the ground that the lessor, though the owner of the trees, could not legally enter to fell any. Nor has evidence been given to show what damage, if any, the Thekedar suffered from this point of view. I must not, therefore, be understood to decide that the defendants respondents are entitled as owners of the trees to enter and fell at their pleasure. There is clear authority to the contrary in Daryaosingh v. Sitru Mokasi (5) and Badam v. Ganga Dei (6). As remarked by me in Nanaji v. Kashiram Second Appeal No. 793 of 1909, decided on the 17th February 1910) if the lessor desires to take out timber he must, by arrangement with his lessee, acquire permission to go on the ground for the purpose. Of course it will not be open to the Thekedar to arbitrarily refuse permission when the inferior proprietor, as owner of timber, having armed himself with any authority to cut, which Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from a judgment of Mr Justice Walsh, dated the 22nd February 1917.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Abdur Rahim says that he kept a pedlar's shop in the City of Meerut; the goods from this shop were taken from time to time to fairs and exhibitions. His father Abdul Qayum carried on the same business. He was declared an insolvent some time prior to 1913. Abdul Qayum had his shop in the Meerut Cantonments, quite separate and distinct from the shop kept by Abdur Rahim. In the year 1913, Abdur Rahim took a large amount of goods (most of them woollen goods) to the fair or exhibition held at Bulandshahr. According to the plaintiff Sital Prasad (respondent to this appeal and a creditor of Abdul Qayum, the insolvent) presented an application based on wrong allegations to the Additional Judge of Meerut. The date of the application, which is No. 35C on the record, was the 13th of February 1913, and the prayer in it was that the goods of Abdur Rahim in the exhibition at Bulandshahr might be taken into the custody of the Court as the shop and the goods were the shop and the goods of Abdul Qayum the insolvent. The Additional Judge of Meerut ordered the Receiver to attach the goods. The Receiver on the 14th of February acting upon indications given by Sital Prasad attached all the goods at the exhibition, the value of which the plaintiff says was Rs. 500, packed them in boxes and brought them into Meerut. On the 18th of February Abdur Rahim presented an application to the Court which had attached the goods and prayed that after thorough enquiry made by the Court the attached goods might be declared the property of Abdur Rahim and released in his favour. On the 4th of July 1913 the application was granted and on the 5th Abdur Rahim asked for the return of the goods. Upon this Sital Prasad objected to the delivery, as he said he intended to appeal to the High Court at Allahabad, and prayed that the goods might remain in the custody of a Receiver pending the result of his appeal. On the 4th of July 1913 Sital Prasad got an injunction from this Court and he also got permission to appeal from the order of the Additional Judge of Meerut. This appeal was heard on the 6th of December 1913 and dismissed. The goods which had been attached were returned to Abdur Rahim on the 9th of January 1914, and were found to be badly damaged. There has been some confusion as regards the cause of damage. In certain places in the judgment of the Courts below the damage is attributed to destruction by "white ants." It is not easy to understand why or how the white ants were introduced into the case. What Abdur Rahim said was the cause of the mischief done was the work of insects such as appear in woollen goods when they are shut up and not aired during the rainy season, and this was the season in which the goods, which were to have been released on the 4th of July 1913, remained in the custody of the Receiver until the 9th of January 1914, when they were returned. The defence put in by Sital Prasad was to the effect that he was only a creditor and that he informed the Court of what he had ascertained and from which he was satisfied that the goods were not the goods of Abdur Rahim but the goods of Abdul Qayum. He maintains that he acted in good faith and that if any damage was caused to the goods it was the Receiver's act. Abdur Rahim and Abdul Qayum, he said, were joint, had no separate capital and when the goods were at the Bulandshahr fair Abdul Qayum was ostensibly in possession of them. He maintains that he had never applied for the detention of the goods but that security should be taken from Abdur Rahim if they were returned to him. From the above statement it will be seen that the goods (which are found to have been damaged by the agency of insects) would not have passed from the possession of the appellant on the 14th of February 1913, had it not been for the application presented by Sital Prasad in the Court of the Additional Judge at Meerut on the 13th of February 1913. We have heard the contents of the application made by Sital Prasad (paper No. 35C of the record). It is supported by an affidavit sworn to by Sital Prasad. In this affidavit Sital Prasad solemnly affirms that the insolvent Abdul Qayum had not sold his goods but had taken them to the Bulandshahr exhibition. No attempt was made to dispute the allegations that it was Sital Prasad who identified and pointed out the goods which the Receiver attached. Sital Prasad must, therefore, have been fully aware that a large number of the goods attached, more than half of them, were goods wholly or mainly manufactured from wool. The Civil Courts have found that the act of Sital Prasad was a wrongful act. This being so, he became responsible for the ordinary consequences which were likely to result from this wrongful act of attachment. Furthermore when the appellant applied for the goods to be handed back to him as they had been found by the Court to be his goods, the respondent again opposed the application (see paper No. 39C) and prevented their return. Regarding this opposition the learned Judge of this Court rightly observes that the order made by the Court which had heard the case has an important bearing upon the question whether the defendant Sital Prasad was acting without reasonable and probable cause, because that order could not have been made unless the Court realised that although it had decided against the defendant, there was reasonable ground for the defendant appealing to the High Court. We do not for a moment question the right of appeal presented by Sital Prasad, and we allow that the Court granting leave to appeal must have considered that there was a good case for such an appeal. But was there an equal necessity for the application which followed and in which Sital Prasad asked for an injunction restraining the release of the goods pending the appeal? The learned Judge of this Court rightly observes that from the moment Sital Prasad applied for this injunction, a totally different set of consideration arises. It was a fresh act done by Sital Prasad and he adds that it was necessary for Abdur Rahim if he had a case to show, if he relied upon this act of Sital Prasad, that such act or application was a wrong to him and that the damage done by the animals was the result of that order. The finding of the Munsif upon this matter is somewhat loosely worded. He says the goods probably got damaged during the period that the appeal was pending in the High Court. It is a well known fact that goods are generally eaten up by worms, as he calls them, during the rains. The lower Appellate Court expressed itself satisfied that the immediate result of the attachment was the damage done to the goods and the deterioration in their prices. This point, he adds, has been fully dealt with by the learned Munsif in his judgment and he decides it against the appellant before him (i.e., Sital Prasad). Some attempt was made to attack this finding as being based on no evidence, but this point was not taken in the appeal or petition either to the learned Judge of this Court or to us. Sital Prasad knew that the goods which he had attached were articles mainly made from wool, he knew as every inhabitant of this part of India knows that woollen goods packed away in boxes during the rains breed, as a natural and probable consequence, worms which riddle woollen articles through and render them worthless. Generally speaking, as Bovill, Chief Justice, pointed out in Sharp v. Fowell (1): "One who commits a wrongful act is responsible for the ordinary consequences which are liable to result therefrom. But, generally speaking, he is not liable for damage which is not the natural or ordinary consequences of such an act, unless it be shown that he knows, or has reasonable means of knowing, that consequences not usually resulting from the act are by reason of some existing cause, likely to intervene so as to occasion damage to a third person." The existing cause, of which Sital Prasad was fully aware, was that these woollen goods were about to be shut up and owing to climatic causes which prevail during the rains, would be damaged most materially by insects bred and breeding in them whilst they were so shut up. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kissori Mohun Roy v. Harsukh Das (2) point out that "there is no analogy between the two systems regarding the law of execution which prevails in India and which prevails in England. In England the execution of a decree for money is entrusted to the Sheriff, an officer who is bound to use his own discretion and is directly responsible to those interested for the illegal seizure of goods which do not belong to the judgment-debtor. In India warrants for attachment in security are issued on the ex parte application of the creditor, who is bound to specify the property which he desires to attach and its estimated value." The illegal attachment of Abdur Rabim's goods was the direct act of Sital Prasad for which he became immediately responsible in law, and the litigation which underlay and consequent depreciation of the goods together with the climatic conditions which contributed still further to that depreciation may well be considered the natural and necessary consequences of that unlawful act. We do not think that in a case of this kind any question of reasonable and probable cause arises and that it is for the plaintiff to prove the absence of reasonable and probable cause.

As regards damages, after hearing both parties we think that the damages assessed by the Additional Judge of Meerut were fair and just damages.

We decree the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this Court and restore that of the lower Appellate Court with costs of both hearings in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 45 (1)—Sale of village share—Occupancy rights in sir land, surrender of—Surrender, validity of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65, applicability of—Parties contravening provisions of Statute, effect of—In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis, applicability of.

The defendants sold to the plaintiff their share in a village, reserving to themselves the occupancy rights in the sir land, and on the same day executed another deed by which they surrendered their occupancy right in the sir land accrued to them by virtue of the sale. The plaintiff was put in possession of the village share under the sale-deed and of the land under the surrender deed, but the defendants ejected him on a subsequent date. The plaintiff brought the present suit for possession of the land surrendered:

Held, (1) that the mere fact of the possession having been delivered to the plaintiff did not suffice to separate the transaction of surrender from that of sale and that the surrender must be held to be void under the provisions of section 45 (1) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act. [p. 796, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to get back the consideration for the surrender, as both the parties knew that they were contravening the provisions of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act and, therefore, the maxim in pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis applied. [p. 796, col. 2.]

The test as to whether a surrender in such a case is an evasion of the provisions of section 45 (1) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act consists in the fact as to whether the transaction is distinctly separate from that of sale of the village share. [p. 796, col. 1.]

If a covenant to relinquish the sir lands is part of the transaction of sale or of mortgage, then the agreement to surrender will be void and unenforceable, no matter what ingenious devices may be employed to give colour to it. If the Court is satisfied that there was first of all a transfer by way of sale or mortgage and that the transferee, having obtained the status of an ex-proprietary tenant with full knowledge of that fact and of the rights preserved to him by the Statute, deliberately chooses, as a separate transaction, to relinquish his ex-proprietary tenancy into the hands of new proprietor, or of the mortgagee in possession, then the law cannot go further in the way of protecting a reckless and imprudent man against the consequences of his own acts. [p. 795, col. 2; p. 796, col. 1.]

Section 65 of the Contract Act has no application, where the contract embodies a purpose known to be illegal to which both sides are parties. [p. 796, col. 2.]

Mr. M. Bhowani Shankar Niyogi, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree passed by the District Judge, Saugor, which set aside a decree of the Munsif, Raheli, and dismissed the present appellant's suit for possession of four sir fields in Monza Chbindli.

On the 30th October 1916, the defendants sold their $10\frac{2}{3}$ -pies share in the village to the plaintiff, who owns a 5-annas 4-pies share. The sale-deed reserves to the vendors their right to occupy the sir land and, therefore, does not come within the scope of section 45 (1) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898. On the same day, however, the defendants executed another deed (Exhibit P-2) by which in consideration of old debts aggregating Rs. 180 and a cash payment of Rs. 320 or Rs. 500 in all, they surrendered the occupancy right accrued to them in the sir of their share by virtue of the sale aforesaid. The plaintiff was put in possession under the surrender and it is common ground that he was the defendants' sole landlord, their share within the land in dispute having constituted a separate patti. On the 21st June 1917 the defendants ejected him from the land to which the surrender relates and on the 8th August following he brought the suit out of which this second appeal arises. In the plaint he claimed restoration to possession and any other relief which the Court might consider appropriate. The defence, so far as we are here concerned with it, was that the surrender amounted to an evasion of the law contained in section 45 of the Tenancy Act and was, therefore, void. This plea was overruled by the learned Munsif, on the ground that a surrender of occupancy right is permissible under section 35 of the Tenancy Act and is not prohibited by section 45.

In appeal the District Judge held, on the authority of the decision of the Privy Council in Moti Chand v. Ikram Ullah Khan (1) and of Mir Dad Khan v. Ramzan Khan (2), that the sale and surrender together constituted a single transaction, the object of which was to avoid the necessity of obtaining the sanction prescribed by section 45 (1), Tenancy Act, and was, therefore, illegal and void. The plea that the plaintiff should recover Rs. 500; the consideration for the surrender was not considered on the ground that this relief had not been expressly asked for in the Court of first instance. In this Court it is not and could not be denied that section 45 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, is for the purposes of this appeal identical in purport with section 10 of the N. W. P. Tenancy Act, 1901. For the appellant it is sought to distinguish the facts in Moti Chand v. Ikram Ullah Khan (1) (above cited), on the ground that there the plaintiff (vendee) sought to enforce not a transfer but an executory agreement to surrender the ex-proprietary holding. The later Allahabad case is sought to be distinguished on the ground that the transfer was a mortgage and not a sale; actual possession of the sir did not pass to the mortgagee under the relinquishment. It is urged that the surrender can be contested only under section 36 of the Tenancy Act and that once the vendors surrendered their occupancy right and put the landlord in possession, their title was finally extinguished.

In my opinion the true test in cases like the present is that laid down by Piggott, J., in Mir Dad Khan v. Ramzan Khan (2) (above cited). In the words of that learned Judge:—

"If a covenant to relinquish the sir lands is part of the transaction of sale or of mortgage, then the agreement to surrender will be void and unenforceable, no matter what ingenious devices may be employed to give colour to it. If the Court is satisfied that there was first of all a transfer by way of sale or mortgage and that the transferee, having obtained the status of an ex-proprietary tenant, with full knowledge of that fact and of the rights preserved to him by the Statute, deliberately chooses, as a separate transaction, to relinquish his ex-proprietary tenancy into the hands of the new proprietor, or of the mortgagee in possession, then the law cannot go further in the way of protecting a reckless and imprudent man against the consequence of his own acts."

For a case of the latter kind I may refer to Lekhraj v. Parshadi (3). In the present case there is admittedly a design to evade the requirements of sub-section (1) of section 45 of the Tenancy Act, the two deeds of even date being executed not as separate transactions but as parts of a single design. In the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moti Ohand v. Ikram Ullah Khan (1) such a device is in contravention of the policy of the Act and contrary to law and is, therefore, illegal and void. The mere fact that the plaintiff obtained actual possession does not, in my opinion, suffice to separate the surrender from the sale: indeed it is not even suggested for the appellant that such was the effect of his occupation. The appellant has nothing but the surrender as a basis for his title. That surrender must be held void no less than the agreement for relinquishment coupled with the deed of relinquishment, dated respectively the 2nd and 5th May 1903, which were considered by the Privy Council in Moti Ohand v. Ikram Ullah Khan (1). I hold, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court's dismissal of the claim for possession was right and must be upheld.

It remains to deal with the contention that the appellant should at least get back the consideration for the surrender. This should have been dealt with by the lower Appellate Court in view of the prayer in the plaint for other relief, which has already been mentioned. It is urged for the appellant that having once obtained possession he should not have been ousted by the defendants and should, therefore, be treated much as if he had retained possession all along and not been ousted by the defendants. The contention is plausible but no authority is cited in support of it. The actual position obtaining is that the defendants are in possession while the plaintiff seeks to enforce against them an agreement which is void. Both parties knew that when the sale and surrender were executed they were contravening the provisions of the Tenancy Act. The plaintiff as the defendants' creditor was certainly not less to blame than the defendants, and the maxim in piri delicto, potior est conditio defendantis would seem to apply. Section 65, Indian Contract Act, has no application where the contract embodies a purpose known to be illegal to which both sides are parties. For similar cases I may refer to Marlidhar v. Pem Raj (4) and Dipan Rai v. Ram Khelawan Rai (5). The position in Bahoran Upadhyay v. Uttamgir (6) was practically the reverse of what obtains here: in that case the plaintiff sued the mortgagor of an occupancy holding to recover possession upon the ground that the mortgage was void under the Tenancy Act without repaying the mortgagee the money he had received, and it was held on the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity that the mortgagor could not retain the mortgage money in addition to regaining the property.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. In the lower Courts costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

Before the interest of a party can be terminated under the provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is necessary that the service of notice in accordance with the statutory procedure laid down in the section should be proved. [p. 798, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Jessore, dated the 30th January 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Jhenidab, dated the 30th June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Surendra Nath Bose), for the Appellants.—The defendants are appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of title against defendants who were alleged to be under *raiya*s. The plaintiff landlord's interest was sold and was purchased by the superior landlord. The question is whether the plaintiff is a tenure-holder or a raiya. We alleged that after notice under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the plaintiff's interest was extinguished, he being an under-raiya. The plaintiff claimed to be an intermediate tenure-holder, the original vernacular words being madhyasatwabisistha. The Appellate Court found that the plaintiff was a raiya, hence his right could not be annulled. My point is that the plaintiff cannot plead anything contrary to what he states in his plaint.

Babu Prabhat Chandra Dutt, for the Respondents.—The finding of the learned Judge is quite correct. The words do not necessarily mean an under-tenure holder. They can also be used to mean a raiya. Hence his right could not be annulled.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—The defendants in this case appeal against the decision of the learned Additional Judge of Jessore, dated the 30th January 1917, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Jhenidab. The plaintiffs brought the suit for declaration of title to and possession of certain land. The title pleaded in the plaint, according to the English translation of the vernacular document, was that the plaintiffs claimed a subordinate intermediate tenure, and those words are strengthened by the nature of the enjoyment that the plaintiffs alleged they had in the land in suit. What happened was this. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiffs are not either tenure-holders or under-tenure-holders but are *raiya*s with rights of occupancy, and in this case the defendants are not entitled to annul the interest of the plaintiffs under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Whether that can be supported turns on this; whether the English translation of the allegation that the plaintiffs put forward in their plaint that they were subordinate intermediate tenure-holders is an accurate translation of the original document. It is suggested that the subordinate intermediate tenure-holder only meant, if due regard is had to the vernacular words used, that the plaintiffs were holding under a tenure holder without defining or limiting the nature of the interest of the plaintiffs. The words used in the vernacular do not support that contention. It is quite clear that the plaintiffs came to trial with the allegation that they were tenure holders within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If that is so, the learned Judge was clearly wrong in finding that the plaintiffs were occupancy-*raiya*s, contrary to the allegation set up in the plaint on which they asked the Court to adjudicate in their favour. I do not think that the learned Judge was entitled on the facts to find that the plaintiffs were *raiya*s with rights of occupancy. The highest that could be held was that the plaintiffs had the interest that was set up in the plaint, namely that they were under-tenure-holders within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Then, one other point arises and that is this: In the view of the learned Judge, it became unnecessary to dispose of the second issue, because in his view the plaintiffs being *raiya*s with rights of occupancy, the Bengal Tenancy Act did not give the defendants any right to annul such an interest. It is necessary that the service of the notice in accordance with the statutory procedure laid down in the Bengal Tenancy Act should be proved before the interest of the plaintiffs could be terminated. In the view of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court, it was not necessary to enquire and decide whether or not such a notice had been duly served. The case must, therefore, go back to the Court of the learned Judge to have the appeal re-heard on the question as to whether the interest of the plaintiffs has been duly annulled under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and if it appears that the matter has not been properly determined in the Court of first instance, the learned Judge will be at liberty to send the case back to the Court of first instance for the purpose of taking any further or additional evidence that may be considered necessary, in order to prove that the interest of the plaintiffs has been duly annulled under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Costs will abide the result of the further hearing before the learned Additional Judge.

DUVAL, J.—I agree.

Case sent back.

DHANSUKHDASS MARWADI—
DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

ZANGO—PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER—
DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 58, 63—Claim proceedings—Objection dismissed—Suit to establish title by objector—Transfer intended to defeat and delay creditors—Attaching creditor, whether can object to validity of transfer in defence—Suit to set aside transfer in representative capacity, whether necessary—Fraudulent transaction, whether can be avoided apart from s. 53, Transfer of Property Act.

In a suit for declaration of title by a purchaser from a judgment-debtor after the dismissal of his objection under Order XXI, rule 63 of the Civil Procedure Code, the attaching decree-holder is entitled to set up a defence that the sale in favour of the plaintiff was a sham transaction and was intended to defraud the creditors of the judgment-debtor. [p. 801, col. 1.]

A suit under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act to avoid a transfer alleged to have been made with intent to defraud the creditors of the transferor need not necessarily be brought by one of several creditors in a representative capacity and a single creditor as a defendant in a suit to declare the transfer valid is entitled to avoid the plaintiff's transaction. [p. 801, col. 1.]

A defendant may use in defence a plea which would furnish him with ground for a suit, as this procedure would avoid multiplicity of suits. [p. 801, col. 1.]

Sheo Ram v. Lalman, 13 C. P. L. R. 163, followed.

A fraudulent and colourable transfer may be challenged otherwise than under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, for instance as being a sham transaction not intended to have any effect whatever. [p. 801, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 80 of 1918, decided on the 7th September 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 37 of 1918, in the Court of the 2nd Munsif, Akola, dated the 29th June 1918.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Dhansukhdas, the appellant in this Court, obtained on the 21st December 1916 a decree for money against the respondent Lakshmi, and in execution on the 26th July 1917 attached a certain field which she held in succession to her husband. The respondent Jhango had bought the field from Musammatt Lakshmi on the 10th January 1917, and on the strength of the conveyance (Exhibit P-1) objected to the attachment. Dhansukhdas opposed the objection on several grounds and it was dismissed by the executing Court on the ground that the alleged sale was a bogus and fraudulent one, Jhango not being a bona fide purchaser for value. Jhango then filed the suit out of which the present appeal arises to obtain a declaration of his right to the field and Dhansukhdas, after denying the sale altogether, went on to plead that if established, it was a bogus and fraudulent transaction without consideration and intended to defraud and delay creditors. Lakshmi pleaded that the sale was a genuine one, the price (Rs. 400) being required by her to pay off debts incurred by her husband and to meet necessary expenditure. The plaintiff in his reply pleaded as follows:—

DHANSUKHDAS v. ZANGOO.

"The sale is neither bogus nor fraudulent nor without consideration, nor was it intended to defraud the creditors, but on the contrary to partly pay off the debts of defendant No. 2's husband as well as for her own maintenance. Plaintiff had no knowledge of the decree of the defendant No. 1."

The following issues were framed:—

"1. Was the sale by defendant No. 2 to plaintiff for valid consideration and for legal necessity as alleged.

2. Is the plaintiff entitled to the relief claimed?"

The trial Judge found that consideration passed and that legal necessity was made out, although its establishment was not essential to the success of the plaintiff's claim. The Judge proceeded to point out that there was no specific issue embodying the questions explicitly raised in the pleadings regarding the character of Exhibit P. No. 1, but nevertheless held that the sale was "not fraudulent and bogus for defrauding the creditors and defeating their claim."

Dhansukhdas appealed to the District Court and an Additional District Judge, without deciding any questions raised by the pleadings, held on the strength of the Full Bench decision in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) that in a suit of this kind the attaching decree-holder cannot in defence avoid under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, the alienation made by his judgment-debtor in the plaintiff's favour. Dhansukhdas has preferred this second appeal.

It is urged for the appellant that the decision of the Madras Full Bench should not be followed, that a suit under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, need not necessarily be brought by one of several creditors in a representative capacity, and that a single creditor as defendant in a suit like the present is entitled to avoid the plaintiff's transaction.

As remarked by the learned Additional District Judge, the practice in these Provinces has long been to allow such a defence, and after a careful perusal of the case which he relied upon and of the judgments in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) I have come to the conclusion that they do not furnish a sufficient ground for departing from that practice. In Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) two judgments were delivered. That of Coutts Trotter, J., appears to have decided no more than that a creditor other than the one who had obtained a decree for his debt and attached property in execution thereof could only sue under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, in a representative capacity, i.e., on behalf of himself and all other creditors; this is clear from the passage towards the close of the judgment, in which the learned Judge expressly followed Ishvar Timappa Hedge v. Devar Venkappa Shanbog (3) and on that ground held that the fact that the deed relied upon by the plaintiff was executed with intent to defraud the creditors of the transferor afforded the attaching defendant no answer to the plaintiff's claim. As pointed out by Krishnan, J., in Kottaurathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrakandi (4), Coutts Trotter, J., seems to have overlooked that the decree-holder had not only attached property but had obtained an order in his favour upon the objection filed under rule 58, Order XXI, First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. I understand, therefore, that in a case like the present Coutts Trotter, J., would have entertained the defence based on section 53, Transfer of Property Act.

Sheshagiri Aiyar, J., was a party to the decisions in both Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (2) and Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1), and in the later decision contented himself with stating that he had not been convinced that his view expressed in Palaniandi Ochetti v. Appavu Ochetti (2) was wrong. Seshagiri Aiyar, J., distinctly ruled in Palaniandi Ochetti v. Appavu Ochetti (2) that a representative suit is not necessary, but went on to lay down that a creditor can have no remedy against the property conveyed until the sale is set aside, and on this latter view based a further conclusion that as a defendant he is not entitled to avoid the conveyance by his defence.

The last sentence of his judgment shows that he reached this conclusion reluctantly.

The third Judge who took part in the Full Bench's decision declined to express an opinion on the question whether a suit by a creditor under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act must be brought in a representative capacity on behalf of the body of creditors, but apart from this he expressed a general concurrence in the views of Courts Trotter and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ. He also declined to approve of the proposition laid down in Abdul Kader v. Ali Meah (5) that anything which can be made the basis of a suit can be pleaded as a bar in action. He concluded with the remark that a sale such as the one now under consideration must be held to continue in force until it is set aside in proceedings properly instituted for the purpose.

In Kottarathil Ruthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Arkum Ohandrakundi (4), above cited, Krishnan and Ayling, JJ., agreed in holding that an attaching decree-holder whose attachment has been raised on the objection of a transferee of the attached property is not bound to bring a representative suit on behalf of all the creditors to set aside the transfer under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, but can sue on his own behalf alone. The decision in Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (6), which is relied upon here for the plaintiff respondent, was considered by both the Judges and they dissented from the view that a suit under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, must be brought by or on behalf of all the creditors. Krishnan, J., also pointed out that the actual decision in Ishvar Timappa Hegde v. Devar Venkappa Shanbog (3) was that a creditor who has not obtained a decree in his favour is nevertheless entitled to sue under that section and that in the Calcutta case the special right of suit given to a defeated decree-holder by rule 63, Order XXI, was not referred to. Krishnan, J., referred also to the Privy Council decision in Ochatterput Singh v. Maharaj Bahadur (7), another case relied on for the plaintiff-respondent, and give reasons which seem to me conclusive for thinking that the observation of their Lordships on page 217 of the report is no authority for the view that a suit under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, must be a representative one. The observation is as follows:—

"No issue was stated in this suit whether the transfers were or were not liable to be set aside at the instance of Dhunpat under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and no decree has been made for setting them aside. Such an issue could be raised and such a decree could be made only in a suit properly constituted for that purpose, and this suit was not so constituted either as to parties or otherwise."

I would also point out that the action out of which the appeal to the Privy Council arose was brought by Dhanput and his son and that the Judicial Committee's expression above quoted must be interpreted in the light of that fact.

In Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh (8) the Judicial Committee did not treat the institution of a separate suit as essential to make the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act available to the defendant. There, as in the present case, the plaintiff was the objector who had failed in the executing Court and sued to establish the right which he claimed to the property in dispute. It is true that the question now under consideration was not raised and that the transfer impeached was expressly held not to be a fraudulent one: nevertheless the fact that the application of the section to the circumstances was considered by the highest Tribunal cannot but be regarded as favourable to the present appellant.

In my opinion the mere fact that a transfer which can be impeached under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, is voidable only and must, therefore, continue in force until set aside is no sufficient reason for debarring a defendant from relying upon that section. It is not denied that the section could be relied on in answer to the objector's petition in execution proceedings and if the objection had succeeded instead of failing, the suit contemplated by rule 63, Order XXI, would necessarily have been brought by the appellant instead of the respondent Jhango. The result of such summary proceedings as those taken on objections preferred under rule 58, Order XXI, should not affect the power of the attaching decree-holder to support his attachment, and I agree with the view taken in Kotturathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi (4) that an attaching decree-holder has a personal right on an objection being allowed to sue by himself to avoid the objector's transfer. In support of the general position that a defendant may use in defence a plea which would furnish him with ground for a suit I may refer to Sheo Ram v. Lalman (9), where it was laid down that in a suit for ejectment by a subsequent transferee with notice it is open to the defendant to set up by way of defence a right to claim specific performance of the transferor's agreement to convey to him. The advantage of this view was explained in Jeyram v. Ganpati (10) to be that multiplicity of suits is thereby avoided. It is true, as urged for the plaintiff respondent, that the facts in Abdul Kader v. Ali Meah (5) are distinguishable. There the decree holder was the sole creditor. Nonetheless I hold for the reason just given that we may fairly apply to the circumstances of the present case the consideration that the attaching creditor can do as defendant what he might have done as plaintiff had he failed instead of succeeding in the matter of the objection to his attachment. The case is, therefore, remanded to the lower Appellate Court for consideration of the defence upon the merits.

I also observe for the guidance of the lower Appellate Court that the present appellant alleged the plaintiff's conveyance to be "bogus" and without consideration besides denying that any sale had taken place. I cannot but understand this pleading to mean that the sale was a mere sham and not intended to have any effect whatever. I am unable to accept a contention put forward for the plaintiff-respondent that the appellant did not mean to plead alternatively that the sale was a sham. It was pointed out by Stevens, J. C., in Lalchand v. Hasto Bai (11) that a fraudulent and colourable transfer may be challenged otherwise than under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the same view was expressed by both the Judges who were parties to the decision in Palaniandi Ohetti v. Appavu Ohettiar (2) (above cited). This aspect of the case must, therefore, not escape consideration.

A refund of the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of second appeal will be granted and all other costs hitherto incurred will be costs in the cause.

Case remanded.

BANWARI LAL v. RAM CHANDRA SINGH.

A Local Government has power to frame rules, under section 70 of the Civil Procedure Code, giving finality to orders passed by Revenue Courts in execution of certain decrees, and no suit can be brought to set aside an order under those rules by a person against whom such order has been made.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 26th April 1917.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Gokul Prasad and Radha Mohan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs' first appeal. A decree for sale of ancestral property belonging to the plaintiffs was passed by the Civil Court and the execution of that decree was transferred to the Court of Collector under the rules made by the Local Government under section 70 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The property was sold by auction and the sale was set aside by the Collector, but on appeal by the opposite party to the Commissioner the Collector's order was set aside and the sale was confirmed. The Commissioner's order was appealed to the Board of Revenue but the appeal was dismissed. Thereupon the plaintiffs brought the present suit and asked for a declaration that the sale made on the 20th of August 1914 was fraudulent and null and void and ineffectual according to law. The Court below has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that under the rules made by the Local Government no suit to set aside an order made under these rules can be brought by any person against whom such order has been made. The rule referred to is rule 32 of the rules made by the Local Government in the last clause. The position taken up by the appellants before us, to put it simply, is that the order passed by the Revenue Courts confirming a sale of this description has not that finality which a similar order would have if it had been passed by the ordinary Civil Court, that the Local Government has no power to make any such rules under section 70 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to give finality to the Revenue Court's order confirming the sale. It seems to us that the appeal is bound to fail. In cases where ancestral property is involved, the decree under the rules made by the Local Government under section 70, clause (1) (a), must be transmitted to the Court of the Collector for execution. Under sub-clause (b) of the same section the Local Government has power to confer upon the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector all or any of the powers which the Court might exercise in the execution of the decree if the execution thereof had not been transferred to the Collector. The Local Government has made such rules and it is, therefore, clear that it has conferred upon the Collector the power of passing an order of the same nature as the Civil Court would have passed and could have passed under Order XXI, rule 92; that is to say, an order which is final and absolute and cannot be questioned by a subsequent civil suit. Under sub-clause (c) of section 70, clause (1), the Local Government has power to arrange for appeals from the orders passed by Collectors under the rules framed by the Local Government; so that the appellate order passed by the Revenue Authorities has the same finality as the Collector's order would have had if it had been upheld. It is obvious to us that the law contemplated that the full powers exercisable by the Civil Court in execution of a decree should be transferred to the Collector in certain cases and as we have pointed out above, one of the powers of the Civil Court is to pass an order which is final and cannot be questioned by a regular suit under Order XXI, rule 92, clauses 1, 2 and 3. In our opinion there is no force in this appeal. We, therefore, dismiss it with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

of principal by agent of debtor—Entry, whether must appear in handwriting of agent—Authority of agent, proof of—Interpretation of Limitation Law.

The law of limitation must be strictly interpreted. [p. 804, col. 1.]

Where an agent of a debtor makes a part payment of the principal debt, the payment, in order to give a fresh start of limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act, must appear in the handwriting of the agent making it. Section 20 does not require that the payment should appear in the handwriting of the debtor himself. It must, however, be proved that the agent had authority to make the payment. [p. 803, col. 2; p. 804, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 28th May 1918, confirming that of the Officiating Munsif, 1st Court, Patna, dated the 30th January 1918.

Messrs. Purnendu Narayan Sinha and Sundar Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai Tribhuwan Nath Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in the suit, out of which this appeal arises, contracted to purchase a certain brick-kiln which contained some three lakhs of bricks. Many of the bricks, however, had disappeared and the defendant thereupon refused to pay the full price of the kiln and said he had paid sufficient. The plaintiff then sued him for Rs. 434 6-0 as price of the bricks. A decree was given for Rs. 134-12-0. It was on the 5th of August 1913 that the whole money was to have been paid, and the suit was not instituted till the 16th May 1917. Ordinarily, therefore, the suit would have been barred by limitation. The lower Courts, however, had found that there was a payment of Rs. 75 on behalf of the defendant through one Hussaini Mistry on the 8th of May 1914. It was found also that this payment of Rs. 75 was in part payment of the principal, and that no agreement had been come to between the parties as to payment of interest. The whole question before me turns on the point of limitation. Hussaini Mistry, by whom the payment was made, was a mason working for the defendant, who is a Pleader and wished to build a house with the bricks.

It is satisfactorily proved and admitted that Hussaini on the date above mentioned wrote in the book of the plaintiff "Rs. 75. Signed Banwari Babu—paid to Ram-chandra Singh—Guineas 4—Rs. 60 cash; Rs. 15 per pen of Hussaini, 18-5-14."

The Hon'ble Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha argues that this payment would not satisfy the condition of section 20 of the Limitation Act, which lays down that where part of a principal debt is paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised on his behalf, a fresh period of limitation starts from the time of such payment; provided that in the case of part payment of the principal debt, the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same. He contends that the payment must appear in the handwriting of the debtor, and not in that of a duly authorised agent, even if the payment is made by such agent. He relies on the Full Bench case of Mukhi Haji Rahmuttulla v. Coverji Bhuja (1). That case is, however, distinguishable. There the debtor had a duly authorised agent to pay the debt and that agent paid it, but the writing required by section 20 was made in the hand of the agent cashier.

The case of Joshi Bhaishankar v. Bai Parvati (2) is also distinguishable. In that case payment had not been made in the handwriting of the defendant, who seems to have paid the money, but in the hand of some one else at the request of defendant. In the case of Santishwar Mahanta v. Lakhikanta Mahanta (3) the case of Mukhi Haji Rahmuttulla v. Coverji Bhuja (1) is referred to, but it is clear there that the facts in the case had been misunderstood. In the case of Santishwar Mahanta v. Lakhikanta Mahanta (3) the endorsement was made by the debtor himself and the law has merely stated that the payment must be in the handwriting of the person making the payment. To me it seems clear that section 20 of the Limitation Act can have no other meaning than that the debtor or his duly authorized agent making the payment must make the fact of the payment appear in his own handwriting, that is to say, that if the agent makes the payment, it is the agent who is to make the entry.

(3) 4 Ind. Cas. 321; 13 C. W. N. 177; 35 C. 813; 5 M. L. T. 89.

RAMBHAROSA v. SUKH DAS.

The next point raised is that section 20 requires the payment to be made by the duly authorised agent of the debtor, and that in this case there is no evidence that Hussaini was duly authorised by his employer. It is difficult to say what degree of authority is required, and whether it is necessary for the employer to have given his authority in writing. In this case the plaintiff admits that he receives the money from Hussaini and shows the entry in his book. Neither of the lower Courts has noticed this point and no attempt has been made to find out whether due authority had been given. It clearly lay on the plaintiff to prove the authority. The defendant denies that he made the payment through Hussaini, and in the plaint there is no mention of this payment through Hussaini. The said Hussaini was not the defendant's servant but merely a mason. The law of limitation must be strictly interpreted, and it seems that a due authority to the agent is required, and none is proved in this case. I think, on that point, it must be held that payment by a person, who is not proved to be authorised, must fail to save limitation. I, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside the decrees of the lower Courts with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (b)— Compromise deed giving effect to arrangement arrived at between parties, whether compulsorily registrable—Document effecting division of property, whether requires registration.

A deed of compromise which gives effect to an arrangement arrived at between the parties about some estate is compulsorily registrable. Though a document containing a mere recital of past acts and of a past partition or merely declaring the divided status of the parties need not be registered; yet when the document itself is a record of property subjected to a division which took place on the date on which it was written and which declares that in certain immoveable properties certain parties had shares and that their former rights in certain immoveable properties are extinguished, the document falls within the provisions of section 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act and is compulsorily registrable. [p. 804, col. 2; p. 805, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, in Civil Appeal No. 275 of 1917, dated the 5th March 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 48 of 1917, in the Court of the 2nd Munsif, Raipur, dated the 3rd September 1917.

Mr. J. C. Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. P. Ohitale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is unnecessary to repeat the circumstances of the case, which are given in the judgments of the Courts below, for the argument here has been confined to one point, namely, whether Exhibit P-2 was rightly admitted in evidence. It is contended for the appellant that this document comes within the four corners of section 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act of 1908 and as it has not been registered, it is inadmissible in evidence and further that under section 91 of the Evidence Act no evidence of the terms of the contract can be given. It seems to me that there is force in this contention. It is admitted here that the plaintiffs' title to sue rests on the agreement evidenced by Exhibit P-2. A previous partition, as stated in that document, had taken place and the status of the sharers in the village had been changed. As that partition was found not to work harmoniously, the parties agreed to the terms given in Exhibit P-2 and roughly divided the estate into two blocks. It is not denied that the lands in the hands of each party so exchanged by this document exceeded Rs. 100 in value. It has been held that a deed of compromise which gives effect to some arrangement arrived at between the parties about some estate is compulsorily registrable and though a document containing a mere recital of past acts and of a past partition or merely declaring the divided status of the parties need not be registered; yet when the document itself is a record of property subjected to a division which took place on the date on which it was written and which declares that in certain immoveable properties certain parties had shares and that their former rights in certain immoveable properties are extinguished, it seems to me that that document falls within the provisions of section 17 (1 (b) of the Registration Act. That is the case here. P.2 cannot, therefore, be proved for want of registration. Then section 91 of the Evidence Act steps in to prevent the evidence of the particular division evidenced by Exhibit P.2 being proved. Plaintiffs must, therefore, lose their case.

The other defendants have not appealed but as the question which I have decided in this case is common to the question in all three, I must alter the decree of the lower Appellate Court in favour of all. Plaintiffs' suit will stand dismissed with costs. Respondent will pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 20 (2)—Execution of decree—Trees on ex-proprietary holding, whether liable to attachment and sale.

Trees existing on an ex-proprietary holding are appurtenant to the holding and are not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, in view of the provisions of section 20 (b) of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Execution first appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 18th January 1919.

Mr. P. D. Tandon, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. B. Lal and S. B. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the decree-holder applied for attachment of certain trees on four plots of land of which the judgment-debtor is the ex-proprietary tenant. Some of these trees are fruit-bearing trees and others are timber trees. Upon the objection of the judgment-debtor the Court below has disallowed the application of the decree-holder and he has preferred this appeal. In my opinion, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct. The trees existing on an ex-proprietary holding are appurtenant to the holding and are not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree in the same way as the holding itself is not liable to attachment and sale. There can be no doubt that an ex-proprietary holding cannot be sold in execution of a decree in view of the provisions of the Tenancy Act. On the principles which apply to the land itself, the trees which exist on the land and appertain to it cannot be sold. The case is fully covered by the decision of the Full Bench in Jugal v. Deoki Nandan (1). The case of Lalman v. Mannu Lal (2) is distinguishable. The facts in that case were perfectly different and the question which arose in it was not the same as the question involved in the present case. The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the object of the decree-holder is to sell the fruit of the trees mentioned in the application for execution. If the decree-holder wishes to sell the produce of the fruit-bearing trees as the property of the judgment-debtor, his application should be for the sale of the produce as it comes into existence and not for the sale of the trees, as is the application in the present case. I dismiss the application with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Procedure.*

In a suit to enforce a mortgage brought against the mortgagor and the purchaser of the equity of redemption, the question whether the mortgagor had a transferable interest ought not to be gone into. The sole question in such a suit is, whether the Court should enforce the security as regards the right, title and interest of the mortgagor, the case whether the mortgagor had a good interest to transfer being foreign to such suit. [p. 806, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the 1st Additional District Judge, 24-Pergannabs, dated the 7th February 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Diamond Harbour, dated the 30th April 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagendranath Ghosh, for the Appellants.—Plaintiffs are appellants before your Lordships. The suit was to enforce a mortgage. The real point is about the position and right of defendant No. 4 who had been added as a defendant. He turned out to be the landlord of the mortgaged property, who said that the defendants had no transferable interest and as such the mortgage could not be enforced, although the mortgage had been proved and the consideration had been proved to have legally passed. I submit that that is a point which is quite outside the scope of the present action. What has the Court to do in the present suit with the question whether the defendants (mortgagors) had a valid and good interest to transfer to the mortgagees? I question the authority of Priya Sakhi Debi v. Bireswar Samanta (1) in a case of this nature. That case is clearly distinguishable from the present one. The learned Judge thoroughly misdirected himself in widening the scope of the enquiry not warranted by the nature of the suit.

No one represented the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the plaintiffs against the decision of the learned Additional District Judge of the 24-Pergannabs dated the 7th February 1917, affirming the decision of the Munsif at Diamond Harbour. The plaintiffs brought the suit to enforce a mortgage, the defendants being the mortgagors and persons who were, or were supposed to be, the owners of the equity of redemption. The defendant No. 4, who apparently according to the plaintiffs' case was added or made a defendant on the ground that he was a purchaser of the equity of redemption, turned out during the course of the proceedings to be the landlord and he set up the case that the mortgagors had no interest which they could mortgage to the plaintiffs. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court agreeing with the Court of first instance held that, although the mortgage was proved and the consideration had been duly paid, the plaintiffs were not entitled to enforce the security on the ground that the mortgagors had not a transferable interest. Prima facie such a question ought not to be entered into in an ordinary suit to enforce a mortgage. The sole question in such a case is whether the Court should enforce the security as regards the right, title and interest of the mortgagors, and the case whether the mortgagors had a good interest to transfer to the mortgagees, or not is not a matter that ought to be gone into in a suit of this nature. Reliance was placed by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court on the decision of this Court in the case of Priya Sakhi Debi v. Bireswar Samanta (1), but that case is a very different case from the present one and the learned Judges in that case nowhere suggested that the course adopted in that case was one that ought to be adhered to in all cases. What they said was that the parties might by their conduct raise the question of title of a third party, but, having done so, they could not, at a later stage of the proceedings, question the course that had been adopted by the learned Judge with reference to that matter which prima facie ought not to have been raised or gone into in that suit. I think in a case like this, as in the majority of cases, the matter ought to be confined to what is the proper question in a mortgage suit, namely, whether the plaintiff iff is entitled to ask the Court to enforce the security. All questions of title either of the mortgagor or of anybody else are matters to be enquired into in other judicial proceedings. I think we ought to set aside the decision of the learned Additional District Judge and in lieu thereof declare that the mortgage-bond ought to be enforced in accordance with the terms of the law and remit the case to the Court of first instance to give effect to the above directions. The appellants are entitled to add their costs in all Courts to their mortgage security.

That being so, respondent can obtain a refund of the money paid by him only if he shows that certain properties belonging to him exclusively as his self-acquisition were threatened to be attached and to prevent such attachment he made the payment in question and that he had no family properties in his hands at all at the time of attachment. I am unable to accept the Subordinate Judge's disposal of the case on affidavits as satisfactory. The question should be properly tried on evidence. It is only if the respondent proves that his payment was an involuntary one occasioned by the decree being attempted to be executed against his own properties improperly that he will be entitled to the refund claimed. JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for Letters of Administration to the estate of one Shashi Kumar Sukul, who died on the 1st of February 1917. Shashi Kumar was the son of one Sheonandan Shukul and was the grandson of Guru Prasad Shukul, the common ancestor of the parties. Guru Prasad died leaving four sons, Jamuna, Moti, Kunta and Sheonandan. The petitioners, Surendra and Rajendra, are the sons of Jamuna, the petitioners Bindeswar and Batekrishna are the sons of Moti, and petitioner Birendra is the son of Kunta, and Debendra, who is the opposite party in this proceeding and the appellant before us, is another son of Kunta. I ought to state that the application was originally made on behalf of Surendra, Rajendra, Bindeswar and Batekrishna and the petitioners alleged that they, together with Debendra and Birendra, were the heirs of Shashi Kumar and were entitled to the grant of Letters of Administration. They stated that they had asked Debendra and Birendra to join in the application with them, but that they had refused. It appears that subsequently Birendra changed his mind and separately applied to be included in the grant of Letters of Administration to the estate of Shashi Kumar; so that we must regard Surendra, Rajendra, Bindeswar, Batekrishna and Birendra as the applicants for Letters of Administration. Their case is, as I have stated before, that they together with Debendra are the heirs of Shashi Kumar and are, therefore, entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration. This application was opposed by Debendra, and it is necessary to state here, and at once, the grounds upon which he opposed the application made on behalf of the petitioners. It appears that he opposed the grant substantially on two grounds; first on the ground that he was adopted in the Kritrima form by Shashi Kumar and that on such adoption he became joint with Shashi Kumar, and took the entire property held by Shashi Kumar, prior to his adoption, by survivorship, and that consequently there was no intestacy at the time of the death of Shashi Kumar and that no Letters of Administration could be granted to the estate of Shashi Kumar. That was the first position which was specifically taken up by him. His next point was that assuming that he was not so adopted, so far as Surendra, Rajendra, Bindeswar and Batekrishna are concerned, they are not the heirs of Shashi Kumar at all, inasmuch as their fathers Jamuna and Moti were not full brothers of Sheonandan but half brothers, the allegation of Debendra being that his father Kunta was a full brother of Sheonandan. It will be noticed, however, that though he puts forward his title in the first place exclusively, and in the second place jointly with Birendra, he does not himself apply for Letters of Administration at all; and indeed he cannot, because his whole case is that he was adopted by Shashi Kumar and that on such adoption he became a member of the joint family with Shashi Kumar, and that he succeeded to the property by survivorship and not by inheritance, and, therefore, if his case as to adoption is correct, Shashi Kumar left no estate to which Letters of Administration can be taken. On the other hand, so far as the second position taken up by him is concerned, undoubtedly he could apply for Letters of Administration, but it is useful to remember that he did not apply for Letters of Administration and merely contented himself with opposing the application made on behalf of the petitioners. I ought to mention, however, that in this Court the appellant applied to amend his petition of objection by inserting the following paragraph in the body of his petition: "That assuming but not admitting that the late Babu Shashi Kumar Shukul left any separate estate which your petitioner did not take by survivorship, your petitioner submits that he as next-of-kin to the deceased, and under the circumstances of the case, is entitled to the grant of the Letters of Administration in preference to the applicants". In my view I would not be justified in allowing this amendment at this late stage, especially as he does not apply even now for a grant of Letters of Administration in due form. And such an application must obviously be made not here, but in the District Court.

DEBENDRA PRASAD V. SUBENDRA PRASAD.

Upon the pleadings of the parties, the learned District Judge who heard the case framed certain issues. They are:—

(1) Are the applicants sons of full brothers of Babu Sheonandan Prasad Shukul, father of the deceased?

(2) Was Debendra Prasad Shukul adopted by the deceased Shashi Kumar Shukul as a son in the Kritrima form? If so, is such adoption valid and legal?

(3) Are the parties to this case subject to the Mithila or the Benares School of Hindu Law?

(4) Are the applicants entitled to Letters of Administration as claimed by them?

In my view the only issue which properly arose in the case on the pleadings between the parties is the 4th issue, namely, are the applicants entitled to Letters of Administration, as claimed by them,

Issue No. 1 would undoubtedly have arisen if Debendra had in fact applied for Letters of Administration, but for the reason which I shall give in the course of my judgment, inasmuch as he was not an applicant for Letters of Administration, that issue did not at all arise. So far as issues Nos. 2 and 3 are concerned, I entertain no doubt at all that these were not questions for a Court dealing with testamentary and intestate matters to decide. The learned District Judge, however, dealt with all these questions very fully and very elaborately and answered all the questions which he put to himself in favour of the petitioners and against the objector. The objector appeals and on his behalf Mr. K. B. Dutt proposed to advance every contention that had been advanced on behalf of his client in the Court below, but in my view any discussion of the question of adoption or of the other question, namely, whether Jamuna and Moti were full or half brothers of Sheonandan, is wholly unnecessary in this case. I entertain no doubt at all that a Court of Probate is not only entitled but even bound to enter into questions of title, if it is necessary to decide that question in order to determine which of the two contesting parties is entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration, but that is not the point here. The position of the objector is not that he is entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration because, as the son of Shashi Kumar, he is preferentially entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration. His position on the other hand is, that no one is entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration, because he was jointly entitled to the estate before the death of Shashi Kumar and is solely entitled to it now, not by inheritance but by survivorship. It will be noticed, therefore, that it is the paramount title which he puts forward in issue in this matter, and the question for our determination is, is a Court of Probate bound to go into a question of paramount title in matters dealing with a grant of Letters of Administration?

Mr. K. B. Dutt on behalf of the appellant urges, and very strongly and forcibly urges, that it is the "interest" of the applicant which gives him title to a grant of Letters of Administration. That proposition may be conceded at once. But the applicants do allege an "interest" in their petition. They say that Shashi Kumar died leaving the petitioners as the sons of Jamuna and Moti, and Debendra and Birendra as the sons of Kunta, his next heirs. I am not dealing at present with the second point that has been raised by Mr. K. B. Dutt, namely whether Jamuna and Moti were full brothers or half brothers of Sheonandan. I propose to discuss it later. But in discussing the first point raised by Mr. Dutt on the pedigree itself as furnished by the petitioners and as admitted by the appellant they are undoubtedly the heirs of Shashi Kumar. There is no dispute about that, but Debendra's position is: "I am going to prove my adoption. When once I prove my adoption, I am going to contend that I became a member of the joint family as soon as I was adopted, and that Shashi Kumar left no estate at all to which Letters of Administration could be taken in these proceedings." In other words, the question of paramount title is involved in the contention which Mr. Dutt puts forward on behalf of his client.

It is, therefore, necessary to see how the Courts of Law have dealt with these matters. The leading case on the subject so far as Indian Courts are concerned is the case of Kulbantia (Raghoobur Hazam) v. Bahadoor Hazam (1). That was a case in which Letters of Administration had already been granted by the Court to the brother of the deceased. Thereupon the widow of the deceased came to Court and asked the Court to cancel the letters issued in favour of the brother and to grant to her the Letters of Administration, on the ground that the property left by her husband was his separate property and that, therefore, she as the Hindu widow was entitled to inherit that property. This position was contested by the brother; his point was that he and the deceased were joint and that, therefore, there was no estate which could be inherited by the widow. Mr. Justice Sale, who had considerable experience in these matters, came to the conclusion that the question whether the deceased was joint with his brother and left joint property did not arise in the case at all. He proceeded merely upon the allegation of the widow, namely, that there was separate property, and held that as a widow was entitled to succeed to the separate property of her husband under the Mitakshra School of Hindu Law, she was entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration to the estate of her deceased husband.

Now this case has been consistently followed not only on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court, but also on the Appellate Side of the Calcutta High Court. It is necessary to say this in view of the argument that the decision reported as Kulbantia v. Bahadur Hazam (1) was a decision based on the practice that prevails on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court.

The next case is the case of Raghu Nath Misser v. Musammat Pate Koer (2) decided by the Appellate Side of the Calcutta High Court. The applicant for Letters of Administration was the widow of the deceased and she applied for a grant of Letters of Administration. The brother of the deceased entered caveat and opposed that grant, on the ground that there was no estate to which administration could be taken because he was joint with his deceased brother and took by survivorship all that belonged to the joint family. The learned District Judge of Shahabad, relying on the case reported as Kulbantia (Raghoobur Hazam) v. Bahadoor Hazam (1), held that it was not open to him to enter into the question of title at all. The High Court upheld that view. It will be useful to cite the following passages from the judgment of the High Court:—

"Of course we are aware," said their Lordships, "that when any one dies in the Mofassil and Letters of Administration are applied for, endeavours are always made to convert such a proceeding into a regular trial in which questions of title are raised and in which the nature of the estate left by the deceased person is hotly contested. This tendency on the part of Mofassil litigants is wrong and should be put a stop to, and we agree with the ruling laid down by the learned Judge who decided the case of Kulbantia (Raghoobur Hazam) v. Bahadoor Hazam (1) and see no reason to interfere with the decision of the District Judge in this case." This is, therefore, an authority for the proposition that the view which was established on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court in the case reported as Kulbantia (Raghoobur Hazam) v. Bahadoor Hazam (1) is the right view so far as Mofassil Courts also are concerned.

(2) 6 C. W. N. 345.

DEBENDRA PRASAD V. SURENDRA PRASAD.

The next case is the case of Ochavaram Nanabhai Haridas v. Dolatram Jamietram Nanabhai (3). Identically the same point was raised in that case. The application for Letters of Administration was on behalf of the son of the deceased, and this was opposed by a certain person who alleged that he and the deceased were joint, and that, therefore, there was no estate which was left by the deceased to which Letters of Administration could be granted. The judgment is of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, and he held on a review of all the authorities, Calcutta, Bombay, and Allahabad, that the caveator in that case could not be allowed to take up such a position. He said that when the petitioner alleged property in the deceased's estate, that was sufficient. In the latter part of his judgment, dealing with the question whether there was any prejudice to the caveator, that distinguished Judge said as follows:—

"The grant in no way hurts or prejudices the caveator for it is general in its terms, specifying no item of property and prejudging nothing to the detriment of the appellant. It has been suggested that a grant of Letters might involve peril to the appellant's interest, but this is not so, as on the grant of Letters adequate security is taken."

These are three cases in favour of the respondents in this case. In my judgment, identically the same question is raised in this case and must be decided by the application of the same principle.

But then it is argued by Mr. Dutt that we are conclusively bound by the Statute, and that if the Statute declares that such questions have got to be gone into in an application for Letters of Administration, there is no possible escape from that position. He relies on sections 64, 69, 70 and section 73 of the Probate and Administration Act, and I think also on section 23 of that Act. Section 64 provides that "application for Letters of Administration shall be made by petition distinctly written as aforesaid" and stating amongst other things "the right in which the petitioner claims." The argument of Mr. K. B. Dutt on section 64 of the Probate and Administration Act is this: He says that as soon as the petitioners state the right in which they claim, it is open to him to deny such a right, and that, therefore, there is an issue between them on the assertion of the petitioners and the objection of the objector, and the Court is bound under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code to decide that issue. In my view, speaking with great respect, there is a complete misapprehension in the position taken up by Mr. K. B. Dutt. I concede that the objector is fully entitled to deny the right in which the petitioner claims; but what is the right? He can deny the correctness of the pedigree upon which the petitioners assert that they are the next-of-kin of the deceased. It was undoubtedly open to Debendra to come to Court and challenge the pedigree furnished by the petitioners. It was open to Debendra for instance to say that Surendra, Rajendra, Bindeswar and Batekrishna were not the sons of Jamuna and Moti at all. That is position which was available to him in this case. The petitioners clearly state the right in which they claim. That position was not disputed or denied by Debendra, but Debendra set up a separate case, namely that he was the adopted son of Shashi Kumar, and that, therefore, Surendra, Bindeswar, Batekrishna and Birendra were not entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration. In my view it was open to Debendra to set up his adoption only if he claimed to be preferentially entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration. If indeed the pedigree itself was disputed, then undoubtedly the Court would have to determine the question of the pedigree. Again if Debendra had asked for Letters of Administration himself on the ground that as the adopted son of Shashi Kumar, he was preferentially entitled to a grant, the Court would have to determine the question of adoption. Mr. K. B. Dutt says that as soon as the question of interest is before the Court, it is open to him to show his preferential title. I agree that it was open to him to show his preferential title, if he were an applicant for a grant of Letters of Administration, but in my view it was not open to him to go into that question since he was not an applicant for Letters of Administration, though he was entitled to challenge the pedigree upon which the petitioners applied for the grant of Letters of Administration.

Mr. K. B. Dutt next relies upon section 69 of the Probate and Administration Act. I do not think that this section is really relevant; all that it provides is "In all cases it shall be lawful for the District Judge or District Delegate, if he thinks fit, amongst other things, to issue citations calling upon all persons claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased to come and see the proceedings before the grant of Probate or Letters of Administration." This is a very necessary proceeding, since it is essential that the Court ought to grant Letters of Administration only to a person having an interest in the estate, and it is on this view that citation was issued to Debendra, but I do not think that the mere fact that citation was issued to Debendra entitled him to come and oppose the grant to Surendra and others on the ground that he was the adopted son of Shashi Kumar. Section 70 of the Probate and Administration Act merely provides for caveats. That section is hardly relevant here; all that it entitled Debendra to do was to come before the Court and to challenge the title of Surendra and others to a grant of Letters of Administration, on the ground that the pedigree filed by them was not a correct pedigree. It did not, in my view, invite him to come and put forward his title to the property, not for the purpose of having a grant to himself, but for the purpose of preventing a grant to others.

Section 73 merely provides that "A District Delegate shall not grant Probate or Letters of Administration in any case in which there is contention as to the grant, or in which it otherwise appears to him that Probate or Letters of Administration ought not to be granted in his Court." Mr. K. B. Dutt only relied upon this section in order to explain the meaning of the word "contention." He says, by "contention" is understood the appearance of any one in person or by his recognised agent or by a Pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf to oppose the proceeding. I quite see that the citation served on Debendra entitled him to come and to oppose the proceeding, but the question is, on what ground was he entitled to oppose the proceeding? In my view, if the Calcutta High Court and Bombay High Court have correctly decided the cases to which I have referred, then it was not open to Debendra to oppose the proceeding on the ground that there was no estate at all to which Letters of Administration could be taken.

The only other sections to which I ought to refer are section 23 and section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act. Section 23 provides as follows:—"When the deceased has died intestate, administration of his estate may be granted to any person, who, according to the rules for the distribution of the estate of an intestate applicable in the case of such deceased, would be entitled to the whole or any part of such deceased's estate." Mr. Dutt's contention is, that it must be shown in the first place that there is an estate left by the deceased, before Letters of Administration can be granted to that estate. Undoubtedly this contention is correct, but in my view that question must be decided, as it has been held by the Calcutta High Court and Bombay High Court, upon the allegation made in the petition. There is no question that the Court can only grant Letters of Administration to an estate; if there is no estate, clearly there cannot be a grant of Letters of Administration, but the question in this case is between two parties, one claiming a paramount title in the estate, the others claiming that estate as the heirs of the deceased. If it is once conceded that the question of paramount title cannot possibly be gone into in Probate proceedings, then surely the only way in which the Court can deal with these matters is by looking at the allegation of the petitioners. If there is no estate, then clearly the person to whom the Letters of Administration are granted gets nothing at all. As Sir Lawrence Jenkins pointed out, the grant is general in its terms specifying no item of property and prejudging nothing to the detriment of any person at all. A question of this nature can only be dealt with in a Court that can deal with title. In my view, therefore, so far as the first position taken by the appellant is concerned, I hold that it is not a position which was available to him in these proceedings. I ought to say that under the specific words of section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act nothing can vest in an executor or administrator which was the subject of joint family and which would otherwise have passed by survivorship. I hold, therefore, that the first position taken up by the appellant was not available to him at all, and that it is wholly unnecessary to enter into the question of adoption in this case.

So far as the second point is concerned, it is a question of some difficulty. Clearly it is a matter of pedigree. Debendra asserts that the pedigree furnished by the petitioners was not a correct pedigree. He asserts that Jamuna and Moti were not full brothers of Sheonandan, and that, therefore, they cannot succeed to the property of Shashi Kumar, assuming that Shashi Kumar left any property at all. But there is one matter which we must take into consideration. Even on his allegations Birendra was clearly entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration, because Debendra does not deny that Birendra would be, on this view, one of the heirs of Shashi Kumar. Therefore, the position is this: Birendra is an applicant for Letters of Administration together with Surendra and others; Birendra sides with Surendra and others. Debendra opposes the grant to Birendra and others, but does not claim a grant for himself. In this view, ought the Court to have gone into the question raised by the appellant, namely that Jamuna and Moti were not full brothers of Sheonandan and that, therefore, Surendra and others were not entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration? In my opinion, having regard to the position taken up by Debendra, the Court was not entitled to go into that question. I am fortified in this opinion by the decision of Mr. Justice Fletcher in the case of Nishikant Chatterjee v. Ashutosh Mukherjee (4). In that case the husband of the deceased applied for Letters of Administration. The lady, it seems, died leaving her surviving besides her husband a brother upon whom citation was issued; he entered caveat and alleged that the property left by his sister was her Jantuka Stridhan and so he was the preferential heir. He did not ask for a grant of Letters of Administration to himself. The only applicant, therefore, for the Letters of Administration was her husband who, if the case set up by the caveator was true, was not the heir of the lady at all, and, therefore, was not entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration. Mr. Justice Fletcher in the course of the arguments put that question specifically to the Counsel who appeared for the brother: "Do you apply for Letters of Administration?" To that the only answer was, "I have stated everything in my written statement." Mr. Justice Fletcher on a consideration of all the authorities, that were placed before him, came to the conclusion that the question whether the property was Jantuka Stridhan of the lady or not, need not be gone into in the proceeding before him. He said as follows:—"Under section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act, on the allegations contained in that petition, the husband would be the person who, according to the rules for the distribution of the estate of the intestate, is entitled to the whole or a part of the estate, the husband having alleged in his petition that part of the property is the Jantuka Stridhan of his wife". Stopping here for a moment, I would say that under section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act on the allegations contained in the petition before us the persons who applied for Letters of Administration would be the persons who, according to the rule for the distribution of the estate of the intestate, are entitled to the whole or a part of the estate, the petitioners having alleged that the deceased died, leaving them and Debendra and his brother as his heirs and leaving the property within the jurisdiction of the Court. Mr. Justice Fletcher continued as follows:—"It is sufficient under the Probate and Administration Act if the person making the application is, according to the rules for the distribution of the estate of the deceased, entitled to the whole or a part of the property and alleges the fact that there is property of that nature." Then he said that as there was no other application before the Court, and as it was necessary that the estate should be administered, Letters of Administration should be issued to the applicant. In my view this is a point which we must prominently keep before our minds. Debendra alleges that he and Birendra are the heirs of Shashi Kumar. So far as he is concerned, he does not apply for Letters of Administration. On his own showing Birendra would clearly be entitled to a grant of Letters of Administration, and the learned District Judge has undoubtedly made a grant in favour of Birendra together with others. So it was unnecessary for the

BALWANTRAO V. NARHAR GANGARAM.

Court to go into this question, having regard to the fact that Debendra was not an applicant for the Letters of Administration himself, and Birendra did not object to Surendra and others being associated with him. In my view, therefore, although I do not discuss the various questions of fact that have been raised in this appeal at all, I hold that Letters of Administration have been rightly granted to the petitioners.

I ought to point out that the finding of the learned District Judge on the question of adoption will not be binding on the parties in any subsequent litigation, because we hold that that was not a matter which ought to have been gone into in the proceeding at all.

We assess the hearing fee at ten gold mohurs. Both the appeals are dismissed. Letters of Administration will now issue.

NARHAR GANGARAM AGNIHOTRI —PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Mortgagee entitled to possession—Failure to take possession—Interest, whether can be recovered.

Where a mortgagee who is entitled to the possession of the mortgaged property omits to take any steps to obtain possession under his mortgage, he is not entitled to recover damages for the period he is out of possession. [p. 815, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 122 of 1918, decided on the 20th of November 1919, arising out of Civil Suit No. 106 of 1915, decided on the 20th of June 1918 by Munsif No. 3, Akola.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The only question raised in this second appeal is whether the lower

Appellate Court was right in refusing to the appellant any interest under the mortgage in suit for the period during which the mortgagee remained out of possession.

The deed sued upon (Exhibit P-1) bears date the 28th May 1889, and is styled "possessory mortgage-deed," the material portion of which has been translated as follows:—

"Both of us together have borrowed from you a debt of Rs. 250 (in words Rs. two hundred and fifty) British currency. You paid us this amount in cash as consideration and we received it personally. No dispute remains about receipt of consideration. In lieu of this amount, which is without interest, we have mortgaged to you our immovable property, namely, field survey number No. 2, area 27 acres 29 gunthas, rental Rs. 19, situate at Mouza Pongra, Taluqa Balapur, District Akola, bound on the east by No. 18, on the west by No. 1, on the south by No. 4 and on the north by No. 3 and standing in the name of mortgagor No. 2 Chahadu. There is no co-sharer, etc., in this field. As this field belongs to us both, we have this day given it in your possession. There is one mango tree in this field, but we have no right to it. All other trees, namely, nim trees, four babul trees and 2 ayan trees, belong to us solely. As regards repayment of this amount we agree to repay it in full on the seventh year from this day (by making repayments) from 1299 to 1305 Fasli and shall then get our property released from you and take back the document. If your amount is not paid as agreed upon, you should consider the property in your possession as your own, sell it and get your amount satisfied."

The plaintiff, who is the respondent in this Court, sued to redeem and the appellant's defence was that after remaining out of possession till 1901, the mortgagee had an account made and took over the mortgaged property in lieu of Rs. 1,005, the amount then found due: alternatively he pleaded that he should be allowed interest at 2 per cent. per mensem for the period during which he was out of possession. The trial Judge allowed the appellant this interest from the date of the bond up to the date of the decree and setting against the total amount thus reached the principal and interest expressly secured by the mortgage ordered the appellant and his co defendant, Yashwant Rao, besides delivering possession to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,305-8-0.

The present respondent appealed to the District Court and an Additional District Judge, holding that no interest should be allowed for the period before the mortgagee took possession of the mortgaged field, reduced the amount to Rs. 250.

In this Court it is contended on behalf of the appellant that interest to the extent of Rs. 600 for the period between the date of the deed and the date of obtaining possession should have been allowed by way of damages.

It is urged in the first place that the mortgage is a simple mortgage rather than a usufructary one. I am referred to the following cases as indicating that the interest claimed should have been allowed:—Sadashiv v. Vyankatrao (1), Yashwant Narayan v. Vithal Divakar (2), Marturu Subbamma v. Gadde Narayya (3).

The first appears to be in no way in point. There the mortgage was a purely usufructuary one, the mortgagee being given no power of sale. The mortgage in the second case was held not to be a usufructuary one at all, the special stipulations inserted to secure the due payment of the interest during the continuance of the mortgage being read as merely ancillary. In the third case it was held that where a mortgagor fails to deliver possession to his mortgagee, a usufructuary mortgage does not come into existence and the mortgagee is entitled to bring a suit for sale of the mortgaged property.

It must be conceded that the mortgagee might have sued for possession, but on the findings of the trial Judge it must be taken, as held by the lower Appellate Court, that the mortgagor was not to be blamed for the mortgagee's omission to take possession. The position then is similar to that in Jhunku Singh v. Chatkan Singh (4), where, however, the mortgage-deed actually provided for repayment of interest if any defect were found in the mortgaged property or should arise in the mortgagee's possession. It was there held, on the principle underlying the decisions in Partab Bahadur Singh v. Gajadhar Bakhsh Singh (5) and Khuda Bakhsh v. Alim un-nissa (6), that the mortgagee's acquiescence in the situation deprived him of his right to any interest under the express stipulation. Mahadaji v. Joti (7), a case relied upon by the lower Appellate Court, is also against the appellant: if he never took the trouble to obtain possession, there is no reason in equity why he should recover damages for not getting it. There is no room here for departing from the actual contract between the parties, for the mortgagee, though not obtaining possession for some years, eventually entered and held for a long time under the contract. Having so entered it ceased to be in his power to sue for sale on the ground that the contract to deliver possession had been broken. There is consequently no force in the contention that if a suit for the mortgage money and for sale of the mortgaged property had been brought under sections 68 and 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, interest would doubtless have been awarded.

I have also been referred to the decision of the Privy Council in Lala Chhajmal Das v. Brijbhukan Lal (8) where interest post diem was allowed as damages, although the bond sued upon omitted to provide for further interest after the expiration of the period allowed for payment of the principal with interest up to the dies datus. In that case no question of acquiescence in non-payment arose, and I am unable to see that it has any application to the facts of the present case.

The decision of the lower Appellate Court is, in my opinion, correct and the appeal is dismissed with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144—
Decree awarding costs—Costs realised—Decree reversed—Restitution—Court, duty of.

A party realising costs awarded to him under a decree must refund the amount on reversal of the decree, quite apart from the fact that the property in the suit was given to a charity or applied to any other purpose, as the Court is bound, under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, to restore the parties to the position which they would have occupied but for the decree which was subsequently reversed.

Execution first appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 8th May 1919.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Ishri Mal and Sohan Lal Jains brought a suit against Umrao Singh, Sheo Lal and others, also Jains. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court. An appeal was made to this Court and the case was sent back but before the decision of this Court was arrived at, costs which had been awarded to defendants were realised by the defendants from the plaintiffs. The case had been sent back for arbitration and an award was given in favour of Ishri Mal and Sohan Lal. The award ends with the words: Kharcha fariqain zimma fariqain. Ishri Mal and Sohan Lal applied to the Subordinate Judge for restitution of the costs which they had paid in. The application was objected to, and the objection was that the money had been paid to the Treasurer of the Jain Deo Asthan to which the suit had referred. The contention is that the applicants are entitled to the costs and to have restitution. The opposite party rely upon the case of Venkatasami Pillai v. Kuppaves Ammal (1). The facts of that case appear to me to be quite different from the one which is now before me. The parties according to section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure can ask to be placed in the position which they would have occupied but for the decree which has undoubtedly been reversed, and the Court is bound to make such restitution. We are in no way concerned as to whether the property was given to the Deo Asthan or to any other charity or applied to any other purpose. The order of this Court is that Rs. 120 be re-paid to the applicants with interest at the Court rate and costs of the application. A contention was also made to the effect that there was nothing in the decree following the award about costs. I do not think this objection is entitled to weight.

Appeal allowed.

Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (III of 1895), ss. 13, 21—Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act (II of 1894), ss. 9, 10, 13, 15—"Succession," meaning of, whether includes right to be appointed to newly created village office—Suit for declaration that a person is not entitled to village office, maintainability of—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

Per Bakewell, J.—The words "claim to succeed" in section 21 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act should not be understood in the strict sense of the acquisition of an interest upon the death of a person, but mean the right to be appointed upon a vacancy in office. They include, therefore, the right to be appointed to a newly created office. [p. 818, col. 1.]

A suit for a declaration that a person is or is not entitled to a village office is not cognizable by the Civil Courts. [p. 818, col. 2.]

Per Odgers, J.—The words "claim to succeed" in section 21 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act do not include any claim to be appointed in the first instance to any of the village offices set forth in the Act. [p. 819, col. 1.]

A suit merely for a declaration that a person is entitled to a village office is cognizable by the Civil Courts. [p. 819, col. 1.]

ALAGIASUNDARAM PILLAI v. MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARI CO. LTD.,

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 235 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Dindigul, in Original Suit No. 112 of 1915.

FACTS.—A village of which the father of the plaintiffs was the last Karnam was sub-divided into two, to one of which the 1st plaintiff was appointed Karnam. The other two plaintiffs were minors at the time of sub-division and so Government appointed the 2nd defendant, who was the father's brother's daughter's son of the plaintiffs, to be the Karnam of the new village. Plaintiffs thereupon brought a suit to the effect that they were entitled to the post as they were hereditary holders of the office. It was admitted that the 1st plaintiff, being already a Karnam of one village, could not be Karnam of another village as well. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar (with him Mr. K. O. Gopaladesikan), for the Appellants.—A hereditary Karnam has a freehold in his office which cannot be disposed of at the pleasure of Government.

In the first place, Act II of 1894 clearly provides that the appointment should be from the "family" of the last holder. The ordinary sense of the word will and can include only the "children": section 10 (2).

Section 13 expressly provides for cases where the person to be so appointed happens to be a minor.

[BAKEWELL, J.—You do not contend that this is a case of succession.]

Section 13 read with section 15 makes the same provision for cases of succession as well as cases of selection. In the absence of any express provision in the Act to disqualify a person on the ground of minority, the rule in section 15 has to be followed irrespective of the question of age.

But see Krishnaswami Naidu v. Akkulam-mal (1) where Napier, J., takes a contrary view.

Mr. V. Ramesam, Government Pleader, for Defendant No. 1.—Minority is an express bar under section 10 (1) (b) in the case of an appointment like the present to the new post created by the sub-division of the original village. Section 13 has no application at all. It refers to a case of succession only. If section 13 applies, the present suit is not cognisable by a Civil Court. See section 21 of Madras Act III of 1895. If section 15 alone applies, then section 10 applies and clause (1) (b) bars the appointment, and clause (3) says that sub section (1) disqualifies the person who would otherwise have been entitled and the proprietor is at liberty to appoint any person duly qualified. So irrespective of the question of "family" the appointment of the 2nd defendant is valid. Napier, J., is, therefore, right.

Mr. T. R. Venketrama Sastri (with him Mr. S. Subramania Aiyar), for Defendant No. 2, argued as to the question of "family".

"Family" is a comprehensive word including all blood relations. It is taken to have a restricted meaning only if the context is express. That is so even in England where the scope is more restricted than in India. See Snow v. Teed (2). It is conceded that a daughter's son may come within the scope of the term. The 2nd defendant is a brother's daughter's son. On principle, as applied in Hindu joint families, there is not much difference.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, in reply.—Section 21 of Act III of 1895 applies only to a case of succession strictly so called. But when a claim has been overlooked, a party has a right to litigate for the same in a Civil Court, irrespective of section 21. This is a case of "a right infringed." That section 15 makes it incumbent on a proprietor to make his selection from the "family" of the last holder lends support to my contention that the plaintiffs are persons "who would otherwise be entitled to succeed to an hereditary village office" under section 13. The right is not a right to the office but a right to be selected to the office. I submit that such a right is a substantive right.

JUDGMENT.

BAKEWELL, J. Under section 15 of the Proprietary Estates Village Service Act, Madras Act II of 1894, the newly created office in this case is hereditary. Section 9 gives the power of appointment to the new office to the proprietor and the manner in which he shall proceed is declared by (2) (1870) 9 Eq 622; 39 L. J. Ch. 420; 23 L. T. 303; 18 W. R. 623.

(1) 50 Ind. Cas. 185; (1919) M. W. N. 29; 24 M. L. T. 489; 9 L. W. 90.

ALAGIASUNDARAM PILLAI v. MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARI CO. LTD.

section 15; he has to ascertain the members of the family of the last holder, and then to select from among them the person whom he may consider best qualified.

In making the appointment to a new office which is not hereditary, the choice of the proprietor is limited by section 15 (1) to the family of the last holder, but within that limit he may select the person whom he considers to be best qualified under the rules set out in section 10 (1).

In the case of a vacancy in an hereditary office, under section 9 the proprietor also makes an appointment, but under sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 10, he is bound to have regard to the rule of primogeniture and his choice is, therefore, limited to a particular individual of the family of the last holder. A vacancy may arise otherwise than by the death of the incumbent and the word "succession" is, therefore, not used in the strict sense of the acquisition of an interest upon the death of a person but means "the right to be appointed upon a vacancy in an office."

In the case of a newly created office there has been no death and strictly speaking there is no "succession"; but there is a vacant office and having regard to the express provision contained in the first sentence of section 10 that the proprietor shall observe the rules contained in all the sub-sections, I think that, in this case, the word succession must be held to include the right to be appointed to a newly created village office and the word heir to include the member of the family of the last holder who would succeed upon the death of a predecessor in the office.

I may also point out that section 9 applies to any vacancy and, therefore, the word "succession" must apply to a vacancy caused by the resignation or dismissal of an incumbent of an hereditary office; the meaning of the word heir must in such cases be similarly extended. In the case reported in Krishnaswami Naidu v. Akkulammal (1) it was held that the word succeed does not apply to a first appointment to a newly created office, but the attention of the Court does not appear to have been drawn to the words "a vacancy" in section 9 and to the extended meaning which must be given to the words succession and heir when the vacancy is occasioned otherwise than by the death of the incumbent, or to the provision in section 10, read with section 9, that in making an appointment to a newly created office the proprietor must observe the rule of succession contained in sub-sections 2 and 3. With all respect I am unable to follow this decision.

Section 13 provides for the case where a person has a right to be appointed but is disqualified under section 10 (1) (b) by reason of his minority, and directs that no appointment shall be made until he has attained his majority and that some other qualified person shall discharge his duties in the meantime. This section is auxiliary to section 10 (2) and I think that it, therefore, applies in the case of a newly created office.

Under section 13 of the Hereditary Village Offices Act, Madras Act III of 1895, any person may sue before the Collector for a specified village office on the ground that he is entitled under section 10 (2) or (3) of the Act of 1894 to hold such office and by section 21 a Civil Court is debarred from deciding such a claim. The plaintiffs' claim is that one of them is the persona designata by section 10, sub-section (2) or (3), and I think that the District Munsif had, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. For the same reason I am of opinion that the ruling of Napier, J., in the case already cited does not apply, because the plaintiffs claim a personal right and not as members of the public. I do not understand that ruling to apply to an appointment outside of the family of the last holder, in which case the member of the family might sue on behalf of himself and all other members of the family, because their joint right to be considered had been infringed. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with two sets of costs.

ODGERS, J.—I agree that this second appeal must be dismissed, but as I have come to a different conclusion from my learned brother upon some of the points considered in his judgment, I will state my own opinion although I do so with considerable diffidence.

ALAGIASUNDARAM PILLAI v. MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARI CO., LTD.

This is a case in which the four plaintiffs sued for a declaration that one of them is entitled to the office of Karnam of Sitharrevi village, which has been created from the division of the old village of Aiyampalayam into two, and also for emoluments pertaining to that office. The question arises under the Proprietary Estates Village Service Act, Madras Act II of 1894. The first question raised by the appellants, i.e., the plaintiffs whose suit was dismissed by the lower Courts, is as to jurisdiction under section 21 of the Hereditary Village Offices Act, Madras Act III of 1895. This question of jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in matters of this sort was dealt with by Sadasiva Iyer, J., in the case of Krishnaswami Naidu v. Akkulammal (1). That was a case for a declaration that plaintiff was entitled to an hereditary village office but was the converse of the present case as two villages were then amalgamated. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that so far as the suit related to recover emoluments, it was clearly barred by section 21 of Act III of 1895, but with regard to the claim for a declaration, a suit of this kind is not so barred. The learned Judge also decided that the word in section 21 being "succeed" cannot include any claim to be appointed in the first instance to any of the village offices set forth in the Act. I am, therefore, of opinion that this Court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal in so far as it relates to the declaration.

Turning to the merits, section 9 of Act II of 1894 directs that when a vacancy has occurred "or the District Collector directs that a village officer shall be appointed to a newly created village office" (which latter is the case here), "the proprietor shall appoint." Section 10 (1) contains the rules to be observed by the proprietor in making the appointments under section 9, one of which is that the person to be appointed is to have attained the age of majority. Section 10 then goes on to say that the succession to all hereditary offices shall devolve according to the rule of primogeniture and that, where the next heir is not qualified, the proprietor shall appoint the person "next in order of succession". In section 8 it is stated that every vacancy caused by death or resignation is to be reported to the Revenue Officer. Now, it is clear that a vacancy caused by death or resignation is to be filled according to the law of succession, that is, by the heir of the last holder; but I cannot see how the rules as to succession are to be read into the rules which are to guide the first appointment of a person in a new village. Section 15 specifically states that the old offices are to cease and new offices which shall be hereditary, if any of the offices they replace were hereditary, are to be created. In my view under section 10 the proprietor is to have regard to the rules in sub-section (1) whether a vacancy strictly so called has occurred or not, but in the present case, there can be no question of succession to an office which by section 15 is now created for the first time.

The first plaintiff has been appointed Karnam of one of the villages and I do not think he has got any right or claim to be appointed Karnam of both. His brothers, the other plaintiffs, were minors at the date of the suit and they claim to be entitled to the benefit of section 13, which allows a qualified person to be appointed "when the person who would otherwise be entitled to succeed to an hereditary village office is a minor." As above already pointed out, there can, in this case, be no question of any title to succeed nor can section 13, in my opinion, apply to the creation of a new office.

No doubt the proprietor has, in fact, selected the brother's daughter's son of the last holder. The plaintiffs except the 1st being minors are, therefore, disqualified under section 10 (1) as I have already stated and they are not, in my opinion, within the benefits of section 13. They are, therefore, unqualified persons and cannot claim even to be eligible for appointment.

It seems to me that the suit must fail on another ground, namely, that pointed out by Napier, J., in the case already referred to "that it is not open to a man who has no right and claim in himself and does not bring the suit as a member of the public affected by the appointment, to ask for a declaration that the person appointed is not a person qualified to hold the office," which is what, in effect, the plaintiffs pray for here in paragraphs Nos. 1 and 2 of their prayer in the plaint.

This second appeal must fail and be dismissed with costs. Two sets.

An outcasted Hindu widow does not cease to be a Hindu, and if she re-marries, the provisions of the Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act would apply. Consequently, an alienation by her of her first husband's property after her re-marriage would be invalid. [p. 820, col. 2. p. 821, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Saran.

Mr. Jalgobind Prosad Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalmohan Ganguli, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This was a suit brought by one Musammam Bhularya, daughter of one Kari Raut, for confirmation of possession, or in the alternative for possession of certain property belonging to her father and also for a declaration that certain mortgages which had been executed by her mother were not binding on her.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows:—

Kari Raut died leaving a widow and a daughter. The widow came into possession of his property as widow's estate. Sometime after the death of Kari Raut she began to lead an unchaste life and was outcasted. After being outcasted she married one Sital Ahir in Sagai form. In the year 1914, some three years after this marriage, she mortgaged a portion of the property to the defendants Nos. 3 to 5. It was after these mortgages that the present suit was filed by Kari Raut's daughter.

The suit was contested by the mortgagees defendants Nos. 3 to 5 on the ground that the plaintiff was not the daughter of Kari Raut, that there had been no re-marriage in Sagai form and that the deeds were valid as they were executed for legal necessity and for consideration.

The Court of first instance held that there had been no re-marriage and consequently that there had been no forfeiture but that the debts were not for legal necessity and consequently were not binding.

On appeal to the District Judge it was held that there had been a re-marriage and the suit was decreed in full. Against this decree the defendants have appealed.

The points which are urged before us are —

(1) that there has been no finding as to re-marriage;

(2) that the Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act is not applicable in this case;

(3) that the transferee is protected and that the plaintiff cannot get a declaration during the lifetime of her mother, the widow of Kari Raut; and

(4) that the judgment is not in accordance with law.

The first of these contentions is concluded by findings of fact. The learned District Judge, after a very full consideration of the evidence and the circumstances of the case, has found that Somaria, the widow of Kari Raut, and mother of the plaintiff, married Sital Ahir in Sagai form.

With regard to the second point, the contention is that since the widow was outcasted, she ceased to be a Hindu and that consequently the provisions of the Hindu Widow's Re marriage Act would not apply. No authority is shown us in support of this contention, and we are unable to accept it.

The third contention that the transferee is protected as the daughter cannot get a declaration during the lifetime of her mother, the widow of Kari Rant, is unsustainable in view of the provisions of section 2 of the Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act. Under the provisions of this section at the time the widow alienated the property in favour of the defendants Nos. 3 to 5 she had in fact no title to the property at all as her daughter, the plaintiff, had already succeeded.

The last contention is that the judgment is not in accordance with law. It is perfectly clear from reading the whole judgment, which is a very careful and elaborate one, that the learned District Judge carefully considered the whole case and his judgment was given after very full consideration.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.
ADAMI, J.—I agree.

—NON-APPLICANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—Decree, mistake in, as to costs—Application to rectify mistake—Court, power of, to correct decree.

An application to correct a decree in the matter of costs is correctly made under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Application for revision of the order of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 25th June 1918.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Applicants.

ORDER.—In a suit brought by the applicants against the non-applicants for possession of a field they obtained a decree in the lower Court for half the field. On appeal the District Judge, Wardha, amended the decree. He writes:—

"The decree of the lower Court will be amended and the words, 'possession over $\frac{1}{4}$ share in the field in suit,' will be substituted by 'possession over the whole field in suit'; appellant to bear his own and respondent's costs in the cross-appeal."

The decree recites inter alia that the costs of the original suit are to be paid as ordered by the lower Court. This meant that plaintiff will only get half his costs, though his full case had been decreed by the lower Appellate Court. Plaintiff, therefore, asked the Court to correct its decree under section 152, Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge has held that this cannot be done under that section and an application must be made for a review. The section runs:—

"Errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission may at any time be corrected by the Court either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties."

In Chessum & Sons v. Gordon (1) it was held that an accidental slip or omission included the omission of an item from the bill of costs.

There is no doubt that the District Judge in the present case had no intention of stating that the costs of the original suit must be paid as ordered by the lower Court. That was a careless omission on the part of the clerk who drew up the decree not to take instructions regarding the costs of the trial Court and the learned District Judge should have seen that this was necessary. The Court, has the power to correct a mistake of this nature. In my opinion the application did fall within section 152, Civil Procedure Code. I therefore, now direct that the decree in appeal No. 9 of 1918, dated the 23rd April 1918, be corrected and in lieu of the words "the costs of the original suit will be paid as ordered by the lower Court" will be substituted the words "plaintiffs are entitled to their full costs in the lower Court." I make no order as to costs of this application.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII,
rr. 4, 11—Appeal—Death of one of several respondents —Legal representatives of deceased not brought on record, effect of—Abatement of appeal, whether partial or total.

Ordinarily an appeal does not abate in its entirety on the death of one of several plaintiffs-respondents because of the failure of the appellant to revive it against the representatives of the deceased: the abatement only takes effect as against the latter. But from the nature of the suit, the result may follow that the appeal has thereafter become imperfectly constituted, so that the appellant can no longer invite the Court to adjudicate upon the matters in controversy. [p. 825, col. 2.]

Where for instance the hearing of such an appeal would result in two contradictory declarations in the same suit, the Court cannot hear the appeal on the merits, in other words, the appeal abates in its entirety. [p. 826, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Pabna, dated the 19th of May 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babus Haripado Chatterjee, Harish Chandra Roy, Bansori Lal Sarkar and Jatindra Nath Sanyal), for the Appellants.—The defendants are appellants before your Lordships. This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession and declaration of title to an immoveable property.

Proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were started on an apprehension of a breach of the peace in respect of the disputed area. Thereupon the Criminal Court made an order of attachment under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, which was to remain in force till the Civil Court finally declared the title of a competent party. The suit was instituted in 1910.

The lower Court gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarty (with him Babus Kamani Mohan Chatterjee and Nilratan Chatterjee), for the Respondents.—Before I argue on the merits of the case, I shall submit that the whole appeal has abated as one of the respondents who died in November 1915 has not been properly substituted.

The deceased left a widow, three sons and two grandsons by a predeceased son.

Under Article 177 of the present Limitation Act no application was made within six months.

Hence under Order XXII, rule 4, sub-rule (3), and rule 11 the appeal has abated against the deceased.

An attempt was, however, made to make substitution of the three sons of the deceased in February 1917. A false affidavit was made stating that the respondent died in November 1916.

Had the death occurred in November 1916, the application in February 1917 was within time and hence the three sons were represented in usual course. But the three grandsons by a predeceased son were not represented. That application in February 1917 was not made to set aside the abatement.

Under Order XXII, rule 9, sub-rule (2), no application was made to set aside the abatement as required by Article 171 within 60 days from the date of abatement.

Subsequently an application was made to bring on the record the two grandsons but under Order XXII, rule 9, sub-rule (3), and section 5, Limitation Act, it was refused. It was further ordered that the order on the false statement of February 1917 should be cancelled.

Thus the partial abatement of the appeal against one of the plaintiffs has made it impossible for the Court to hear the appeal at all.

KALI DAYAL v. NAGENDRA NATH.

The appeal in the present form cannot proceed.

The wording of section 368 of the old Act has materially changed in the corresponding section of the new Act, viz., Order XXII, rule 4. Here the new words are "as against the deceased respondent." Here all the plaintiffs claim a joint interest and the interest of one cannot be distinguished from that of another in the same category. Here the prayer is for the joint declaration of title and the interest is indivisible.

The attachment cannot be released by the District Magistrate if there is an order for a partial decree in favour of the appellants.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy, in reply.—I submit that the partial abatement of the appeal cannot stand in the way of the appeal being heard. The cases cited by my learned friend are distinguishable. In support of my contention I refer to the following cases: Ohandarsang Khimabhai (7), Upendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Sham Lal Mandal (8).

The whole estate was under the management of a common manager and it was not necessary to bring on record all the respondents. The manager represents the whole party.

[Babu Dwarkanath Chakravarty pointed out that the manager was appointed with respect to a share only.]

Your Lordships have ample power to substitute the heirs of the deceased under Order XLI, rules 20 and 33. Referred to Upendra Lal Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee (9), Hudson v Basdeo (10), Rup Jaun Bibee v. Abdul Kadir (11).

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property. The case for the plaintiffs is that there were disturbances in connection with the lands in suit which led to the institution of proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, with the result that, on the 24th July 1910, the Criminal Court made an order of attachment under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, to remain in force until the title to the lands was declared by a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction. Accordingly, on the 28th September 1910, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for declaration that the disputed lands appertained in Zemindary right, and right acquired by adverse possession, to their property known as Thal Chur or as Khas Thal Mouza. The defendants repudiated all the material allegations in the plaint. After a protracted trial in the Court below, the suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge. The decree in favour of the plaintiffs was in the following terms: "The title of the plaintiffs is declared to the entire lands included in the survey map of Mouza Chur Thal alias Khas Thal in claim, and also to such quantity of land as is shown in the map of the Commissioner as included in the survey of Mouza Khas Thal and lies within the lands claimed." The present appeal by the defendants is directed against this decree. The appeal was heard for several days and the respondents were called upon to answer the arguments advanced on behalf of the appellants. It then transpired that Lal Mohan Pakrashi, one of the plaintiffs respondents, had died in November 1915, and that adequate steps had not been taken to revive the appeal as against his representatives-in-interest. Lal Mohan Pakrashi has left a widow, three sons and two grandsons by a predeceased son. No application was made by the appellants to bring on the record the legal representatives of the deceased respondent within the time allowed by law, that is, within a period of six months from the date of the death of the deceased respondent, under Article 177 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. The consequence was that under Order XXII, rule 4, sub-rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, read with rule 11, the appeal abated as against the deceased respondent. On the 23rd February 1917, an application was made to this Court to bring on the record the three sons of the deceased respondent. This was not made in the form of an application to set aside the abatement as contemplated by Order XXII, rule 9, sub-rule (2). It was also made beyond the time prescribed by Article 171 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, that is, after the expiry of 60 days from the date of abatement. The application was made ex parte and was based on an affidavit which contained an untrue statement, namely, that Lal Mohan Pakrashi had died in November 1916. If he had really died in November 1916, the six months prescribed by Article 177 of the Indian Limitation Act would have expired in May 1917 and consequently no question of limitation could possibly arise in respect of an application made on the 23rd February 1917. The result of the misstatement was that the application was granted as a matter of course. This was brought to the notice of the Court on behalf of the respondents when they were called upon to answer the arguments of the appellants. The position thus was that two of the representatives of Lal Mohan Pakrashi, namely, his two grandsons by a predeceased son, were not on the record, while the names of his three sons had been placed on the record, on the basis of an untrue statement contained in the affidavit filed in support of the application for substitution. An attempt was subsequently made to induce this Court to bring on the record the two grandsons by the predeceased son. The explanation offered for the delay was, however, unsatisfactory, and under Order XXII, rule 9, sub-rule (3), which makes the provisions of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act applicable, no order could be made in favour of the applicants, as they had failed to satisfy the Court that they had sufficient cause for not making the application within the prescribed time. We accordingly directed, on the 2nd July last, that the ex parte order made on the 23rd February 1917, on the basis of an untrue statement, be cancelled, and, further, that the application to bring on the record the grandsons by the predeceased son be refused. The position accordingly is that the appeal has abated as regards Lal Mohan Pakrashi, and the application to revive the appeal against his representatives has failed. The appeal has now been taken up for final disposal.

On behalf of the respondents, a preliminary objection has been taken that in the events which have happened the appeal cannot proceed and must be dismissed. It is conceded that under the provisions of Order XXII, rule 4, read with rule 11 the appeal has abated only as against the deceased respondent. Consequently, we have to determine whether, in view of the nature of the suit, such partial abatement has made it impossible for the Court to hear the appeal as against the other respondents, and, if necessary, to reverse the decision of the trial Court in their favour. The respondents have contended that this question should be answered in the affirmative, in view of the decisions in Bejoy Gopal Bose v. Umesh Chandra Bose (1), Tarip Dafadar v. Khotaiannessa Bibi (2), Dharamjit Narayan Singh v. Chandeshwar Prosad Narayan Singh (3), Basir Sheikh v. Fazle Karim (4), Azimuddin Mandil v. Tara Sankar Ghose (5) and Sriram Chandra Naik v. Hriday Nath Gupta (6). The appellants have, on the other hand, invited our attention to the cases of Chandarsing v. Khimabhai (7) and Upendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Sham Lal Mandil (8), which it is urged support the contrary view.

In Bejoy Gopal Bose v. Umesh Chandra Bose (1) and Tarip Dafadar v. Khotaiannessa Bibi (2) the question arose as to the effect of the death of one of several plaintiffs respondents in an appeal preferred against a joint decree for arrears of rent, in favour of all the plaintiffs. In both these cases, the Court held that the appeal could not proceed for defect of parties. In the first case Mr. Justice Banerjee pointed out that if the appeal were heard and allowed on the merits, the result would be that the decree would be set aside in respect of some of the plaintiffs, but would remain intact in so far as the representatives of the deceased plaintiff were concerned. The decree was a joint decree in favour of all the plaintiffs and if the defendant desired to question the correctness of that decree, he was bound to bring before the Court all the parties affected by that decree. In the second case, Mr. Justice Rampini adopted the same view and dismissed the appeal, as it could not proceed by reason of defect of parties. Mr. Justice Rampini, however, in the case of Upendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Sham Lal Mandil (8) took a different view on the authority of the decision in Ohandarsang v. Khimabhai (7). No reasons were assigned in support of the conclusion and the earlier decisions were not brought to the notice of the Court. We observe that in that case a question was raised as to the area and the amount of rent annually payable in respect of the holding. The Court dismissed the appeal on the merits; but if the appeal had succeeded, the result would have been two contradictory decisions in the same suit in respect of the same matter, namely, the terms and conditions of the tenancy, one given by the lower Appellate Court in favour of the deceased plaintiff which would enure to the benefit of his representatives-in-interest, the other given by the High Court in favour of the successful appellant.

The case of Dharamjit Narayan Singh v. Chandeshwar Prosad Narayan Singh (3) arose out of a suit for the cancellation of a sale for arrears of land revenue. The trial Court set aside the sale. During the pendency of an appeal to this Court, two of the plaintiffs-respondents died. No application was made to bring their legal representatives on the record within the prescribed period. The Court held that the appeal could not proceed. Mr. Justice Harington applied the test, whether the suit would have been tried, if the deceased persons had not been joined either as plaintiffs or as defendants. He held that the suit could not have been tried in their absence, and that consequently the appeal also could not be decided in the absence of their legal representatives. The decree could not be reversed and the sale directed to stand in respect of some of the plaintiffs, while the decree for cancellation made by the primary Court would remain in operation as regards the others. The Court further declined to accede to the contention that the share of the plaintiffs other than those of the deceased persons could be vacated by an order of this Court. The contention was negatived on the ground that as the decree under appeal had set aside the sale of the entire joint estate, under no circumstances could that be affirmed as to the unascertained shares of some joint shareholders and reversed as to the unascertained shares of other joint shareholders.

This principle was applied to suits for possession in Basir Sheikh v. Fazle Karim (4) and Sriram Chandra Naik v. Hriday Nath Gupta (5). In the first of these cases it was pointed out that as the decree was one for joint possession of land, whatever view might be taken by this Court on the merits, the entire decree could be executed by the representatives of the two plaintiffs who were dead and against whom the appeal had not been revived. In the second case, the Court observed that the appeal was not properly constituted in the absence of the infant representatives of one of the deceased respondents and the Court could not be called upon to make two contradictory decrees in the same litigation. The infant plaintiff had got a declaration of the true character of the property and was entitled to take possession of it from the hands of the first defendant by execution of his decree; the Court could not declare that the other plaintiffs, although they stood in the same relation to the property in suit as the infants, were not entitled to the same relief.

Another example of the application of the principle deducible from the cases mentioned is furnished by Azimuddin Mandal v. Tara Sankar Ghose (5). A and B (landlords) had applied under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for settlement of fair rent and for enhancement of rent. A died after the decision of the lower Appellate Court, leaving a major son C and a minor son D as his heirs. The tenant defendants-appellants did not take steps to have the minor properly represented and the appeal was dismissed against him for non-prosecution. It was ruled that the entire appeal had become incompetent for want of necessary parties.

These decisions do not contradict Order XXII, rule 4, which contains the words—"as against the deceased respondent"—not found in the corresponding provision (section 368) of the Code of 1882. The appeal does not abate in its entirety, because the appellant has failed to revive it against the legal representatives of the deceased respondent, the abatement takes effect only as against him; but from the nature of the suit, the result may follow that the appeal has thereafter become imperfectly constituted, so that the appellant can no longer invite the Court to adjudicate upon the matters in controversy.

The question now arises, whether this doctrine is applicable to the case before us. In our opinion, there is no escape from the position that the answer must be against the appellants. In fact the present case is, in some respects, stronger than any brought to our notice. The plaintiffs jointly sought a declaration that the lands attached by order of the Criminal Court were included in their estate. No question of shares was in controversy; the Subordinate Judge made in favour of the plaintiffs a declaratory decree in respect of the whole property. The representatives of the deceased plaintiffs are entitled to the full benefit of this decree. If we proceed to hear the appeal at the instance of the defendants against the other plaintiffs, the result will follow, should the contention of the appellants prevail on the merits, that there will be two contradictory declarations in the same suit—one by the Subordinate Judge in favour of one of the plaintiffs that the disputed lands are included within Thal Chur, and another by this Court that they are not so included. If these contradictory declarations are produced before the Collector, it is difficult to see how he can give effect to both of them. It may further be observed that the defendants have not brought a suit for declaration of their title and their right to institute such a suit is barred by limitation. In our opinion it is manifest that in the events which have happened the appeal is now not properly constituted, and in the absence of necessary parties we cannot proceed to hear it on the merits. The appellants alone are to blame for the unfortunate position in which they now find themselves.

The appellants have next argued that as the estate was in the hands of a common manager appointed under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it was not necessary for them to bring on the record the heirs of the deceased plaintiff. In support of this contention, they have relied upon Sibo Sundari v. Raj Mohun (12), Kirtibash Das v. Umesh Ohandra (13). These decisions are of no assistance to the appellants. In the first place, the suit was not brought by the common manager on behalf of the plaintiffs. Whether he was competent to institute a suit of this character on their behalf without naming them as parties on the record, need not, consequently, be considered. From this point of view, it is also unnecessary to determine whether the two decisions just mentioned did not take an unduly comprehensive view of the powers of a common manager. In the second place, our attention has been drawn to the fact that the common manager was appointed without jurisdiction (as the appointment was made in respect of a share only of an estate) and that on this ground the appointment was cancelled by this Court on the 3rd February 1919.

As a last resort, the appellants have contended that we should proceed, under Order XLI, rules 20 and 33, to add the representatives of the deceased respondent as parties to the appeal. In support of this argument, reference has been made to Upendra Lal Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee (9), Hudson v. Basdeo (10) and Rup Jaun Bibee v. Abdul Kadir (11). We are clearly of opinion that assuming that the Court is competent to take action under the rules mentioned, this is a case in which the powers should not be exercised for the benefit of the appellants and to the detriment of the legal representatives of the deceased respondent. The appellants obtained an ex parte order against some of them on a misrepresentation of fact; that order has been cancelled. As regards the other representatives of the same respondent, the omission to proceed against them was due solely to negligence. We feel no doubt that it will be wrong to allow the appellants to invoke the aid of the rules in question in these circumstances.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed. We make no order as to costs, inasmuch as the respondents should have brought this matter to the notice of the Court as soon as the appeal was taken up for disposal.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an action brought by the respondent for the recovery of damages for the wrongful attachment of his cattle by the appellant in execution of his decree. It is a well established principle of law that in order to sustain such a claim for damages the plaintiff must establish not only want of reasonable and probable cause but also malice in fact on the part of the person attaching the property, vide, inter alia, Nanjappa Chettiar v. Ganapathi Goundan (1). Now, the Munsif, Sayad Zulifkar-ud-Din, holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove malice, dismissed the suit. The District Judge on appeal has set aside that judgment and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for damages. The learned Judge has found that the attachment was applied for on insufficient grounds, but he has made absolutely no reference to the question of malice. Mr. Ghulam Rasul for the respondent, while admitting that no finding as regards malice has been given by the learned Judge and that a finding in the affirmative is essential to the success of his client's suit, asks me to draw an inference of malice from the fact that the defendant had absolutely no justification for attaching the cattle. It seems to me that the Munsif arrived at the correct conclusion, and that there is no foundation for the allegation that the attaching creditor was in any way actuated by malice.

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 507; 35 M. 598; 10 M. L. T. 365; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 414; 21 M. L. J. 1052.

POONABAI v. BALLABHDAS.

I must hold that the plaintiff cannot succeed without establishing malice, which he has failed to prove. Accordingly I accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

A suit for possession of land of which the plaintiff became an occupancy tenant by operation of law upon the sale of the proprietary rights in sir is a suit between landlord and tenant and must be tried by a Revenue Officer, even though the plaintiff has not obtained possession of the land as tenant and has not been recognised as such by the defendant landlord.

In such a suit a claim for mesne profits and for a house which the plaintiff seeks to recover as an agriculturist is ancillary to the main relief asked for and does not change the nature of the suit.

Mr. J. O. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint was originally filed in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Jubbulpore. It was returned by him for presentation to the proper Court. It was then presented in the Court of the Additional Judge to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, who has again returned it for presentation to the Court of the Additional District Judge.

The learned Advocates who appear for the parties in this appeal are only anxious that it should be finally decided where the case is to be tried.

SHEO BAHADUR SINGH v. BENI BAHADUR SINGH.

The plaintiff appellant became an occupancy tenant by operation of law. The fact that she has not yet obtained possession and has not been recognised as a tenant by the defendant malguzar is immaterial, and the cases cited relating to agreements for a lease, being cases of tenancy by contract, are irrelevant. Upon the sale of the proprietary rights in si, the plaintiff became an occupancy tenant under the provisions of the Tenancy Act, and the defendant became her landlord. The suit for possession of the land is a suit between landlord and tenant as such, and must be tried by a Revenue Officer. The claim for mesne profits and for the house which she seeks to recover as an agriculturist are ancillary to the main relief asked for. The whole of the claim is within the competency of the Additional Judge to the Court of the Subordinate Judge who is, moreover, invested with all the powers of the Subordinate Judge. His order, dated the 3rd April 1919, is set aside, and the plaint is ordered to be presented to the Court of the Additional Judge to the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

Each party will bear his costs of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109 (c)— Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Question of fact—"Any decree or order," meaning of—Judges arriving at opposite conclusions on vital question—Fitness of case for appeal.

Under section 109 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code a High Court can, if persuaded that a case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council, grant leave to appeal in any case even upon a question of fact [p. 829, col. 1.]

The words "any decree or order" in clause (c) of section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code do not mean any decree or order other than a decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court or by any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction. [p. 829, col. 1.]

Where two Judges have arrived at diametrically opposite conclusions on the vital question on which the suit should be decided, the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. [p. 829, col. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment and decree of the First Additional Judicial Commissioner, who allowed the appeal, and Second Additional Judicial Commissioner, who dismissed the appeal, dated the 17th February 1919, reported as 51 Ind. Cas. 419.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for proprietary possession of certain property and mesne profits. The property belonged to Rawat Jageshwar Bakhsh Singh. He died leaving a widow Musammatt Sakhray Kuar, who succeeded to his property. Musammatt Sakhray Kuar died. Sheo Bahadur Singh, the plaintiff-appellant, sued for possession of the property as a collateral heir of the deceased Jageshwar Bakhsh Singh. Beni Bahadur Singh was in possession of the property. He had been adopted by Sakhray Kuar, who professed to be authorised to make the adoption under the provisions of a document, which she alleged to be a Will executed by her husband on the 15th July 1907. The decision of the case rested on one point alone—was this Will genuine? If the Will was genuine, Sakhray Kuar had no right to make the adoption and the collateral heir succeeded her. The trial Judge found that the Will was genuine. The appeal was heard by a Bench of two Judges. The senior Judge found that the Will was not genuine. The junior Judge found that the Will was genuine. Under the provisions of section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure the appeal was dismissed. The plaintiff asks for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The property in dispute is worth about Rs. 29,000. The case cannot fall under the provisions of section 109, clauses (a) and (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, because the decree or final order affirmed the decision of the Court immediately below and the appeal does not involve any substantial question of law. It remains to be decided whether the case falls under the provisions of section 109, clause (c), and whether in view of the fact that the Judges were equally divided in opinion and no appeal lies to this Court in view of this disagreement, the case should not be certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. We consider that the provisions of section 109 are very wide and that under the provisions of section 109 (c) this Court can, if persuaded that a case is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council, grant leave to appeal in any case even upon a question of fact. It stands to reason that such leave would be very sparingly granted in view of the provisions of section 110. But there are occasions when such leave should be granted, and we think this is one of them. We do not consider that clauses (a), (b) and (c) are mutually exclusive. We consider that the words "any decree or order" must be taken to include the words "any decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court or by any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction" and that the words "any decree or order" in clause (c) cannot mean "any decree or order other than a decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court or by any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction." In these circumstances we must decide this matter on the merits and we are of opinion that, in a case such as this where two Judges have arrived at diametrically opposite conclusions on the vital question on which the suit should be decided, the case is undoubtedly a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. We grant the certificate accordingly with costs.

Application granted.

Cantonments Act (XIII of 1889), s. 32, scope of—Oral gift of property situate in Cantonment, validity of.

The effect of section 32 of the Cantonments Act is that a gift of property situate in a Cantonment must be made in the manner provided by section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 831, col. 1.]

An oral gift by a Muhammadan of such property is, therefore, not valid. [p. 83, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 17th June 1913, decreeing the plaintiffs' claim partly, without costs.

Syed Mohsin Shah, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by Musammât Amir-un-Nisa claiming property in certain houses under the following circumstances:—

One Musammât Piran was married to Mirza Jan. She had three sons, Hayder Beg, Rustam Beg and Abdulla Beg, and a daughter Musammât Amir-un-Nisa, the plaintiff. She was married to one Kharati. The dispute relates to four houses: (1) Half of a house in Mohalla No. 18, (2) another house in Mohalla No. 18 in which she claimed proprietary right in the whole house, (3) a shop in Mohalla No. 14 in which also she claimed proprietary right in the entire shop, and (4) a block of three houses in the regimental Bazar Lalkurti, in which she claimed one-seventh share.

These properties were mortgaged to one Amar Nath by Hayder Beg by a registered deed dated the 13th of December 1908. Amar Nath obtained a decree on the mortgage against Hayder Beg and attached the houses in execution of the decree and asked for their sale. Amir-un-Nisa then objected to the attachment on the ground that the houses were not saleable in Amar Nath's decree. Her objection was disallowed and she had to bring the present suit for a declaration. As regards the house No. 1 the Court held on the evidence that the house had been pure chased by Hayder Beg and Kharati jointly and that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to a half share in it. There is no dispute or question about this house now, as the correctness of the decision with regard to this house is admitted by both the parties before me. With regard to the house No. 2 and a shop No. 3, the title set up by the plaintiff was that both these houses had been orally gifted in her favour by *Musamm*at Piran her mother. This claim was resisted by Amar Nath on two grounds, namely, that the story of the oral gift was untrue and that in any case the alleged gift was ineffective in law, as it had not been effected by means of a registered deed as required by section 32 of the Cantonments Act No. XIII of 1889. The decision of the Court as to the factum of the oral gift is not very clear, but it may be taken that the Court intended to find that an oral gift had been made. It, however, held that having regard to the provisions of section 32 of the Cantonments Act no binding gift had taken place. With regard to the remaining three houses in Lalkurti Bazar the Court found that the plaintiff had failed to establish that they belonged to her mother *Musamm*at Piran and that she was entitled to a one-seventh share in them. In the result the Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree to the effect that she owned half a share in property No. 1 and one-seventh share in property Nos. 2 and 3, and declared that those shares were not liable to attachment and sale in execution of Amar Nath's decree against the defendant Hayder Beg. The rest of the claim was dismissed. An appeal was preferred to the Divisional Judge by the plaintiff and cross-objection was taken by the defendant Amar Nath. The appeal was accepted and the cross-objection was dismissed. Against this decree the defendant Amar Nath appealed to the Chief Court, which set aside the decree in appeal on the ground of want of jurisdiction on the 8th of May 1918. The record was returned to the Court of the District Judge of Jullundur, directing him to return the memorandum of appeal to the appellant for presentation to the Chief Court. In the meantime *Musamm*at Amir-un-Nisa had died. The present appeal was presented to this Court. As mentioned above

*Musamm*at Amir-un-Nisa having died, the names of Muhammad Beg's son and *Musamm*at Ilahi Jan daughter of Hayder Beg were substituted as legal representatives of the deceased appellant on the basis of a Will dated the 5th of April 1916, which purported to have been executed by *Musamm*at Amir-un-Nisa in their favour. The respondent Amar Nath challenged the genuineness and the validity of the Will. The matter was, therefore, referred to the lower Court for determination, whether the present appellants were the legal representatives of *Musamm*at Amir-un-Nisa. The learned senior Subordinate Judge has determined the question in favour of the appellant and has sent up his report. The first question that has been argued before me is whether the Will is proved and is genuine. Merely the factum of the Will has been challenged on behalf of the respondent Amar Nath. No question as to its validity under the Muhammadan Law has now been raised. In fact, Pandit Sheo Narain, on discovering that Hayder Beg in his deposition had stated that even now he consented to the Will very frankly gave up the objection that the Will could not take effect in absence of the consent of the legal heirs of *Musamm*at Amir-un-Nisa after her death. The only question which I have to determine relating to this preliminary matter is whether the Will has been proved. Of the five marginal witnesses, Abdul Rahim is dead and Amir Beg could not be found, as he is reported to be somewhere in the Central Provinces. The remaining witnesses Abdul Salam, Isa Beg and Hayder Beg have given their evidence supporting the Will. The evidence remained unshaken in cross-examination and nothing is shown at the argument why their evidence should not be believed. The Court below has accepted their evidence and I am not prepared to disagree with it. The main ground on which the report of the Court below is challenged before me is that the evidence of the head constable relating to the thumb mark makes the execution of the Will by *Musamm*at Amir-un-Nisa doubtful. The evidence of the head constable is not very clear. In fact his cross-examination clearly shows that his opinion cannot be absolutely relied upon for the purpose of holding that the thumb mark was not made by *Musamm*at IQBAL JEHAN v. MATHURA PRASAD.

Amir-un-Nisa. In the face of the positive evidence in proof of this Will, in my opinion the learned Judge of the Court below was justified in not relying upon the evidence of the head constable and I am not prepared to take a different view in the matter. Coming to the appeal itself I must confess that I feel a great deal of difficulty in accepting the argument of the appellant's Vakil relating to the validity of the oral gift alleged to have been made by Musammât Piran in favour of Amir-un-Nisa. So far as the factum of the oral gift is concerned, I am inclined to think that the lower Court did find that it had been made. The only question then to determine is whether an oral gift, by a Muhammadan, of property situate in the Cantonment can be made under section 32 of the Cantonments Act. The provisions of section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act IV of 1882 have been made applicable to all gifts whether made by a Hindu, Muhammadan or a Buddhist. It is, however, contended that section 123 cannot be read without section 129 of the Transfer of Property Act. The omission of the inclusion of section 129 of the Transfer of Property Act in section 32 of the Cantonments Act may be intentional or accidental. It is not, however, necessary for me to determine what the exact reasons for this omission may be, for I must take the law as it stands and interpreting it according to the well recognized rules of Statutes relating to construction, I cannot but hold that the effect of section 32 of the Cantonments Act is that a gift must be made in the manner provided by section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. The decision, therefore, of the Court below relating to the houses Nos. 2 and 3 is correct. With regard to the three houses in Lalkurti Bazar I am inclined to think that the Court below has disallowed the claim for insufficient reasons. From the evidence it is clear that Musammât Piran paid Chaukidari tax from 1877 to 1878. The Court below gets rid of this documentary evidence by remarking that "it is quite possible that Hayder Beg's mother may have acquired the house on behalf of Hayder Beg and thus paid Chaukidari". There is no foundation for this remark in the evidence on the record.

Besides this documentary evidence there is oral evidence also to prove that the house belonged to Musammât Piran. It is true that the oral evidence is not very strong, but taking the oral evidence along with the documentary evidence one can safely come to the conclusion that the houses did belong to Musammât Piran. This being so, the plaintiff was entitled to a one-seventh share in them. No other ground raised in the memorandum of appeal has been argued. I must, therefore, modify the decree of the Court of first instance in this respect. The result is that I pass a decree in favour of the appellants to the effect that they own a half share in the house No. 1 situate in Mohalla No. 18 and one-seventh share in house No. 2, in shop No. 3 and the three houses situate in Lalkurti Bazar. The appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Court below is modified accordingly. The parties will give and receive costs in proportion to their failure and success. Cross-objection taken by the respondent necessarily fails and is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12—Exclusion of time—Time requisite for obtaining copies—Copies asked to be sent by post, effect of.

Where in an application for copies the applicant asks that they should be sent to him by post, the time requisite for obtaining the copies under section 12 of the Limitation Act is the time from the date of the application to the date of posting the copies, irrespective of the fact that the copies are ready for delivery before the latter date. [p. 832, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 14th May 1919, upholding the decree of the Subordinate Judge Bara Banki, dated the 27th February 1919.

LOCHANGIR v. SADA.

Mr. Haidar Husain, for the Appellant.
 Saiyed Ahmad Husain, General Agent, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the decision of the learned District Judge of Lucknow, who has dismissed the appeal to his Court on the ground that it was barred by limitation.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was decided by the Court of first instance on the 27th February 1919. Applications for copies of the judgment and decree were filed on the 21st of March 1919. On those copies which were filed along with the memorandum of appeal in the lower Appellate Court it is noted that the copies were ready for delivery on the 7th of April 1919.

If it be taken from the 21st of March to the 7th of April as the time requisite for obtaining copies, the decision of the learned District Judge that the appeal was barred by limitation would be correct. But we find that in the application for copies it was asked that the copies should be sent by post from Bara Banki to Lucknow and the appellant along with his memorandum of appeal filed an envelope, which he alleges was the envelope in which copies were received and which shows that the date of posting at Bara Banki was the 10th of April. The appellant must be allowed an opportunity of proving that in fact the copies were posted to him on the 10th of April as he alleges. If he can do so, it is clear that he must be allowed from the 21st of March up to the 10th of April as the period requisite for obtaining copies and if this period is allowed, the appeal will not be barred by limitation. The appeal might in such a case have been filed on any date on or before the 19th of April, but as the Courts were closed for the Easter holidays from the 18th to 21st inclusive and as the appeal was actually filed on the 22nd of April, it would not in that case be barred by limitation.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed. The case will go back to the learned District Judge, with the direction that he institute an inquiry as to the actual date on which the copies were posted and having come to a finding on that point, that he decide the question of limitation in view of the above observations; and if he finds that the appeal is not barred by limitation that he proceed to decide it according to law. Costs of this appeal will follow the result.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 12th July 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Shakargarh, District Gurdaspur, dated the 17th April 1917, dismissing the claim with costs.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Appellant.

Lala Durga Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is unnecessary to deal with this appeal on the merits, as I must hold, following the recent Full Bench decision in Civil Reference No. 36 of 1917 [Akbar Hussain v. Karm Dad (1)], that since the plaintiff had been wrongfully dispossessed of his tenancy, he was bound to bring his suit in a Revenue Court for recovery of possession within one year from the date of his dispossession under section 50 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. As he allowed the period of one year laid down in section 50 aforesaid to elapse without bringing a suit in a Revenue Court, he is now precluded from seeking the same remedy in a Civil Court. Upon this ground alone the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

*Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Mortgage—Interest,

A mortgage-deed provided that the principal sum should be paid within six months from the date of the mortgage and that in case of default interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent should be charged. In a suit on the mortgage interest at the rate of $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent was claimed. The Court, however, held that the stipulation for payment of interest was by way of penalty and awarded interest at the rate of $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. On appeal:

Held, that the decision was correct and that the rate of interest awarded was reasonable, but that interest at that rate should have been allowed up to the date fixed for payment and interest at 6 per cent after that date.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 29th May 1918, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 6th April 1918.

Mr. Muhammad Wasim holding brief of the Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Jiban Krishna Bannerji, for the Appellants.

Pandit Jagmohan Nath Ohak, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit on the basis of a mortgage dated the 6th of July 1905. The mortgage-deed provided that the principal sum should be paid within six months from the date of the mortgage and that if the mortgagor failed to pay within that time, interest at the rate of $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. should be charged.

The Court of first instance held that this provision was not a provision by way of penalty and gave the plaintiff a decree for the mortgage money with interest at the stipulated rate up to the date of the suit, but it declined to award any interest after that date.

The learned District Judge has held that the stipulation with regard to the payment of $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent interest is a stipulation by way of penalty and has, therefore, awarded interest at the rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

The only question in second appeal is whether the stipulation is by way of penalty or not. In my opinion the learned District Judge has come to a right conclusion. An increase of interest from nil to $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. made because of failure to pay within a stipulated period is clearly made by way of penalty. In that view of the case the lower Appellate Court was right in reducing the rate of interest to the reasonable rate of $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. But that rate should have been allowed on the principal mortgage money up to the date fixed for payment and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. should have been allowed after that date.

I allow this appeal to the extent that the interest at the rate of $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. will be allowed up to the date fixed for payment by the lower Appellate Court and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum will be allowed thereafter till realization. The parties will pay and receive costs in proportion to their failure and success.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c), Sch. II, Art. 17.—Suit for declaration that decree passed against plaintiff shall not affect him, whether maintainable—Prayer for general relief, effect of—Injunction, prayer for, whether necessary—Consequential relief

The mere prayer for general relief is not necessarily a prayer for consequential relief so as to take the suit out of the class of suits for declaration only [p. 835, col 1.]

Plaintiff sued for a declaration that a certain decree being based on fraud shall not affect his rights and for any other relief which the Court might deem fit to grant. The Subordinate Judge, holding that this was a suit for a declaratory decree and other consequential relief, called upon the plaintiff to pay ad valorem Court-fee and on his failure to do so, rejected his plaint. The plaintiff appealed:

BUA DITTA v. LADHA MAL,

Held, (1) that the suit as brought was one for a declaration only; [p. 835, col. 2.]

(2) that a suit for a mere declaration was not competent in this case, unless followed up by a prayer for consequential relief by injunction or otherwise; [p. 836, col. 1.]

(3) that the Court ought to have allowed the plaintiff an opportunity to amend his plaint so as to include the necessary prayer for consequential relief by injunction or otherwise. [p. 836, col. 1.]

First appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujrat, dated the 29th June 1919, dismissing the claim with costs on account of non-payment of deficient Court-fee on plaint.

FACTS.—Plaintiff and defendant, real brothers, appointed an arbitrator to settle their disputes about property. The arbitrator's award was filed in Court and a decree passed in compliance therewith. Plaintiff then brought the present suit for a declaration to the effect that since the award of the arbitrator and the decree passed in accordance therewith are based on fraud, they are ineffectual and inoperative as against the right of the plaintiff, adding a prayer for "any other relief which according to justice and the circumstances of the case the Court might deem fit to grant." The defendant pleaded that the declaratory suit could not proceed as the plaintiff was entitled to a further relief for possession by partition, and that an ad valorem Court-fee should be levied. The senior Subordinate Judge held that the suit could proceed as framed but that the plaint must be stamped under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. He rejected the prayer of the plaintiff for permission to amend the plaint and ordered him to pay ad valorem Court-fee. On his failure to do so, the Court rejected the plaint under Order VII, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Shujauddin, for the Appellant.—It is a suit for a mere declaration. The Court below is wrong in holding that the second prayer of the plaintiff excludes it from the scope of Article 17 (iii) of the Court Fees Act. The second prayer is mere surplusage. The test is the substance of the claim and not the mere words which the plaintiff uses in his plaint. Malik'a Meladathil v. Kunji Achammal (1).

The rulings relied on by the Court below do not apply. In Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (2) the plaintiff prayed for a declaration that without the deduction of a fair value of certain mauzas and excluding the same, the defendants had no right to lay the whole charge on the remaining property in claim and to bring about the sale of the said property. The Court held that this was a prayer for injunction which is a consequential relief and that, therefore, the suit was not such as is contemplated by section 42, Specific Relief Act. Similary in Nanak Chand v. Jiwan Mal (3) the plaintiff sued for a cancellation of a deed of release and the Court held that the plaintiff was really suing for consequential relief and could not take advantage of Article 17 (iii).

On the contrary it has been held that a suit in which the only prayer is to have a decree set aside as null and void is a suit for a declaratory decree without consequential relief and is governed by Article 17 (iii). Shrimant Sagajirao v. Smith (4). The same view was taken in Zinnat-un-nessa Khatun v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee (5). The learned Judge of the Court below was wrong in holding otherwise.

In any case, the plaintiff ought to have been allowed to amend his plaint. Under the circumstances of the case it was the duty of the Court to allow amendment. Referred to Hazara Singh v. Bishen Singh (6) and Kalabhai v. Secretary of State (7).

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.—We have to see here what is the real claim. From the facts set out in the plaint it is clear that there has been a partition of the property and the real object of the plaintiff is to undo the partition. Plaintiff has mortgaged a portion of the property. He has to get only half. This portion has to be included in his share and that is the reason of the suit.

SUA DITTA v. LADHA MAL.

In Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasamy Pillai (8) a Full Bench held that a suit for a declaration that a decree passed against the plaintiff for a debt is not binding on him is not a mere declaratory suit, but is one with consequential relief falling under section 7 (iv) (c). Their Lordships laid down a general principle: see pages 925-926.*

The suit as framed does not lie. Plaintiff must pray for an injunction restraining defendants from executing the decree. No amendment can be allowed now. Vide Kunhamed v. Kutti (9) followed in Ramanadhan Chettiar v. Annamalai Chetty (10).

Dr. Shujauddin replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant brought a suit asking for a declaratory decree to the effect that the award of an arbitrator as well as a decree passed against him on the strength of this award, being based on fraud, should not have any effect against his rights and also asking for any other relief which according to justice and circumstances of the case the Court might deem fit to grant. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has held this to be a suit asking for a declaratory decree and other consequential relief, in which the plaintiff is bound to value the relief which he seeks and pay a Court-fee thereon under section 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, and as the plaintiff had valued his suit at Rs. 14,750, he called upon him to pay a Court-fee on that valuation and on his failure to do so has rejected his plaint under Order VII, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff appeals.

We are satisfied that the mere prayer for general relief is not necessarily a prayer for consequential relief so as to take the suit out of the class of suits for declaration only, and on this point we do not think that the decree of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge can be supported. But it is argued for the defendant-respondent that a suit for a mere declaration does not lie in this case. There is no Punjab authority directly in point, at least none has been quoted to us, and we have been compelled to fall back on rulings of other High Courts in which there is, perhaps, some apparent conflict. The first case directly in point is Shrimant Sagajirao v. Smith (4). The suit was one brought by a judgment-debtor for a declaration that a money decree obtained against him by the defendant was null and void. The question was whether Court-fee should be levied under section 7 (iv) (c) or under Article 17 of the II Schedule of the Court Fees Act. Having reviewed the decisions there quoted, the learned Judges observed that some of them were based on ascertained facts in which the Judges were in a position to say what the real claim was. In such cases the plaintiff is usually called upon to value his relief. In that case, however, the Court had no knowledge beyond that derived from the plaint, nor was it in a position to say whether the case was one to which the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act applied. The conclusion arrived at was that on the plaint the suit was apparently one for a mere declaration and that a Court-fee of Rs. 10 might be paid accordingly. This decision was followed in the Calcutta High Court in Zinnat-un-nessa Khatun v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee (5). In that case the plaintiffs asked to have it declared that certain decrees were ineffectual and inoperative against them, and it was remarked: "The safest course in these cases is to ascertain what the plaintiff actually asks for by his plaint, and not to speculate upon what may be the ulterior effect of his success. It may very well be that as the result of setting aside the decree in question, some ulterior benefit may directly or indirectly flow to the plaintiff. But what we have to look at is what he asks for by his plaint. It is clear, looking at the plaint, that all that the plaintiff asks for is a declaratory decree, and he does not for any consequential relief. The case of Shrimant Sagajirao v. Smith (4) accords with this view."

The views taken in the above two decisions have not been followed in a recent Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangasamy Pillai (8). In that case it was remarked that a decree declaring that a decree is not binding on the plaintiff had the effect of cancellation of the decree and did not bear the appearance of a mere declaratory decree, although the case might be different where a declaration was sought by a person who was not a party to the decree impugned. In a case like that the suit might properly be regarded as one for declaration only, but in other cases where the plaintiff seeks for consequential relief it was more properly a suit to get rid of an already existing obligation. The Full Bench concluded that a suit to avoid a decree passed against the plaintiff was in any case a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief within the meaning of clause (iv) (c) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. This view was followed by other Judges in Madras in Ramanadhan Ohettiar v. Annamalai Ohetty (10), where it was held that a suit to declare that a decree is fraudulent and void will not lie unless followed up by a prayer for consequential relief, such as an injunction restraining the decree-holder from executing the decree. We are of opinion that this decision can well be applied in the present case. It is clear that a partition decree for the prosession of immoveable property has been passed in this case; although we are not in a position to say whether it has actually been executed, but if not, it is presumably capable of execution.

We must, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge and direct him to allow the plaintiff an opportunity to amend his plaint so as to include the necessary prayer for consequential relief by injunction or otherwise against the defendant and to value his relief and to pay Court-fees on his valuation. It will, of course, be open to the learned Judge to again reject the plaint, should the plaintiff fail to comply with these orders. No order is passed as to costs in this Court.

Letters Patent (Cal.), cl. 15—Decision rejecting application for judgment on pleadings, whether judgment—Appeal, whether lies—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XII, r. 6—Admission, ambiguous, in written statement, whether justifies judgment.

A decision by a Judge on the Original Side of the High Court rejecting an application by the plaintiff for an immediate judgment upon the pleadings is a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 5 of the Letters Patent, and is appealable as such. [p. 837 col. 1.]

An ambiguous admission in a written statement that a certain sum of money was due to the plaintiff is not such an admission as would justify an order under Order XII, rule 6 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 837, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In my judgment there is a right of appeal in this case, on the ground that the decision of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves was a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent. The question before the learned judge was whether the plaintiff was entitled to have judgment for the sum of Rs. 9,535 add on the state of the pleadings on the date of his application, and it is hardly necessary to point out that the alleged right might be a valuable right to the plaintiff, because if it were held by the learned Judge that the plaintiff was not entitled to the judgment for which he was asking on the state of the pleadings, it would mean that the plaintiff must wait at all events for a considerable time before he could get the judgment he was seeking; it might be months or conceivably even as much as a year. Farther than that if it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment for the amount alleged to be admitted on the pleadings, he would have to go to the expense and trouble of a trial on the original side. There are other matters to which I need not refer, to show that the right which the plaintiff was asserting might be a valuable and important right. Under those circumstances, I think the decision of the learned Judge did affect the merits of the question which was before him, viz., whether the plaintiff was entitled to have an immediate judgment upon the pleadings or whether he should be compelled to go to trial in the ordinary way, the decision, in my opinion, was a judgment within the meaning of the clause and there is a right of appeal.

WOODROFFE, J.—I am also disposed to think that there is an appeal in this case.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves.

The suit was for the sum of Rs. 9,745-15 annas, for the price of goods sold and delivered. The plaintiff made an application to the Court under Order XII, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code asking for an order that the defendant's firm may pay to the plaintiff's firm, without prejudice to the latter's right to proceed with the suit for the recovery of the balance of its claim mentioned in the plaint, the sum of Rs. 9,535-15-0 admitted by the defendant firm in its written statement to be due and payable by it to the plaintiff's firm. This application was based upon the written statement of the defendant.

The written statement began by alleging that the suit was premature. It then set out in paragraph 5 that as regards the balance of the goods which had not been paid for, the plaintiff firm, in spite of the defendant firm's readiness and willingness and even repeated offers to pay the price of the same after making reasonable deduction therefrom for damage, failed and neglected and in fact refused to accept the same, as appeared from what was stated below. The further allegation was that in view of the common practice and custom in the market which was also made an express term of the contract as stated in paragraph 3 of their written statement, the price of the said five bales had not become due on the 7th day of February 1919, when this suit was instituted. The allegation in the written statement that the suit was premature was no doubt by reason of the alleged term of the contract, whereby the price of the goods had not become due on the day the suit was instituted, namely, the 7th of February 1919. The written statement, so far, seems to me to involve a denial that the plaintiff was entitled to sue for any sum on the 7th of February. Then came paragraph 6, and therein it was alleged that there was a meeting between the Gomasta of the plaintiff's firm and the defendant or somebody on his behalf; and, it was agreed on or about the 28th of December 1918 that Rs. 210 was a reasonable allowance for the alleged damaged condition of the goods and that the defendant was to pay Rs. 9,535-15 annas instead of the amount claimed, and the plaintiff was to accept that sum but that although the defendant was ready and willing on that date and had all along been ready and willing from that date up to the time when the written statement was put in to pay that sum, the plaintiff in fact refused to accept it, and was on the date of the written statement still refusing to accept it. That paragraph taken by itself, to my mind, does amount to an unconditional admission that the plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 9,535-15 annas. Then the next paragraph states: "The defendant firm deny that the plaintiff firm have any cause of action as against the defendant as incorrectly stated in paragraph 6 of the plaint." Under these circumstances, can I say that there is an unambiguous admission that there was owing to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 9,535-15 annas which could be recovered in this suit? I think it is clear that there must be an admission to that effect. It was said by Lord Justice Lopes in the case of Landergan v. Feast (1) (which was a decision in respect of Order XXXII, rule 6 of the English Rules, which is similar in all material respects to Order XI, rule 6 of the Civil Procedure Code here) that "There must be a clear admission that the money is due and recoverable in the action in which the admission is made." Having regard to the matters to which I have referred, and especially to the first paragraph of the defence where the defendant relied upon the plea that the suit is premature, I am unable to say that there was in the written statement, taking it as a whole, an unambiguous admission that there was the sum of Rs. 9,535-15 annas due to the plaintiff, which could be recovered in this suit. Consequently I think that this appeal should be dismissed.

(1) (1886) 34 W. R. 691; 55 L. T. 42.

MIRAN DITTA v. BIHARI LAL.

It must not be taken that I express any opinion as to the merits of the case set up by the defendant in the written statement. My judgment is with reference merely to the question whether the written statement contained such an admission as would justify an order under Order XII, rule 6 of the Code.

(After discussion.)

We are of opinion that each party should pay his own costs in this appeal. We do not interfere with the learned Judge's order as regards the costs in the Court below.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 6—Minor when can take advantage of exemption—Right of action, accrual of, before birth, effect of.

A plaintiff cannot take advantage of the exemption provided for by section 6 of the Limitation Act unless he is a minor and was in existence at the time when the right to sue accrued. [p. 838, col. 2.]

A minor is not entitled to the benefit of section 6 of the Limitation Act in respect of a right to sue which accrued before his birth. [p. 839, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 3rd March 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Hissar, dated the 9th January 1915, dismissing the suit with costs.

Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi and Mr. M. Shah Niwaz, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 22nd September 1886 one Phuman, a collateral of the plaintiffs, mortgaged the land in dispute by way of conditional sale. After the expiry of the period fixed for the payment of the mortgage money the mortgagee took foreclosure proceedings and after the expiry of the year of grace he instituted a suit for possession as owner, and obtained a decree on the 3rd February 1893. In execution of the decree he got possession of the property, which resulted in a mutation attested in his favour on the 19th December 1893.

The alienor died in 1901, and the plaintiffs, who were born after the date on which the mutation referred to above was effected in favour of the alienees, instituted the present suit in August 1914 for possession of the property. The sole question for determination is whether their suit is within time. Now, considering that the alienor died after the enforcement of the Punjab Limitation Act I of 1900, we have no hesitation in holding that the action is governed by the provisions of that Act. The terminus a quo is, therefore, the date of the mutation and the suit is clearly barred by time.

It appears that one of the plaintiffs, Miran Ditta, was born in May 1894, and Mr. Nanak Chand for the appellants consequently contends that, as Miran Ditta was in his mother's womb in December 1893 when the mutation was effected, he is entitled to invoke the assistance of section 6 of the Limitation Act, and that the period of limitation should be counted from the date of the cessation of minority. This contention is, in our opinion, erroneous and must be rejected. The principle of law is perfectly clear that a plaintiff cannot take advantage of the exemption, unless he is a minor and in existence at the time when the right to sue accrues.

and that a minor is not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 6 in respect of a right to sue which accrued before his birth. As observed above, the period of limitation in this case began to run in December 1893 when neither of the plaintiffs was in existence, and section 6 of the Limitation Act has consequently no application.

We, therefore, affirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs,

*Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—
Execution of decree—Decree-holder auction-purchaser, application by, to be put in possession, whether step-in-aid of execution.*

Per Newbould, J.—An application by a decree-holder to be put in possession of property purchased by him at a sale in execution of his decree, is an application to the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of clause (5) of Article 182 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, [p. 839, col. 2; p. 840, col. 1.]

Per Cuming, J.—An application, to be a step-in-aid of execution, must be one by the decree-holder in his capacity of decree-holder and not in his capacity of auction-purchaser. [p. 841, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Additional District Judge, Backergunge, dated the 17th June 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of that District, dated the 3rd December 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Prokash Ohandra Majumdar, for the Appellant.—The previous application for execution is dated 29th May 1913. Some properties were sold on 20th November 1913. On the 7th September 1914 the sale was confirmed. On the 18th November 1914 the decree-holder applied for delivery of possession. On the 11th April 1917 the present application for execution was filed. The main question to be decided is, whether the application is time-barred. The decree-holder was the purchaser. He seeks relief under Article 182, clause (5), of the Limitation Act. The decision in Pran Krishna v. Juramoni (1) is in favour of the decree-holder, but Umesh Chandra Dass v. Shib Narain (2) is in my favour. Cites Panchanan v. Nrisingha Prosad Roy (3). What is the test to see if an act is a step-in-aid of execution? Refers to Order XXI, rule 95, Civil Procedure Code. The decisions are conflicting. So, there should be a reference to the Full Bench. I submit that the application must be by a decree-holder as such. Umesh Ohandra Dass v. Shib Narain (2) has not been discussed in any later case.

Babu Preo Sankar Majumdar, for the Respondent.—Umesh Ohandra Dass v. Shib Narain (2) says that separate application must be made for delivery of possession. This case has no application to the present case. Sariatoolla v. Raj Kumar (4) is on all fours with this case.

Babu Prokash Ohandra Majumdar, in reply.—No answer has been given as to conflict of principles. The real question is what is the proper test to determine, what is a step-in-aid of execution. The authority of Sariatoolla v. Raj Kumar (4) has been much shaken. This case has been discussed in Baij Nath Prosad v. Ghanshyam Dass (5), Sadananda Sarma v. Kali Sankar Bajpai (6), Maazzam Hussien Mandai v. Sarat Oomary Debi (7) and Pran Krishna v. Juramoni (1).

JUDGMENT.

NEWBOULD, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor in execution proceedings, his contention being that the application for execution by the decree-holder is barred by limitation. The decision of this appeal depends entirely on the answer to the question whether an application by a decree-holder to be put in possession of property purchased by him at a sale in execution of his decree, is an application to the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of clause 5 of Article 182 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Both the lower Courts, relying on the decisions of this Court in Sariatoolla v. Raj Kumar (4) and Pran Krishna v. Juramoni (1), have answered the question in the affirmative. For the appellant it is contended that an application by a decree-holder to be put in possession of property after a sale by the Court is made by him in his capacity as auction-purchaser and not as decree-holder and, therefore, is not an application for a step-in-aid of execution. It is urged that on the sale of the property the execution proceedings come to an end, and consequently the decree holder, when applying to be put in possession, is not executing his decree. It is also pointed out that rules 95 and 96 of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure require an application for delivery of possession to be made by the 'purchaser.' Our attention has also been drawn to Article 180 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. The wording of this Article adds nothing to the argument based on the wording of rules 95 and 96 of Order XXI, since the former would naturally be in the same terms as the latter. In support of the appellant's contention the cases Panchanan v. Nrisingha Prosad Roy (3) and Umesh Chandra Dass v. Shib Narain (2) are cited. It is contended that these decisions are at variance with the decisions on which the lower Courts have relied and we are asked to refer this appeal to a Full Bench for decision of this question.

In my opinion we should follow the decisions in the cases of Sariatoolla v. Raj Kumar (4) and Pran Krishna v. Juramoni (1). Those cases are clearly in point and are decisions on the actual questions that arise in this appeal. In both cases on which the appellant relies the point for decision was different, namely, whether an application for confirmation of sale was a step-in-aid of execution. It is true that there are remarks in the judgments in these cases that such an application cannot be a step-in-aid of execution because the application was made on behalf of the decree holder as auction-purchaser. But in the case of Umesh Chandra Dass v. Shib Narain (2) the learned Judges, after remarking that an application made not by the decree-holder as such but by the auction-purchaser could hardly be said to be an application in aid of execution, proceed to give another and entirely different reason for dismissing the appeal. In the other case, Panchanan v. Nrisingha Prosad Roy (3), the learned Judges, after pointing out that the application was made on behalf of the decree holder as auction-purchaser, add that no authority had been cited in support of the contention that such an application was a step-in-aid of execution. That case was decided in 1893. Had the question at issue been the same as in the present case, different considerations would have arisen and it seems to me quite possible that so much importance might not have been given to the difference between an application by the decree-holder as such and by him in his capacity of auction-purchaser. Though the argument based on this difference is plausible, it does not appear to me to be sound. Even though the decree-holder has become the auction-purchaser, he has obtained no benefit from his decree until he gets possession of the property purchased by him and an application to be put in possession is, therefore, an application for a step-in-aid of execution of his decree. This is the view that has been also taken by other High Courts in India: Moti Lal v. Makund Singh (8), Lakshmanan Chettiar v. Kannanmal (9) Sadashiv Mahadu v. Narayan Vithal (10).

For these reasons and with this weight of authority behind it I think the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right and should be upheld. The apparent differences of opinion expressed by the learned Judges in the cases on which the appellant relies are not such as to require a reference to a Full Bench.

As my learned brother agrees with me as to the final order, though on other reasons, this appeal must stand dismissed with costs.

The hearing fee is assessed at three gold mohurs.

ANNADA PRASANNA v. SOMASUNDARI.

CUMING, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution of a decree, and the short point for decision is whether an application for delivery of possession by the decree holder or auction-purchaser at a sale held in execution of the decree is a step-in-aid of execution.

It would appear that the previous application for execution was made on 29th May 1913. The property was sold on 29th November 1913, and the sale confirmed on 7th September 1914. On 18th November 1914, the decree-holder as auction purchaser applied for delivery of possession. The present application for execution is made on 11th April 1917.

Both the lower Courts have held that the application for confirmation of the sale is not a step-in-aid of execution, but they have held that the application for delivery of possession by the decree holder as auction-purchaser is a step-in-aid of execution and hence the present application is within time.

The appellant contends that neither the application for confirmation of sale nor the application for delivery of possession by the auction-purchaser decree-holder are steps-in-aid of execution. The respondent has not contended that the application for confirmation of the sale is a step-in-aid of execution, but he contends that the application for delivery of possession is such a step and so limitation in this case has been saved.

The appellant has relied on two rulings of this Court in support of his contention, the case of Umesh Chandra Dass v. Shib Narain (2) and the case of Panchanan v. Nrisingha Prosad Ray (3). The respondent has relied on the two rulings, Saritoolla v. Raj Kumar (4) and Pran Krishna v. Juramoni (1). The respondent has urged that the two cases cited by him are directly in point, while in the cases relied on by the appellant the question to be decided was whether an application for confirmation of the sale was a step-in-aid of execution. No doubt this is correct. But it seems to me that the principle which the learned Judges laid down in deciding the case of Umesh Chandra Dass v. Shib Narain (2), although strictly speaking they did not rely on it for the decision of the case, would apply to the case of an application for delivery of possession. Ghose and Geidt, JJ., state:—"Referring to the application itself, in this case we find it was really made by the decree-holder in his capacity as purchaser of the plot in question. It was indeed made not by the decree-holder as such, but by the auction-purchaser and viewing it in this light it could hardly be said that it was an application in aid of execution of the decree."

The principle underlying these remarks was that the application to be a step-in-aid of execution must be one by the decree-holder in his capacity of decree-holder, and not in his capacity of auction purchaser. If we apply that principle to the present case, it would be clear that application by the decree-holder as auction-purchaser for delivery of possession would not be a step-in-aid of execution.

With the greatest respect to the learned Judges who decided the cases of Saritoolla v. Raj Kumar (4) and Pran Krishna v. Juramoni (1) it seems to me that this is the correct principle and that the application by an auction-purchaser for delivery of possession, even though he be the decree-holder, is not a step-in-aid of execution. The execution of the decree is complete when the property is sold and the money paid. I am fortified in the conclusions by the remarks of the learned Judges in the case of Ananda Mohan Roy v. Hara Sundari (11), where they state: "It seems to us that when the sale of the property attached in execution has been completed and the purchase-money paid into Court, nothing more remains to be done in respect of the execution of the decree as against that property and no application as regards the purchase money, either to draw it out of Court or set it off against the decree when the decree-holder is himself the purchaser, can properly be said to be an application to the Court to take some step in execution of the decree."

Even though the auction-purchaser was unable to get possession, that would not entitle the decree holder to take out further execution for that portion of his money represented by the property he had bought.

JHANDU v. NIAMAT KHAN.

It may no doubt be argued that to apply for delivery of possession is to give effect to the sale which is the result of the decree. It does not seem, however, to me that giving effect to the result of the execution of the decree is the same thing as executing the decree.

I am of opinion that all steps in execution of a decree which can save limitation must be taken by the decree-holder as decree holder and not as auction-purchaser.

In my opinion the two rulings Sariatoola v. Raj Kumar (4) and Pran Krishna v. Juramoni (1) were wrongly decided. As my learned brother is of the opinion that he should follow the two rulings already referred to which undoubtedly are directly in point, the appeal will be dismissed.

Custom—Alienation—Ancestral property—Antecedent debts—Necessity—Duty of alienee to make enquiry.

Per Shadi Lal, J.—An alienee discharging an antecedent debt is not required to make an enquiry into the nature thereof. [p. 843, col. 2.]

But an alienee paying off an antecedent creditor gets no advantage, if he has knowledge of the true nature of the debt or acts in bad faith. [p. 844, col. 1.]

An alienee who is identified with the antecedent creditor, so that he and the creditor cannot be viewed as two separate persons, is in the same position. [p. 844, col. 1.]

Per LeRossignol, J.—It is the duty of an alienee of ancestral land to make enquiry not merely as to the existence of antecedent debts but also as to their nature, if the result of the first enquiry would raise doubts in the mind of an ordinary man as to the immorality or reasonableness of the debts. [p. 845, col. 2; p. 846, col. 1.]

Plaintiff sued for a declaration that a certain sale-deed executed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in favour of defendant No. 1 shall not affect his reversionary rights. The major portion of the consideration was paid to antecedent creditors to whom the alienors were actually indebted. It appeared, however, that the alienors had embarked upon a career of reckless extravagance and were wasting the property to injure the reversioners:

JUDGMENT.

SHADI LAL, J.—This is an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of a single Bench, and the main question for determination is whether an alienee of ancestral immovable property from a person governed by customary law is bound to prove necessity or enquiry as to necessity with respect to a debt which was due by the alienor to an antecedent creditor and which has been discharged by the alienee. In other words, is it the duty of the alienee to enquire, not only into the existence of the antecedent debt, but also into the nature and necessity thereof?

Now, the passage in the Full Bench judgment in Devi Ditta v. Saudagar Singh (1), which deals with the subject, is in the following terms:—"An outsider who pays antecedent debts in consideration of a transfer of the property, if he acts honestly and makes proper enquiry whether the debts are actually due, is not responsible if he has been deceived and is entitled to ask for his alienation to be treated as binding. He can, however, be put in the same position as the other alienee, if the circumstances show that he had knowledge of the true nature of the debts, or that he made no enquiry whatever or acted with bad faith. The difference between the two kinds of alienees may, perhaps, be best illustrated by the case of a decree against the proprietor. The decree holder, by taking a transfer of land to pay off the decree, does not put himself in a better position than before if the original debts were not just debts, but an alienee who is an outsider is not bound to go behind the decree. In his case, in order to avoid the alienation, it would have to be specially shown that he was fully aware of the nature of the previous debts or acted in collusion with the former creditor. The main difference between the two classes of alienees thus appears to lie in the greater strictness of proof, required from the alienee who is also the antecedent creditor, that the debts were actually incurred and that they were not of the character mentioned above."

The first sentence of the above passage shows that the enquiry to be made by the alienee relates only to the existence of the antecedent debt, and that he is not required to enquire into the nature of the debt. According to this view he has discharged his duty if he shows that he made a proper enquiry into the matter whether the debt was actually due to the antecedent creditor, and the result of the enquiry was that the debt was so due. He is not required to go further and enquire into the character or the necessity of the antecedent debt.

If the matter depended upon the aforesaid sentence alone, there would be no difficulty whatever in defining exactly the duty of the alienee. But the second sentence in the passage cited above attempts to lay down the consequence of an omission to make the enquiry, and it is difficult to reconcile it with the first sentence. Does it mean that the alienee's omission to make the enquiry places him in the same position as an alienee who has not paid off an antecedent debt, and imposes upon him the duty of establishing necessity for the antecedent debt, even if he satisfies the Court that the antecedent debt discharged by him was actually due by the alienor? One would suppose that, as the sole object of the enquiry is to ascertain the existence of the debt, the alienee not making an enquiry should be in no worse position, if he succeeds in establishing the very fact for which the enquiry was required, viz., that the debt paid off by him was, as a matter of fact, due to the antecedent creditor. The only difference in his position would be that in the event of making a proper enquiry he would be entitled to protection, even if it turned out that the debt did not exist and that he had been deceived; while in the case of non-enquiry he must prove that the debt discharged by him was actually due to the antecedent creditor. If the second sentence in the passage cited above determines the duty of the alienee, i. e., that an alienee omitting to make an enquiry is required to prove necessity for the antecedent debt, then it may be urged with some reason that the inference to be deduced from that sentence is that the duty of the alienee is not over when he has ascertained the existence of the debt, but that he should go further and enquire into the character of that debt.

It is unfortunate that there should be any ambiguity or uncertainty on a question of this kind which repeatedly comes up for decision before the Subordinate Courts. It, however, seems to me that the alienee discharging an antecedent debt is not required to make an enquiry into the nature thereof, and this is the view which finds expression in at least two Division Bench judgments, viz., Muhammad Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (2) and Civil Appeal No. 350 of 1911 [Muhammad Islam v. Hari Lal (3)]. It appears that the dicta contained in those judgments were not absolutely necessary for the decision of the cases before the Court, but they certainly go to show how the learned Judges interpreted the rule laid down by the Full Bench judgment in the two sentences quoted above, and what they considered to be the duty of the alienee. It may not be out of place to point out that the rule of Hindu Law on the subject is to the effect that a vendee or a creditor claiming under a sale or a mortgage has to prove either that the antecedent debt existed or that he made due enquiry and honestly believed that it existed. He is not required to prove either actual necessity or enquiry as to necessity, vide Trevelyan's Hindu Law, page 310, and the remarks in Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh (4).

JHANDU v. NIAMAT KHAN.

It is true that this view of the law as to antecedent debts may in some cases lead to an absurdity; and it may be urged with considerable force that an alienor has only to interpose an antecedent creditor in order to make his alienation unassailable. It is, however, clear that a debt incurred without valid necessity does not become a just antecedent debt merely by its colourable inclusion in a subsequent transaction. If the alienee was no party to this device and acted in good faith, there is no valid reason why he should be required to prove necessity for an antecedent debt. If he has to prove necessity or an enquiry as to necessity with respect to an antecedent debt, then he is in no better position than a person who takes an alienation in consideration of money paid to the alienor at the time of the alienation, and the doctrine of antecedent debt would then have no meaning.

But the law enunciated above helps only an honest alienee who acts in perfect good faith. There can be little doubt that an alienee paying off an antecedent creditor gets no advantage, if he has knowledge of the true nature of the debt or acts in bad faith. The same remarks would apply to an alienee who is identified with the antecedent creditor, so that he and the creditor cannot be viewed as two separate persons. Now, the facts of the present case show that though the alienee made no enquiry whatsoever, he paid the major portion of the consideration to antecedent creditors to whom the alienors were actually indebted. It is, however, clear that the latter had embarked upon a career of reckless extravagance and were wasting their property to injure the reversioners. The circumstances disclosed in the judgment of the District Judge, especially the facts relating to a previous attempt on the part of the alienors to sell their ancestral land, which attempt led to a suit by the reversioner, point to the conclusion that the alienee, who is their next door neighbour, must have been aware of their previous dealings with the ancestral land, and must have come to know that the debts due to the antecedent creditors had been contracted recklessly and without necessity and could not be regarded as just debts. Upon this finding I would dismiss this appeal, but considering that there was no appearance by or on behalf of the respondent I would make no order as to costs.

LE ROSSIGNOL, J.—Devi Ditta v. Saudagar Singh (1) is, of course, binding on us, but with all deference I find it somewhat difficult to reconcile various passages which occur in it, and it is desirable that the Courts below should be in no doubt as to the true state of the law.

The expression "just debt" was defined in Duni Chand v. Jagat Singh (5) to mean a debt which is actually due, is not immoral, illegal nor opposed to public policy. It also means, at any rate when the rights of reversioners under customary law are involved, a debt not contracted as an act of reckless extravagance or of wanton waste or with the intent to destroy the interests of the reversioners. After quoting this definition of the expression "just debt," the judgment (Devi Ditta v. Saudagar Singh (1)) goes on to discriminate between the alienee who is also an antecedent creditor, and an outsider who pays antecedent debts in consideration of his alienation, and with regard to the latter class, the first and, to judge by the head-note (for the facts of the case are not given), the main proposition laid down is that if the alienee makes proper inquiry whether the debts are actually due and has been deceived, he is not responsible if it is subsequently ascertained that the debts do not exist.

The judgment further proceeds to lay down that he will be in no better position than the antecedent creditor if the circumstances show that he had knowledge of the nature of the debts or that he made no inquiry or that he acted in bad faith.

Then follows an illustration concerning a decree which prima facie seems to me to clash with those propositions, for it would appear that even if the subsequent alienee is aware that the decree is based on immoral debts, his alienation is unassailable and he is not bound to go behind the decree, but in his case, the judgment continues: "To avoid his alienation it would have to be specially shown that he was fully aware of the nature of the previous debts or had acted in collusion with the previous creditors." This appears to indicate that the onus of establishing those conditions lies on the persons challenging the alienation, whilst the next sentence of the judgment would seem to imply that the question is not one of onus but of the strictness or quantum of proof demandable of the alienee.

These two sentences of the judgment and also the preceding two, the first of which lays down that an outsider need not trouble to go behind the decree and the second of which provides in effect that the decree will not protect him if he has certain knowledge, have caused me difficulty. If the second sentence, however, be read as a proviso to the first and be read "Provided that the alienation may be avoided if it be specially shown, etc., etc.," the difficulty is removed and this is how I read those sentences. I apprehend that the principle laid down is that the initial onus lies on the outsider alienee to show that the debts were due and when he has discharged that onus, the turn then comes of the opposite party to show that the alienee made no proper inquiry or that if he made one, he must have learnt of the real nature of the debts. Muhammad Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (2) is not a very direct authority in this connection, for in that case it was held that the alienor had unrestricted powers of alienation, so that the other findings in the appeal were really unnecessary for the disposal of the appeal. But in any case that judgment does not go farther than Devi Ditta v. Sandagar Singh (1), for although the judgment comprises a sentence which runs: "If the debts were really due, the alienation made to pay such debts is a necessity according to the Full Bench judgment, Devi Ditta v. Sandagar Singh (1), and it is binding on the plaintiff," that sentence is followed by another:—"The onus is on the plaintiff to prove that the debts were really incurred for immoral purposes and in reckless extravagance," so that Muhammad Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (2) is no authority for the view that the alienation to an outsider alienee is binding on a reversioner, if the reversioner cannot show that the antecedent debts, which were liquidated by the alienation, were unjust or extravagant debts to the knowledge of the alienee. Muhammad Islam v. Hari Lal (3) is another authority quoted on the subject; but its value also is much discounted by the fact that the primary finding in the appeal was that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they had any right to contest the validity of the alienor's alienations. Later on in the judgment there is a sentence to the effect that the alienee was not bound in any way to inquire into the nature of the antecedent debt and that it was sufficient for him to satisfy himself that the debt really existed. If it was intended by this dictum to lay down that the alienation was unassailable merely because the antecedent debt really did exist, that goes farther than the Full Bench judgment.

From the foregoing it is clear that the two sentences in the Full Bench judgment which are hard to reconcile are that which runs:—"He can, however, be put in the same position as the other alienee if the circumstances show that he had knowledge of the true nature of the debts, or that he made no inquiry whatever or acted with bad faith," and that which runs: "The main difference between the two classes of alienees thus appears to lie in the greater strictness of proof required from the alienee who is also the antecedent creditor that the debts were actually incurred, and that they were not of the character mentioned above."

Do the words "or that he made no enquiry whatever" refer to the words in the preceding sentence "makes proper enquiry" and "has been deceived," or do they mean that he has not made any enquiry as to the mere existence of the debts without regard to their nature? If such is the meaning of the phrase "made no enquiry whatever," then the sentence is in conflict with the second sentence which suggests that the outsider alienee has to consider not only the existence of the antecedent debts but also their character. If A incurs immoral debts with B, C and D and subsequently alienates his property to E in consideration of the liquidation of those debts by E and the only duty laid upon E is to ascertain that the money is really owing to B, C and D, then the whole agnatic principle of customary law in regard to ancestral land is reduced to an absurdity. For these reasons I hold that the words "made no enquiry whatever" cannot refer merely to an enquiry as to the existence of the debts but include also an enquiry as to their nature, if the result of the first enquiry would raise doubts in the mind of an ordinary man as to the immorality or reasonableness of the debts.

If these principles be applied to the facts of the present case, it seems to me that the present appellant should have been placed on his guard by the mere magnitude of the debt.

He is a near neighbour of the alienors and of at least one of the antecedent debtors and he must have been aware that he was making an aleatory bargain.

For these reasons I concur with my learned colleague in dismissing the appeal and making no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 31st July 1917.

Mr. A. P. Sen holding brief of the Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Syed Ali Mohammad, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for foreclosure. The claim is made up of three parts. The first part relates to a mortgage, purporting to have been executed by Nazir Hussain on behalf of himself and his minor nephew, Nisar Husain, in favour of the plaintiff on the 25th August 1913. The amount borrowed by virtue of this mortgage was Rs. 1,200, out of which Rs. 90 were to be credited towards an earlier debt said to have been due to the mortgagee and the balance was taken before the Sub Registrar by Nazir Husain for the purpose of discharging a prior decree for foreclosure held by Purbi Din.

Nazir Husain was the certificated guardian of the person and property of Nisar Husain; but he did not obtain the sanction of the District Judge for entering into the above transaction. Under section 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) the mortgage was, therefore, voidable at the instance of the minor. The allegation of the plaintiff was that Rs. 1,110, paid to Nazir Husain for the discharge of the decree for foreclosure held by Purbi Din, could not be paid to Purbi Din, because he had prior to that date obtained an absolute decree for foreclosure ex parte against the mortgagors and he refused in consequence to receive the money. The plaintiff asserted that that money was thereafter paid by Nazir Hussain to Sarni Mal for the redemption of certain jewellery, which had been pledged with him by Nazir Hussain and Nawab Husain, the father of the minor. The defendants, however, denied that any jewellery had been pledged with Sarni Mal by Nazir Husain or Nawab Husain or that any money had been paid to him for the redemption of the jewellery. Nazir Husain has not been produced. The only witnesses examined on the point are Sarni Mal and the plaintiff himself; but, as the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, their evidence is unworthy of credit. Sarni Mal has not produced his account books. He asserts that such pledges were not entered in his account books, but he admits that he never before advanced such a large sum of money on a pledge of jewellery. A reliance is placed on the application for guardianship filed by Nazir Husain, in which it was stated that out of Rs. 1,400 due to Sarni Mal, Rs. 700 were due by the minor, Nisar Husain, on a deed of mortgage (rehannama); and it is asserted that the mortgage therein referred to was the pledge of jewellery, for the redemption of which Rs. 1,110 are now stated to have been paid. There is no reference, however, to any pledge in that application. In the deed of further charge, executed by Nazir Husain on behalf of himself and his nephew, Nisar Husain, in favour of the plaintiff on the 22nd September 1913, the said money is alleged to have been paid to liquidate an earlier debt of Sarni Mal and Shiam Lal with the permission of the District Judge, but no such permission has been proved. The entire story about the payment of the said money to Sarni Mal seems to be incredible and the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief in respect of this item. With regard to the item of Rs. 90 the plaintiff concedes that he is not entitled to any relief against the minor, as no proof has been offered to show that any debt of the kind referred to in the deed of mortgage was due by him or his father.

The second part of the claim refers to a deed of further charge, purporting to have been executed by Nazir Husain on behalf of himself and his nephew, Nisar Husain, for a sum of Rs. 4,500, out of which one item of Rs. 1,020-1-0 is said to have been paid to Purbi Din in respect of the decree for foreclosure above mentioned. It appears that after Purbi Din had obtained an absolute decree for foreclosure ex parte, an application was made by Nazir Husain and Nisar Husain to have that ex parte decree set aside. Prior to the date fixed for the hearing of that application, Nazir Husain on behalf of himself and his nephew, Nisar Husain, executed the deed of further charge above mentioned. The execution of the deed took place on the 22nd September 1913 but owing to the illness of the mortgagee it could not be registered till the 13th October 1913. Out of the consideration of Rs. 4,500 secured by that deed Rs. 2,567-4-0 were paid in cash to Nazir Husain for the purpose of discharging the decrees held by Purbi Din, Ghulam Husain and Sarni Mal. This money was paid before the Sub-Registrar. The only decree held by Purbi Din was the ex parte decree for foreclosure, the proceedings to set aside which were then pending. On the date fixed for the hearing of the application made to set aside that decree the plaintiff sent his agent, Gokal Prasad, to see that the money was deposited in satisfaction of that decree. The evidence of Purbi Din shows that Nazir Husain paid Rs. 1,020-1-0 to him on the 18th October 1913 and that Gokal Prasad, the agent of the plaintiff, was present at the time. His statement is borne out by the receipt filed by Purbi Din, certifying the adjustment of the decree (Exhibit 9). It is not disputed that Nazir Husain had paid the money due to Purbi Din on account of that decree. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is that it is not shown that the said money had been paid out of the sum of Rs. 4,500 borrowed from the plaintiff. The circumstances above set forth, read with the evidence of Purbi Din and the plaintiff, are, however, in our opinion, sufficient to establish that the payment was made by Nazir Husain out of the amount borrowed by him under the deed of further charge above mentioned. The said deed mentions that the money was borrowed for that purpose. No suggestion has been made that the money paid to Purbi Din was derived from any other source. The decree for foreclosure held by Purbi Din was on account of a mortgage made by Nazir Husain and Nawab Husain, the father of the minor, jointly (Exhibit 13). The effect of the payment of that decree out of the consideration advanced by the plaintiff was that the minor, who had inherited a 14/24ths share in the property left by his father, was relieved of the burden of paying the ancestral debt and of the burden which the decree imposed, upon him including the risk of losing his share in case no payment was made. Nazir Husain was liable for the payment of half the amount of that decree. For the payment of the other half the minor and his mother and sister were responsible. The minor was, therefore, benefited to the extent of 14/24ths of half of the amount paid to Purbi Din for the discharge of the said decree. It is not disputed that this deed of further charge was also executed by Nazir Husain on behalf of the minor without the sanction of the District Judge. It is contended on behalf of the minor that the effect of the failure of the guardian to obtain the sanction of the District Judge was that the re-payment of the said money could not be enforced against the property of the minor, and reliance is placed in support of that contention on the decision in Inambandi v. Mutsaddi (1). In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with the powers of a de facto guardian under the Muhammadan Law over the immoveable property of a minor whose guardianship he had assumed. The powers of a guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) are, however, not identical with those for which provision is made by the Muhammadan Law. The only restriction which the Act places in respect of the transfer, of immoveable property by a certificated guardian is that the sanction of the District Judge is requisite in cases of certain transfers, and any such transfers made without his sanction are voidable at the instance of the minor, when he attains majority. No transaction can, however, be avoided by the minor under the general principles of equity recognised by section 41 of the Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), except on the condition that the person benefited by the transaction restores the benefit he has received or makes such compensation as the justice of the case requires. In the Court below this principle was not challenged. No decree for foreclosure can, however, be passed against the minor, for he is still incapable of ratifying the transaction, and the mortgage having been made without the sanction of the District Judge cannot be legally enforced. The only decree to which the plaintiff is entitled is a simple money decree for the recovery of a 14/24ths share of half of Rs. 1,020-10 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from 18th October 1913 up to the date of payment.

Another portion of the consideration of the said deed of further charge was paid to Ghulam Husain on account of two decrees held by him against Nazir Husain and the minor and his mother and sister (Exhibits 4 and 5). These decrees were obtained on foot of the mortgages made by Nazir Husain and Nawab Husain. The share of the minor in the mortgaged property was 14/24ths out of the half share belonging to his father. The amount paid to Ghulam Husain out of the consideration received from the plaintiff was Rs. 1,433-11-10. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that the judgment-debtors, heirs of Nawab Husain, were liable to contribute towards the payment of those decrees per capita; but the learned Counsel, who appears for the minor, concedes that he is unable to support that method of distributing the liability. The minor was benefited to the extent of 14/24ths of half of that money, inasmuch as his share in the property mortgaged would have been foreclosed, had no payment been made by Nazir Husain on his behalf out of the money borrowed from the plaintiff. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled as regards this item to a simple money decree for 14/24ths of half of Rs. 1,433-11-10 with future interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the 23rd September 1913 up to the date of payment.

The third part of the claim relates to certain mortgagee rights, to which the plaintiff claims to have been subrogated by virtue of a payment alleged to have been made by him to Musammât Sakina on account of a prior mortgage. The mortgage in question was made by Nazir Husain and Nawab Husain in favour of Ghulam Husain on the 26th August 1910. Ghulam Husain obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure on foot of that mortgage against Nazir Husain and the minor and his mother and sister and against the plaintiff, Parshotam Das, and the defendant, Muhammad Ali, who were impleaded as puisne mortgagees. The decree was subsequently transferred by Ghulam

PARSHOTAM DASS v. NAZIR HUSAIN.

Husain to Sakina. On the 10th February 1915 the plaintiff in his capacity as a puisne mortgagee paid Rs. 2,154 on account of the said decree to save the mortgaged property from foreclosure. Under section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) the plaintiff is entitled by virtue of that payment to the rights held by a prior mortgagee and can claim foreclosure of the mortgage, unless the mortgage money is paid to him in full by Nazir Husain and the legal representatives of Nawab Husain, the other mortgagor. The Court below refused to allow him any relief against the minor, Nisar Husain, with respect to this item, because he had not impleaded the mother and sister of the minor, who were also interested in the mortgaged property. Under Order XXXIV, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure it is necessary that all persons interested in the mortgaged property should be impleaded in order that they may have an opportunity to redeem, but no such objection was taken on behalf of the minor at the first hearing of the suit. Order I, rule 13, of the Code provides that all objections on the ground of non-joinder or misjoinder of parties shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived. Order I, rule 9, provides that no suit shall be defeated by reason of non-joinder of parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. In either view of the case we see no reason why the plaintiff should not be allowed a decree to enforce the rights which he has acquired by virtue of the above payment so far as the parties to the present suit are concerned.

It only remains to notice the ground of defence set up by Muhammad Ali, one of the defendants. He claims priority over the mortgagee rights which the plaintiff seeks to enforce, on the ground that he had helped the judgment-debtor, Nazir Husain, to pay up a prior mortgage effected by Nazir Husain and Nawab Husain in favour of Sarni Mal on the 11th July 1904, in respect of which Sarni Mal had obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure on the 14th September 1910 (Exhibit C2). It appears that Nazir Husain borrowed Rs. 2,000 from the Allahabad Bank, Limited, on the 4th December 1911 to pay up that decree with the assistance of Muhammad Ali, who joined him as surety, by executing a promissory note in favour of the said Bank (Exhibit C11). Muhammad Ali admits that Nazir Husain took him to the Allahabad Bank to get the loan for him and that he joined in executing the promissory note, as the Bank required that it should be executed by two persons. Banke Lal, the accountant of the Bank, states that Muhammad Ali told him that the loan should be given to Nazir Husain and that he, Muhammad Ali, would sign the note to help him to get it. Instead of paying the money borrowed from the Allahabad Bank, Limited, to Sarni Mal, Muhammad Ali got Sarni Mal to sell the decree to him (Exhibit C4) and subsequently applied for the substitution of his name in the place of the decree-holder (Exhibit C5). As the money was actually paid by Nazir Husain, the decree was thus practically discharged. On the 4th June 1912, Muhammad Ali accordingly filed an application in the Court which passed the decree, stating that he had relinquished the entire decretal money in favour of the judgment-debtors, one of whom was Nazir Husain, and had no claim left in regard thereto (Exhibit C6). Subsequently he obtained a deed of mortgage from Nazir Husain on behalf of himself and as guardian of his minor nephew, Nisar Husain, for Rs. 2,000. It is in respect of this deed, which was executed on the 30th September 1913, that he claims priority. He, therefore, paid the money due to the Allahabad Bank, Limited; but that payment should not be confounded with the payment, which had been made by Nazir Husain on account of the decree held by Sarni Mal, from the money borrowed from the Bank, for the payment of which Muhammad Ali stood security. We feel satisfied that the money was in reality borrowed by Nazir Husain from the Bank and paid in satisfaction of the decree, and the mere fact that Muhammad Ali stood surety for him does not entitle him to claim priority in respect of the mortgage which he subsequently obtained from Nazir Husain in consideration of the same.

It is also urged that the deed of further charge, which the plaintiff seeks to enforce was antedated in order to defeat the claim of Muhammad Ali to priority. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that there were circumstances, which justified the suspicion that the said deed had been antedated; but we are unable to support the conclusion at which he has arrived. There is direct evidence to show that the deed of further charge was executed on the date which it purports to bear. The registration of the deed was delayed, because Nazir Husain had promised to attend the registration office on the day following the execution of the said deed but did not do so and the mortgagee thereafter fell ill. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (2), there is a presumption that the document was executed on the date it bears. That presumption has not been rebutted by the delay in the registration of the deed, which has sufficiently been explained.

We allow the appeal accordingly and modify the decree of the Court below in so far that instead of the personal decree against the minor defendant No. 2 we allow the plaintiff a simple money decree for the recovery of a 14/24ths share of half of Rs. 1,020-1-0 and a similar share of half of Rs. 1,433-11-10 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the 18th October 1913 and the 23rd September 1913, respectively, up to the date of payment against the property of Nisar Husain and further direct that the mortgagee rights held by the plaintiff by virtue of his having paid the decree for foreclosure, held by Ghulam Husain and transferred to Musammam Sakina, shall be enforceable against the entire property mortgaged with Ghulam Husain, including the interest held by the minor. That portion of the decree which recognises the claim of Muhammad Ali to priority will be set aside. The plaintiff appellant will in the circumstances get his costs in proportion from the defendants-respondents, who will bear their own costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

JOGESH CHANDRA ROY—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 99—Enhancement of rent of two etmams, suit for—Misjoinder of causes of action—Misjoinder not affecting merits—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B C. of 1885), ss. 7, 9, 30, 37, 191, 192—Temporary settlement holder, right of, to enhance rent—Etmam tenancy, nature of—Rent, customary rate of—Enhancement, method of.

A suit for enhancement of rent of two etmams, where the plaintiff and defendants are the landlord and tenants of both and have the same interest in each, is not bad for misjoinder of causes of action; the misjoinder, if any, is merely technical and does not affect the merits of the case within the meaning of section 99, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 851, col. 2.]

Neither section 9 nor section 37 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a bar to the enhancement of rent by a temporary settlement holder, as such holder is, by virtue of the terms of sections 191 and 192 of the Act, not precluded from exercising the ordinary powers of a landlord under sections 7 and 30 of the Act. [p. 852, col. 1.]

An etmam tenancy is a tenure not held at a fixed rate of rent and the rent thereof is liable to be enhanced under the ordinary procedure under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 852, col. 2.]

A rate of rent fixed fifty years ago and which is not the rate on which the tenancy is held since the last Settlement, cannot, in a suit for enhancement, be regarded as the customary rate. [p. 852, col. 2.]

Where in a lease a progressive rent is not fixed at its inception, and the lease is not a reclamation lease, the full rent is liable to enhancement. [p. 853, col. 1.]

In a suit for the enhancement of rent of a tenure where a customary rate of rent is not proved, the method of dividing equally the net profits of the tenure between the landlord and the tenure-holder is correct. [p. 853, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decrees of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 21st of September 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 27th November 1916.

JUDGMENT.

No. 103 of 1918.

The plaintiff as landlord sued the defendants as his tenants in respect of two Etmams, claiming that the rents of the same are enhanceable, and that the existing rent of Rs. 252.12.0 be raised to Rs. 2,151 per annum.

The defendants' main contentions were that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was brought, as enhancement of rent of two Etmams could not be claimed in a single suit, that the rent had been settled by the Settlement Officer and was not liable to enhancement during the period of the settlement, that the rents of Etmams are permanent and not enhanceable and that the amount of increase claimed was unjustifiable. They further claimed that the Etmams in question were held by them in occupancy right.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the Etmams were tenures and that the rent was enhanceable. As to the rate of enhancement he found that there was no customary rate; he found on the admissions of the defendants themselves that the collection of rents made by the defendants from their tenants was Rs. 598 a year and the net profits from the khas lands Rs. 405 and after deducting certain charges for collection and upkeep of the embankments he found the net profit to be Rs. 214, which he considered should be divided equally between the landlord and the tenure-holders. He, therefore, gave the landlord plaintiff a decree for an enhanced rent up to Rs. 107 with cesses and allowed him $\frac{1}{4}$ of the costs of the suit.

The learned District Judge in appeal affirmed the Subordinate Judge's decree. In Appeal No. 103 of 1918 the tenants defendants appeal, claiming that there should be no enhancement at all, that the suit cannot stand owing to misjoinder and raising other points as will appear below. In Appeal No. 46 of 1918 the plaintiff also appeals, claiming that the tenure-holders are not entitled to retain half of the net rentals and should not be allowed as their profit more than 15 per cent. of the rent plus their charges for collection. The facts about the tenancies in question which are not disputed in this Court are as follows:—

The lands are in a temporarily settled estate, of which when the lands were originally settled Hara Chandra Roy was the proprietor under Government in respect of two-thirds share and Tarani Charan, Sadak Ali and others held the one-third share. The area settled is 33 drones i.e., over 500 bighas. Both the shares in the lands in suit were let out by the then proprietors under Government to the predecessors of the defendants, the one third share by an oral lease and the two-thirds share by a written lease in or about 1864. The rents then fixed were Rs. 73 in respect of the one-third share and Rs. 137.10 in respect of the two-thirds share. Subsequently the proprietary interest in each share fell into the possession of the plaintiff.

In 1895 there was a settlement proceeding and in that proceeding the Settlement Officer settled fair rent for the one-third share at Rs. 113 and in the two-thirds share at Rs. 139.12. He also recorded the two tenancies in separate entries in the Khatians as those of settled *raiya*s.

The points raised before us in appeal by the defendants are five in number. It is first contended that the suit is not maintainable, as the two Etmams, one by written lease in the two-thirds share and one by oral lease in the one-third share, are distinct and so there should have been two suits, one in respect of each Etmam. In this case, however, the plaintiff and defendants are the landlord and tenants of both the Etmams and have the same interest in each. The misjoinder, therefore, if any, is merely technical, as the claims to rent can be split up in the proportion of two-thirds and one third. The misjoinder does not, therefore, affect the merits of the case and so under section 59, Civil Procedure Code, there is no ground for dismissing the suits in appeal or remanding the case on this ground.

The next contention is that the rent having been settled by the Settlement Officer under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act in a temporarily settled estate, the JOGESH CHANDRA V. MAKBUL ALI.

Court cannot during the pendency of the settlement made by Government with the proprietors enhance the rent either under section 7 or section 30 of the Act. In a temporarily settled estate, it is argued, rent can only be enhanced or varied at the time of the re-settlement under the provisions of section 191 and section 192.

In support of this contention the learned Pleader for the appellants referred to the case of Ambica Charan Chakravarti v. Joy Chandra Ghosh (1) and the case of Baikuntha Nath Ghose v. Sodananda Mohapatra (2). These two cases, however, only lay down the rule that it is an unrebuttable presumption that the rent settled under Chapter X in a temporarily settled estate is the proper rent at the time it is settled and that the entries in the rent-roll of such rent are conclusive evidence of the amount.

For the respondent we are referred to a passage in the judgment of Banerjee, J., in the case of Zamir Mandal v. Gopi Sundri Dasi (3): "It is open to the Civil Court to go behind the Collector's Jamabandi and ascertain the true rate of rent payable. It has been held that a tenant is not bound by the rent recorded in the Collector's Jamabandi: If the tenant is not bound by the record, there is no reason why the landlord should be held to be bound by it". In the present case it has not been even pleaded that the settlement-holders under Government, when accepting the settlement, entered into any engagement not to raise the rents, nor do we find any authority for the proposition that a temporary settlement-holder is, by virtue of the terms of section 191 and section 192, precluded from exercising the ordinary powers of a landlord under section 7 and section 30. The present rent was settled in 1895 under section 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and this suit was instituted in September 1915, 20 years after the last proceedings for increasing the rent. Enhancement, therefore, is not barred either under section 9 or section 37 of the Act.

The third point taken is that as in the settlement Record of Rights the defendants were recorded as settled *raiya*s, their rent can only be enhanced on the basis of an occupancy *raiya*t. The Court has wrongly held them to be tenure-holders and proceeded to fix the rent under section 7 of the Act. Further, even if section 7 applies, there is a customary rate set out in the written lease and so the rent can only be fixed under section 7 (2) on this customary rate. The Etmams, however, appear clearly to be tenures and not mere occupancy holdings, nor in the written statement of the defendants is it definitely contended that they are only *raiya*t holdings.

In both shares they are over 100 bighas in area, and the written statement shows the defendants have since a long period been establishing tenants thereon for cultivation and though part is khas, for the majority of the land they only receive rent from bona fide cultivators who have their residences in the land. The tenancies have all along been described as Etmams and Etmams are usually tenures. We hold, therefore, that section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies as to enhancement, finding the Etmams to be tenures.

As to the contention that the enhancement should only be at a customary rate, the lower Court finds that the plaintiff failed to prove any customary rate. The appellants urge that the rate set out in the written lease of 1272 is the customary rate. We do not agree with this contention. That was the rate 50 years ago. It is not the rate even on which the tenure is now held since the last settlement and cannot be the customary rate at the present time. The findings dispose of the appeal as to the one-third share held under the oral agreement.

The other two points relate to the two-thirds share only held under the written lease. It is urged that subject to section 191 and section 192, Bengal Tenancy Act, the written lease in this share created a tenure at fixed rates in perpetuity, and that the rate at which the rent should be calculated should be according to the rate fixed in that lease. As to the claim that the lease created a tenure held at fixed rates we are referred to the cases of Soora Soonderee Dabea v. Golam Ali (4), Huro Prasad Roy Chowdhry v. Ohundee Ohurn Boyragee (5), Robert Watson & Co. v. Radha Nath Singh (6) and Ram Dayal Giri v. Midnapur Zemindary Co. (7). These cases, however, only lay down that reclamation leases held for a long period without changes of rate of rent, or in which there is a progressive rent for a few years and then full rent, are not liable to enhancement. In the case of the present lease, there was no progressive rent fixed at its inception, nor is it a reclamation lease; for the lease itself shows that at the time of its inception the major portion of the land was already culturable. The principle, therefore, of these cases does not apply in the present case.

It is urged next that the statement in the lease that for default in the payment of rent the tenure can be put to sale under Regulation VIII of 1819 and the fact that the only clause as to increase of rent is one which says that the Khila lands will be let out as they become culturable at the rate of the cultivated lands show that the tenure is one at fixed rates. But as was pointed out in the case of Upendralal Gupta v. Jogesh Chandra Roy (8), the rent of a tenure is always liable to enhancement unless the landlord has precluded himself by contract or is estopped by law and the mere fact that the parties have agreed that resort may be had to the Patni Regulation to recover arrears of rent cannot mean that the rent is permanently fixed. Our finding, therefore, is that the two Etmams are tenures not held at a fixed rate of rent, and rent is liable to be enhanced under the ordinary procedure under section 7. As no customary rate has been proved, we hold that the method adopted by the lower Court in fixing the rental is correct.

This appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs, except that in drawing up the decree the rent for each tenure will be separately shown in the one-third and two-thirds shares.

No. 46 of 1918.

The only question in this appeal is whether the proportion of the gross rental allowed to the appellant landlord in respect of the tenures is sufficient. The lower Courts, considering the geographical position of the tenure which is near to the Bay of Bengal and needs considerable sums to be spent on it for the maintenance of embankments to keep out salt water, have allowed the tenure-holders to retain after certain deductions for collections and repairs half the net rent. The landlord claims that the tenure-holders should only retain 15 per cent. of the rent after deducting cost of collection. We have fully considered the arguments addressed us and the findings of the lower Courts and hold that in the circumstances of the tenures the lower Courts, in view of the finding of facts, have exercised their discretion rightly in making the allowances to the tenure-holders that they have made.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree—

MADAD ALI SHAH

Ahmad Ali Shah=Musammāt Sughra Bibi Plaintiff.

Musammāt Umat-ul-Batul, defendant No. 2
=Hussain Ali Shah
Defendant No. 1

Walait Ali Shah aged 7, died on 10th April 1910.

On the 18th of December 1907 Madad Ali Shah executed a Will (printed on page 3 of the paper-book) which was duly registered on the 20th of December. Ten days later, i.e., on the 30th of December 1907, Madad Ali Shah died (page 9 of the printed book). By his Will he devised all his real and personal estate to his son, Walait Ali Shah, then a child of tender years, and appointed his daughter Musammāt Umat-ul-Batul the guardian of Walait Ali Shah's person and property. He also directed that in the event of her death during Walait Ali Shah's minority her husband Hussain Ali Shah, who was also the testator's nephew, should succeed as guardian of the boy. Finally, he declared that in the event of the death of Walait Ali Shah, Hussain Ali Shah was to succeed to the entire estate. The Will was invalid under Muhammadan Law in spite of the fact that both Musammāt Sughra Bibi and Musammāt Umat-ul-Batul had attested it in token of their assent to its terms. As they, however, expressed their assent to the said Will subsequent to the death of Madad Ali Shah, it became a valid Will and Walait Ali Shah took a vested and absolute interest in the estate devised to him by his father. On the 10th of April 1910 Walait Ali Shah also died (vide Exhibit P. 10 on page 10 of the printed book). On the 14th of May 1912 Musammāt Sughra Bibi instituted the suit which has given rise to this appeal. The defendants were Hussain Ali Shah and Musammāt Umat-ul-Batul, and Musammāt Sughra Bibi claimed half of the property left by Walait Ali Shah. Various allegations were made in the plaint as to the manner in which Musammāt Sughra Bibi had been induced to give her assent to the Will, but it was claimed that in any event as the parties were governed by Shia Law, the plaintiff was entitled to half of the property which she claimed. The defendants filed a written statement (page 55 of the printed book) in which they traversed the various allegations made in the plaint, and averred that the parties belonged to the Sunni school of Muhammadans, that the Will having been assented to was valid in its entirety and that under it Hussain Ali Shah took the entire property on the death of Walait Ali Shah. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the Will had been duly executed and that the plaintiff and Musammāt Umat-ul-Batul having assented to it after the demise of the testator, it was a valid Will under Muhammadan Law. He also held that the parties were Sunnis and that the property devolved according to the Sunni school of law. A claim advanced by Hussain Ali Shah for compensation was rejected and the plaintiff was granted a decree for one-third of the property which had been left to Walait Ali Shah by his father Madad Ali Shah.

Against this decree appeals have been preferred by Hussain Ali Shah and Musammāt Sughra Bibi. The former attacks the findings of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and claims that the suit should be dismissed, while the latter claims that the parties followed the Shia school of law and that she was entitled to a decree for half of the property claimed by her in the suit. Hussain Ali Shah died during the pendency of these appeals and while in the appeal filed by him, No. 622 of 1916, his legal representatives have been correctly brought on to the record, in the appeal filed by

NASIR ALI SHAH v. SUGHRA BIBI.

Musammât Sughra Bibi, No. 944 of 1916, his minor son Nasir Ali alone has been impleaded. Chaudhri Shahab ud Din on her behalf has, however, withdrawn her appeal and we are no longer concerned with it. It will be dismissed.

In Appeal No. 622 of 1916 Bakhshi Tek Chand for the appellants contended that the Will made by Madad Ali Shah, having been rendered valid by the consent of Musammât Sughra Bibi and Musammât Umat-ul Batul, was a good Will and that all its provisions must, therefore, be enforced including those contained in the 7th clause. By this clause the property was devised to Hussain Ali Shah on the death of Walait Ali Shah. Bakhshi Tek Chand also contended that the Will was consented to as a family arrangement which could not, therefore, be ignored and which the respondent was estopped from seeking to avoid. He further contended that Hussain Ali Shah should be reimbursed for the expenses incurred in improving the property and in connection with the last illness of Walait Ali Shah.

With regard to the question of compensation, there is no evidence that any improvements were really made subsequent to the death of Walait Ali Shah in 1910, and the expenses for the boy's last illness must necessarily have come out of his estate. We have no hesitation in agreeing with the Senior Subordinate Judge in holding that the appellants are not entitled to anything in this respect.

With regard to the question of the enforcement of the Will in its entirety we are unable to hold that the consent of Musammât Sughra Bibi and her sister was given as a family arrangement, and we are not pressed by the authorities cited by the learned Vakil, viz., Musammât Nurai Bibi v. Ghulam Hassan Shah (1) and Muhammad Umar Ali v. Aman Ali (2), as we consider that they afford no assistance in the present case.

Now Walait Ali Shah succeeded to an absolute estate on the death of his father, and under no system of law can a testator make a gift over after a vested bequest of an absolute estate. The clause in question is repugnant to Muhammadan Law and cannot, we consider, be given effect to. In this connection Abdul Karim Khan v. Abdul Qayum Khan (3) is a case in point. There a Muhammadan executed a Will leaving his estate to his three sons and giving to each of them certain specific property, with a proviso that none of them could alienate the property devised to them which on the death of any of them without issue must go to the surviving brother or brothers or his or their heirs. One son having died, his full brother took possession of the property which had been devised to him. The half brother thereupon sued for half of the property claiming to be entitled thereto under the Will which had been validated by the consent of the heirs after the death of the testator. It was held that while the assent of the heirs rendered the document valid, it must be construed according to the ordinary rules by which a deed or will should be construed according to the law governing the parties, viz., Muhammadan Law, and that the provisions restraining alienation and the condition as to the devolution of the property on the death of any of the sons were void. With this view we are in complete accord, and hold that Walait Ali Shah took an absolute estate and that the provisions and condition as to the devolution of the property after his death were void. It is clear, therefore, that on the death of Walait Ali Shah the property devolved under the rules laid down by Muhammadan Law and as the appellant himself alleged that the parties followed the Sunni school, this appeal fails. We accordingly dismiss both the appeals, but in the circumstances, leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Where in a case a local custom pertaining not only to the persons belonging to the sub-caste of the parties to the case but also to the persons belonging to the other sub-castes of the same caste is alleged to exist, it is sufficient to prove the custom so far as the particular sub-caste under consideration is concerned and it is not necessary for the purposes of that case to prove the custom so far as the other sub-castes are concerned. [p. 857, col. 2; p. 858, col. 1]

Where a local tribal custom is pleaded and it is proved that it exists in the tribe of the locality, there is a very strong presumption that any particular family of the tribe in that locality is bound by that custom, although evidence may not have been adduced to prove that the custom pertains to that particular family. In such a case the burden of proving that the custom does not obtain in that particular family lies on the person who says so. [p. 859, col. 1.]

Appeals from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated 5th April 1918.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Ram Frasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The property which is the subject of dispute in the present case belonged to one Bhawani Singh, a Panwar Thakur of the Hardoi district. Plaintiff No. 1, Kalka Singh, is the son of Bhawani Singh's first cousin, Chhedi Singh, and plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, Deo Singh and Sheo

Singh, are the grandsons of Chhedi Singh. The defendant No. 1, Musammatt Bal Kunwar, is the daughter of Bhawani Singh. Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, Makund Singh, Jawahir Singh and Sardar Singh, are the sons of Musammatt Maharani, another daughter (deceased) of Bhawani Singh, and defendant No. 5, Jai Chand Singh, is the father of defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

Bhawani Singh to whom the property belonged died long ago and was succeeded by his widow Musammatt Gulab Kunwar.

In 1879 Musammatt Gulab Kunwar transferred the property by deeds of gifts to her daughter Musammatt Bal Kunwar and her grandson Jawahir Singh, defendants Nos. 1 and 3. In 1888 the plaintiff Kalka Singh, representing himself to be the next reversioner of Bhawani Singh, brought two declaratory suits against Musammatt Gulab Kunwar and her transferees and obtained decrees by which it was declared that the deeds of gift executed by Musammatt Gulab Kunwar should have no effect against the reversioner after her death. In 1910 the defendants along with Musammatt Gulab Kunwar, without joining the plaintiffs as parties, submitted the question of succession to the estate left by Bhawani Singh to arbitration and the arbitrators decided that Makund Singh should succeed to the whole estate, with the exception of certain guzaras which were allowed to the other defendants. Gulab Kunwar died in January 1912, and the plaintiffs brought the present suit for possession of the estate left by Bhagwani Singh, alleging that among Panwar Thakurs daughters and daughters' sons were excluded from inheritance and that they were the nearest reversioners. They also claimed mortgagee possession of a 1-anna share in the village of Matkari, on the ground that the mortgage had been acquired by Musammatt Gulab Kunwar out of the profits of her husband's estate and the name of Jai Chand Singh defendant No. 5, who was the son-in-law of Musammatt Gulab Kunwar, had been fictitiously entered in the mortgage deed as mortgagee. The plaintiffs also claimed mesne profits for the period during which they had been kept out of possession by the defendants.

The defendants did not admit the relationship claimed by the plaintiffs with

MAKUND SINGH v. KALKA SINGH.

Bhawani Singh. They denied the custom set up by the plaintiffs and pleaded that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 as daughter and daughter's sons of Bhawani Singh were entitled to inherit this estate. They further pleaded that by an oral Will Bhawani Singh had bequeathed all his property to Makund Singh defendant No. 2, that under the arbitration award of 1910 which had been acted upon, the other defendants were in possession of certain portions of the property for their maintenance, that the house in which Bhawani Singh lived had been entirely rebuilt by Makund Singh at his own cost, and that certain groves had been planted by Makund Singh and Jai Chand Singh and the plaintiffs could have no right either to the house or these groves. With regard to the 1 anna share in village Matkari the defendant No. 5 pleaded that Musammât Gulab Kunwar had nothing to do with the mortgage and that he was the real mortgagee.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the custom set up by the plaintiffs was established, under which daughters and daughters' sons in the tribe of Panwar Thakurs to which Bhawani Singh belonged were excluded from inheritance, that the plaintiffs were the nearest reversioners to Bhawani Singh, that Bhawani Singh had not made any oral Will in favour of Makund Singh, that it was not proved that Bhawani Singh's house had been rebuilt by the defendant No. 2 and that the groves had been planted by Musammât Gulab Kunwar and the defendants were not entitled to retain possession of them. With regard to the share in the village of Matkari he held that the mortgage had been taken not by Musammât Gulab Kunwar out of the profits of her husband's property but by Jai Chand Singh defendant No. 5 himself. With regard to mesne profits he found that the plaintiffs were entitled to more than Rs. 1,500 which they claimed. On these findings he gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession of all the property in suit with the exception of the 1 anna share in Manza Matkari and for Rs. 1,500 as damages with proportionate costs against all the defendants.

Against this decree two appeals have been filed: one No. 55 of 1918 by Makund Singh and the other No. 67 of 1918 by Jai Chand Singh, and this judgment will cover both these appeals. In the petition of appeal filed by Makund Singh practically all the findings of the lower Court adverse to him have been attacked, but the learned Advocate who has argued the appeal has confined his argument to two points only. He urges, first, that the custom set up by the plaintiffs has not been established and second, that in any case Makund Singh is entitled to retain possession of the groves as a grove-holder. After hearing the arguments we have not thought it necessary to call on the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs-respondents, as we are of opinion that the custom set up by the plaintiffs-respondents has been proved beyond any possibility of doubt and that the lower Court was right in its finding with regard to the groves.

In paragraph 7 of their plaint the plaintiffs alleged that there was a custom generally obtaining in all Thakur clans, and specially among Panwars, by which daughters and their sons are excluded from inheritance. This alleged custom was denied by the defendants and an issue was fixed: whether the custom of exclusion of daughters and daughters' sons prevails in the tribe to which the deceased Bhawani Singh belonged. After issues were fixed, the statement of the plaintiffs' Pleader was recorded in which he said that the custom set up by the plaintiffs relates to all the tribes of Thakurs of the Hardoi district and he further added, "Among the Panwars, we claim that this custom also prevails in the manner aforesaid." On these statements the issue was modified as follows:—

"Does the custom of exclusion of daughters prevail among Panwars and all the other tribes of the Thakurs of the Hardoi district?"

The learned Advocate for the appellants would argue that in view of the statements made by the plaintiffs' Pleader the custom set up by the plaintiffs was not a tribal custom pertaining to the whole tribe of Panwar Thakurs but a local custom pertaining only to the Panwars and all other Thakurs of the Hardoi district. Even if we were to accept this view of the pleadings, we are of opinion that it has been amply proved that the custom exists among all the Panwar Thakurs of the Hardoi district and it is not necessary for the purposes of the present case to prove that all the other tribes of Thakurs in the Hardoi district are bound by the same custom.

MAKUND SINGH v. KALKA SINGH.

The wajib-ul-araez of no less than 19 villages have been produced in which the existence of the alleged custom among Panwar Thakurs is recorded and those wajib-ul-araez have been verified by hundreds of members of the tribe of Panwar Thakurs. It is urged by the learned Counsel for the appellants that these wajib-ul-araez relate mostly to villages in Pargana Pachoha, whereas Bhawani Singh lived and his property was situate in Pargana Mallawan. It is also urged that among Panwars there are many sub divisions with different origins, that most of the wajib-ul-araez produced record a custom pertaining among Dharanagri Panwars and that it cannot be assumed that the same custom exists among other sub-divisions of the tribe of Panwars, and there is nothing to show to which sub-division of the tribe Bhawani Singh belonged. We are clearly of opinion that there is no force in these arguments. It is true that certain witnesses have been produced on behalf of the defendants who are Panwar Thakurs, who state that they were told by their fathers that they did not belong to the same family of Panwars as the Panwars of Bhikhapur, the village in which Bhawani Singh resided, but we are of opinion that these statements cannot be accepted as evidence. The villages in which these witnesses reside are some considerable distance from the village of Bhikhapur, and there is nothing whatsoever to show that the persons who are alleged to have made the statements had any special means of knowledge with regard to the Panwars of Bhikhapur or indeed that their means of knowledge was any greater than that of the witnesses themselves. The defendants in their written statements did not attempt to allege that there were different sub-divisions of the Panwar Thakurs with different origins and different customs, nor do we find that a single question was asked from any one of the forty witnesses produced on behalf of the plaintiffs to suggest the existence of any such sub-divisions, and it was not until the defendants began to produce their defence witnesses that such a suggestion was made. It is pointed out that while in the greater number of the wajib-ul-araez and specially in those of Pargana Pachoha it is stated that the ancestors of the Panwars of those villages came from Dharanagri, the wajib-ul-araez of Pargana Mallawan which have been produced do not mention Dharanagri as the original house of the ancestors of the Panwar residents in the Mallawan villages. In our opinion this is no good ground for presuming that the Panwars of Mallawan have a different origin from those resident in Pargana Pachoha. It simply shows that while the former or the persons recording the history of this tribe were satisfied to go back a few hundred years, the latter preferred to give the history of the tribe for a period of five thousand years (vide the wajib-ul-araez of Anagpur printed at page 5) of the respondents' book).

Next it is urged that while the Hardoi settlement report shows that there are 66 villages in the Hardoi district owned or partly owned by Panwars, the wajib-ul-araez of only 19 villages have been produced and the plaintiffs' evidence of instances in which the alleged custom has been followed relates to an even smaller number of villages. In our opinion it was quite unnecessary for the plaintiffs to produce the wajib-ul-araez of all the villages in the Hardoi district in which Panwars own property, or to give evidence of instances in which the custom has been followed relating to all those villages. The defendants have not produced a single wajib-ul-araez in which the alleged custom of exclusion of daughters and daughters' sons is not mentioned; and it may be taken as certain that had any such wajib-ul-araez of any village in which property is owned by Panwars been in existence, it would have been produced. Furthermore although the defendants have attempted in the lower Court to produce evidence of instances in which the alleged custom had not been followed, the learned Advocate for the appellants has placed no reliance on that evidence and has not even referred to it in his argument. Nor has he attempted to dispute the finding of the lower Court that the instances cited by the plaintiffs are good instances in which the alleged custom has been followed. The learned Counsel for the appellant, however, points out that in the wajib-ul arz of Bhikhapur in which Bhawani Singh resided there is no mention of the alleged custom and that no instance has been proved in which the alleged custom was followed in the family of Bhawani Singh. He would argue that even though it be proved that the tribal custom of exclusion of daughters and daughters' sons has been established, yet in order that the plaintiffs may succeed it is necessary to prove further that that custom is applicable to the family of Bhawani Singh, and for this proposition he would rely on the rulings of this Court. Musammât Parbatî Kuar v. Rani Chandrapal Kuar (1) and Thakurdin Singh v. Musammât Bhagwant Kuar (2).

MAKUND SINGH v. KALKA SINGH.

We find ourselves altogether unable to accede to his argument and are of opinion that neither of the rulings cited by him lends any support to it. In the former case the sentence in the judgment on which he relies runs as follows:—

"There is no objection to a party pleading that a custom obtains both in the family and in the tribe to which that family belongs, but he must of course prove that the custom is binding on the family, whether he confines his evidence and plea to the family or not."

There is a distinction here made between what may be pleaded and what must be proved, but this sentence is no authority for the proposition that if it is proved that the custom is binding on the tribe to which the family belongs, further evidence must be given to prove that it is also binding on the family. In the second case on which reliance is placed there was evidence which showed that different Kanpuria families had different customs with regard to the exclusion of daughters, and it was held that in these circumstances the fact that the custom of the exclusion of daughters was proved to exist in certain Kanpuria families in a district was not sufficient ground for holding that that custom pertained to another family of Kanpurias. In this case no invariable tribal custom had been proved and it was held, therefore, that in order to succeed the plaintiff was bound to prove that the custom on which he relied existed in his family. The custom set up by the plaintiffs is a local tribal custom pertaining to the Panwars of the Hardoi district and when the existence of that custom has been proved, there is a very strong presumption that a particular family of Panwars in the Hardoi district is bound by that custom, although evidence may not have been adduced to prove that the custom pertains to that particular family. The burden would certainly be on the person denying the existence of the custom in a particular family to show that it was not applicable to that family. In the present case there is good reason why there is no mention of the custom in the wajib-ul-arz of Bikhapur, as there were no Panwars among the proprietors of the village of Bhikhapur at the time of the settlement and Bhawani Singh was only an under-proprietor in the village. And no instance in which the custom has been followed in the family of Bhawani Singh has been proved, for the simple reason that there is no record in that family of any case in which the custom could have been followed as none of Bhawani Singh's ancestors died leaving a daughter only.

Besides the evidence of the wajib-ul-arz of instances in which the custom was followed and of opinions as to the existence of the custom, evidence has also been adduced to show that the Courts have found that the custom exists among Panwars in the Hardoi district. These decisions have been examined in detail by the learned Subordinate Judge and the learned Counsel for the appellants has not referred to them in his argument. It is specially to be noted that in the suits brought by Kalka Singh one of the present plaintiffs in 1888, to obtain a declaration that the transfers made by Musammât Gulab Kunwar in favour of her daughter Musammât Bal Kunwar defendant No. 1 and Jawahir Singh defendant No. 3 were ineffectual after the death of Gulab Kunwar, it was admitted that Kalka Singh was the reversioner and no attempt was made by the defendants in those suits to support the transfers on the ground that the transfers merely accelerated the succession or to resist Kalka Singh's claim on the ground that he was not the nearest reversioner. Had the alleged custom not existed in the family of Bhawani Singh, it may be taken as certain that such pleas would have been raised.

KANHAI SINGH v. KARU.

With regard to the groves it is urged that two of them were planted by Makund Singh and Jai Chand Singh and that they are at least entitled to retain possession of them as grove-holders.

We see no reason to differ from the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the groves were planted for Musammatt Gulab Kunwar. Jai Chand Singh does not dispute that finding. The appellant Makand Singh was the grandson of Musammatt Gulab Kunwar and lived with her and was maintained by her. There is admittedly no evidence that he obtained any permission from Musammatt Gulab Kunwar to plant the groves. The appellant Makand Singh does not allege that he was a tenant of Musammatt Gulab Kunwar and as such planted the groves. He alleges that he planted the groves while he was in possession as owner of the property. As he had no title to the property, he cannot, on being ousted from possession, be given the status of a grove holder and possession of the groves must go with the land on which they stand.

The appeal of Makund Singh, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

The appeal of Jai Chand Singh (First Civil Appeal No. 67 of 1918) relates only to the question of mesne profits and costs. It is not shown that he was in possession after the death of Musammatt Gulab Kunwar of any of the property left by Bhawani Singh and it follows, therefore, that he should not have been held liable for mesne profits. The lower Court also found that he was rightly in possession as mortgagee of the 1-anna share in Manza Matkari and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim with regard to this property. In our opinion Jai Chand Singh should have been allowed proportionate costs on this portion of the claim. We allow his appeal to the extent that he will be exempted from the decree for mesne profits and costs and he will be allowed proportionate costs against the plaintiffs-respondents with reference to the 1-anna share in village Matkari.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXV, rr. 2, 3—Mortgage—Preliminary decree in foreclosure suit—Application to extend time for payment—Application made after time fixed—Sufficient cause is question of fact.

An application to extend the time fixed by a preliminary decree for foreclosure made after the expiry of that time is entertainable [p. 861, col. 1.]

The question of the sufficiency of cause for granting an extension is a question of fact to be decided according to the circumstances of each particular case and the discretion of the Court in dealing with the same. [p. 861, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree, in Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1919, in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Balaghat, decided on the 22nd of March 1919, arising out of the decision in Civil Suit No. 83 of 1916, in the Court of the Munsif, Balaghat, dated the 20th December 1918.

Mr. D. P. Tiwari, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question in this case is whether the lower Appellate Court was right in extending the time for payment of the decretal debt under a preliminary decree for foreclosure. The time fixed by the decree for payment was the 29th July 1917. In appeal by the judgment-debtor the amount of the debt was somewhat reduced. The decree of the Appellate Court was passed on the 31st October 1917. The time fixed by the 1st Court's decree was not altered by the Appellate Court. The judgment debtor paid into Court the amount of the decree and costs in three separate sums on or before the 24th June 1918 and applied on that date to have satisfaction entered. On service of notice of this application the decree holder applied for a final decree, whereupon the judgment-debtor made a formal application for extension of time and consideration of delay. The first Court rejected the judgment-debtor's application and passed a final decree for foreclosure. In appeal the Additional District Judge set aside the 1st Court's order and decree and extended the time and remanded the case to determine what terms should be imposed upon the judgment-debtor before entering satisfaction. A decree has now been passed by the 1st Court declaring that the debt has been satisfied and passing the usual consequential order.

The decree-holder appeals to this Court against the Additional District Judge's order and decree.

It is first urged that as the judgment-debtor made no application for extension of time for payment before the date fixed by the 1st Court expired, his application should not have been entertained. This contention has no force in view of Nand Lal v. Ram Ratan (1). It is next urged that good cause has not been shown for granting an extension. The sufficiency of the cause is a question of fact to be decided according to the circumstances of each particular case and the discretion of the Court in dealing with the same. Balkishan v. Atmaram (2). The Additional District Judge has considered very fully the circumstances in paragraphs 5 to 8 of his judgment, and I am not prepared to hold that upon these circumstances it was not possible for him to exercise a judicial discretion in favour of the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder has got the money that he is entitled to with sufficient compensation for any delay which the mortgagor could not reasonably avoid and has suffered no hardship.

The appeal is dismissed without notice to the respondent. I note that I refuse to consider a plea tried to be urged in argument that the appeal to the Additional District Judge was barred by time, on the grounds that it was not urged in the Court below and nothing has been pointed out on the record in support of it.

Appeal dismissed.

Lambardar, dismissal of, for failure to assist in recruiting—Family, claims of, whether can be ignored in appointing successor.

There are certain offences which exclude all members of the family of an offender from the office of headman. But the failure of a particular individual to assist in recruiting (unless he is a member of a tribe or family, which for specific reasons, e.g., the lack of connection with the classes from whom recruits are likely to be obtainable, is permanently unlikely to be successful in this respect) is not a matter which should exclude the claims of the family.

Revision from the order of the Commissioner, Lahore, dated the 6th January 1919.

JUDGMENT.—Ghulam Mohammad has appeared, and I have heard what he has to say. The hereditary claimant to this headmanship is Haidar. His father was dismissed from the post of Lambardar for failure to assist in recruiting; and this has been treated as a ground for excluding the family from the succession. There are certain offences, which exclude, and properly exclude, all members of the family of the offender from the office of headman. But the failure of a particular individual to assist in recruiting (unless he is a member of a tribe or family, which for specific reasons, e.g., the lack of connection with the classes from whom recruits are likely to be obtainable, is permanently unlikely to be successful in this respect) is not a matter which should exclude the claims of the family. It depends mainly upon personal character and energy, and in a case such as the present it is not fair to assume that the son will lack the required qualities.

I set aside the order appointing Ghulam Mohammad to be Lambardar and I appoint Haidar to be headman, on the understanding that his father will transfer to him a sufficient area of land. The

r. 1—Injunction, temporary, when to be granted—Inter-

In granting a temporary injunction to a plaintiff all that is necessary to see is whether the plaintiff has shown a prima facie case in support of the title asserted by him. [p. 866, col. 2.]

An interlocutory injunction should only be granted in cases where property, which it is essential should be kept in its existing condition during the pendency of the suit, is "in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated" [p. 866, cols. 1 & 2.]

In granting an interim injunction it is the duty of the Court to see on which side is the balance of inconvenience if the injunction do not issue, and to bear in mind the important principle of retaining immovable property in statu quo. [p. 872, col. 1.]

By the term 'irreparable injury' it is not meant that there must be no physical possibility of repairing the injury, all that is meant is that the injury would be a material one and one not adequately reparable by damages. [p. 868, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 4th Court, 24 Parganahs, dated the 5th February 1918.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Hiralal Sanyal, for the Appellants.

Babus D. N. Chackerbutty, Baraprasad Chatterjee and Kurunamoy Ghose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order granting a temporary injunction restraining the defendants-appellants from further building on or changing the character of the land of which the plaintiff is seeking to reserver possession from them. The land in dispute consists of two plots, the first plot being about a bigha in area according to the plaintiff and about 16 cottahs according to the defendants. The second plot is about a bigha in area and there is a tank on a portion of it.

The plaintiff alleges that these 2 plots of lands are included within the Estate No. 2402 of the 24-Parganahs Collectorate which was purchased by him at a sale for arrears of revenue on the 8th January 1915. In August 1915, the plaintiff issued a general notice on the property to the effect that the interests of tenants under lessees (except those protected) were thereby annulled.

It appears that on the 8th and 9th August 1911, the two plots of land in dispute, which belonged to a family known as the Haldars, were purchased at sales held for arrears of rent by one Katyani Debi. On the 19th November 1915, Maharaja Sir Prodyot Kumar Tagore purchased 9 cottahs, said to form part of the land mentioned in the first plot, from one Gadadhar Ghose and another, who it is alleged by the defendants were sub-tenants under the Haldars in respect of the 9 cottahs. The purchase admittedly was made on behalf of the defendants, Messrs. Begg Dunlop & Co. It is also alleged that the Maharaja arranged for purchasing the two plots from Katyani Debi and took possession thereof pending execution of a formal conveyance.

It appears that a large quantity of land, about 140 bighas, was acquired by Messrs. Begg Dunlop & Co. through the Maharaja in the locality for a Jute Mill. In February 1916 the Maharaja made over possession of all the lands which he had acquired on behalf of the defendants including the lands in suit to Messrs. Begg Dunlop & Co. It is alleged on behalf of the defendants that there was some building on plot No. 1 which was pulled down in March 1916, and in April 1916 the whole of the 40 bighas were surveyed and plans were prepared by the builders Mackintosh Birt & Co. In July 1916 the builders took possession of the lands for the purpose of erecting the necessary buildings and the main buildings were commenced in November 1916. On the 26th January 1917 the plaintiff's Solicitors wrote to the defendants that the plaintiff had annulled all encumbrances, and that if the defendants built or proceeded to build any erection on the land in question they would do so at their own risk. On the 29th June 1917 a formal conveyance was executed by Katyani Debi in respect of the disputed lands of which possession had been taken before. On the 3rd July 1917 the building of the staff quarters on the plot No. 1 and adjoining lands was commenced. It appears from a letter of the plaintiff's Pleader Kishori Mohon Sen, dated the 28th August 1917, that he had an interview with Mr. Tosh of Messrs. Begg Dunlop & Co. A list of the tenants of the estate (including the name of Katyani Debi) whose lands had been taken possession of by the defendants was annexed to the letter, and it was stated in the letter that the plaintiff was surprised to learn that the defendants had already commenced to build upon the land without any right thereto. The defendants were reminded of the printed general notice prohibiting the general public from acquiring the tenants' interests, as also the special notice given by Messrs. Morgan and Company on behalf of the plaintiff, and it was further stated that if the defendants proceeded with the construction works on the plaintiff's land in spite of repeated protests, they would do so at their own risk.

A reminder appears to have been sent by the plaintiff's Pleader to the defendants on the 2nd September, and the defendants wrote in reply on the 3rd October 1917 that the disputed lands did not appertain to the Touzi No. 2402.

Three days afterwards, i. e., on the 6th October 1917, the present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs.

On the 8th October 1917 they applied for a temporary injunction on the ground that the defendants had purchased the disputed lands comprising the "non-transferable Ticca temporary tenancy-at-will of a certain tenant, named Katyani Debi" which had been annulled, that in spite of prohibition by the plaintiffs the defendants had continued building operations on the land and were attempting to finish the same in a hurry, and "at the present moment have raised the building up to the arch level of the first story and are making excavations on the land and are obliterating the boundary marks" The plaintiff prayed that a temporary injunction might be issued restraining the defendants from "altering the form of the land and from continuing building operations any further" The application was supported by the affidavit of one Nalinakshya Mookerji, and on the 9th October a Rule was served upon the defendants with a copy of the said affidavit. The Courts were closed from the 13th October to the 18th November 1917 for the Puja vacation. On the 3rd December 1917 the defendants showed cause and the affidavit of Mr. Tosh, the senior partner of the defendant firm, Mr. Long, a photographer, and Sarat Chandra Gossain (in whose name some of the assignments in favour of the defendants had been taken) were filed. The defendants in showing cause asserted that the tenancies comprising the disputed lands were in existence from before the permanent settlement of the estate, that they were permanent and transferable, that there were buildings on a portion of plot No. 1 and a garden on the rest of it, and there was a tank and garden on plot No. 2, that assuming but not admitting that the lands formed part of Touzi No. 202 as alleged by the plaintiffs, they were protected interests under Act XI of 1859, that "the building for their staff quarters extends over plot No. 1 of the schedule to the plaint as also over the land lying to the east and west thereof, and covers only those holdings over which either pucca buildings and structures had been standing," that the staff quarters with the lands in suit are integral parts of the Mill and were absolutely required for its working and that the starting and working of the Mill will be considerably delayed, and the defendants firm would be put to irreparable loss in consequence, if the injunction prayed for be granted. The defendants denied that they had been "only lately defacing boundary marks and otherwise changing the character of the lands in suit", and stated that "the contractors took possession of 140 bighas of land including the lands in suit towards the middle of 1916, when the entire area was levelled and otherwise made fit for building purposes, and the public roads on the south of the lands in suit are still existing and are sufficient to identify the situation thereof."

The Court below by its judgment, dated the 5th February 1918, ordered that "the building already raised upon the lands in suit do remain intact, but that the defendants are enjoined not to further build upon the lands, that they are directed not to efface or do away with the existing landmarks on the boundaries of the disputed lands so as to prevent the identification of the lands at a later stage of the suit."

This appeal was preferred on the 9th February 1918, and the hearing of the appeal commenced on the 22nd January 1919 and was finished on the 30th January.

The main contentions raised on behalf of the appellants are, first, that no prima facie title has been made out by the plaintiff, secondly, that there was delay in making the application for injunction, and thirdly, assuming that the plaintiff has shown a prima facie title, the plaintiff, being out of possession, cannot obtain a temporary injunction unless irreparable injury is shown, and that in this case no irreparable injury has been shown.

As regards the first contention, it appears that although the defendants in their letter, dated the 3rd October 1917, denied that the lands in dispute appertained to Touzi No. 2402, it was admitted that Katyani Debi purchased the lands in dispute at sales for arrears of rent under the sale certificates annexed to the affidavit of Sarat Chandra Gossain. These sales took place on the 8th and 9th August 1911 in rent suits Nos. 349 and 351 of 1908 brought by the heirs and successors of Raja Barada Kanta Roy, the former proprietors of the estate, and the lands are expressly stated in the plaints in the said suits to be included within the estate No. 2402 (purchased by the plaintiff). The land of plot No. 1 was described in the plaint as ticca gar kaimi (non-permanent), and plot No. 2 as a sarasari jama (tenancy-at-will). The rent of plot No. 2 (the tank) is stated in the plaint as being Rs. 2 and the rent of plot No. 1 as Rs. 4.4.9. Katyani Debi sold the lands to the defendants by a conveyance, dated the 29th June 1917, in the benami of Sarat Chandra Gossain, and in the conveyance also the lands are described as being held under the Zamindars, the heirs and successors of Raja Barada Kant Roy, at a rent of Rs. 6.4.9. The plaintiff, as already stated, purchased the estate No. 2402 at a sale for arrears of revenue on the 8th January 1915 and obtained possession thereof through the Collector. The former proprietors appealed to the Commissioner for setting aside the sales, but the appeal was dismissed and the sale was confirmed. They then brought a suit on the 26th August 1915 for setting aside the sale, but the suit was dismissed on the 7th April 1917, and an appeal has been preferred to the High Court against the decree of dismissal, and that appeal is still pending.

The prima facie title of the plaintiff to the estate No. 2402 is, therefore, established and also that the lands in dispute are included within that estate. The plaintiff gave notice of annulment of encumbrances except those which are protected under section 37 of Act XI of 1859.

Both the plots of land in dispute were held by the Haldars under the proprietors of the estate, and the interests of the Haldars passed to Katyani Debi at the sales held in execution of a rent decree obtained by the proprietors and were eventually purchased by the defendants. The defendants' case is that about 32 years ago the Haldars sub-let the eastern portion of plot No. 1, measuring 9 cottas to one Bhuthnath Rajak at a rent of Rs. 2.4.0. The latter built a pucca dwelling house on it, and on his death his widow sold the land to one Nafar Chandra Ghose and Hari Dasi. Their heirs, Gadadhar Ghose and Dwijendra Ghose, sold the eastern portion (9 cottas) to Maharaja Prodyot Kumar on the 15th November, the Maharaja acquiring it on behalf of the defendants. It is alleged that the western portion (7 cottas) was in the khas possession of the Haldars who laid out a garden on it, and that on the second plot the Haldars excavated a tank (about 7 or 8 cottas) and a garden was made on the remaining portion of the plot.

The Court below, however, has held that the 9 cottas of land held by Gadadhar Ghose under the Haldars was not a part of the plot No. 1 and that the sub-tenancy of Gadadhar was under some other jama under the Haldars.

In the Kabala, dated the 19th November 1915, executed by Gadadhar Ghose and Dwijendra Nath Ghose in favour of Maharaja Bahadur Sir Prodyot Kumar Tagore, it is stated that the 9 cottas of land was held at a rental of Rs. 240 under the Haldars by the late Nafar Chandra Ghose and "he died in possession and enjoyment thereof by raising pucca masonry building and the like thereon, by residing thereon, etc., etc." In the deed of sale, dated the 29th June 1917, executed by Katyani in respect of the 2 bighas in favour of Sarat Chandra Gossain, however, the land is described as, "Basat homestead land" "with tanks, trees and like fixtures." There is no mention of any pucca building on any portion of the land, although the Kabala was executed within a year and eight months of the Kabala executed by Gadadhar Ghose and Dwijendra Ghose referred to above. The vendor is described as being in possession of land and the vendee was at liberty to take the property in his "khas possession." There is no reference to any sub-tenancy of the Ghoses or of any other person in any portion of the lands sold by Katyani. Then again in the Kabala by the Ghoses the 9 cottas is described as being held under the Haldars, although the interest of the Haldars had been purchased by Katyani in 1911, i.e., four years before. On these grounds the learned Subordinate Judge held that the 9 cottas sold by the Ghoses was not a part of the disputed plot No. 1 and had nothing to do with it. It is contended before us (as it was contended before the Court below) that the boundaries of the 9 cottas conveyed by the Ghoses tally with those contained in Katyani's Kabala. The learned Subordinate Judge held that they did not tally on all the four sides. It is pointed out on behalf of the appellants that only the western boundary does not agree, but that is because only the eastern portion of the plot (No. 1) was purchased and not the entire plot. That is a possible explanation; at the same time there is some force in the observations made by the Court below, viz., that the land in the Ghoses' conveyance is described as being held under the Haldars and as containing pucca masonry structures, whereas in the conveyance by Katyani the land is described as being "Basat" "with tank, trees and like fixtures," there being no mention of any pucca structures, or of any sub-tenancy in any portion of the land. The defendants produced a photograph taken by Mr. Long (a photographer) to show that there were pucca structures on a portion of plot No. 1. But the question need not be further discussed, as it is not of any importance so far as the present appeal is concerned. The 9 cottas of land appears to have been covered by the staff quarters building already erected by the defendants, and that building has been allowed by the Court below to "remain intact until the final disposal of the suit," and there is no cross-appeal by the plaintiff on the point. So far as the western portion of plot No. 1 (7 cottas) is concerned, there was admittedly no structure on the land.

It appears that the estate No. 2402 was permanently settled in the year 1842 and it is contended that the tenures of the Haldars were in existence from before the time of the permanent settlement, at any rate from before the year 1842, when the particular estate was permanently settled, and that, therefore, the defendants were not liable to be ejected even if their interest were not protected under the 4th proviso to section 37. The only evidence with regard to the existence of the tenures from before 1842 is the statement made by Mr. Tosh in the 11th paragraph of his affidavit based upon information given by Sarat Chandra Gossain. Sarat Chandra Gossain in his affidavit states that he confirms and relies upon the statements and submissions made in paragraphs 10 to 25 of the affidavit of Mr. Tosh, and that his knowledge of the facts stated in the said paragraphs is "based upon inspection of Zemindari papers and other documents." On the other hand Haripada Haldar (aged about 49 or 50 years), the son of Dwarka Nath Haldar and one of the defendants in the rent suits which resulted in the sales at which Katyani purchased, in his affidavit states that he and his co sharers were in possession and enjoyment of the lands and tank in dispute up to about 5 or 7 years before this suit as tenants, that his father had obtained a settlement of the tank while it was a tank from the Zemindars, and that about 25 or 30 years ago they obtained a settlement of the land from the Zemindars, that the land of the first plot so long as it was in their possession and all along afterwards was vacant land, that there was no building nor any garden or the like thereon, that it remained vacant land fenced all round by bamboo saplings, that in some years according to the requirements of the family it was used by causing vegetables to be grown thereon by Thika tenants, but then mostly it used to remain in a patit condition. The affidavit of Haripada Halder, however, was objected to on behalf of the defendants in the Court below, as a copy of it had been served upon them only the day previous to the day on which the hearing of the Rule commenced. The order-sheet stated that proper orders would be passed in the judgment. Though no separate order was passed with respect to it, the learned Subordinate Judge evidently admitted it, as he relies upon it in his judgment. It does not appear that the defendants wanted any opportunity of filing further affidavits to meet the statements made in Haripada's affidavit.

Neither party produced any papers in support of the above statements respectively made in the affidavits. The Court below has accepted the statements of Haripada Halder, and upon the materials at present on the record and in the absence of any documentary evidence, we do not see sufficient reasons for differing from the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge, viz., that there is no reliable evidence to show that the tenancy of the Haldars has been existing since before 1842.

The learned Subordinate Judge observes:— "So it comes to this, that the Halder tenants did not raise any buildings upon the first plot, nor did they dig any tank in the second plot. The defendant who purchased the lands from the auction-purchaser Katayani Debi cannot under the circumstances claim any protection under clauses 1 to 4 of section 37 of Act XI of 1859." For the purposes of the present appeal it is unnecessary to consider the finding of the Court below on the question whether there were buildings on the eastern portion of plot No. 1, as the building erected by the defendants on that portion has been allowed to stand. As already stated, there were admittedly no structures on the western portion, and the evidence on the record is not sufficient to show that there was a garden on it, so as to bring it under the 4th clause of section 37.

In granting a temporary injunction all that is necessary to see is whether the plaintiff has shown a prima facie case in support of the title asserted by him. We do not see sufficient reason for differing from the view taken by the Court below, viz., that the plaintiff has made out a prima facie title.

The second question for consideration is whether there was unreasonable delay in making the application for injunction.

As stated above, the plaintiff purchased the estate No. 2402 at a sale for arrears of revenue on the 8th January 1915. The former proprietors appealed to the Commissioner, but the sale was confirmed by the latter on the 1st June 1915. Possession was delivered to the plaintiff by the Collector on the 30th July 1915. In August 1915 a general notice was issued on the property by the plaintiff to the effect that any one dealing with the property or with the interest of the tenants thereof, except those which are protected under the provisions of section 37 of Act XI of 1859, will do so at his own risk, and all tenants of the estate were informed that leases, except those which were protected under the provisions of section 37 of Act XI of 1859, were annulled. A notice was also served on Mr. Tosh, senior partner of the defendants' firm, in August 1915.

The defendants commenced some buildings on other parts of the 140 bighas in November 1915. On the 26th January 1917, the plaintiff wrote to the defendants through his Solicitors Messrs. Morgan & Co. as follows:— "Our client understands that recently you have acquired an interest in several plots of lands in Mouzah Antpur within Touzi No. 2402 for the purpose of erecting a Mill. Our client contends that he is entitled, under section 37 of Act XI of 1859, to annul the tenure-holder's interest acquired by you, and to eject you from the lands, and he will take proceedings for that purpose immediately after the disposal of the suit instituted by Rai Satish Kant Roy Bahadur. Please note that if you build or proceed to build any erection on the land in question, you will do so at your risk." Mr. Tosh admits receipt of the letter.

Maharaja Bahadur Sir Prodyot Kumar purchased the 9 cottas on behalf of the defendants on the 9th November 1915, but that was after the notice given to Mr. Tosh. The suit brought by the former proprietors for setting aside the sale was dismissed on the 2nd April 1917. The defendants purchased the two plots of land in dispute from Katyani Dabi on the 29th June 1917. The defendants commenced building on a portion of the plot No. 1 in July 1917, and the affidavit of Nalinakhya Mookerjee states that plaintiff, coming to know of the same on the 21st August 1917, caused a letter to be written by his Pleader Babu Kissori Mohon Sen on the 23rd August 1917, forbidding them to raise the building. No reply was given to the said letter by the defendants and a reminder appears to have been sent to them by the plaintiff's Pleader Kissori Babu on the 21st September, and it was not until the 3rd October 1917 that the defendants gave a reply in which they regretted the delay in reply occasioned by the necessity to thoroughly investigate the matter put forward, and stated that they were advised that the plot on which they were building did not appertain to Touzi No. 2402 and further that as regards the said plot they were assured that it was a protected one, although under the circumstances of its being outside the plaintiff's Touzi the matter was of no importance. Three days afterwards, i. e., on the 6th October 1917, the suit was instituted. It appears, therefore, that the plaintiff after the purchase of the estate gave general notice and then a special notice to Mr. Tosh, in August 1915, not to deal with the interests of tenants. There was an interview between the plaintiff's Pleader and Mr. Tosh in August 1917, when the building on the disputed land was commenced then a letter protesting against the erection of the building on the 28th August 1917, followed by the reminder on the 21st September 1917, to which a reply was given only on the 3rd October 1917 and in which the defendants denied that the disputed land appertained to the estate No. 2402 purchased by the plaintiff. The suit was instituted on the 6th October, i. e., only three days afterwards and the application for temporary injunction was made on the 8th October. So far as the rest of plot No. 1 and the plot No. 2 are concerned, and they are the portions in respect of which the injunction has been granted, nothing had been done by the defendants. In these circumstances there was no unreasonable delay in coming to Court.

The third question is whether under these circumstances the Court below was right in granting the temporary injunction.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that where a plaintiff who is out of possession claims possession the Court will not grant injunction against a defendant in possession under a claim of right unless the threatened injury would be irreparable, and we are referred to Lowndes v. Bettle (1), Kesho Prasad Singh v. Srinivas Prasad Singh (2), Woodroffe on Injunctions, 4th Edition, 302, and Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVII, paragraph 483.

In Lowndes v. Bettle (1) Kindersley, V. C., reviewed the various authorities relating to injunctions in cases of trespass and classified the cases under two heads, the one where the party against whom the application for the injunction is made is in possession, and the other, where the plaintiff is in possession and is asking the Court to protect his estate. The result of the cases was that when the plaintiff was out of possession, the Court would refuse to interfere by granting an injunction unless there was fraud or collusion or unless the acts perpetrated or threatened were so injurious as to tend to the destruction of the estate. Where the plaintiff was in possession and the defendant was a mere trespasser not claiming under colour of right, the tendency of the Court was not to grant an injunction in the absence of special circumstances but to leave the plaintiff to his remedy at law, although an injunction would be granted if the acts complained of tended to the destruction of the estate. But where the plaintiff was in possession and the defendant claimed under an adverse title, the tendency was to grant the injunction.

Since the Judicature Act, these distinctions between cases where the defendant committing the acts of trespass is or is not in possession and claims under colour of title or is a mere stranger, are not of the same importance. See Kerr on Injunction, 5th Edition, page 102. Section 25, sub-section 8 of the Judicature Act, 1873, lays down:—"If an injunction is asked either before or at or after the hearing of any cause or matter to prevent any threatened or apprehended waste or trespass, such injunction may be granted, if the Court shall think fit, whether the person against whom such injunction is sought is or is not in possession under any claim of title or otherwise or (if out of possession) does or does not claim the right to do the act sought to be restrained under any colour of title, and whether the estates claimed by both or either of the parties are legal or equitable."

In Kesho Prasad Singh v. Srinivas Prasad Singh (2) the learned Judges (Mookerjee and Caspersz, JJ.) held that where the plaintiff is out of possession and claims possession, the Court will refuse to interfere by grant of injunction against the defendant in possession under a claim of right, but where the threatened injury will be irreparable, an injunction will lie at the instance of a complainant out of possession. In that case the plaintiff had established his title to the estate (which was in the possession of the defendant) in the Court of first instance, and while an appeal by the defendant was pending, asked for an injunction restraining the defendant from spending any sums whatever, at any rate any sums in excess of the revenue and rents and the expenses for the management of the estate. The learned Judges pointed out that there was no suggestion that the defendants were about to commit an act in the nature of waste, that the plaintiff had another adequate remedy, as he could execute the decree he had obtained (he had obtained a decree for mesne profits also) and thereby obtain full and ample relief, that the injunction if granted would be vague and indefinite, and lastly that the plaintiff could apply for the appointment of a Receiver of the estate.

The statement of the law in Kesho Prasad's case (2), viz., that where a plaintiff who is out of possession claims possession, the Court will not grant an injunction against a defendant in possession under a claim of right, but if a threatened injury would be irreparable, a complainant out of possession may have an injunction, is quoted in Woodroffe on Injunctions, 4th Edition, page 302. In an earlier passage in the same page the learned author states: "In cases where the relief sought is ejectment, Courts in India may clearly, by means of injunction secure the property from damage during litigation. At the same time care must be taken lest by interfering with the ordinary rights of ownership the mere institution of a suit should operate as a vexatious interruption to the enjoyment of property. The English Courts for special reasons formerly hesitated as to these cases and refused to interfere by injunction where the plaintiff was out of possession, unless there was fraud or collusion or unless the acts perpetrated or threatened were so injurious as to tend to the destruction of the estate." These observations made by the learned author must be taken as subject to the qualification that the plaintiff must show that the interference of the Court is necessary to protect him from irreparable or at least a serious injury before the legal right can be established at the trial. (See Woodroffe on Injunctions, page 89.) In Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVII, section 483, it is stated: "By the term 'irreparable injury' is meant substantial injury which can never be adequately remedied or atoned for by damages." By the term "irreparable injury," however, it is not meant that there must be no physical possibility of repairing the injury, all that is meant is that the injury would be a material one, and one not adequately reparable by damages (see Kerr on Injunction, 5th Edition, 19). We were referred to the case of Mogul Steamship Co. v. M'Gregor (3), where Lord Coleridge, C. J., observed:—"it may be that they will suffer some damages; it may be that they will for a time have a difficulty in carrying on their China trade or may have to carry it on at a loss. But injury of that sort differs altogether from the injury which is called 'irreparable' to prevent which injunctions have heretofore been granted in the Court of Chancery, and are now allowed to issue from this Court. For instance if a fine old ornamental tree in a nobleman's park be cut down, the injury is practically irreparable and cannot be compensated in damages. It is in cases of that nature that the interim injunction issues. The injury here if it be made out obviously is not of that character." But although indicating the nature of "irreparable injury," it does not profess to be an exhaustive definition of "irreparable injury," and the case was one where the loss which the plaintiff would have suffered in carrying on the trade could be easily compensated by damages. In one sense it may be said that every injury to property may be compensated by damages, but in that sense no injunction can be granted in cases even between co-sharers or between a landlord and tenant because the plaintiff may be compensated by damages. But money compensation may not be an appropriate and adequate remedy in every case of injury relating to immoveable property, and we think that the question of "irreparable injury" must depend upon the circumstances of each case.

We were referred to the case of Hilton v. Earl of Gramville (4) to show how reluctant the Court is to grant interim injunctions. In that case an injunction to restrain the working of valuable mines was refused, although there was reason to apprehend that if the working was continued the plaintiff's houses upon the surface would be totally destroyed or irreparably damaged before the legal right could be decided. But in that case no action had been brought to have the legal rights determined and there was delay in applying for the injunction; the injunction was refused on a consideration of the balance of inconvenience to the parties, and on condition of the defendants making certain admissions for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to bring an action. Of course an interlocutory injunction should not be lightly granted, because it would be a very serious thing if the person in possession were restrained from making use of the property, merely because a suit has been instituted with respect to the property. As pointed out by Pigot, J., in the case of Pudlam v. Dhunput Singh Bahadur (5), "the power of granting an injunction is one which has been perhaps a little lavishly bestowed upon the Courts in this country. It is a tremendous power, and one which the superior Courts most carefully guard themselves from exercising hastily or without solid grounds." It is only in cases where property which it is essential should be kept in its existing condition during the pendency of the suit is "in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated" that the Court ought to interfere so as to restrain persons who may turn out in the final event of the litigation to be the actual owners of the property from enjoyment and possession of it.

The learned Subordinate Judge referred to the principle laid down in the case of Kesho Prasad Singh v. Srinivas Prasad Singh (2), but held that it was inapplicable to the present case on the ground that the claim of right must be bona fide, which in its opinion was not in the present case. But a 'claim of right', we think, means 'under colour of some title' and as distinguished from the claim of a person who is in possession merely as a trespasser not claiming under any sort of title.

On behalf of the respondents reliance is placed on the observations of Jessel, M. R., in the case of Krehl v. Burrell (6), which are as follows:—If with notice of the right belonging to the plaintiff and in defiance of that notice, without any reasonable ground and after action brought, the rich defendant is to be entitled to build up a house of enormous proportions, at an enormous expense, and then to say in effect to the Court, 'you will injure me a great deal more by pulling it down than you will benefit the poor man by restoring his right,' of course that simply means that the Court in every case, at the instance of a rich man, is to compel the poor man to sell him his property at a valuation. That would be the real result of such a decision. It appears to me that it never could have been intended by the Legislature to bring such a result about. It never could have been meant to invest the Court of Chancery with a new statutory power somewhat similar to that with which railway companies have been invested for the public benefit under the Lands Clauses Act, to compel people to sell their property without their consent at a valuation. I am quite satisfied nothing of the kind was ever intended, and that, if I assented to this view, instead of exercising the discretion which was intended to be reposed in me, I should be exercising a new legislative authority which was never intended to be conferred by the words of the Statute, and I should add one more to the number of instances which we have from the days in which the Bible was written until the present moment, in which the man of large possessions has endeavoured to deprive his neighbour, the man with small possession, of his property, with or without adequate compensation." That was an action for an injunction to restrain the erection of a building on a passage over which the plaintiff claimed a right of way, where he had, on being informed of the defendants' intention, forthwith given him notice of his right and commenced the action, and the defendant had notwithstanding continued and completed the erection of the building complained of. The plaintiff's right having been established at the trial, the Master of the Rolls held that it was a case for a mandatory injunction and not for damages under Lord Cairn's Act, and made the observations quoted above. It is to be observed that it was not a case of a temporary injunction. The Court found that the plaintiff had established his right and gave a verdict accordingly, and in the circumstances of the case the Court held that a mandatory injunction and not damages was the proper remedy.

We were also referred to the case of Hemanta Kumar Roy v Baranagar Jute Factory Company (7). In that case the plaintiffs were some of the superior landlords of the disputed property, which consisted of two plots of land, and claimed to have been in direct possession of about one-third of the property. The defendants, who were in occupation of the remainder, obtained a permanent lease from some of the co-sharers of the plaintiffs and commenced to dig the foundation for an extension of their factory house. The plaintiffs sued for partition and applied for a temporary injunction. The defendants, notwithstanding notice of the application for injunction, expedited the execution of the building.

(7) 24 Ind. Cas. 313; 19 C. W. N. 442; 20 C. L. J. 441.

It appeared that on partition the plaintiffs could not conveniently be allowed any share of one of the plots, but must be limited to an allotment out of the other plot. It was held in these circumstances that the plot, a share of which only could be allotted to the plaintiffs on partition, should be retained in statu quo, so that the Court might be free to grant such relief as it might think proper, and an injunction should be granted restraining the defendants from building on this plot for a period of one month during which the partition suit was to be tried out. In that case one of the parties would have been placed in a very disadvantageous position unless an injunction was granted. The case of Israil v. Samset Rahman (8) also was a case between co-sharers. The principle upon which injunction is granted in this class of cases, viz., cases between co-sharers is that the co-sharer if not restrained from building, may be placed in an unfairly advantageous position compared with the plaintiff, but that principle does not apply to a case where the defendant is a trespasser in possession under a claim of right. In such a case the defendant must walk out of the land if the question of title is decided against him, and the considerations which may weigh with the Court in cases between co-sharers or in light and air cases, in deciding at the final hearing whether mandatory injunction should issue or the plaintiff should be given damages, do not apply to a case where the defendant is found to be in possession of land belonging to the plaintiff, without any title whatsoever.

The learned Pleader for the respondent contends that a temporary injunction may be granted in a case like the present under Order XXXIX, rule 2, which speaks of 'injury of any kind.' But Order XXXIX, rule 1 is the rule applicable to the present case, and not rule 2 which is applicable to a case where the plaintiff seeks to restrain a breach of contract, on the commission of a wrong or tort.

It is next contended on behalf of the respondent that even if the defendants have protected interests in the lands in dispute, they have as tenants no right to build

(8) 21 Ind. Cas. 861; 41 C. 436; 18 C. W. N. 176; 19 C. L. J. 47.

BEGG DUNLOP & CO. v. SATIS CHANDRA.

on the western portion of plot No. 1 or to fill up the tank on plot No. 2, thus changing the character of the land altogether against the wishes of the landlord, and that a landlord is entitled to an injunction against the tenant in such a case. It is contended, on the other hand, on behalf of the appellants that the suit was brought against them as trespassers and not as tenants, and that the temporary injunction was applied for in connection with the case made in the plaint, viz., that the defendant was a trespasser, and that under the circumstances the plaintiff cannot now turn round and ask for injunction against the defendants on the ground that they are tenants, at any rate without an amendment of the plaint and asking for injunction on the footing that the defendants are tenants. It is urged that if the defendants are sued as tenants, questions may be raised whether the acts complained of would not come within what is called "meliorating waste." We are of opinion that having sued the defendants as trespassers and having applied for injunction on that ground, the plaintiff should not be allowed to claim an injunction on the footing that the defendants are tenants, at any rate without remanding the case and giving the defendants an opportunity of showing cause against injunction being granted on such a footing, and that will take a long time.

The last question for consideration is whether in all the circumstances of the case, the injunction granted by the Court below should be discharged. We have already found that the plaintiff has made out a prima facie title, and there has been no unreasonable delay in coming to Court. The building (the staff quarters) which has been erected by the defendants on the eastern portion of plot No. 1 has been allowed to stand by the Court below. No injunction has been granted with respect to the same and there is no appeal on behalf of the plaintiff against the order. It is only with respect to the western portion of plot No. 1 and the plot No. 2, that the injunction has been granted. It is stated before us on behalf of the appellants in this Court that they want to build servants' quarters on the rest of plot No. 1 and to fill up the tank on plot

No. 2 which is said to be in an insanitary condition. It is contended, on the other hand, on behalf of the respondents that this was not suggested in the Court below, that the defendants having got all that they wanted in the Court below are raising new matters in appeal, and that they have a large quantity of their other lands adjoining the lands in dispute on which they can build their servants' quarters. There is no doubt that the appellants opposed the application for injunction in toto in the Court below, but so far as the records go, that there was no proposal of erecting servants' quarters on the rest of plot No. 1 or of filling up the tank in plot No. 2. Mr. Tosh in his affidavit stated that the "staff quarters with the lands in suit are integral parts of the Mill and are absolutely required for its working, and the starting and working of the Mill will be considerably delayed and my firm will be put to irreparable loss in consequence if the injunction prayed for be granted." He further stated that his firm had spent 5 lacs of rupees for the acquisition of the lands and construction of main buildings thereon, and about Rs. 85,000 for the construction of the staff quarters and had entered into a contract with Messrs. Mackintosh Burn & Co. to "complete the last mentioned building within 1917 and my firm will be seriously prejudiced and will suffer irreparable injury if the injunction be allowed." There is no trace of any suggestion in any of the affidavits as to the tank in plot No. 2 being in an insanitary condition, which it was necessary to be filled up, or that it was necessary for the defendants to build servants' quarters on the rest of plot No. 1.

The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have thought that it would satisfy both parties if the building erected for the staff quarters was allowed to stand, and an injunction was granted restraining the defendants from further building on or changing the character of the land. He observes: "The plaintiff alleged that there will be irreparable injury if the landmarks still existing on the boundaries of the disputed lands are effaced and done away with, and all possible opportunities and facilities for him to obtain possession thereof, if there be a decree in his favour, be permanently lost to him. On the eastern boundary, there is still the foundation of Swarnomoyi's house existing. On the south and west there are public roads. The defendants should not be allowed to interfere with and efface or demolish these permanent boundary marks. They should not also be allowed to further build upon the lands but must be ordered by an injunction to stop all further structures upon the lands until the final disposal of the suit. These are reasonable prayers and, in my opinion, they should be granted to meet the case of both parties. In that case the plaintiff would no longer have any cause for complaint that he apprehends an irreparable injury. The defendant Company also cannot complain that their Mill work will be stopped for want of erection of their staff quarters, and there will then be a phenomenal loss of income." Now if the landmarks still existing on the boundaries of the disputed lands are "effaced and done away with" by the erection of further buildings, there is danger of the enforcement of the right of the plaintiff being prevented, and this may be said to constitute irreparable injury. Then the filling up of the tank on plot No. 2 and erection of buildings (servant's quarters) on the rest of plot No. 1 on which admittedly there were no buildings at any time, would change the character of the land, and in the event of the suit being decreed, the buildings will have to be pulled down and the tank re-exacavated, and it may be difficult to restore the lands to their former condition. It is to be borne in mind that in granting an interim injunction the Court should see on which side, in the event of obtaining a successful result to the suit, will be the balance of inconvenience, if the injunction do not issue, bearing in mind the important principle of retaining immoveable property in statu quo.

It is suggested by the learned Pleader for the appellants that the boundaries can be fixed by deputing a surveyor to measure the lands and prepare a map. But that would take some time, because there may be objections to the surveyor's report by one party or the other, as there appears to be a difference between the parties about the exact area of the first plot of land, and they will have to be decided. On the other hand the suit itself which is pending in the Court below may be tried out within two months or even earlier, if an order for expediting the hearing is made by us. This would not be sufficient ground for maintaining the injunction, if we were satisfied that the defendants would be seriously inconvenienced by the order restraining them from erecting the buildings even for this period. But the order for injunction was passed by the Court below on the 5th February 1918, and the suit was tied up for nearly one year by this appeal preferred by the defendants. Were it not for this appeal, the suit could have been disposed of long ago. The appeal itself could have been heard long ago if the appellants had moved the Court for an early hearing.

In all the circumstances of the case, we think the proper course would be to direct the trial of the suit by the lower Court at once, so that the suit may be disposed of within a period of two months. If the suit is not disposed of within two months from the date of arrival of this order in the Court below owing to any default on the part of the plaintiff, it will be open to the defendants to apply to the Court below for the discharge of the injunction. If in the meantime the defendants find it necessary to construct servants quarters on the rest of plot No. 1, they may erect temporary structures for that purpose, but not so as to efface the boundary marks, and if any difficulty arises in the erection of the temporary structures for the servants quarters on plot No. 1 it will be open to the parties to apply to the Court below, and that Court will give proper directions in the matter.

The order for injunction will be varied accordingly. We make no order as to costs. The record with a copy of this order will be sent down to the Court below within the course of the next week.

Order varied.

Appeal, second—Finding of fact, interference with—Abandonment of occupancy tenancy and adverse possession, whether questions of fact—Punjab Tenancy Act XVI of 1887, s. 38—Abandonment of occupancy tenancy, what constitutes—Adverse possession by landlord.

A finding of fact based on no evidence or against express prima facie reliable evidence is liable to be set aside on second appeal. [p. 874, col. 1.]

Neither the question of abandonment by an occupancy tenant nor the question of adverse possession of the holding by the landlord is necessarily a question of fact. [p. 873, col. 1.]

Where it was found that an occupancy tenant had not for a large number of years either cultivated the land by himself or by others, that there was no sufficient cause for his not having done so, and that he did not arrange for payment of the rent:

Held, that the tenancy must be taken to have been abandoned within the meaning of section 38 of the Punjab Tenancy Act [p. 875, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a holding abandoned by an occupancy tenant is given by the landlords to their tenants-at-will, this is sufficient to constitute adverse possession as against the occupancy tenant. [p. 875, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, dated the 29th November 1918.

Mr. Harcharan Das Bhalla, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken that no second appeal lies because the questions of abandonment and adverse possession are questions of fact. In my opinion, neither the question of abandonment, and more particularly abandonment by an occupancy tenant, nor of adverse possession are necessarily questions of fact. A great deal must depend on the circumstances of the case.

In the present case the question of adverse possession is dependent on that of abandonment. With regard to abandonment the respondents rely on a decision of the Chief Court of the Punjab No. 253 of 1908, reported in the unauthorised Punjab Law Reporter as No 102 of 1909

[Atra v. Ram Kishen (1)]. This judgment, however, lays down no such wide proposition, but relying on the decisions in Fatal Din v. Shah Mahomed (2) and Gangu v. Jawahar Singh (3) it was held that in the case before the Court, the question of abandonment was one of fact. This might well have been the case. The judgment is very brief and the facts are not stated. In the two decisions referred to it was no doubt remarked that the question of abandonment was one of fact to be decided on the circumstances of each case, but the question whether, under every conceivable circumstance, a finding with regard to abandonment was purely a question of fact was not before the Courts. Since these decisions of 1883 and 1884 the Punjab Tenancy Act has been passed and to some extent the subject of abandonment by an occupancy tenant is dealt with in section 38 of that Act. Under these circumstances I doubt whether those decisions are now applicable in respect of this matter.

No authority has been quoted for the proposition that a finding as to abandonment by an occupancy tenant is final even though the finding is based on no evidence, or on a misreading or misconstruction of evidence or of documents or is against express prima facie reliable evidence which by law is to be presumed to be correct in the absence of all evidence to the contrary, or which is based on a misconstruction of the provisions of the Punjab Tenancy Act. In Jowala Singh v. Lakha Singh (4) it was held that misreading of evidence may afford sufficient reason for interference on second appeal. In Gauri Shankar v. Madho Charan (5), which is a ruling of a Division Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab, it was held that a finding of fact, to be conclusive and binding on a Court of second appeal, must be a finding based on evidence legally sufficient to support it and where there is no sufficient evidence to justify such a finding, the finding cannot operate as a finding of fact. MUHAMMED UMAR KHAN V. RAZI KHAN.

Manowar Hossein (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the decision that the defendant's possession had been adverse having been an inference from fact in the Courts below, the correctness of this as a legal conclusion to be drawn or not, was a question open to second appeal. It appears that the same argument would apply to the legal conception of abandonment, especially where certain acts have by Statute been declared to constitute abandonment by an occupancy tenant. In Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dasi Debi (7) it was strongly contended that their Lordships of the Privy Council should not depart from their usual practice of not interfering with two concurrent findings of fact, but their Lordships pointed out that it was a case of no evidence. There are also a number of unpublished judgments of the Chief Court of the Punjab which decide that a finding of fact based on no evidence or against express prima facie reliable evidence is liable to be set aside on second appeal. An instance is Civil Appeal No. 1831 of 1914 [Khubi v. Chottu (8)].

In the present case the lower Appellate Court has not considered the oral evidence, which it has set aside on the ground that it is not of much value, without giving any reasons, and has decided the appeal on what, in my opinion, is a misconstruction of entries in the revenue papers. It would have been more satisfactory to have judged and discussed the oral evidence in the light of a proper construction of these entries. The lower Appellate Court itself describes these entries as vital. It finds that it is manifest from the revenue records that the plaintiffs, the occupancy tenants, have not received any rent for a considerable period and that their allegations to the contrary are false. It finds, further, that the Record of Rights prepared in 1902-03 shows in the proprietor's column that the representatives of defendants were proprietors and in the tenant's column the plaintiffs are shown as occupancy tenants out of possession, that a man named Chaman was cultivating the land as tenant at will on behalf of the proprietors and that in the column of rent it is noted that nothing is due to the occupancy tenants. The Court also finds that in the Jamabandi of 1911-12 there are similar entries.

It appears to me that the only construction to be placed on these entries is that the proprietors had arranged for the cultivation and that the tenancy of the actual cultivator was one under them and not under the occupancy tenants. I think this construction would, in view of the entries being of 1892, at once raise a presumption both of abandonment and adverse possession. The lower Appellate Court, however, has proceeded to dispose of the appeal on the basis of a judgment, Lakha v. Thakar Dial (9). This judgment dealt with section 38 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, 1887, and the learned Financial Commissioner held that "to constitute abandonment carrying with it extinction of the right of occupancy under section 38, three things are necessary, and all these must exist in combination with each other; these are (1) that the tenant fails for more than one year to cultivate his tenancy either by himself or some other person; (2) that he so fails without sufficient cause; and (3) that he fails to arrange for the payment of the rent of the tenancy as it falls due. If a tenant has sufficient cause for his failure to cultivate, there is no abandonment; so also if he fails to cultivate but arranges for the payment of the rent as it falls due, abandonment does not occur." It was also pointed out that with regard to the intention of the section the essential point for consideration is whether the landlord has sustained any injury from the tenant which would justify the penalty of extinction of the right and that if the landlord has sustained no injury whatever, the Courts should require extremely strict proof as to all the three points above noted. In that particular case it was held that as the occupancy tenant was a minor, he had sufficient cause for not cultivating and that his uncle had as a matter of fact arranged for the cultivation with the proprietors. The lower Appellate Court in dealing with the above judgment has, I think, misread the first condition which is not that there must be a failure to cultivate for one year but that the occupancy tenant must fail to cultivate the tenancy either by himself or some other person, whilst the third condition relates to a failure on the part of the occupancy tenant to make the necessary arrangements. The lower Appellate Court holds that the conditions have been sufficiently met by the fact that the lands have not been out of cultivation and payment has been made direct to the proprietors who have not suffered. It regards the matter of loss as the essential point but, as pointed out by the Financial Commissioner, where there has been no loss, the result is not that it must be held there had been no abandonment, but that strict proof of the conditions should be required. If the conditions are proved, the fact of there being no loss is immaterial.

The first condition has been further dealt with by the lower Appellate Court under the discussion of adverse possession, and it has held that the occupancy tenants "have arranged for the cultivation of the land, or, at least, the land has been cultivated all this time and their names have been borne out in the revenue papers." No evidence is referred to in support of the finding that the occupancy tenants had arranged for the cultivation. Apparently seeing the weakness of this finding the Court added "or, at least, the land has been cultivated." This last finding is not sufficient. The burden of proof is, no doubt, on the proprietors but in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and none has been referred to, either by the lower Court or in this Court, the presumption raised by the entries in the revenue papers is sufficient. I hold that the appellants did not for a large number of years either cultivate the land by themselves or by others, that there is no sufficient cause for not having done so and, finally, that they did not arrange for payment of rent when due.

It is urged that no overt act on the part of the proprietors has been proved from which adverse possession can be presumed, but the giving of the land by the proprietors to their own tenants at-will is sufficient for the purpose. I hold that the suit is time-barred. For the above reasons I accept the appeal with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Custom—Pre-emption—Proof of custom—Wajib-ul-arz, entries in, value of—Previous sales to co-sharers, effect of.

The mention of the existence of the custom of pre-emption in two wajib-ul-arzes drawn up at a considerable interval of time between each, the fact that the co-sharers in the village admit the existence of the custom, with the added fact that previous sales have been in favour of co-sharers, are sufficient to establish the existence of the custom. Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Barielly, dated the 11th May 1918.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. N. Banerji and S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The Courts below dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the evidence produced was insufficient to prove the custom alleged. The evidence consisted of the production of two wajib ul-arzes and certain oral evidence on both sides, and the fact that there had been at least ten sales in favour of the plaintiff in the same Mahal. The lower Appellate Court in respect of the oral evidence has in clear language said that it is worthless and that no reliance can be placed upon it. This refers to the oral evidence on both sides. It decided the point simply on its interpretation of the documentary evidence and the inference to be drawn from the fact that all the sales in this Mahal had been made in favour of the plaintiff. It held that the sales in favour of the plaintiff proved nothing at all and that the two wajib-ul-arzes were insufficient to establish the custom. The first wajib ul-arz is that of the settlement of 1868 or 1869. In section 8 of that document there is a distinct mention of the existence of a custom of pre-emption. The words used are "wa riwaj haqq shufa;" the document relates that at that time no co sharer's property was under a mortgage and that in future every one had a right to transfer his property with certain conditions. The next wajib-ul-arz is that of 1895 drawn up when a partition was carried out in the village. That document distinctly in section 8 refers to the customs set out in the settlement wajib-ul-arz and reiterates the fact that they prevail and are binding on the co-sharers. In the two wajib-ul arzes drawn up at a considerable distance of time apart the custom of pre-emption has been clearly and distinctly mentioned and all the co-sharers agree that it is in force and binding on them. Read in the light of the above, the fact that all the sales in this Mahal have been in favour of a co-sharer, namely, the plaintiff, is a fact which has considerable significance in favour of the contention that the custom of pre-emption itself existed. If these sales had all been to strangers, an inference of the opposite sort would naturally have been drawn. In our opinion the only inference that can properly be drawn from the above evidence is that the rule of pre-emption itself existed as a custom and that the plaintiff under that right, being a co-sharer entitled under the custom to pre-empt, had a right to pre-empt the property in suit against the defendant vendee who is not a co-sharer in the Mahal. It is true that the vendor, the vendee and the pre emptor are all descended from a common ancestor, but the vendee is not a co-sharer in the Mahal, the pre emptor is, and the custom gives a right to the relation who is a co-sharer. The Court below has found on the question of consideration that the true sale price was Rs. 1,000 and that point is not contested before us. The result, therefore, is that we allow the appeal. The plaintiff's suit will stand decreed with costs in all Courts conditional on his paying into Court the sum of Rs. 1,000 within a period of three months from to-day's date. If he fails to pay the Rs. 1,000 into Court as directed above, then his suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Court. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 30th August 1915.

Mr. N. O. Mehra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are few and the point which arises for decision is short and simple. Naraina, the defendant to the suit, while a minor represented himself to be a major and executed a mortgage in favour of Harnam Singh, the plaintiff, on the 6th of June 1908. Thereupon one Ram Ditta instituted a suit for setting aside the mortgage deed and succeeded in getting a decree. One of the points raised in that suit was that the mortgagor Naraina being a minor at the date of the mortgage, the transaction was wholly void. The suit was, however, decreed on the ground of want of consideration and legal necessity. The question of the mortgagor's age was considered immaterial and was not decided. The present suit was instituted by Harnam Singh, the mortgagee, against Naraina for the possession of the mortgaged lands and was contested by the defendant on the ground of his infancy at the time of the mortgage. The Court of first instance, holding that the defendant had been found to be an adult at the time of the mortgage in the reversioner's suit, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

NAZIR BIBI v. RAM RATAN.

An appeal was preferred by the defendant to the lower Appellate Court, which has reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and has dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has thereupon come up in second appeal to this Court. It has been contended on his behalf that the defendant, having fraudulently represented himself to be a major at the date of the mortgage, was estopped from pleading his infancy in this suit. It was also contended that he had been held to be of age at the date of the mortgage in the previous suit and the plea was barred by the rule of res judicata. We have perused the appellate judgment of Mr. Ross in the reversioner's suit, and we entirely agree with the learned Judge of the Court below that the question of the defendant's age was left open and was not finally decided in that case. In this case after considering the evidence on the record the Court has found as a fact that the defendant was a minor at the date of the mortgage. It is not open to the appellant to contest this finding in second appeal. It is, however, argued by his learned Counsel that even if the defendant was a minor, he having fraudulently represented himself to be a major, a decree on the mortgage ought to have been passed against him. In support of his contention he has relied upon a decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sreemutty Mohun Bibi v. Saral Ohund Mitter (1), but the view taken in this case is opposed to the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (2). It was held by their Lordships that a mortgage made by a minor was wholly void and that the mortgagee was not entitled to enforce his security created under the mortgage. On the question of estoppel raised in that case their Lordships held that there could be no estoppel, where the truth of the matter was known to both the parties. A false representation made to a person who knows it to be false is not such a fraud as to take away the privilege of infancy.

In this case on the facts disclosed there can be no doubt that the mortgagee, who belonged to the same brotherhood to which the defendant belonged and lived in the same place where he lived, must have been aware that he was a minor. According to the finding of the learned Judge, Naraina was only just over sixteen years at the time of the mortgage and it is not possible to believe that the plaintiff did not know that he was a minor.

In our opinion this case is fully governed by the ruling of the Privy Council. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 20th June 1918.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Babu Basudeo Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the plaintiff-respondent for the recovery of money due on a deed of mortgage purporting to have been executed by Muhammad Ayub Khan, his wife Musammât Sardar-un-nisa and his mother-in-law Musammât Nazir Bibi, on the 15th February 1910. The property mortgaged originally belonged to Asaf Ali Khan, who had obtained it under a grant from the British Government. He died in 1898, leaving him surviving a widow Musammât Nazir Bibi, a daughter by her named Musammât Sardar-un-nisa, and another named Musammât Masjidi Maryam by a predeceased wife.

On the death of Asaf Ali Khan mutation of names was effected in respect of his property in favour of Musammât Nazir Bibi alone. Musammât Masjidi Maryam claimed the entire property on the basis of a Will, purporting to have been made by Asaf Ali Khan. In order to enforce her alleged right to the said property and to meet the expenses of litigation she sold a 7-annas share in that property to Ram Ratan in 1906. Ram Ratan apparently took some steps to collect evidence in support of her title and also took legal advice in connection with the matter; but before any suit was filed, a compromise was arrived at between Musammât Masjidi Maryam and Ram Ratan on the one hand and Musammât Nazir Bibi and Musammât Sardar-un-nisa on the other, whereby Musammât Masjidi Maryam was allowed a 3-annas share in the said property and in return for the expenses, which Ram Ratan had incurred in connection with the proposed litigation, Musammât Nazir Bibi and Musammât Sardar-un-nisa agreed to reimburse him to the extent of Rs. 2,016-4-6, being the amount due on a previous promissory note which Musammât Masjidi Maryam had executed in favour of Ram Ratan for the expenses aforesaid. In pursuance of this compromise a deed of partition was written on the 4th February 1910 by the parties to the compromise (Exhibit 2) and the deed of mortgage, now sought to be enforced, was executed by the defendants-appellants.

The defendants, Musammât Nazir Bibi and Musammât Sardar-un-nisa, deny that they executed the said deed of mortgage or received any consideration in connection therewith. They further state that if any such deed was executed, it could not be enforced, because it was not properly attested in the manner required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and that the covenant as to the payment of interest entered in the said deed was hard and unconscionable. Muhammad Ayub Khan pleads that his signature was obtained by undue influence, that the consideration of Rs. 2,100 entered in the deed was fictitious and that no portion of it had been received by him. He took the same plea with regard to interest as the other defendants.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the mortgage in suit, though written on the 15th February 1910, was actually executed by the defendants-appellants on the 20th February 1910. He accordingly disallowed the interest claimed from the 15th February to the 20th February 1910 and finding on the other points against the defendants-appellants decreed the rest of the claim.

We have examined the evidence adduced in the case and agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in finding that the mortgage-deed in suit was executed by the defendants-appellants, including the two ladies, Musammât Nazir Bibi and Musammât Sardar-un-nisa, after they had examined the account of the expenditure which the plaintiff-respondent had incurred, and undertaken to reimburse him to the extent entered in the mortgage-deed. Muhammad Ayub Khan states that he had examined the account of the sums due to the plaintiff respondent and found Rs. 2,100 payable to him. The mortgage-deed says that the account had been explained to the ladies by Muhammad Ayub Khan, who negotiated the compromise on behalf of the ladies and managed their entire business. There is evidence to show that at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed in suit the terms of the deed were explained to the ladies, who were sitting behind a door before they made their marks. Mustafa Ali, the general agent of the plaintiff-respondent, states that Muhammad Ayub Khan took the mortgage-deed to them to explain it and brought it back. Ashfaq Husain, who was then the general agent of Musammat Masjidi Maryam and is also her son-in-law, says that the terms of the said mortgage had been explained to the ladies. Musammat Sardar-un-nisa admits that she made her mark on the deed. Musammat Nazir Bibi pretends that she and her daughter put down their marks on the deed, believing that it was a security bond or power-of-attorney, but that statement is obviously false. The endorsement of the Sub-Registrar shows that the ladies acknowledged the execution of the deed and the receipt of the consideration after having heard the contents thereof and having been informed of the conditions noted therein. The deed of partition was registered on the same date.

It is urged on behalf of the defendants-appellants that while the plaint asserted that the document was executed on the 15th February 1910, the evidence suggested that it was not signed and attested till the 20th February 1910 and that the evidence adduced should not, therefore, be believed. But it does not appear that the plaintiff-respondent could have had any object in asserting that the document in question was executed and attested on a date different from that it bore, had the facts been otherwise, or in producing false evidence in support of such assertion. In fact in the previous suit which was filed by Musammat Masjidi Maryam to enforce her rights under the deed of partition, to which Musammat Nazir Bibi, Musammat Sardar-un-nisa and Ram Ratan were parties, the mortgage-deed in suit was produced and the evidence then given by Ram Ratan was to the effect that the said document had been executed and attested on the 20th February 1910, as is now stated, and that evidence was accepted by the Court which decided that suit. The mere fact that the document was signed and attested 5 days after it was written out does not render its execution invalid, or in any way alter the nature of the case as set up in the plaint, though the date of actual execution, as established by the evidence, has been found to be slightly at variance from the date entered in the plaint.

By virtue of the deed of partition the plaintiff-respondent gave up his rights under the sale-deed executed by Musammat Masjidi Maryam and contented himself with an undertaking given by Musammat Nazir Bibi and Musammat Sardar-un-nisa for the payment of Rs. 2,016-4-6 on account of the expenses incurred by him after his purchase. It is not open to the two ladies to go behind that settlement or resile from the agreement into which they had then entered.

It is also urged that the Court below has erred in allowing interest at the stipulated rate; but as we are satisfied that the defendants-appellants thoroughly understood the liability which they had undertaken, when they executed the mortgage deed, and accepted the terms entered therein, which in all the circumstances were neither hard nor unconscionable, we are not disposed to interfere with the decree passed by the Court below. The interest allowed is not penal and there is no proof that any undue influence was exercised.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

requisite for obtaining copies, what is—Appellant, whether bound to apply at one time for copies of judgment and decree—Separate periods, whether can be allowed for copies of judgment and decree.

There is nothing in law which obliges an appellant to make one and the same application for obtaining copies of the judgment and decree to be appealed against.

Where an appellant applied for and obtained a copy of the judgment to be appealed against and subsequently, but before the expiry of the period for filing the appeal, applied for and obtained a copy of the decree:

Held, that the time spent in obtaining a copy of the judgment and the time spent in obtaining a copy of the decree must both be excluded in computing the period of limitation under section 12 of the Limitation Act.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 5th August 1915.

Messrs. Obedulla and Umar Baksh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Niaz Muhammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the District Judge of Lahore, dismissing an appeal on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The suit was decided by the first Court on the 15th of January 1915, and on the same date an application was put in for a copy of the judgment. On the 26th of January 1915 the copy was ready for delivery and was delivered on the 28th of January. On the 23rd of February an application was made for a copy of the decree, and this copy was ready on the 25th and was delivered on the 26th of February. An appeal was filed on the 3rd of March. The appellant is entitled under section 12 (2) of the Limitation Act to deduct the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree appealed from and under sub-section (3) of the same section he is entitled to deduct the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which the decree is founded. In the present case, he is, therefore, entitled to a deduction of 11 days under section 12 (2) and to a further 3 days under section 12 (3), i. e., to 14 days in all. Thirty days is the statutory period in which an appeal can be filed in the Court of the District Judge. The appeal could, therefore, in the present case have been filed on the 44th day after the suit was decided, in other words, it could have been filed on the 28th of February. Now, the latter was a Sunday and the 1st and 2nd of March were also holidays, and therefore, as the appeal was filed on the 3rd of March, it was within time.

The only point urged by Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, the respondents' Vakil, is that the appellant should have made one and the same application for obtaining copies of the judgment and of the decree. But there is nothing in the law that obliges him to do this. It appears probable that the original application of the 15th of January was for copies both of the judgment and of the decree, but this was subsequently amended and a copy of the judgment was alone asked for. Even if it be supposed that the original application was for both the copies, still only one was supplied and it was, therefore, necessary for the appellant to make a second application which he did on the 23rd of February. We note that the period for appealing had not yet expired at the time when the application for a copy of the decree was put in on the 23rd of February. The District Judge's office erred in its calculation because it was under the impression that this application was put in after the period of limitation for filing the appeal had already expired.

We accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the District Judge, remand the appeal to him for decision in accordance with law. Stamp in this Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 24—Confession, retracted, value of—Corroboration, whether necessary.

A confession by an accused person made after he has been for a considerable time in Police custody, and subsequently retracted, ought not to be accepted without corroboration. [p. 883, col. 1.]

Criminal reference under section 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, dated the 10th November 1919, from the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur, sentencing the accused to death.

FACTS.—The confession of accused Har Lal Kurmi was recorded by the Magistrate on the 17th August 1919 as follows:—

"Q. I am a Magistrate, your statement before me will be taken in evidence against you. Do not fear anything. Make a free statement.

A. Rusna Teli, Tekwa Teli and I together killed Rasmania Teli in the Lerna Jungle, seized his money and gold and threw away his body."

The confession of accused Rusna Teli was recorded by the Magistrate on the 17th August 1919 as follows:—

"Q. I warn you that your statement before me will be taken in evidence against you. You must, therefore, make your statement before me of your own free will and not mind the intimidation or threats of the Police or of anybody else.

A. Tekwa Teli, Har Lal Kurmi and I met Rasmania Teli in the Lerna Jungle. Tekwa and I knew that Rasmania was carrying money. We three persons together snatched the money and gold from him and killed him and threw away the body in the jungle."

The confession of accused Tekwa Teli was recorded by the Magistrate on the 17th August as follows:—

"Q. I am a Magistrate, your statement before me will be taken in evidence against you.

You should make your statement before me of your own free will and not mind the intimidation or threats of anybody.

A Rusna Teli, Har Lal Kurmi and I killed Rasmania Teli in the Lerna Jungle, seized his money and gold and threw away his body."

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case Rusna Teli, Tekwa Teli and Har Lal Kurmi have all been convicted of murder by the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur and have been sentenced to death. The facts of the case, as stated by the prosecution, are shortly as follows:—

On the 10th August last Gujar Teli went off with a cart to Hazaribagh Road Railway Station to purchase rice having previously arranged with his son-in-law Rasmania, who lived in his house, to go to Hazaribagh Road Station the next day taking with him money in order to pay for the rice which he would purchase. In accordance with this arrangement Rasmania next morning started off at about 9 A.M. with Rs. 117 in cash. He was to go by train from Chaudhuribandh Railway Station, which is about two miles from the village Kulgo where they lived. He did not turn up as expected by Gujar at the Hazaribagh Road Station. Gujar waited until the 12th and then started for home again. He arrived at about 9 P.M. at night and learnt from his wife Rudia that Rasmania had started. It was too late to do anything that night, so the next morning Gujar, his wife and a boy named Rewa started off for Chaudhuribandh Railway Station to make enquiries. At Chaudhuribandh they got no information and they came back searching in the jungle along the road. In a jungle known as Asanbani Jungle the boy Rewa found a lathi, which Gujar and his wife identified as belonging to Rasmania, and presently on further search they found the dead body of Rasmania in a ditch. His hands were tied behind his back with his dhoti and one side of his face and head were buried in mud. Gujar remained with the body and sent his wife Rudia to the Thana to lay a first information. The place where the body was found is within the jurisdiction of the Bagodar Thana, but as Dumri Thana was nearer and apparently in the direction in which Kulgo lay, she went to Dumri Thana and at 2 p. m. on the 13th laid a first information there.

The Sub-Inspector of Dumri Thana went at once to Kulgo village where Gujar, his wife and the accused also lived and began to make enquiries. At the village Rudia said that she suspected Rusna and Tekwa and as one of the witnesses Murat Mian told the Sub-Inspector that he had seen Tekwa drunk and asking that a goat should be killed for him the evening before, he suspected Tekwa apparently on the ground that he had more money than he should have. He accordingly searched the houses of Tekwa and Rusna who are uncle and nephew. He found nothing there and proceeded to the Asanbani Jungle. There he was shown the dead body and held an inquest. He found several injuries on the head and face, which appeared to him to have been caused by an axe. The body was sent to Kulgo and subsequently to Hazaribagh. On the 14th having got certain information, the Sub Inspector sent for the accused Har Lal and questioned him for about 3 hours from 8 a. m. to 11 a. m. About 11 a. m. the Sub Inspector from Bagodar arrived, and about noon Har Lal took the Police to a Makai field, where either with a lathi or with his hands he dug up an earthen pot from the ground near a jack fruit tree. The pot contained Rs. 28 7.3. The Dumri Sub-Inspector then went off to Asanbani Jungle to try and find out something and to make a map. He found out nothing, but he prepared a map which is on the record. Meanwhile the Dumri Sub-Inspector remained at Kulgo investigating. He sent for Tekwa and Rusna, told them that they were suspected and that Har Lal had produced certain property. Tekwa then led the Sub Inspector and others to his Bari and from a dung heap brought out a cloth which contained Rs. 24. Subsequently at about 2 30 p. m. Rusna led them to a Bari which belonged to him, dug with his hands in the ground and produced a small tin case which contained Rs. 28 and more money in small coins. He also produced a Chankidari receipt in his own name. The Sub-Inspector then questioned him about the earring which was said to be missing from the body of the deceased, and Rusna then took him to another Bari of his and after digging there with his hands he produced a cloth which contained a Kanosi. The Sub-Inspector then demanded the Kanosi which had been found on the dead body from Gujar with whom it was, and on comparison the Kanosis were found to be of the same pattern. All the accused were then arrested. On the 15th Tangis were recovered from the accused's houses, and in the afternoon of the same day they were sent to Hazaribagh. We do not know when they arrived there, but on the 17th which was a Sunday the accused were taken to the house of Maulvi Raza Karim, Deputy Magistrate, in the afternoon and he recorded their statements. In the statements they confessed that they killed Rasmania in a certain jungle called Lerna Jungle. These confessions were subsequently retracted before the Committing Magistrate and at the trial the accused stated that they had been induced to make these confessions by ill treatment from the Police. The result of the post mortem examination showed that there was a fracture of the right parietal bone of the skull, which was in the opinion of the Doctor sufficient to cause death if it was ante mortem, but the body was so decomposed that it was impossible for him to state what the cause of death was.

It will be necessary to deal with the evidence against each of the accused separately, and first of all I shall deal with the evidence in the case of Har Lal. The first piece of evidence against this accused is the evidence of witnesses Nos. 6 and 7, to the effect that he was seen by them, on the morning of the day on which Rasmania started for Chandhuribandh, going with the other two accused in the direction of Asanbani Jungle with Tangis in their hands, and the evidence of prosecution witness No. 8 that she saw these three men both going towards the Asanbani Jungle and returning from the same direction. This would be valuable evidence if it were possible to accept it, but in our opinion it is impossible to do so. The prosecution witness No. 6 is a boy of 14 and there are very great discrepancies between the statements which he made before the Police, before the Committing Magistrate and in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. It is impossible to reconcile these statements. The learned Judicial Commissioner has said that he believes the discrepancies to be due to want of memory, but if this is so, it would be unsafe to rely on his memory with regard to what occurred on the day the deceased went to Chaudhuribandh. Prosecution witness No. 7 is a boy of 11, on whose evidence alone it is impossible to place much reliance. Prosecution witness No. 8 is a woman labourer who says that she saw the men both going and returning. As, however, she says in the beginning of her deposition that this was on the day before the Daroga came to the village, it is impossible to place much reliance on her evidence and with it the whole evidence that the accused were seen going on the morning of the day of occurrence towards Asanbani and returning from the same direction also goes.

RUSNA TELI v. EMPEROR.

The next piece of evidence is the production of the pot full of money by the accused from his Bari. Money is unidentifiable and as it is a common practice to bury money, this does not carry the case any further.

Lastly there is the confession. This, however, has been retracted and as it was made after the accused had been for some considerable time in Police custody, it would without corroboration be unsafe to accept it.

The evidence against Tekwa is practically the same as the evidence against Har Lal and for the same reasons as it has been found insufficient in the case of Har Lal, it is in our opinion insufficient in the case of Tekwa also.

So far as seeing the accused Rusna going towards and coming from Asanbani and the confession is concerned, the evidence against accused Rusna is the same as the evidence against the other two accused. But in addition to the production by him of money which is unidentifiable, there is evidence of the production of the Kanosi. Considerable importance has been attached to this by the learned Judicial Commissioner and by the learned Deputy Government Advocate who has argued the case for the Crown before us. The facts in regard to the Kanosi as alleged by the prosecution are that when the body was examined by the Sub-Inspector a Kanosi was found in the left ear. This Kanosi was taken out and Gujar was told to keep it. He did so, and on the next day after the Kanosi had been produced by the accused Rusna, Gujar also produced the Kanosi which is said to have been on the body of the deceased. They were compared and found to be of the same pattern. If it were a fact that the Kanosi produced by the accused was the Kanosi worn by the deceased, this would be very strong evidence, but we are not satisfied that this has been sufficiently established. The only witness who identifies them both is the woman Rudia, and in view of the fact that they are of a very ordinary pattern it would be unsafe to accept her uncorroborated testimony. Moreover, there are other considerations which make the acceptance of this evidence still more unsafe. In the first information she has stated that both the Kanosis were missing from the ears of the deceased, and in the inquest report there is no mention of any Kanosi. An attempt has been made to explain the statement in the first information by evidence that the left ear in which the Kanosi was subsequently found was buried in the mud, but we cannot assume that the woman in fact made no investigation into this matter, and it is true that the inquest report is chiefly concerned with the wounds on the body, but still there is the fact that there was no mention of the Kanosis there. Then again the single Kanosi said to have been found on the body was not produced until after the production of the single Kanosi by the accused and being of a very ordinary pattern, it would have been by no means difficult to match it. Under these circumstances the fact of the production of the Kanosi by the accused Rusna is not, in our opinion, sufficient evidence to connect this accused with the crime.

For the above reasons, therefore, we are of opinion that the case has not been sufficiently established against any of the accused. Their conviction and sentences are, therefore, set aside and the accused are acquitted.

Conviction set aside.

Opium Act (I of 1878), ss. 4, 9, r. 48—Sale of opium in contravention of conditions of license—Offence.

A sale of opium in contravention of the conditions of a license is a breach of rule 48 and is punishable under section 9 of the Opium Act.

Revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Shahpur, Sargodha, dated the 26th March 1919.

Mr. B. R. Puri, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant has been convicted, under section 9 of the Opium Act, of a breach of the rules, Notification No. 954, 16th October 1916, amended 27th March 1917, under the Opium Act, in that he sold more than two tolas of pure opium to one person at one time. In the application for revision it is argued that the applicant's act only amounts to a breach of the conditions of the license, which breach may expose him to penalties under rule 53 but not to conviction under section 9. The authority quoted is Bur Singh v. Queen Empress (1), in which it was held that the omission by a cultivator to enter the amount of his cultivation on the back of his license might be a breach of the conditions of the license but was not a breach of any rule under the Act. No doubt if rule 49 of Notification No. 954, dated the 16th October 1916, as amended on the 27th March 1917, stood alone, the argument would be sound. The case, however, can be distinguished. First of all there is a substantive rule 48, which runs as follows:—"Save as provided by rules 46 and 47, the sale of opium is permitted only in accordance with the terms and conditions of a license granted as provided in the following rules." Sale in contravention of the conditions of a license is, therefore, a breach of rule 48. Secondly by section 4 of the Act it is provided that "no one shall sell opium except as permitted by this Act, or by rules framed under this Act." Looking to section 4 of the Act and rule 48 the applicant is clearly liable to punishment under section 9. The case is clearly distinguishable from that reported as Bur Singh v. Queen Empress (1) and the application for revision must be rejected.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Sanction based on circumstantial evidence, validity of.

In the absence of any direct evidence, the existence of circumstantial evidence is sufficient to justify an order granting sanction to prosecute. [p. 887, col. 1.]

Civil Criminal Revision under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, against the order of the District Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 31st May 1918, granting sanction to prosecute the petitioners for offences under section 209/109, Indian Penal Code.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of the District Judge:—

"These are two applications under section 195, sub-section (6), Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute certain persons under sections 209 and 209/109, Indian Penal Code. The applications were originally rejected by the Munsif before whom they were made. But as the learned Munsif recorded no evidence, and as evidence was necessary in order to come to a conclusion, it is not necessary to consider his order. The circumstances are as follows:—Lakshmi Narain Kuar, one of the persons against whom the applications are made, sued the present applicants in the Motihari Munsifi for money lent. The applicants, who are residents of Saran, represented to the District Magistrate that the suits were false, and after an enquiry obtained the assistance of the Criminal Investigation Department with a view to instituting proceedings. Lakshmi Narain Kuer then filed petitions in the Mansif's Court, saying that his witnesses were kept back by the Police and asking leave to withdraw the suits. These applications were opposed, but were allowed. Nine witnesses have been examined on behalf of the applicants. The opposite party has not examined any witnesses.

The province of this Court in such matters as the present one is strictly limited to finding whether or not the statutory bar to a prosecution of this nature should be removed, and in particular to finding whether there is any reason for believing that the applications are made not in the interests of justice but for the purpose of furthering a private grudge. This being so, it is not for me to consider in any detail the precise effect of the evidence which has been adduced. To do so will be the province of the trial Court. It is, therefore, sufficient to state quite briefly the salient facts disclosed in the evidence. These are as follows: Lakshmi Narain Kuer instituted both his suits on the same day, namely, 11th January 1916. The claim against Baldeo Koeri was for Rs. 249 principal, and the claim against Raj Kumar Ojha was for Rs. 399 principal. The interest in both cases was the same, namely, Rs. 1-8. According to the plaints both these transactions took place on the same day and at the same place, namely, Motihari. The object in each case of the loan was the same, namely, the purchase of bullock carts or of bullocks for carts. The wording of the plaints is ambiguous on this point, but is the same in each case. Baldeo Koeri and Raj Kumar Ojha say in their evidence that they had never been at Motihari before the suits, that they did not know Lakshmi Narain Kuer before the suits, that they never borrowed any money from Lakshmi Narain, and that they had no occasion to do so, since neither of them has ever possessed a bullock cart, Motihari is 30 miles from the village at which Baldeo and Raj Kumar reside. Baldeo's property consists of 2 bighas 14 cottas of land, and Raj Kumar's 6 bighas of land. The loans in each case are stated to have been oral loans, and there is no document of any kind. Baldeo and Raj Kumar both say that they have had frequent quarrels, of which they give details, with Gauri Shanker and Mangal Prasad, who are the Maliks in their village to whom alone they pay rents. Lakshmi Narain Kuer is admittedly the Karpardaz of these Maliks. The evidence of Baldeo and Raj Kumar on this point is supported by that of another raiyyat of the village, and by that of a Sub-Inspector who enquired into a criminal case brought by Mangal Prasad and Gauri Shanker, in which Raj Kumar and Baldeo are said to have given evidence against them. He also gives evidence as to an information being given on behalf of Gauri Shanker and Mangal Prasad, in which it was stated that Raj Kumar and Baldeo were likely to cause a breach of the peace. There is also the evidence of a survey Amin, who speaks to disputes having taken place in the survey proceedings between Mangal Prasad and Gauri Shanker on the one part and Baldeo and Raj Kumar on the other. Three co-proprietors of Mangal Prasad and Gauri Shanker give evidence tending to show that Lakshmi Narain Kuer has been throughout in embarrassed circumstances, and a Civil Court peon says that on one occasion he arrested him under a warrant. Another circumstance which deserves notice is that though in withdrawing his suits Lakshmi Narain Kuer took leave to institute fresh suits, no such suits have been instituted and the period of limitation has now expired.

The circumstances and the evidence which has been produced leave no doubt in my mind that a prima facie case has been made out against each of the accused persons, and that the statutory bar to their prosecution should be removed. The delay which took place in the institution of the proceedings has been found by the High Court to have been satisfactorily explained, and the fact that the prosecution has been conducted by Government is sufficient guarantee that it is in the public interest, and not in furtherance of a private grudge. I accordingly grant sanction under section 195, sub-section (6), to prosecute Lakshmi Narain Kuer under section 209, Indian Penal Code, for fraudulently and dishonestly making false claims against Baldeo Koeri and Raj Kumar Ojha before the Munsif of Motihari in Suits Nos. 34 and 35 of 1916, and to prosecute Gauri Shanker Prasad Sahu and Mangal Prasad under section 209/109, Indian Penal Code, for abetting Lakshmi Narain Kuer in so doing."

Mr. Hasan Imam, for the Petitioners.—Even if it be assumed that the suits instituted by Lakshmi Narain Kuer were false, there is no evidence whatsoever on the record to prove that these petitioners abetted the institution of these suits. Under the circumstances the order of sanction was a mere harassment of these respectable men and should be set aside. There is no probability of conviction.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad (Government Advocate), for the Crown.—The true function of the Court in such matters is laid down in the well-known case of An Attorney, In re, (Mr. Hume v. Poresh Chunder Ghose) (1).

[Reads out various passages from the judgments of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., Chaudhuri, J., and Stephen, J.]

The District Judge was satisfied on a consideration of the circumstantial evidence available in this case that a prima facie case had been made out against the petitioners and was, therefore, justified, as required by law, to remove the bar to their prosecution. A sanctioning Court is different from a trial Court.

Counsel then detailed the circumstantial evidence on which he relied. He further submitted that it was almost impossible to get direct evidence of abetment in cases of this sort and after the most elaborate inquiry by the C. I. D. no direct evidence was available to the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners Gauri Shankar Prasad Sahu and Mangal Prasad Sahu are brothers and residents of Motihari town in the district of Champaran. They are proprietors of a village called Dighwa in the district of Saran.

It appears from the evidence that there has been bitter feeling between the Maliks and some of their tenants at Dighwa. Two of these tenants are Baldeo Koeri and Raj Kumar Ojha. There is evidence to show that the bitterness had reached a very acute form in the closing months of 1915. Indeed some of the incidents of personal enmity between the Maliks and these men are traced to about the middle of December of 1915. On the 11th January 1916, their Gomasta and Karpardaz one Lakshmi Narain Koer instituted two money suits against Baldeo and Raj Kumar before the Munsif of Motihari, on the allegation that the defendants in those two suits had borrowed Rs. 249 and Rs. 399 from him for the purchase of bullocks at Motihari on one and the same date.

Baldeo and Raj Kumar invoked the help of the District Magistrate of Saran to protect them from harassment by the institution of these false suits. After an enquiry the District Magistrate extended his protection to them. Thereafter Lakshmi Narain Koer applied to the Munsif at Motihari for the withdrawal of the suits with permission to institute fresh suits if he so desired. This application was granted. It was followed by an application by Baldeo and Raj Kumar for sanction to prosecute Lakshmi Narain Koer and the Maliks Gauri Shankar and Mangal Prasad under section 209 read with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code. The Munsif refused the sanction.

The District Judge of Muzaffarpore was then moved against the order passed by the Munsif, but he also refused the prayer. Baldeo and Raj Kumar then moved the High Court and a Divisional Bench of this Court directed the learned District Judge of Muzaffarpore to inquire into the matter and then pass such order as he considered fit. The learned District Judge having made the enquiry sanctioned the prosecution of Gauri Shankar and Mangal Prasad under section 209 read with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code for abetting Lakshmi Narain in instituting the false suits before the Munsif of Motihari.

The petitioners Gauri Shankar and Mangal Prasad have moved this Court for revocation of the sanction granted by the learned Judge. It is contended on their behalf that even if it be conceded that Lakshmi Narain instituted those false suits, there is no evidence to support the order of sanction passed against the petitioners Gauri Shanker and Mangal Prasad.

The learned Government Advocate has frankly admitted that there is no direct evidence of abetment against these two men, but he has supported the order of the learned Judge on the ground that the circumstantial evidence in the case is sufficient to justify that order, which is only a sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He has urged that the sanction is nothing more than the removal of the bar to prosecute these men and that the circumstances of the case are such that the removal of this bar is justifiable. The circumstantial evidence relied upon by the learned Government Advocate is as follows:—

Firstly, the bitterness of feeling between the Maliks and the tenants reaching a climax within only about three weeks prior to the institution of the two suits by their Gomasta and Karpardaz Lakshmi Narain Koer. Secondly, the impecuniosity of Lakshmi Narain Koer and the clear evidence of his incapacity to have advanced any money to the defendants in those two suits. Thirdly, no personal enmity between Lakshmi Narain Koer and the defendants in those two suits existing, and fourthly, the probability that Lakshmi Narain, an old servant of the Maliks, was instigated to institute the false suits in the interest of his masters.

I think the learned District Judge was justified in a case like this to remove the statutory bar to the prosecution of the petitioners before me. They may succeed in proving their innocence at their trial, but the circumstantial evidence against them is sufficient to justify the order of sanction passed by the learned Judge.

In the circumstances the petitions of Gauri Shankar and Mangal Prasad in the two Criminal Revisions Nos. 11 and 12 of 1918, are rejected.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 11—Statement by wounded person made shortly after attack—Different statement made subsequently—Former statement, whether admissible—Jury—Misdirection—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1893), s. 297.

A woman mortally wounded and believed to be at the point of death made a statement to a Magistrate naming a particular person as her assailant; she subsequently recovered and was produced as a witness for the prosecution at the trial of the person previously named by her and stated that she did not recognise the person who had attacked her; the statement previously made was admitted in evidence and placed before the jury:

Held, that under section 11 of the Evidence Act the admission of the contents of the statement was not justified, the mere fact that the witness had made such a statement had no bearing on the main fact in issue, and that the placing of that statement before the Jury was a misdirection of a very serious nature. [p. 888, col. 1.]

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This case comes before us under the provisions of section 374, Criminal Procedure Code, as the learned Sessions Judge, accepting the verdict of the majority of the Jury, has sentenced the accused to death under section 302, Indian Penal Code. The accused has also preferred an appeal.

The case for the prosecution briefly stated is that the accused one night committed a violent assault with a knife on his two wives Saratan Bibi and Kafunnessa Bibi, killing the former and severely injuring the latter. The charges framed against him were under section 326, Indian Penal Code, in respect of the injuries caused to both women, and under section 302, Indian Penal Code, in respect of the fatal injuries caused to Saratan.

NATHU THAKUR v. EMPEROR.

The Jury by a majority of three to two found the accused guilty under section 326, Indian Penal Code, and section 302, Indian Penal Code.

There is singularly little evidence against the accused. It is not proved that he was alone with Saratan Bibi on the night of occurrence. In fact the only evidence consists of statements which the unfortunate women are said to have made.

Kafunnessa, as already mentioned, survived her injuries, and she was called as a witness for the prosecution, but in Court she said that she did not recognize her assailant. The prosecution, however, produced evidence to show that, shortly after her arrival at hospital, when it was believed that she was at the point of death, she made a statement to the effect that it was her husband, the accused, who attacked her and her co-wife. This evidence was admitted by the learned Judge and the statement was placed before the Jury. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the Judge was in error in admitting this evidence. When the objection was taken in the Court below, the learned Judge overruled it on the ground that "the fact that Kafunnessa made such a statement to a Magistrate on the day of occurrence is relevant as rendering highly probable a fact in issue, viz., that Abdul Sheikh killed the other woman and assaulted her." He added that section 11 of the Evidence Act was not confined to facts other than statements. It appears to me that the reasoning is unsound, and I think the fallacy lies in confusing the fact that the woman made a statement with the contents of the statement. The mere fact that the woman made a statement has no bearing on the main fact in issue, and section 11 of the Evidence Act does not justify the admission of the contents of the statement. Mr. Orr on behalf of the Crown has conceded that he cannot uphold the Judge's decision that the contents of the statement are admissible. It follows that there was a misdirection to the Jury in this respect, and in the circumstances of the case a misdirection of a very serious nature.

There remains the alleged statement of Saratan Bibi. This was not reduced to writing, and the evidence to show that she made any statement at all consists of the testimony given by the Dafadar and the Choukidar. Their evidence has been discussed before us at some length and I think the criticisms passed upon it are well deserved. They contradict one another on several points and although the woman was lying with her intestines protruding and succumbed after a few minutes, the Dafadar says, she spoke in an ordinary way. I cannot think it would be right to believe these witnesses, and this was the view placed before the Jury by the learned Judge.

The result, therefore, is that there is really no evidence to prove that it was the accused who attacked the women. It may be extremely probable that he is the guilty man, and that those who are in a position to give evidence against him are shielding him, but a conviction cannot be based on such probability.

So far as the charge under section 302, Indian Penal Code, is concerned, I think we should set aside the conviction and sentence, and acquit the accused. In regard to the conviction under section 326, Indian Penal Code, our position is different. There was a misdirection to the Jury in placing before them the so-called dying statement made by Kafunnessa Bibi, and it was of a character to vitiate the trial. We must, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence. Inasmuch as Kafunnessa Bibi's statement must be excluded, and the evidence as to any statement being made by Saratan Bibi rejected as unreliable, there appears to be no evidence to warrant a re-trial. I think the accused must be acquitted on this charge also.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Accused acquitted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 182—Prosecution under s. 182—Magistrate, power of, to cancel summons.

Where upon receipt of a Police report that one J. had given false information to the Police against certain persons a Magistrate ordered the prosecution of J under section 182 of the Penal Code, but subsequently upon receipt of another report in another case that the information given by J. was true, he ordered the summons issued for the attendance of J. to be cancelled:

Held, that the Magistrate had full power to cancel the summons under section 249 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 889, col. 2; p. 790, col. 1.]

Application to set aside proceedings before the Sub Divisional Officer, Sitamarhi, District Darbhanga.

Mr. G. O. Pal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan Jan, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside the proceedings taken against the petitioners under section 147, section 448 and section 354, Indian Penal Code, by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sitamarhi on the 1st of July 1919.

One Jhumak applied to the Police to take proceedings against the petitioners on the ground that the petitioner and his family, suspecting intimacy between the daughter of the petitioner and one Mahabir Mallah, wanted to molest Mahabir: that the petitioner's daughter Gujia had fled to the house of Mahabir and that Mahabir had married her: that on the 1st of July the petitioners had come in a mob and ransacked Mahabir's house and assaulted his sister and mother. That same day, it seems, the Police held an investigation, and after examining witnesses, reported the case to be a false one, and recommended the prosecution of Jhumak. On this report the Sub-Divisional Magistrate ordered that Jhumak should be prosecuted under section 182. Thereupon Mahabir, the cousin of Jhumak, put in a petition to the Magistrate impugning the Police investigation and alleging that his life was in danger from the petitioner and his party, and asked that proceedings might be taken under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code against them. The Sub-Divisional Officer thereupon sent the case for enquiry to Mr. Everett, who is the manager of certain estates in the neighbourhood. Mr. Everett reported that the petitioners should be bound down under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, as otherwise Mahabir would be unable to stay in the village. He reported further that he found that the complainant's story was true in every detail, and also that the woman Gujia had been spirited away into Nepal territory, where her husband's people lived. He suggested that the father of Gujia should be made to produce her, as there was strong apprehension of foul play, and besides there were good motives for making away with her. On receiving this report from Mr. Everett, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed an order in the proceedings, which had been taken against Jhumak under section 182, to the following effect on the 29th July: "Mr. Everett reports that the original complaint is true. Cancel the summons under section 182, and put up, on disposal of the section 365 case." The Sub-Divisional Magistrate had, on receipt of the report, taken proceedings against the petitioners under section 365, apparently on the basis of the report that the woman had been kidnapped to Nepal. The petitioners then applied to this Court to have the proceedings under section 365 set aside, and they were set aside by Das, J., on the ground that Mahabir had not been examined after filing his petition of complaint, and that if the Magistrate took cognizance on the report of Mr. Everett, Mr. Everett too had not been examined.

Next, on the 1st November, Mahabir filed a fresh complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, charging the petitioners with offences under sections 147, 448, and 354 of the Indian Penal Code, and on that complaint, the Magistrate ordered summons to issue against the petitioners. It is against that order that the present application has been made.

The learned Vakil for the petitioners argues that, while the proceedings under section 182 are still pending against Jhumak, a fresh complaint on the same grounds cannot be entertained against the petitioners. He further argues that the Magistrate, once having summoned Jhumak under section 182, could not afterwards cancel the summons himself.

In the first place, it seems that under section 249, Criminal Procedure Code, the GANGA SAHAI v. EMPEROR.

Magistrate had full powers to stop the proceedings in the section 182 case without pronouncing any judgment either of acquittal or conviction, and may thereupon release the accused. It is evident that the Magistrate is proceeding under this section, and the case relied upon by the learned Vakil, to the effect that the summons in the section 182 case could not be cancelled and the proceedings stopped by the Magistrate himself, namely Panchu Ghosh v. Khosdel Sarkar (1), does not apply, since section 249 applies to cases only which have been instituted otherwise than on a complaint, while the case cited deals with a case instituted on a complaint. Further, it may be noted that the proceedings under section 182 were taken against Jhumak on his complaint while the present complaint is by Mahabir. The real point in the whole case is, whether the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, when he had received a report from the Police that the case of Jhumak was false, was justified in acting on the report of Mr. Everett which was given just afterwards. Both these reports are so short that it is impossible to judge whether the Magistrate has exercised his discretion wisely. That he had a discretion, there is no doubt; the quashing of the proceedings under section 365 does not affect this case at all. That case was instituted on allegations of an offence which was not covered by the information which Jhumak gave to the Police, or which Mahabir mentioned in his petition. Mahabir in fact only asked for proceedings to be taken under section 107, though he recounted the occurrences, which formed the basis of Jhumak's information to the Police. If Mahabir wished to impugn the Police enquiry, as he was at full liberty to do, his petition should have been taken as a complaint, and he should have been examined upon it. This was not done, with the result that the proceedings, that were taken, were set aside, and now the only course left to Mahabir was to file a fresh complaint. This he has done, as soon apparently as it was possible to do it after the case under section 365 was set aside. Whether the Magistrate should have believed the Police report or Mr. Everett's report, remains to be found out during the course of the trial. It is impossible here to express any opinion on the merits of the case at all.

This is a case in which the truth must be found out, and I, therefore, see no reason to interfere. The case should, I think, be tried by a Magistrate other than the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sitamarhi, and will be tried by such other Magistrate as the District Magistrate may direct.

The application is rejected.

An answer given by a witness to the Court, after he has left the witness-box, cannot form the subject of proceedings under section 500, Penal Code, as such proceedings are prohibited under section 132 of the Evidence Act. [p. 892, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated the 31st October 1919.

Messrs. O. Ross Alston and Ram Nama Prasad, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case in which a man has been charged under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code and ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 250 for an answer given by him on oath in a Civil case. The fine was reduced by the Sessions Judge to Rs. 100. The applicant, being still dissatisfied, has applied to this Court to set aside the order on the ground that no offence had been committed.

GANGA SAHAI v. EMPEROR.

The circumstances of the case are possibly exceptional, but it is perfectly certain that at an adjourned hearing of the case the witness, who was a mortgagee and was suing his mortgagor for his money, was asked by the Munsif who was trying the case why he wanted back his money. His answer was that he did not wish to keep the land of the present complainant, the then defendant, under mortgage, because he was a badmash and a thief. Of course that meant that he thought him so.

It appears that this answer was given to the Munsif at an adjourned hearing after the witness had left the witness-box. So far as good faith is concerned, that is the strongest possible point in favour of the applicant because it shows that he had gone through the witness box and given his evidence without making any gratuitous or malicious attack upon the mortgagor, and it was only in answer to a question by the Munsif at the eleventh hour and to satisfy a perfectly natural but not strictly relevant curiosity of the Munsif that the answer came to be given in Court. A suggestion is made that when a witness has once been in the box and has left it, and at any late stage of the proceeding is asked some supplementary question by the Judge, he is no longer a witness, or the proceeding is something different from the ordinary legal proceeding. I regard this contention as hardly worth discussion. When a witness is once sworn and afterwards re-called, he must behave himself in the same way as if he were giving evidence in the box for the first time at the commencement of the trial. No change has taken place by adjournment, or by his leaving the box, which relieves him from any obligation to speak the truth and to treat the Court with respect. Were it not for one or two authorities which have been mentioned to me, I should hold without the slightest hesitation that a witness was compelled to answer such a question asked him by the Judge within the meaning of section 132 of the Indian Evidence Act. The two cases which raise any difficulty are the case of Queen-Empress v. Moss (1) and the recent decision of my brother Piggott in Kallu v.

Sital (2). I have not examined the circumstances under which the Chief Justice construed the section in the former case (which after all was not a decision ex cathedra upon this point at all, but was merely a ruling obiter on the admissibility of certain evidence) and I do not presume to express any opinion as to the correctness of that decision. I do think, however, that in the course of the decision and in the head-note a too narrow interpretation has been put upon the word 'compelled' in section 132. The view there suggested is that 'compelled' can only mean 'compelled' by an order of the Court expressly made upon a claim put forward by the witness to be excused from answering. The difficulty about accepting that view is that, for example, in the case of an experienced lawyer acquainted with the section and with the procedure of Courts of law, it may well be that knowing that his reason was one which was bound to be rejected he would think it waste of time and not unlikely to irritate the Court to take an objection which was bound to fail and that he might answer a question which, if he had refused to answer, the Court would have told him he must answer. In my view an experienced lawyer, answering a question which, if it were not for the section, he might refuse to answer, is just as much compelled to answer it as if he had taken an objection and was overruled. He knows that he must answer it and he knows that he has no good ground for refusing. He is, therefore, in my view compelled. I think a witness who is not trained in the procedure of the law and probably knows nothing of these fine points but who comes into the box, whether or not with a desire to tell the truth, at any rate with a very natural determination to pay respect to the Court and to answer the Judge's questions, is compelled by the situation in which he finds himself and the force of circumstances, and indeed by the Code of ordinary decency, and the respect which he owes to the Court. I now turn to the decision in Kallu v. Sital (2), in which my brother Piggott applied the principle laid down in the case of Queen-Empress v. Moss (1) to the facts of the case which he was deciding, but in the following passage he, in my opinion, recognised that cases must arise in which the Courts would be compelled to hold that the witness was placed under compulsion by his appearance in the box. I accept this view, which cannot be better expressed than in the passage which I adopt from my brother Piggott's judgment: "Obviously no form of words can be prescribed in which this claim is to be made; and I conceive that cases may arise in which the Courts will be compelled to hold that the claim has been made by implication, or that the witness was placed under practical compulsion to answer certain questions by the mere fact of his appearance in the witness-box". I hold that this witness was compelled to answer the question which the Munsif put to him and that any proceedings for defamation in respect to the answer are prohibited by section 132. The whole proceeding for defamation against him is misconceived and must be quashed. I admit the revision and quash all the orders made against him. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Conviction quashed.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Atulya Oharan Bose and Manmatha Nath Mukerjee, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.,—This case comes before us on a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, made by the Sessions Judge of Burdwan.

The accused Bibhudananda Chakravarty was placed on his trial on three charges under section 477A, Indian Penal Code, the Jury was unanimous in finding him not guilty, and the learned Judge has referred the case to this Court, as he thinks it necessary to do so in the ends of justice.

The allegations against the accused are as follows :—He was a clerk in the Certificate Department at Burdwan, and he was in charge of the section which dealt with requisitions under the Public Demands Recovery Act made on behalf of estates under the management of the Court of Wards. In April 1917, several requisitions were filed by a Pleader on behalf of the Manager of the Karotiya Estate. Each requisition bore a Court-fee stamp, and was accompanied by a stamped Vakalatnamas. In the latter part of 1918, irregularities were suspected in the office, and an enquiry was made; in the course of that enquiry it was discovered that the requisitions and Vakalatnamas just mentioned had been tampered with. The Court-fees upon them appeared to have been taken from other papers and attached to the requisitions and the Vakalatnamas in lieu of the Court-fee stamps which they originally bore. In answer to a question put by the learned Judge the Jury replied that they believed that such tampering had taken place. In fact it is obvious that the Court fee stamps on Exhibits 6, 7, 8, two Vakalatnamas and one requisition, are not the stamps that were attached to those papers when they were filed originally. This is not denied on behalf of the defence.

The question of fact in the lower Court was whether it was the accused who was guilty of substituting used Court-fee stamps for the new stamps. But before dealing with that question, we have to deal with the contention raised on behalf of the accused that the facts alleged do not constitute an offence under section 477A of the Penal Code. Some doubt upon the question was evidently present to the minds of those who framed the charges, for the offence was described as 'altering papers', the papers being the Vakalatnamas in two counts and the requisition in the third.

For the accused it is pointed out that the marginal note describes the offence as falsification of accounts, and that the explanation to the section imports the same idea, namely, that the section refers to something in the way of book-keeping or written accounts. Here it may be noted that no registers are said to have been tampered with so as to bring the entries in the registers into conformity with the papers as they were after the substitution of used stamps for new stamps. A second line of argument is based on a reference to the English Acts. The section 477A of the Penal Code is almost identical with section 1 of the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 and 39 Vict. c. 24). All the cases cited by Russel on Crimes in the Chapter dealing with that Act are cases in which fraud was committed by falsifying some form of account, and thereby keeping some part of the money received by the servant from reaching the hands of the master. These cases show the use made of the section in England, and not one of them bears any likeness to the allegations in the present case. Further, in 1891 there was passed the Stamp Duties Management Act (54 and 55 Vict. c. 38) and in section 13 nine punishable acts are described, of which the fourth, and still more the sixth, are very similar to the acts alleged against the accused. The argument is that when the Act of 1875 has not apparently been used as suitable for dealing with acts like those now under investigation, and a second Statute does make provision for punishing such acts, the inference necessarily is that the section which the Indian Legislature has copied from the English Statute should be interpreted in the same way as the section in the English Statute, more particularly as the Statute of 1891 had been already enacted when section 477A was added to the Penal Code by the Amending Act.

I think there is considerable force in the argument. But apart from this line of reasoning, it seems clear to me that on a plain reading of section 477A the acts alleged against the accused cannot be brought within its scope without straining the words of the section.

I think we ought to hold that even assuming the allegations to be proved, the accused cannot be held guilty under section 477A. It may be that there is some other section in the Penal Code or in some other enactment which would cover the facts of the case, but on that we express no opinion.

Taking the above view I think we should reject the reference and order that the accused be acquitted of the three charges preferred against him under section 477A of the Penal Code.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Accused acquitted.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant was convicted for aiding and abetting an offence under section 355, Indian Penal Code, and he was originally sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, which on appeal was reduced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. One Jakka Khan laid in wait for Hafiz Abdul Jalil, a Municipal Commissioner at Pilibhit, after the meeting of the Municipal Board at the Town Hall in that town. He threw a shoe into the carriage. He was prosecuted for an offence under section 355 of the Code and was sentenced. Throughout the course of that trial no mention whatsoever was made of Bijji Khan, the present applicant, or of his complicity in the matter. Subsequently while Jakka Khan was serving his sentence, he was placed before a Magistrate by a Police Officer and made a certain statement implicating the present applicant. Proceedings were, therefore, taken against the latter. Jakka Khan was examined as a witness and totally denied Bijji Khan's implication in the matter. His statement as recorded by the Magistrate, ostensibly under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, (which, however, did not apply) was taken into evidence by the Magistrate at the trial of Bijji Khan. It is not clear under what provision of the law this was done. No provision of the law has been shown to me under which it could possibly have been done. There was further evidence taken which one might accept that shortly before the occurrence Bijji Khan was seen talking to Jakka Khan. There is also evidence which showed that after the occurrence Bijji Khan told the brother of Abdul Jalil what had happened. That is to say, he told him that his brother had been beaten with a shoe and had fallen to the ground. It is denied that there was any actual beating or that Abdul Jalil actually fell on the ground. On this evidence Bijji Khan has been convicted. I notice on the record that there is a good deal recorded which was quite inadmissible in evidence. No particularly strong motive has even been suggested in the course of the trial for Bijji Khan to have incited Jakka Khan to commit the offence. Therefore, though there may be some suspicion arising from the statement made by the applicant to the brother of Abdul Jalil and by the fact that shortly before the occurrence he was seen speaking to Jakka Khan, these circumstances are not in themselves sufficiently strong for a Court to hold that beyond all reasonable doubt Jakka Khan acted at the instigation of the applicant. The evidence, in my opinion, is insufficient to support the conviction. I, therefore, allow the application, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the applicant to be released.

Application allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195 (b), 476—Sanction to prosecute—Period of sanction, expiry of—Order directing prosecution under s. 476, legality of—Interpretation of Statutes.

Sanction to prosecute was granted by a Munsif. On appeal to the District Judge it transpired that more than six months had elapsed since the date of the sanction; the District Judge accordingly revoked the sanction, but directed the prosecution of the accused under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. On revision to the High Court:

Held, that the order of the District Judge was illegal and must be set aside [p. 893, col. 2.]

Section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be read consistently with section 195 of the Code. [p. 896, col. 1.]

It is a well-known rule of construction that each part of a Statute must expound every other part. [p. 893, col. 1.]

Civil Criminal Revisions against the order of the District Judge, Chapra, dated the 10th September 1919, directing the prosecution of the petitioners under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, in an appeal by the petitioners against the order of the Munsif, Chapra, dated the 20th January,

LALJI TEWARI v. EMPEROR.

1919, sanctioning the prosecution of the petitioners for various offences under the Indian Penal Code.

FACTS.—In his order the District Judge observed as follows:—"It was suggested on behalf of the respondent (Public Prosecutor) that I should exercise my discretion in altering the sanction granted by the lower Court into an order for the prosecution of the appellant under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code.

As a general rule I adopt this procedure in all appeals against orders granting sanction, my object being to avoid as far as possible the danger of the sanction granted being used for the purpose of blackmail and not for legitimate prosecution.

In the present case at first it did not seem to be necessary to take this course, for there was obviously no danger of blackmail as the Public Prosecutor had obtained sanction. However, it was subsequently pointed out to me that six months had already expired since the date on which the sanction was granted (viz., 20th January 1919) and hence the sanction has elapsed and cannot be renewed without the orders of the High Court under section 195 (6), Criminal Procedure Code.

It is true that the respondent is not to blame for this delay. It is due to the fact that the appeals against the sanction were first filed in the High Court and it was subsequently decided that the appeals lay to my Court. While these appeals were pending without final decision, it would obviously not have been of much use to have acted on the sanction. Nevertheless the fact remains that the sanction has lapsed.

Under these circumstances in order to avoid the necessity of a further reference to the High Court, I have come to the conclusion that it is desirable in lieu of granting sanction to pass orders under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and to direct the prosecution of the appellants for abetment of the offences under sections 209, 210, Indian Penal Code."

Messrs. A. T. Sen, J. N. Sen Gupta and Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—These two applications are directed against an order passed by the learned District Judge of Chapra directing, under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the prosecution of the petitioners under sections 209 and 210 read with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code.

The facts may be shortly stated as follows:—On the 2nd October 1915, one Ramphal brought a suit in Saran on a hand-note alleged to have been executed by one Ratan Singh. That suit was decreed ex parte on the 6th of December 1915. The decree was subsequently transferred to Patna for execution. On the 8th of May 1917, Ratan Singh filed a suit against one Ramnandan Prasad and Ramphal to set aside the decree obtained by Ramphal against him on the ground of fraud. His allegations were that the suit was really a suit of Ramnandan who had instigated Ramphal to file the suit against him. He said that the summons had never been served on him, and that he never executed the hand-note upon which the decree had been obtained. The Court dismissed the suit as against Ramnandan but decreed it as against Ramphal. In other words, the Court set aside the decree obtained by Ramphal against Ratan Singh.

On the 8th of June 1918, the Public Prosecutor applied for sanction under section 195 to prosecute Ramnandan, Ramphal and the petitioners under various sections of the Indian Penal Code. It appears that Ramphal died during the pendency of the sanction proceedings. On the 20th January 1919, the Court refused to grant any sanction against Ramnandan but granted sanction as against the petitioners. Then various proceedings took place with which we are not concerned in these applications. Ultimately there was an appeal to the District Judge of Chapra. He held that sanction was not in force inasmuch as six months had elapsed from the date on which it was given. He, however, took proceedings against the petitioners under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code and has directed their prosecution.

In my opinion it is impossible to escape from the clear provisions of paragraph 6 of section 195. That paragraph runs as follows: "Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate; and no sanction shall remain in force for more than six months from the date on which it was given: provided that the High Court may, for good cause shown, extend the time." This paragraph, in my opinion, makes it obligatory on the Court either to revoke the sanction or to refer the matter to the High Court, if six months have in fact elapsed from the date on which sanction was given.

But it was argued by the learned Assistant Government Advocate that the Court has independent power under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and is entitled to exercise that power under section 467. If the argument advanced by the learned Assistant Government Advocate be a good argument, then the clear intention of the Legislature is in every case liable to be defeated by the simple device of drawing up proceedings under section 476. In my opinion, section 476 must be read consistently with section 195. That is a well-known rule of construction. Each part of a Statute must expound every other part. It is not without reason that the Legislature has said definitely and positively that no sanction shall remain in force for more than six months from the date on which it was given, and it is not without reason again that the Legislature has constituted the High Court the sole judge to determine whether time should in any case be extended.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate has argued that the High Court in this case would certainly have extended the time. That may be so, or that may not be so. But, at any rate, it was for the High Court to determine that question and not for the learned District Judge of Chapra. The District Judge has in effect usurped the function of the High Court and has disobeyed the spirit, though not the letter, of paragraph (6) of section 195.

Apart from this, this is hardly a case for the prosecution of the petitioners under sections 209 and 210 read with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code. So far as Lalji Tewari is concerned, there is clearly no sort of case against him. All that is found against him is that he was the scribe of the promissory note which is now found not to have been executed by Ratan Singh. I am at a loss to understand how on this evidence it can be said that he abetted an offence either under section 209 or 210, Indian Penal Code. The scribe may have acted upon instructions, and it is difficult to see how he should have known that a crime was contemplated by Ramphal Rai. All the facts found may be correct and yet the scribe may not have committed any crime at all. So far as Dipak Singh is concerned, his case stands on a slightly different footing. He is alleged to have signed the hand-note on behalf of Ratan Singh. But here again it is a case of oath against oath, and, in my opinion, it would materially prejudice his defence to allow a prosecution nearly four years after the offence is alleged to have been committed. I would, therefore, set aside the order complained against.

Order set aside.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Mortgage—Interest, enhanced rate of, on default—Penalty—Compensation, whether can be awarded.

Where a mortgage-deed provides that on default of payment of interest the rate of interest payable on the loan would be enhanced, the enhanced rate is in the nature of a penalty and cannot be awarded. But in such a case some interest must be allowed as compensation.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 17th March 1919, varying that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Jullundur, dated the 23rd December 1918, decreeing the claim.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this second appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to any part of the sum claimed by him by way of interest at the enhanced rate stated in the deed, the defendant not having paid the stipulated interest by the due date. The interest fixed upon the principal of Rs. 1,000 was at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem, i. e., Rs. 60 annually. The agreement was that if interest was not paid annually, then it should be charged at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem from the date of the deed, in other words, at double of the original rate. The first Court allowed interest at the enhanced rate but the lower Appellate Court, holding that the condition for enhanced interest was of the nature of a penalty, said that the plaintiff was not entitled to the full amount claimed and disallowed the whole of it.

It is not now urged that the stipulation for enhanced interest was not in the nature of a penalty, but it is urged that something at least should have been allowed to the plaintiff-appellant by way of compensation under section 74 of the Contract Act. The lower Appellate Court was correct in its view that the full amount claimed need not be allowed, but it did not consider whether any part of it should be allowed by way of compensation. Decisions reported as Babu Hari Singh v.

DURGA DAS v. DEVI PROSANNA ROY.

Frema Shah (1), Khunni Lal v. Kalimuddin (2) and Vadlamannati Srinivasadikshitulu v. Damera Rangayya (3) support the proposition that reasonable damages for the default can be allowed. In the first and last of these rulings the enhanced rate, which was allowed, exceeded the original rate by about 33 per cent. In my opinion some compensation for the default should be allowed and it would be fair to calculate this at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem, on the interest which was not paid by the due dates. This comes to a little over Rs. 100. The lower Appellate Court has passed a decree for Rs. 1,197.8 and I think the ends of justice will be met by increasing this to Rs. 1,300 and I do so accordingly, accepting the appeal to this extent. Plaintiff will get his costs in the trial Court in proportion to this sum. But taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration I direct that the parties should bear their own costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The facts which have given rise to this suit are as follows:—One Durga Das Sirkar, deceased, left a Will, and his surviving widow, Gunamani Dasi, the present appellant, as executrix named in the Will, took out Probate. Durga Das had married twice: his first wife bore him two daughters, one of whom was named Annapurna Dasi; and his second wife bore him six more daughters, and eventually bore a son, but before the son was born a boy named Rajendra was taken in adoption by the testator. It is agreed that the adoption was made after the death of the first wife, and after the second marriage.

The fourteenth clause of the Will made provision for the eight daughters in these terms: "each of the above daughters shall get Rs. 5 per mensem, i.e., 60 Rs. per annum out of the estate left by me;" and the direction continued "ukta kanyaganer madhye kaharo mrityu haile, ukta mrita kanyar warishgan ukta mashik panch taka paibe."

Annapurna's husband died and she died later leaving no issue. The plaintiffs are her husband's younger brothers; they brought a suit for the annuity bequeathed by the Will, and that suit was compromised on April 17th, 1913, the suit being dismissed. They have now brought the present suit to recover the annuity in respect of a later period and they have been successful in the Courts below.

For Gunamani two contentions are put forward. The first is based on the terms of the Will and the provision of section 111 of the Succession Act. It is argued that as Annapurna survived the testator, the legacy to her heirs did not take effect, and reference is made to the first illustration given under section 111. The force of this argument, it appears to me, depends upon the meaning of the participial clause, "ukta kanyaganer madhye kaharo mrityu haile." If it must mean "should the possible contingency happen, namely, the death of one of my daughters during my lifetime," then I think the argument would be sound; but the words may equally mean, "when the certain event happens, namely, the death of one of my daughters at a future date." And this seems the meaning which the father of a married daughter must have had in his mind, for his natural hope would be that she should be the mother of children, and he would wish to make a gift to his possible grand-children whether they lost their mother before or after his death. Adopting the view of the meaning of the words used by the testator, I hold that the first contention fails. A further reason for overruling it is that it was not put forward in either of the Courts below.

The second argument is that the adopted son is the heir and not the deceased husband's brothers. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal thought that this question was settled by the decision of this Court reported as Debi Prasanna Rai v Harendra Nath Ghosh (1). That decision was in a case between Annapurna's sister's sons and her husband's brothers. The nephews applied for Probate of a Will said to have been executed by Annapurna, and named as her other near relations, her husband's brothers, her step-mother's son, and her step-mother's adopted son. The Judge held that the husband's brothers had no locus standi to object to the grant of Probate during the lifetime of the step-brothers and as the latter did not press their objection, he granted Probate of the Will. The husband's brothers then appealed to this Court, and it was held that the step-brother was not entitled to preference over the younger brother of the husband, with the result that the lower Court was directed to call upon the nephews to prove the Will in solemn form in presence of the husbands' brothers. That decision obviously did not determine the present question, for the question now is whether Durga Das Sirkar's adopted son is to be regarded as Annapurna's whole brother or only as her step-brother. It may be that it was assumed on all hands in that case that the adopted son could not stand in a nearer degree than the natural son of the second wife to the daughter by the first wife, but the subject was not discussed; and so far as we can ascertain, the question has never formed the subject of any judicial decision or even received the consideration of a commentator.

The facts on which we have to reach a conclusion are scanty: we only know that Annapurna was the daughter of Durga Das by his first wife, and that Rajendra was adopted by Durga Das after his marriage with Ganamani, the second wife. Possibly further information would show that a special relationship was created between the boy and Ganamani, but I doubt whether such information would be of much value. I think the answer to the problem is to be found in the reflection that Rajendra can only be regarded as Annapurna's full brother by a fiction upon a fiction. It is only by a fiction that he is the son of Durga Das: another fiction is required to hold that he became by adoption also the full brother of a daughter born to Durga Das by a wife who had died before the adoption. This answer may be stated in another form as follows: if the adoption had been made during the lifetime of Annapurna's mother, then her mother might have become the boy's adoptive mother, and the relation of sister and brother might have been created, but when Annapurna's mother was dead, it was physically impossible that there should be born to her father a son, who could be looked upon as her full brother.

Another argument which seems to have considerable force is that there is no apparent reason why the son born to Durga Das by Ganamani should stand in a different relation to the children of the first marriage from the relation occupied by the son adopted in Ganamani's lifetime.

These reasons may be rather unconvincing but for the appellant no cogent reasons are advanced.

I think the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree with my learned brother in dismissing this appeal. The first argument regarding the applicability of section 111 of the Succession Act is based on a forced interpretation of the Will opposed to the natural meaning of the words used, and I feel no hesitation in rejecting it.

As regards the second point it is conceded by the learned Vakil for the appellant that if Rajendra was adopted by Durga Das in conjunction with Ganamani, he would stand in the position of a half brother to Annapurna and would be postponed to the plaintiffs, who are younger brothers of Annapurna's husband.

This is also the view of law taken by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Annapurni Nachiar v. Forbes (2), in which they approved of the decision in Kasheeshuree Debia v. Greesh Chandra Lohiri (3) and held that where of two wives one only joined in the adoption, the adopted son became the full son of the wife so joining and the step son of the other. Again in the case of Gungulhar Bogla v. Hira Lal Bogla (4) Mr. Justice Mookerjee explained away Manu's text that if among all the wives of one husband one has a son "Manu declares them all to be the mothers of male children through that son" and held that the son adopted by the husband conjointly with one of his wives is only the step-son of other wives. The claim of a husband's brother to succeed in preference to a woman's step-brother in respect of her separate property is recognised in text books of Hindu Law and has also received judicial confirmation. The law on this point is fully discussed in the decision of Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ., in Debi Prasanna Rai v. Harendra Nath Ghosh (1).

HARI CHAND v. MATHRA DAS.

It has, however, been argued that if Rajendra was adopted by Durga Das only, he became by the fact of such adoption the son of all his wives, dead or alive, and in this way Rajendra became the full brother of Annapurna. It is not necessary in this case to consider the effect of an adoption by a husband alone without the concurrence of any of his wives. I feel no doubt that in this case the adoption was both by Durga Das and Ganamani. At the time of the adoption Annapurna's mother was dead but Ganamani was alive and it is only natural to suppose that she did take part in the adoption. This inference is strengthened by the fact that in the Court below the case proceeded on that assumption, that Ganamani in paragraph 5 of her written statement claimed Rajendra to be her adopted son and that no specific issue was raised on the question whether the adoption was by Durga Das and Ganamani or only by Durga Das. It is too late now for the appellant to raise an issue of fact for the first time in second appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Custom - Khanadamad—Hindu jats of village Bottar, Tahsil Kharian, District Gujrat.

There is no custom of khanadamadi among Hindu jats of village Bottar, Tahsil Kharian, Gujrat district. [p. 90, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 29th October 1915.

Mr. Dhanrai Shah, for the Appellants.

Messrs. B. N. Kapur and Abdul Ghani, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the District Judge of Jhelum upon a certificate granted by him regarding the validity of a custom, viz., whether the appointment of a khanadamad is valid in the tribe of Jat Hindus of village Bottar, Tahsil Kharian, District Gujrat, to which the parties belong. The learned District Judge has decided in favour of the custom and has, therefore, held that the plaintiffs-collaterals have no right to contest a gift effected by Mathra Das in favour of his daughter, Musammatt Mewa Devi, whose husband, he has found, he had appointed as his khanadamad. The learned District Judge in his judgment admits that not a single precedent, either in actual practice or in a Court of law, for or against the custom is forthcoming. He finds, however, that (1) Muhammadan Jats of Gujrat have the custom of khanadamadi; (2) Hindu Jats follow in general the same customs as Muhammadan Jats; (3) Hindu Jats in other districts have the khanadamadi custom; and (4). Hindus of other Tahsils in the Gujrat District have the custom. From these facts he draws the conclusion that the appointment of a khanadamad by Mathra Das was in accordance with the custom of his tribe and was quite valid.

Now, in regard to the fourth point found by the District Judge, viz., that Hindus of other Tahsils have the custom, there is very little evidence indeed. The first instance relied upon is printed at page 12 of the paper book. In that case it was held that agnates do not exclude daughters from inheritance unless there is some special custom to that effect. The decision was given in reliance upon what the Judges of the Chief Court had laid down. The decision is dated the 4th of February 1873 and, therefore, long before the Full Bench case reported as Gujar v. Sham Das (1). In that case it was found that the daughter in question had resided with her parents and that her husband had been made khanadamad of her father and received into his house. But preference does not appear to have been given to her on that account, but merely because the onus was considered to be upon the collaterals to prove that they excluded the daughter. The second decision relied upon is that printed at pages 14 and 15 of the paper-book. There also the decision was in favour of the daughter, because it was held that the plaintiffs had not referred to any instance which would prove the invalidity of a gift to a daughter as against the custom entered in the riwai-i-am. The date of the decision is 19th of February 1280, i.e., before the Full Bench ruling Gujar v. Sham Das (1). In our opinion, these instances are quite insufficient to prove that there is any general custom of khanadamadi among Hindus in any Tahsil of the Gujarat District. The onus was certainly upon the defendants to prove that the custom of khanadamadi existed in the tribe of Hindu Jats and in our opinion they have not discharged it. Mr. Badri Nath Kapur referred us to certain extracts of the riwai-i-am of 1868 printed at pages 8 to 11 of the paper book, wherein it is stated that in the absence of male issue a land owner can adopt a daughter and transfer his property to her. This is said to apply to Khatrias, Brahmins, Bahrupias, Aroras and Bhatias. Hindu Jats are not included in these tribes and in any case the entry does not establish any custom of khanadamadi.

(1) 107 P. R. 1887 (F. B.).

JANKI KUNWAR v. MITRA SEN SINGH.

We accordingly accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Courts, give the plaintiffs a declaration to the effect that the gift of the land and houses in suit made by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2 on the 9th of January 1914 shall not affect the plaintiffs' reversionary rights after the death of defendant No. 1, and we further direct that the defendants shall pay the plaintiffs' appellants' costs in all the Courts.

Appeal accepted.

Landland and tenant—Under-proprietary rights for life without power of transfer, whether can be granted—Lapse of under-proprietary title on grantee's death, condition as to—Reversion, superior proprietor becoming entitled to—Failure to enforce right of reversion, effect of—Trespasser allowed to assert under-proprietary title, effect of—Rent, acceptance of, from trespasser, effect of—Estoppel.

A tenure which is not transferable cannot be treated as under-proprietary, but a superior proprietor can confer under-proprietary title on a person for life without any power of transfer. For, it is possible to conceive that a person might split up his full rights into proprietary and under-proprietary, and then grant the under-proprietary rights to another person for a limited period, reserving the reversion for another person or for himself [p. 901, col. 1.]

An under-proprietary title for life without power of alienation was granted to a person by the superior proprietor with regard to certain property, with the condition that the under-proprietary title would lapse on the death of the grantee and the superior proprietor would then be entitled to reversion of that title. When the grantee died, the superior proprietor did not elect to claim or enforce the reversion but allowed a trespasser to assert that title and continue to pay the under-proprietary rent, so that on the faith of the trespasser being treated and recognised as an under-proprietor by the superior proprietor, the trespasser did certain acts which were to the detriment of herself and to the advantage of the superior proprietor.

Held, that the superior proprietor was estopped from denying the right of the trespasser to hold the property in question as an under-proprietor for life without any power of alienation. [p. 901, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to the entire villages Tarshampur, Mendhai Salimpur and a 10 biswas share in the village Naurahni Rampur situated in the Fyzabad district. The said village and another village named Maipur formed part of the Birhar estate belonging to Dhup Narain Singh.

JANKI KUNWAR V. MITRA SEN SINGH.

Musammatt Rajau Kunwar, the wife of Dhup Narain Singh, claimed to be in possession of these four villages by virtue of a grant said to have been made by her husband. On the 23rd April 1877, while the first regular settlement was in progress, she claimed a declaration of her under-proprietary title in regard to the said villages, stating that her husband had given the same to her for her maintenance and that she was in proprietary possession thereof by the collection of rents and the payment of revenue (Exhibits A 1, A-4 and A-7). These claims were brought against Dhup Narain Singh. On the 22nd May 1878 Musammatt Rajau Kunwar and Dhup Narain Singh entered into a compromise, the effect of which was that the former was allowed to remain in possession by virtue of the pukhtadari right of the entire villages Turshampur, Mendhai Salimpur and Maipur and a 10-biswas share of the village Naurahni Rampur for her life without any power of transfer subject to the payment of a profit of 15 per cent. on the Government revenue, and the latter was allowed to retain possession of the sir lands situated therein without any power of transfer on payment of the usual rent to the former (Exhibits 1, 3 and 5). The compromise further declared that after the death of Musammatt Rajau Kunwar the "wife of her son, Kalka Bakhsh Singh," shall be entitled to possession on similar conditions. In accordance with these compromises, decrees were passed in favour of Musammatt Rajau Kunwar, declaring that she was entitled to pukhtadari rights with regard to the said properties without any power of alienation subject to the payment of the Government revenue and a profit of 15 per cent. thereon to the Taluqdar (Exhibits 2, 4, 6 and 10).

In pursuance of those decrees Musammatt Rajau Kunwar was recorded in the under-proprietary register as a pukhtadar (Exhibits A 8, A 20 and A-22), and on her death her daughter-in-law, Musammatt Sundar Kunwar, the wife of Kalka Bakhsh Singh, was recorded as holding the said villages in the same capacity (Exhibits A-34, A-36 and A-38). On the 1st September 1888, Dhup Narain Singh mortgaged his right, title and interest in the villages in suit with the predecessors in title of the present plaintiffs (Exhibit 10) and on the same date his wife, Musammatt Rajau Kunwar, joined him in executing another deed of mortgage in respect of the under-proprietary rights held by her in the said property in favour of Musammatt Dilraj Kunwar, the mother of one of the mortgagees previously mentioned. In order to pay up the amount due on the deed first mentioned, and the deed of further charge subsequently executed by Dhup Narain Singh (Exhibit 1), Kalka Bakhsh Singh, the son and successor of Dhup Narain Singh sold his right, title and interest in the villages in suit to the Court of Wards in charge of Meopur Dhaurahra estate on the 23rd October 1902, stating in the sale deed that he was only realizing the under-proprietary rent on account of the same from the pukhtadar (Exhibit 8). The Court of Wards thereby stepped into the shoes of the superior proprietor and became entitled to collect the under-proprietary rent from Musammatt Sundar Kunwar, who had succeeded Musammatt Rajau Kunwar in 1901. Musammatt Sundar Kunwar died in 1905, and such rights as were conferred on her by virtue of the compromises of the 22nd May 1878 lapsed on her death. In 1906, Kalka Bakhsh Singh married Musammatt Janki Kunwar, who assumed possession of the pukhtadari rights enjoyed by Musammatt Sundar Kunwar without any objection having been taken by the Court of Wards in charge of the Meopur Dhaurahra estate. The Court of Wards acknowledged her as a pukhtadar and realized rent from her up to 1914 (Exhibits A-35 to A-106).

Meanwhile Musammatt Janki Kunwar and her husband, Kalka Bakhsh Singh, sold the pukhtadari rights, the former claimed to have possessed, in Maipur to the late Rai Sri Ram Bahadur (Exhibit A-49) to pay up the prior mortgage effected by Musammatt Rajau Kunwar and Dhup Narain Singh on the 1st September 1888, to which reference has already been made. Rai Sri Ram Bahadur redeemed that mortgage by paying Rs. 18,125 to the heirs of Musammatt Dilraj Kunwar (Exhibits A-197 and A-108).

JANKI KUNWAR v. MITRA SEN SINGH.

Musammāt Rajau Kunwar and Dhup Narain Singh had made other mortgages, too, of the pukhtadārī rights in some of the villages in question from time to time (Exhibits A-110, A-113 and A-114), the amount due on which was similarly discharged by Musammāt Janki Kunwar and Kalka Bakhsh Singh. Musammāt Rajau Kunwar and Kalka Bakhsh Singh, too, made certain mortgages of the pukhtadārī rights in some of the villages in question (Exhibits A-115 and A-116), which Musammāt Janki Kunwar and Kalka Bakhsh Singh similarly discharged.

The Court of Wards claims to have since discovered that Musammāt Janki Kunwar had no title whatsoever to the pukhtadārī rights of the said villages and has filed the present suit for her ejection with mesne profits. The Court below decreed the claim for possession. It found that Musammāt Rajau Kunwar was granted an under-proprietary tenure for life without any power of alienation, that Musammāt Sundar Kunwar, the wife of her son, was to succeed her on the same conditions, that is to say, to hold the disputed property for her life without any power of alienation, and that as Musammāt Janki Kunwar was not married till some time after the death of Musammāt Sundar Kunwar, such interest as was conferred by the compromise lapsed on the death of Musammāt Sundar Kunwar.

A tenure, which is not transferable, cannot be treated as under-proprietary; but as the learned Council for the defendant-appellant points out, it is possible to conceive that a person might split up his full rights into proprietary and under-proprietary, and then grant the under-proprietary rights to another person for a limited period, reserving the reversion for another person or for himself. In that view of the matter, the condition restraining alienation can only be treated as a condition emphasizing that the grant was made for only the lifetime of the grantee and that no alienation could be made which would extend the grant beyond that period. If the intention was to give the grantee pukhtadārī or under-proprietary rights for a limited period, an absolute restraint on alienation from the very inception of the grant would be inconsistent with the nature of the interest created. No other construction consistent with the language of the compromise as a whole is, therefore, reasonably possible.

The entries made in the revenue papers in pursuance of the decree and the subsequent conduct of the parties, moreover, show that that was the construction which the parties had themselves placed on the settlement decrees, for Musammāt Rajau Kunwar was entered as a pukhtadar liable to pay to the Taluqdar 15 per cent. in addition to the revenue. The rights of Musammāt Rajau Kunwar, however, came to an end on her death in 1901: those of Musammāt Sundar Kunwar, the wife of Kalka Bakhsh Singh similarly came to an end on her death in 1905. Kalka Bakhsh Singh is not shown to have any other wife then alive. The limited rights created by the compromise, therefore, came to an end on the expiry of the above life-estates and the property, which was the subject of those rights, subsequently reverted to the heir or successor-in-interest of the grantee, then in existence. As Kalka Bakhsh Singh, the son and successor of the grantor, had sold his entire right, title and interest in the property in dispute to the Court of Wards in charge of the Meopur Dhaurahra estate before the death of Musammāt Sundar Kunwar, the vested interest he held in the reversion passed by the sale to the Court of Wards, who became entitled to that reversion on her death.

The Court of Wards did not, however, for some reason or another elect to claim or enforce the reversion and allowed Musammāt Janki Kunwar, whom Kalka Bakhsh Singh married in 1906, to remain in possession as a pukhtadar and to pay rent as such up to 132 Fasli. The name of Musammāt Janki Kunwar was entered in the under-proprietary register as a pukhtadar, and though she had nothing to do with the pukhtadārī rights under the petition of compromise because such rights as were conferred by the compromise on Musammāt Rajau Kunwar and the wife or wives of Kalka Bakhsh Singh in succession had already lapsed on the death of Musammāt Sundar Kunwar, the last survivor, the failure of the Court of Wards to enforce the reversion and the subsequent acknowledgment of Musammāt Janki Kunwar as a pukhtadar and the acceptance of rent from her from time to time are tantamount to a waiver for the time being of the right of reversion and to a recognition of the right of Musammāt Janki

JANKI KUNWAR v. MITRA SEN SINGH.

Kunwar to succeed to the pukhtadari rights under the compromise, as if she had been the wife of Kalka Bakhsh Singh when Musammât Sundar Kunwar died. On the faith of her having been treated and recognised as a pukhtadar, Musammât Janki Kunwar and her husband, Kalka Bakhsh Singh, paid the prior encumbrances on the under-proprietary tenure (limited as it was), which Musammât Rajau Kunwar and Dhup Narain Singh and after the death of the latter Musammât Rajau Kunwar and Kalka Bakhsh Singh had created. In the mortgage deeds the property mortgaged was described as an under-proprietary tenure and the fact that Dhup Narain Singh and after him his son, Kalka Bakhsh Singh, who held the superior proprietary rights had joined the lady in executing the mortgages renders those mortgages enforceable, despite the restriction contained in the compromise and the settlement decrees passed in accordance therewith, as against themselves and their successors-in-interest. In the case of the mortgage effected by Musammât Rajau Kunwar in favour of Thakurain Dilraj Kunwar on the 1st September 1888, the redemption was effected by selling the under proprietary interest or such interest as Musammât Janki Kunwar held or claimed to hold in the village (Exhibit A 49). The Court of Wards accepted the position of the vendee as the purchaser of the under-proprietary interest of Musammât Janki Kunwar in the said village and sold the superior proprietary interest, it held therein, to vendee (Exhibit A50). It is not clear whether the payments of the other encumbrances were made by Musammât Janki Kunwar out of the money belonging to her or by Kalka Bakhsh Singh with his own funds; but the payment made by Musammât Janki Kunwar by the sale of what she described as the under proprietary interest in Maipur was clearly made to the advantage of the person holding the right of reversion, and to the detriment of herself, if she had no interest whatever in that or in the other villages in respect of which she was recorded and treated as a pukhtadar. The plaintiffs-respondents are, therefore, clearly estopped from denying the right of Musammât Janki Kunwar to hold the villages in question as a pukhtadar on the conditions laid down in the petition of compromise, that is, for her life without any power of alienation; and after what the Court of Wards in charge of their estate had done up to almost the time when the present suit was instituted, they cannot be allowed to turn round and treat her as a trespasser. As pointed out in President and Governors of Magdalen Hospital v. Alfred Knotts (1), even where a lease is granted by a person who had no authority to grant the same, the acceptance of rent from the lessee may for the time being create the relationship of a landlord and tenant between the person accepting the rent and the lessee. In Beni Pershad Koeri v. Dudhnath Roy (2), where a village was granted by a Zamindar to his nephew for maintenance for his life and the grantee had during his lifetime executed a permanent lease in favour of another person and the latter had obtained possession, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the acceptance of the rent at the rate stipulated in the lease by the successor of the grantor from the lessee after the death of the original grantor purported to create at all events a tenancy at will, which along with other evidence could be treated as a sufficient recognition of the lessee as a tenant for life. In Nabakumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (3), Chaitan Singh v. Sakhari Monim (4) and Jagraj Kunwar v. Ganga Din (5) acceptance of rent was similarly treated as a recognition that the person paying the rent was not a trespasser. It is immaterial whether the Court of Wards acted negligently or in ignorance of its rights. The treatment accorded led Musammât Janki Kunwar to alter her position to her detriment by paying the prior encumbrances due in regard to the interest she held in her possession; and it is not open to the plaintiffs-respondents to treat her as a trespasser and sue her for possession or mesne profits. The effect of the failure of the Court of Wards to enforce the reversion, when Musammât Sundar Kunwar died, and of the subsequent acceptance of rent from her as a pukhtadar was to invest Musammât Janki Kunwar with Punjab Chief Court Rules and Orders, Vol. III, p. 81, rr. 3, 4—Injunction, suit for—Pleader's fees, scale of—Practice.

Pleader's fees should in all cases be fixed in accordance with the rules framed by the Chief Court.

In a suit for injunction the Pleader's fee should be calculated according to the valuation of the suit, or according to such a sum, not exceeding the valuation, as the Court shall think reasonable.

Review from the order of Mr. Justice Scott-Smith, dated the 11th November 1918.

Mr. Lal Chand Mehra, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Tirath Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff's suit for an injunction having been dismissed, he appealed to the District Judge who dismissed his appeal. He then filed a second appeal to this Court, which was dismissed on the 11th November 1918. On the question of costs allowed by the lower Courts he was advised to file an application for review in the lower Appellate Court. Instead of this he filed an application for amendment of the decree, which was rejected as it was found that the decree was in accordance with the judgment. He has now accordingly applied for a review of this Court's order, dated the 11th November 1918, as to costs only, and I admitted it because it appeared clear that the lower Courts had wrongly calculated the Pleader's fee. The suit was one for an injunction and was valued for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 110. The trial Court, however, allowed Rs. 20 as Pleader's fee and the lower Appellate Court allowed Rs. 16. It is contended on behalf of the applicant that this was illegal and that the Pleader's fee awarded could not legally exceed Rs. 580 calculated at 5 per cent. on the value. The rules made by this Court fixing the fees of Counsel in proceedings in Subordinate Courts will be found in Volume III, Rules and Orders, at page 81 et seq. Rules 3 and 4 read together shew that the fee in a case of this sort should be calculated according to the valuation of the suit, or according to such a sum, not exceeding the valuation, as the Court shall think reasonable. In any case the amount of the fee is to be calculated according to rule 3. Rule 3 shews that in suits for the recovery of specific property, or a share of specific property, whether immovable or moveable, if the amount or value of the property shall not exceed Rs. 5,000, the fee is to be calculated at 5 per cent. on the amount or value thereof. In the present case the value being Rs. 110 the fee could not exceed Rs. 580. There seems to be a general impression in some of the Subordinate Courts that in suits for injunctions and in declaratory suits any fee can be fixed according to the pleasure of the Court. The fee should in all cases be fixed in accordance with the rules framed by this Court and above referred to. Lala Tirath Ram who appears for the respondents admits that the fee allowed by each of the Courts is illegal and does not oppose the present application for review.

I allow the review and in modification of the decree of the lower Courts, reduce the Pleader's fee allowed to Rs. 580 in each Court. Costs of this Court should be borne by the parties.

Review allowed.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for khas possession of the land in suit upon declaration of his ryoti interest therein. He claims to have purchased the land from one Ram Kumar Chakravarty, who had an occupancy right in it. The principal defendants contend that Ram Kumar had a mokarari mourashi kayami right and that he settled the land with their predecessor Bangsi Sil by a lease, dated the 28th Kartick 1302, (Exhibit C) under which they claim an occupancy right. The case, therefore, depends on the question as to what right Ram Kumar had and what right was acquired by Bangsi Sil under Exhibit C. The trial Court was of opinion that Ram Kumar was an occupancy ryot, that his right was heritable but not transferable, that the plaintiff after his purchase had not been recognised by the two-annas co-sharer superior landlord, hence his title to the ryoti was only to the extent of 14 annas share. He also held that Bangsi's ryoti under Ram Kumar was not heritable and, therefore, it did not pass to his heirs, the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, who became trespassers upon his death. These persons, however, had taken a howla tenure in respect of one anna share in the said land and had thus become landlords of the plaintiff also to that extent, and that they as such landlords held adverse possession since the 10th January 1914, which is the date of the death of their father, Bangsi Sil, and inasmuch as the present suit was brought on the 29th March 1916, he found that it was barred under Article 3, Schedule III, Bengal Tenancy Act. He also held that notice of ejectment was necessary upon the defendants, but such notice had not been served and the suit was, therefore, not maintainable.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not barred by limitation. He was not satisfied from the evidence that the defendants had dispossessed the plaintiff in their capacity as fractional landlords; that they were in possession as the heirs of Bangsi Sil under the lease which had been granted to him by Ram Kumar, and inasmuch as the suit had been instituted within 12 years of the death of Bangsi Sil, the plaintiff was within time. He next found that the plaintiff had got a ryoti title to 15-annas and not 14-annas only as found by the learned Munsif, that the plaintiff's purchase of Ram Kumar's interest was not recognised by the one-anna landlords, namely, the defendants Nos. 1 and NADIRAM CHANDRA SIL v. SRINATH CHAKRAVARTY.

2, who had purchased a howla right to one anna as aforesaid, and he held that the plaintiff had in the circumstances got a ryoti title to 15-annas share of the land in suit. He agreed with the Munsif that Ram Kumar was not a ryot of a fixed rent but that he was only a ryot with a right of occupancy in respect of the disputed land, that Bangsi Sil's status was that of an under ryot under Ram Kumar and that the defendants did not inherit his under ryoti right and that the defendants were trespassers.

A contention was raised that inasmuch as the jama of this ryoti had remained unchanged for more than 20 years the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act should apply. He held that this was not a suit under that Act inasmuch as the defendants were not under ryots under the plaintiff and that, therefore, the defendants were not entitled to any notice under section 49, clause (b). The defendants contended that even if the Court held that Ram Kumar had not a mourashi right, yet they had acquired a right of occupancy having been on the land for much longer than the statutory period. They contended that Ram Kumar having granted the lease under which Bangsi built his homestead, made excavations and gardens and as after Bangsi's death the defendants had remained upon the land, Ram Kumar could not be heard to say that Bangsi was a trespasser, although Ram Kumar could not legally have granted such a lease as he had and that as Ram Kumar would have been estopped from raising any question as regards the validity of the lease, the plaintiff having purchased from Ram Kumar's son was equally estopped. The learned Subordinate Judge held that Ram Kumar had no right to grant such a lease which was for a term exceeding 9 years, that in the lease Ram Kumar had stated that he was a kayami ryot, which did not necessarily imply that he was a ryot at a fixed rent. He found that it did not appear that Ram Kumar had made any representation that he was a ryot at a fixed rent or that his right was other than that of an occupancy ryot, nor did it appear that Bangsi, believing in any representation of Ram Kumar, was thereby induced to take the lease. He referred to Ohandi Oharan Nath v. Somla Bibi (1) and held that the grantor could question the validity of such a lease. He also found that the defendants had failed to make out that they had any occupancy right. He finally held that the plaintiff was entitled to get imali khas possession in respect of 15-annas share only of the lands in suit; hence this appeal.

It has been strongly contended on behalf of the defendants, first, that they cannot be considered as trespassers and they cannot be ejected without notice to quit, that the lease, Exhibit C, is operative, that Bangsi having been put in possession and built a house and garden and excavated a tank, the plaintiff is estopped from questioning the defendants' title under the lease, that even if section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act be not applicable, the general presumption of fixity of rent has not been considered by the Judge, that even if it be held that Bangsi had only an under-ryoti right, such right is heritable and, therefore, the defendants are not trespassers and that the suit was barred under Article 3, Schedule III, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Having regard to the learned Subordinate Judge's finding that the defendants had not dispossessed the plaintiff in their capacity as fractional landlords and also having regard to the fact that the plaintiff was not recognised by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 as landlords, the suit was not barred by limitation. Both the Courts have found that Ram Kumar had only an occupancy right, that he had no mokarari mourashi right and, therefore, he could not have granted a lease for a term exceeding nine years. Such a lease is clearly invalid and could not have been registered. See Ohandi Oharan Nath v. Somla Bibi (1). All the cases up to that date were reviewed by one of the learned Judges who held as the result of his review "that the document creating the lease cannot be given in evidence if the lease is for more than 9 years and whether the document has been registered or not, the lease is void." He also held that the authorities led to the conclusion that the validity of such a lease can be questioned by the grantor or by a person claiming from him. The express provision of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot be overlooked. Upon the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge the elements essential to attract its operation are also wanting in this case. Ram Kumar describes himself in the lease as a kayami ryot, which does not necessarily imply that he was a ryot at a fixed rent. The Subordinate Judge also held upon the evidence that it did not appear that Ram Kumar had made any representation that he was a ryot at a fixed rent or that his status was other than that of an occupancy ryot or that Bangsi, believing in any representation of Ram Kumar, was induced to take the lease. That being so, we are unable to accept the contention that the plaintiff is estopped from questioning the lease. It has also been found as a fact that Ram Kumar was not a ryot at a fixed rent. Section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act clearly does not apply in this case, as the tenancy dates from the lease. It is clear upon the findings that Bangsi was an under-ryot. It is contended that an under-ryoti right is heritable. The point was distinctly raised before the Full Bench in Arip Mandal v. Ram Ratan Mandal (2), in which it was held that irrespective of custom or local usage the heir of an under-ryot under an annual holding was entitled on the death of the under-ryot to remain in possession of the land until the end of the then agricultural year for the purpose, if the land has been sub-let, of realising the rent which might accrue during the year, or if not sub-let, for the purpose of tending and gathering in the crops. The learned Judges who referred the case were apparently of opinion that apart from any rights under the Tenancy Act the interest of an under-ryot in his tenancy could not be held to be terminated on his death but it must pass to his heirs and legal representatives. This view was not accepted by the Full Bench. In Mohunt Lukhan Narain Das v. Jainath Panjau (3) it was held by the majority of the Full Bench (Brett and Mitra, JJ., dissenting) that under the Bengal Tenancy Act the right of a non occupancy ryot is not heritable. A later Full Bench held in Midnapore Zenindari Co. v. Hrishikesh Ghosh (4) that the holding of a non-occupancy ryot is (apart from possible exceptions) heritable. Having regard to the Full Bench case of Arip Mandal v. Ram Ratan Mandal (2) we cannot hold that the heir of an under-ryot has a heritable right to continue as a ryot. His right extends to tending and reaping the crops standing on the land, as therein laid down. Chapter VII of the Bengal Tenancy Act deals with under-ryots. Section 48 limits the rent recoverable from under-ryots. Section 49 provides that an under-ryot shall not be liable to be ejected by his landlord, except (a) on the expiration of the term of a written lease, or (b) when holding otherwise than under a written lease, at the end of the agricultural year next following the year in which a notice to quit is served upon him by his landlord. This suit was brought more than two years after Ram Kumar's death and we do not think that we can interfere with the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

HARNAMAN v. DEWAN.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff, who is the widow of Soudha, a Jat of the Ludhiana District, sues for possession of the land left by her husband's father, Ishar. The defendants, who are Ishar's brother's grandsons, plead that they are entitled to the property as Ishar's heirs as well as on the strength of a Will made by him in their favour. The execution of the Will has been proved and is not disputed. The first Court dismissed the suit, finding that the plaintiff had failed to prove a custom by which she could succeed to the property of her father-in-law and that she could not, therefore, contest the Will. On appeal the District Judge has held that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed to her father in law and to contest the validity of the Will, which he holds to be a form of alienation not recognised by custom. He has, therefore, given the plaintiff a decree. The defendants have appealed to this Court. They have obtained a certificate from the District Judge.

It is unnecessary for us to determine whether the plaintiff would have a right of succession to her father-in-law, as we are of opinion that, even if it be assumed that she is an heir, she has failed to show that she has a right to challenge the validity of the Will, and we cannot agree with the view of the lower Appellate Court that the existence of that right would follow from the fact of her being an heir.

In Partapi v. Hazara Singh (1) it was held that among Jat Sikhs of the Jullundur District the onus of proving that a daughter had a right to contest an alienation by her mother of land whereof the last male holder was her father lay on the daughter and that she had failed to discharge it.

The learned District Judge has himself referred to Nur ul-nissa v. Gauhar-ul-nissa (2), in which it was held that, whilst by custom the nearer male agnates of a proprietor had the power of controlling his dealings with the property which they would inherit, there was no presumption in favour of control by a female.

The passage quoted by the lower Appellate Court from Premi v. Khushal Singh (3) relates only to the question of succession.

The plaintiff is bound to prove, not merely that she is heir to her father-in-law, but that she has a right to contest the alienation effected by him and the burden lies the more heavily on her as the defendants are the alienor's agnates. Here we may observe that both the Courts below have made a mistake in thinking that the defendants are the sons of Ishar's brother's daughter, whereas they are in fact the sons of Ishar's brother's son.

Lihori v. Radho (4), on which the learned District Judge relies and which was considered in Partapi v. Hazara Singh (1), related to Ghirths of the Kangra District, and was a case of an alienation by a female. It is only such alienations which female heirs have in certain cases been held to be competent to contest. It has in fact been held in Maqsood ul-nisa v. Kaniz Zohra (5) that a female can in no case challenge an alienation by male proprietor.

The learned District Judge has referred to Gordon Walker's Settlement Report of 1882, in which it is stated that Wills are unknown in the Ludhiana District. The practice of making Wills may have grown up since that report was written, but whether or not the Will made by Ishar was valid, the plaintiff cannot succeed in her suit without proving that she is competent to dispute the Will.

It is pointed out that that in the trial Court the plaintiff applied for a local enquiry and it is urged on her behalf that the case should be remanded to enable her to produce evidence of her right to contest the Will. The enquiry which the plaintiff asked for was probably an enquiry in regard to her right of succession, and we do not think it probable that if the case were remanded, evidence would be forthcoming to prove that a female is competent to impeach an alienation by a male proprietor.

We may note that the appellant Dhuran (3) 1 Ind. Cas. 605; 30 P. R. 1909; 28 P. W. R. 1909; 42 P. L. R. 1909.

LACHMI PRASAD V. PARBATI.

Singh has expressed his willingness to provide maintenance for the plaintiff.

We hold that the plaintiff has no power to contest the Will and that, therefore, the suit must fail. We accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the first Court, dismissing the suit. Plaintiff will pay the defendants' costs throughout.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Widow—Power given to two widows jointly to adopt—Junior widow, death of—Senior widow, whether competent to adopt.

A Hindu by his Will bequeathed his estate to his two widows and empowered them jointly to adopt a boy. The junior widow died, and after her death, the senior widow adopted a son:

Held, that the adoption was not valid, as the power to adopt was a joint permissive power and the surviving widow alone was incompetent to exercise the power. [p. 910, col. 1].

First appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 30th January 1917.

The Hon'ble Dr. T. B. Sapru and Mr. B. R. Dave, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor, the Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru and Mr. Nihal Ohand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—By Will, dated the 21st of July 1907, Din Dayal directed that after his death his two wives Musammât Sarupi and Musammât Ram Dei "will by all means be like myself the owners of, and have authority over, the properties of which I am up to this time in possession without the participation of any one else. They will have all powers of transfer, gift, etc., like myself. They may, if necessary, adopt a boy of good family according to their necessity." The testator died on the 19th of August 1907. Both wives survived him. Musammât Ram Dei had a daughter Musammât Parbati, who was the plaintiff in the original action. Musammât Ram Dei died in or about the year 1911 and on January 3rd, 1916, Musammât Sarupi executed a deed whereby she purported to adopt the appellant. The question in this appeal is whether on the true construction of the Will it was competent for the senior widow to adopt to her late husband. If she were competent, then the appellant is, as he claims to be, heir to the estate of Musammât Ram Dei. We are of opinion that the power of adoption given by the Will was a joint permissive one. It created no obligation to adopt; but it did require, first, a joint agreement to adopt; next, a selection of an heir by both of the wives, and finally a formal legal adoption. Our attention has been called to the case of Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Parthasarathy Appa Row (1). That was a case very like the present one, with this exception that the testator by his Will specifically gave a one-half share to each of his two wives. We, however, are of opinion that that difference does not create any real distinction and that we ought to follow the propositions which the Privy Council laid down as regards the exercise of joint powers. We refer specially to page 225,* where their Lordships lay down in general terms the intelligible principle that where a power is given to A and B jointly, that power can be exercised only in the way directed by the donor, namely, by A and B together doing the necessary acts. If it should happen that one of the joint donees dies, the survivor is not competent to perform the act which by the very directions of the testator requires the concurrence of both. In this case the power to take in adoption ceased at the moment of the junior widow's death in 1911. As regards the disposition of the testator's property, we are of opinion that the Will gave the two ladies the whole of Din

It follows, therefore, that in our view the appellant is a complete stranger as far as regards any rights to any share in the property of the late Musammam Ram Dei, and, therefore, agreeing as we do with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, we dismiss the appeal with costs and fees on the higher scale.

rights, claim to establish, cognisance of.*

A claim to establish a right of occupancy by adverse possession falls within the purview of section 77 (3) (d) of the Punjab Tenancy Act and no enquiry can be made into this question by the Civil Courts. [p. 912, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 28th April 1915.

Mr. Devi Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Brij Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—The owners of village Ohhappa moved the Revenue Courts to partition the village common land. Jafar, plaintiff, objected that certain lands (now in suit) belonged to him and were not liable to partition. The Revenue Court then stayed partition proceedings and directed Jafar to establish his title. He accordingly filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge which he afterwards withdrew and took proceedings in the Revenue Courts. The case then came before Sardar Hotu Singh, who proceeded to act as Assistant Collector, 1st Grade, and District Judge, under section 117 of Act VII of 1887. His order was upset on appeal by the Divisional Judge, and it was directed that the suit should proceed before the Civil Courts. The present suit then came before Mr. Garbett, I. C. S., Subordinate Judge, 1st class, and in the plaint Jafar sought to obtain a declaration to the effect that the land

(a) belonged to him as proprietor,

(b) formed part of his occupancy land, and

(c) that in any event his possession was adverse and, therefore, the land was not liable to partition.

The defendants, proprietors of village Chhappa, contested these pleas, claiming that Jafar was not proprietor of the land but was a tenant-at-will, his possession having commenced only some 8 years previously.

A preliminary objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in connection with the claim regarding occupancy rights, and on the 5th February 1914 the Court passed an order practically allowing the objection and directing that the enquiry by the Court would be restricted to the points "whether the land in question is a part of plaintiff's maliki and hereditary tenancy."

The issues framed also dealt solely with these points, the question regarding the rights of occupancy tenancy being omitted. The learned Subordinate Judge, in his order dated the 8th January 1915, held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he was the proprietor of the land in suit, that the land in suit was not land over which the plaintiff, had positive occupancy rights and that the plaintiff had, however, asserted occupancy rights adversely against the owners for more than 12 years over 39 kanals 11 marlas out of the land in suit. A decree was, therefore, granted to the plaintiff, declaring that he had been in possession of 39 kanals 11 marlas of land for more than 12 years claiming occupancy rights and that the defendants (owners) were now debarred from challenging those rights. Against this decision two of the defendants Bishen Singh and Kharak Singh preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge who, however, dismissed the appeal on the 28th April 1915, recording a very brief and unsatisfactory judgment. Bishen Singh and Kharak Singh have, therefore, preferred this second appeal to this Court, and on their behalf we have heard Lala Devi Das, Pleader, while Mr. Brij Lal has addressed us on behalf of Jafar.

The first ground of appeal challenges the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to deal with the question of the acquisition of occupancy rights. It was urged before us that on the findings arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge the suit should have been dismissed, inasmuch as by the order of the 5th February 1914, it had been held that no enquiry was to be made into the question of the acquisition of occupancy rights. The learned District Judge has clearly failed to realise this circumstance. Probably the order of the 5th February 1914 was not brought to his notice. He commences his judgment by saying that the plaintiff sued for a declaration that he is proprietor and if not, then occupancy tenant of certain shamilat, while as a matter of fact there was no question before the Court as to the claim to the occupancy tenancy. This is to our minds quite clear, not only from the order of the 5th February 1914, but from the fact that no issue on this point was settled. Under section 77 (3) (d) suits by a tenant to establish a claim to a right of occupancy are to be heard and determined by Revenue Courts. The plaintiff's claim to be owner was undoubtedly cognisable by the Civil Courts. Similarly his claim that the land in suit really formed part of his hereditary holding was within the cognisance of the Civil Courts. His claim to establish a right of occupancy, in our opinion, falls within the purview of section 77 (3) (d) of the Tenancy Act and no enquiry can be made into this question by the Civil Courts.

Under these circumstances we are constrained to accept this appeal and to dismiss the plaintiff's suit so far as it related to the question of ownership and the land being part of his hereditary tenure. The claim to a right of occupancy was one not within the cognisance of the Civil Courts and the plaintiff is, therefore, at liberty to bring a suit to establish this claim in the proper Courts, if so advised. In the circumstances we leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Appeal accepted.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 51 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 40 of 1917.

FACTS.—Disputes between plaintiff and defendant were referred to the arbitration of seven persons and an award was made, signed only by five of them, the other two declining to sign for interested reasons. The plaintiff brought his suit on the award and on defendant raising issues as to the legal validity of the award, he applied to amend his plaint so as to include the original cause of action also. This was refused.

The lower Appellate Court held that the award was unenforceable.

M. O. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The amendment applied for was reasonable and ought to have been allowed. Compare Sevugan Chetty v. Krishna Aiyangar (1) and Dhani Ram Shaha v. Bhagirath Shaha (2).

GELA RAM v. GANGA RAM.

The award itself is valid and enforceable. The non joining of two of the arbitrators cannot vitiate the award. If the dispute is referred for the arbitration of an uneven number of individuals, the intention of the parties ought to be presumed to be that they would abide by the decision of the majority. See Mahomedali Adamji v. Secretary of State (3), per Beaman, J.

Further it is found that the refusal to sign was because of the partiality of the two arbitrators in favour of the defendant.

Mr. S. Duraiswami Aiyar, for the Respondent, was not called.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal two points are argued for the appellant: (1) that he should be allowed to amend his plaint which, as it stands, asks for an enforcement of an award of arbitrators, so as to allow him to bring a suit for dissolution of the partnership which subsisted between plaintiff and defendant, (2) that the award is valid, even though it is only signed by five out of seven arbitrators appointed by the Muechilika (Exhibit 1). As to the first point, we are unable to say that such an amendment would not alter the character of the suit and there is also this consideration, namely, that plaintiff had ample opportunity to bring this suit for dissolution in the past. He presented a petition to amend his plaint to enable himself to do this to the District Munsif on the 18th June 1917. The issue as to the validity of the award was raised as long before this as 21st July 1916. The petition was rejected on 25th August 1917, and judgment was given in the suit to enforce the award on 1st November 1917. The suit for an account of the partnership dealings would not have been barred till 2th November 1917. At the hearing on 1st November 1917 plaintiff did not examine himself or any witnesses and asked for more time, which was refused. It is thus apparent that plaintiff had plenty of opportunity of bringing another suit on an account and did not avail himself of it. We are, therefore, not disposed to allow him to do so on second appeal.

As to the second point, an award must be signed by all the arbitrators (see (3) 41 Ind. Cas. 264; 42 B. 633 at pp. 674, 675; 19 Bom. L. R. 618.

Russell on Arbitration and Award, 9th Edition,* Part II, Chapter IV, section 3, Note 4 at page 168). Mr. Ananthakrishna Iyer has drawn our attention to the opinion of Beaman, J., in Mahomedali Adamji v. Secretary of State (3), that parties must be assumed to contract that a majority award shall bind them when an uneven number of arbitrators are appointed. But that was a case of valuers and it is not clear that it would be the same in the case of arbitrators. The learned Judge himself at page 673† quotes a ruling of Mathew, J., United Kingdom Mutual Steamship Assurance Association v. Houston & Co. (4), that in every case of arbitration unless all the arbitrators concurred in the award, there would be no arbitration award at all. In this state of things we cannot follow the opinion of Beaman, J., in the present case and it is clear that the award in suit is unenforceable in law.

The appeal, therefore, fails on both these points and must be dismissed with costs.

First appeal from the decree of the Munsif, 1st Class, Jhang, dated the 29th July 1915, decreeing plaintiffs' claim.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from the order of a Revenue Officer who tried the suit under the procedure laid down in section 117 (2) (b) of the Punjab Land Revenue Act XVII of 1887, which lays down that the procedure of the Revenue Officer shall be that applicable to the trial of an original suit by a Civil Court, and that he shall record a judgment and decree containing the particulars required by the Code of Civil Procedure to be specified therein.

Pandit Sheo Narain on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents raises a preliminary objection that no decree has been drawn up by the lower Court in the form and manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure. On the record there is a decree sheet signed by the Court in which the amount of costs incurred by each party is specified, but otherwise the form has been left blank and does not contain the particulars specified in Order XX, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Moti Sagar on behalf of the appellants urges that the concluding paragraph of the judgment is a decree and appealable as such. It is, however, quite clear from the Code of Civil Procedure that in the case of a civil suit it is contemplated that the judgment and decree should be quite distinct. Section 33 of the Code lays down that the Court, after a case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment and on such judgment the decree shall follow. Order XX, rules 1 to 5, Civil Procedure Code, deal with judgments in original civil suits and rule 6 gives the particulars which are to be entered in the decree. Specified forms are prescribed for decrees in different classes of suits by Appendix D of the First Schedule to the Code. It is, therefore, quite clear that in the case of an original civil suit the decree must be quite distinct from the judgment. Order ALI, rule 1, of the Code lays down that a memorandum of appeal shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and (unless the Appellate Court dispenses therewith) of the judgment on which it is founded. Again section 117 (2) (b) of the Punjab Land Revenue Act lays down that the Revenue Officer shall record a judgment and decree containing the particulars required by the Code of Civil Procedure to be specified therein. In Dulhin Golab Koer v. Radha Dulari Koer (1) Pigot, J., said: "I must add that had the point been raised, I should have felt a difficulty in holding that a paragraph in the judgment not drawn up in the form of a decree, and not embodied in a separate form, is, within the terms of the Code of Civil Procedure, a decree at all."

We agree with this view and have no hesitation in holding that there is no decree in the present case within the meaning of the portions of the Civil Procedure Code above referred to, and, therefore, no appeal lies.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal, but, as we consider that the plaintiffs were to blame for not moving the Court to draw up a formal decree, we leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court. Pandit Sheo Narain says that he will advise his clients to move the lower Court now to draw up a proper decree.

Appeal dismissed.

The question whether a landlord is entitled to realise anything more than the value of the paddy mentioned in the kabuliyat on default of payment of the paddy by the tenant is one of construction of the kabuliyat in each case. [p. 919, cols. 1 & 2; p. 920, col. 1.]

A kabuliyat fixed the rent of a tenant as a specified sum of money to be paid in cash and a certain quantity of the produce to be delivered by the tenant to the lessor in a particular month according to a certain measure, and provided that in case of default the landlord would be entitled to recover the cash amount and a specific sum as the value of the produce. In a suit by the landlord claiming to recover the market value of the produce:

JUDGMENT.

CHATTERJEA, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent based upon a Kabuliyat providing for payment of cash rent as well as Bhag paddy, and the question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the market value of the Bhag paddy or the value thereof as stated in the Kabuliyat.

The Kabuliyat provides that the tenant would pay four rupees as rent and 31 aris of Bhag paddy, the paddy to be delivered at the house of the lessor in the month of Pous every year according to a certain measure and the cash rent within the course of the year. The Kabuliyat then says: "If I fraudulently do not pay the aforesaid rent and share of paddy, you shall be competent to realize the said rent and Rs. 36 as price of the paddy together with interest and damages by bringing rent suit under the current Act or under any other Act which may come in future, to which I shall raise no objection. To this effect I execute this Kabuliyat for permanently enjoying the land in succession to sons and grandsons." The Court below held that the case comes within the scope of the ruling in Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1), and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the market value of the paddy.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It appears that a previous suit for rent was compromised and reliance is placed on the fact that the Solenama did not mention the value of the paddy. But the Solenama only dealt with the claim for rent of a particular year and, moreover, provided that the defendant "shall pay in accordance with the purport of the Kabuliyat of 2nd Falgun 1240 M. S. to the plaintiff the amount of rent, cesses and share of the paddy." I think that the Solenama did not vary the terms of the contract contained in the Kabuliyat as contended for on behalf of the appellant.

The question, therefore, is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover (besides rupees four described as rent) Rs. 36 only as the value of the paddy, or the market value of the paddy. As to the intention of the parties there cannot be any doubt that a portion of the rent was to be paid in kind, viz., 31 aris of paddy; and this is made clear by the provision that the paddy was to be delivered according to a certain measure at the house of the plaintiff in the month of Pous every year. But the question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to realize anything more than Rs. 36, the value of the paddy mentioned in the Kabuliyat, on default of payment of the paddy by the tenant. Contracts for payment of rent in kind (Bhag paddy) are very common, and have come up for consideration to this Court in many cases. The decisions, however, are not uniform. The question is no doubt one of construction of the Kabuliyat in each case, but the Kabuliyats in some of the cases are similar in nature though differently worded and as we have been asked on behalf of the appellant to refer the case to the Full Bench, it is necessary to examine the cases on the point.

was held that the lessor was entitled to the market value of the paddy, while in Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1), Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal (7), Dwarika Noth v. Dwijendra Nath (8) and Asutosh Mukhopadhyaya v. Haran Ohandra Mukerjee (9) it was held that the lessor was entitled to recover only the value of the paddy mentioned in the Kabuliyat and not the market value thereof. In all these cases a certain quantity of paddy was stipulated to be paid, and in each the price of the paddy was mentioned in the Kabuliyat, but in some of the cases it was not expressly stated that on default of payment of the paddy the price mentioned in the Kabuliyat was to be paid. This may be a ground of distinction. The decisions in the cases, however, [except in the case of Sarat Chandra Roy v. Abbas Mandal (6)] did not proceed upon the said distinction. In the case of Sohobut Ali v. Abdool Ali (2), Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Ohandra Ohakrabarti (3) and Sarat Ohandra Roy v. Abbas Mandal (6) there was no express stipulation that the value of the paddy mentioned in the contract was to be paid on default of delivery of the paddy. But the value of the paddy was mentioned, and in construing the document in the first case the learned Judges (Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.) held that Rs. 10 was put down in the Kabuliyat as the value of the paddy "for the sake of convenience or to meet the requirements of the law," and in the second (where the rent agreed to be paid was Rs. 12 14 and "40 maunds of paddy of which the value is Rs. 37 in all a rent of Rs. 49 14") Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., (Doss, J., concurring) held: "The terms of that document clearly pointed to the fact that the rent is to be as to part in money and as to part in kind, and this is emphasized by the express provision relating to the delivery of paddy in the month of Pous every year. I think it is impossible to read the document otherwise than as it has been read by the learned Judicial Commissioner. It is quite true that the paddy has a money-value attributed to it, but that is explicable by the desirability of stating that amount for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty." In the third case, Sarat Ohandra Roy v. Abbas Mandal (6), the agreement was to pay Rs. 6 as the cash rent and $5\frac{1}{2}$ aris of paddy, whose price was Rs. 11 8 0 as paddy rent, in all Rs. 17 8 0. Fletcher and Newbould, JJ., held that "whose price is" meant "the present price of which is" and allowed the value of the paddy at the market rate. The learned Judges observed that there was no universal rule that if no paddy is delivered the tenant has the right to pay the amount mentioned for the paddy, that it must depend upon the words in each case, and that in cases where the tenant had been held entitled to deliver the paddy or pay the price thereof, the tenant had an absolute right under the terms of the leases either to deliver the paddy or to pay to the landlord the sums of money mentioned in the Kabuliyats.

In the cases of Sheik Israf v. Gopal Ohandra Dey (4) and Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (5), however, the contract provided for delivery of the paddy and on default the value mentioned in the Kabuliyat. In the first case the tenant agreed to pay every year 80 cottas of paddy and 10 cottas of Kalai measured by a cotta of 14 seers, and the Kabuliyat stated "if we fail to give the same then we will pay you its price amounting to Rs. 30." The learned Judges, Brett and Richardson, JJ., observed: "The tenants agreed to pay to the landlord produce rent of a certain amount and on their failure to do so, to pay its price and the document only merely for the convenience of the parties or for the purpose of registration goes on to state the value of the produce rent as existing at the time when the document was executed. In our opinion that estimate of the value was not intended to modify in any way the terms of the contract between the parties, which was that the tenants should pay a yearly rent in kind and that on their failure to do so, they should pay its price," and held that the plaintiff was entitled to the market value of the paddy. In the second case, Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (5), the agreement was to deliver 128 aris of paddy measured with a measure to be supplied by the landlord. In the tabular statement was entered 28 aris of paddy, value 34 rupees, but in the body of the lease it was said that if the tenant failed to pay the measure of paddy, then the arrears of rent in paddy or the price thereof with damages and costs shall be realizable by legal process.

GURUDAS SEN V. GOBINDA CHANDRA SINHA.

Stevens and Handley, JJ., held that what was contemplated was payment of the rent by delivery of the paddy itself and the tenant was not at liberty to deliver either paddy or to pay Rs. 32 and that the tenant was to pay the market value of the paddy. The learned Judges observed: "Now it is obvious that if by the term the price thereof is meant the sum of Rs. 32, entered in the tabular statement, the tenant could at any time when paddy was dear evade the stipulation that he was to pay by delivery of paddy to his own gain. This, we think, could never have been intended; whether the entry of the nominal value in the tabular statement was made as representing the market value of the paddy at the time when the lease was granted or whether it was made for some other object can only be a matter of conjecture, but in view of the stringent provisions relating to the delivery of the paddy we are not prepared to hold that the entry was made with a view to leave it to the tenant at his option either to deliver the paddy or to pay what might at a particular time be a very inadequate sum as the value of it."

On the other hand in the cases of Afar v. Suria Kumar Ghose (1), Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal (7), Dwarika Nath v. Dwijendra Nath (8) and Asutosh Mukhopadhyaya v. Haran Chandra Mukerjee (9) a contrary view was taken. In Afar's case (1) the lease provided for payment of 3 aris of paddy on account of 4 bighas of land and certain cash rent for other lands and also provided that if the tenant neglected to pay the fixed rent and paddy, the landlord would be entitled to realize amicably or by action at law Rs. 12 as the price of the paddy and the cash rent. Mookerjee and Sharfuddin, JJ., held that the plaintiffs were entitled, on failure to deliver the paddy, to realize only Rs. 12 as its value, and not the market value. Referring to the suggestion that Rs. 12 was mentioned in the lease as the value of the paddy only for the purpose of ascertainment of the registration fee payable, the learned Judges observed: "The plaintiffs have attempted to prove this allegation by oral evidence. In our opinion it was not competent to them to do so in view of the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act," and pointed out that in the cases of Sohab Ali v. Abulool Ali (2), Akbar Ali v. Dargi Kripa Sen (5) and Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (4) the Court was not invited to consider the effect of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act.

In Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal (7) the agreement was to pay Rs. 8 in cash and 29½ maunds of paddy as rent, the paddy to be delivered in the month of Magh of each year, and there was a provision that if the tenant could not deliver the paddy he was to pay its price at the rate of 1 maund 10 seers per rupee. At that rate the value of the paddy would be Rs. 23-9-2 but Rs. 24 was stated in the schedule. On second appeal it was held that had the parties really agreed that a particular fixed sum was to be paid in lieu of the paddy, there would not have been this difference; that the mention of the price of the paddy did not modify the contract to deliver the paddy, and seemed to have been made only for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty and registration fee, and that it was not left to the tenant at his option either to deliver the paddy or to pay what might at a particular time be a very inadequate sum as the value of it. That decision was reversed on Letters Patent Appeal. The learned Chief Justice (Mookerjee, J., agreeing) held that the rent was payable at the price mentioned in the contract and not at the market rate of paddy at the time the suit was instituted; and observed: "we have no right to make any speculation as to whether certain passages were entered in the contract for some motive which is not apparent on the contract itself; for instance, it has been said that this power to substitute a money payment for the delivery of paddy and the mention of the 24 rupees have been put in for the purpose of registration."

In an earlier case on the point (though recently reported), Dwarika Nath v. Dwijendra Nath (8), the Kabuliyat provided for rent Rs. 59 10 0 and also the payment of 1½ Bish of paddy "which may be valued at Rs. 30 by guess" making a total of Rs. 89 10 0 as the assessed rent. The total rent was described as Abadharita Jama (fixed rent) in the lease, which was a Mourashi Mekarari lease and the learned Judges (Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J.) held that the rent was fixed at Rs. 89-10-0, and that though the parties intended to pay so much rent in money and so much in kind, in order to avoid disputes and the going into any question as to the value of the paddy in the event of its non delivery, the parties agreed that it should be valued at Rs. 30 by estimation and that view was supported by the words "making a total of Rs. 89-10-0 as the assessed rent."

The latest case on the point is that of Asutosh Mukhopadhyaya v. Haran Chandra Mukerjee (9) and the terms of the contract were similar to those in Dwarika Nath v. Dwijendra Nath (8). It stipulated for cash rent at the rate of Rs. 1-6-8 and paddy rent was payable at the rate of Rs. 7-3-16 an ari. It further stated that the market value of the paddy was Rs. 15 and that the total rent was Rs. 16-6-8 obtained by the addition of the rent in cash and the money value of the rent in kind, and that there should be no increase or abatement in the Jama. It was held by the learned Chief Justice (Sanderson, C. J.) and Mookerjee, J. that the rent was fixed at Rs. 16-6-8 if the tenant should fail to deliver the paddy under the terms of the contract. Newbould, J., was of a contrary opinion. He followed Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra Chakrabarti (3) and held that in the absence of any agreement in the Kabuliyat to pay the total rent in cash, the statement fixing the total rent at Rs. 16-6-8 was added to the document for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty and registration fee.

The learned Chief Justice in this case also observed: "I do not see why the Court should speculate and as a result of that speculation arrive at the conclusion that the important provision to which I have referred had been inserted merely for the purpose of determining the registration fee." Both the learned Chief Justice and Mookerjee, J., in construing the document in that case relied upon the words Dharjya Jama (the fixed rent), which was practically similar to the words (Abadharita Jama) which had to be construed by Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., in Dwarika Nath v. Dwijendra Nath (8). Mookerjee, J., observed that the suggestion that the money value of the paddy is stated in contracts of this character for purpose of Registration Law was made in the cases reported as Sohobut Ali v. Abdool Ali (2), Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (4), Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (5) and Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra Chakrabarti (3), while the agreement was construed strictly without travelling beyond the terms expressed there in the cases reported as Bipro Ohoran v. Suchand Roy (10), Afar v. Surja Kumar

(10) 8 Ind. Cas. 945; 12 C. L. J. 595.

Ghose (1) and Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal (7), and that had the decision of Sir Francis Maclean, C. J. and Banerjee, J., in Dwarika Nath v. Dwijendra Nath (8) been reported the current of decisions of this Court might have been uniform.

As stated above in Afar's case (1), the plaintiff attempted to prove by oral evidence that the value of the paddy was mentioned in the lease for the purpose of ascertainment of the registration fee payable, and Mookerjee, J., accordingly held that it was not competent to the plaintiff to do so having regard to the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act while in the cases reported as Sohobut Ali v. Abdool Ali (2), Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (4), Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (5) and Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra Chakrabarti (3) the learned Judges in construing the contract were of opinion (as a matter of construction) that the value of the paddy might have been mentioned for the purpose of ascertaining the registration fee, and in Dwarika Nath v. Dwijendra Nath (8) Banerjee, J., observed: "whatever weight the explanation offered for the plaintiff that the estimated value of the paddy is given in the Kabuliyat for the purpose of determining the amount of stamp duty might have had if the Kabuliyat had not contained the words 'making a total of Rs. 89-10-0 only as the assessed rent,' in the presence of those words that explanation loses all its force."

It appears that in the two cases reported as Dwarika Nath v. Dwijendra Nath (8) and Asutosh Mukhopadhyaya v. Haran Chandra (9) the decision mainly turned upon the particular words used, viz., Dharjya Jama or Abadharita Jama, in connection with the total rent including the value of the paddy rent. It is to be observed, however, that in the case of Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra Chakrabarti (3), also decided by Jenkins, C. J., and Doss, J., the total rent was fixed at Rs. 49-4 C which included Rs. 37 the value of the paddy and the lease was a Mokrari one, and yet the market value of the paddy was allowed. In the case of Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (4) and Akbar Ali v. Durga Kirpa Sen (5) as well as in Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1) and Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal (7) there was express stipulation that in default of payment of the paddy, the value thereof mentioned in the contract was to be paid. But while in the first two cases the learned Judges held that the plaintiff was entitled to the market value of the paddy, in the third and fourth cases the contrary view was taken. There is, therefore, a conflict of judicial opinion on the point. In the second case it may be open to doubt whether the words "the price thereof" referred to the price mentioned in the tabular statement, but in the first case the provision was clear. I have omitted to mention the case of Bipro Oharan v. Suchand Roy (10). But in that case the contract was to pay Rs. 35 as the rent and in lieu thereof a certain quantity of paddy was agreed to be paid. Woodroffe, J., held that the contract was to pay a money rent, and that the question had been decided in a previous suit. The other learned Judge (Richardson, J.) based his decision on the ground that the decision in the previous suit operated as res judicata. That case, therefore, does not help us in deciding the question before us. I have discussed the cases on the point at some length, because these cases frequently come up to this Court, and the learned Pleader for the appellant pressed us to refer the matter to the Full Bench.

Contracts for payment of Bhag paddy as stated above are very common, and it is well known that middle class people, specially of the Bhadrilogue class who cannot cultivate lands themselves, let out their lands for getting paddy for the consumption of their family and in some cases the Bhag paddy is the only means of subsistence of the family. A certain value has to be fixed for the paddy in the Kabuliyat not only for the ascertainment of the registration fee, but also (and specially) for fixing the stamp duty payable, though it is not so expressly stated in the Kabuliyat. It is said that the parties may agree as to the value of the paddy in order to avoid disputes and the going into any question as to the value in the event of its non-delivery. But that would be a question of intention, and if it is clear from the Kabuliyat (for instance where it is provided that the paddy is to be delivered in a particular month or measured with a certain measure) that it is only paddy which the parties intended should be paid, it would be inconsistent with that intention to hold that a fixed sum (which might be a wholly inadequate value of the paddy at the date of the suit) was agreed upon to be paid in the event of non-delivery of the paddy in order to avoid any question as to its value, in cases where the value is merely mentioned without any express stipulation to pay such value in the event of non-delivery of the paddy.

It is a matter of great hardship in such cases, as the value of the paddy at the date of the Kabuliyat might be one rupee a maund, while at the date of the suit, it might be four rupees per maund, and if he is to get the value of the paddy mentioned in the Kabuliyat, he would get only one-fourth of the paddy agreed upon to be paid.

A distinction may perhaps be drawn between such cases and cases where there is an express stipulation to pay the sum mentioned in the Kabuliyat as the value of the paddy in the event of its non-delivery. But as stated above, even where there is such an express stipulation to pay the value mentioned in the Kabuliyat in the event of non-delivery of the paddy, it has been held, upon a construction of the contract in some cases, that the value mentioned was the value of the paddy at the date of the contract or stated for the purposes of registration, while a contrary view has been taken in some other cases. The view taken in the case of Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1) and the recent decisions, viz., that it is not open to the Court to hold that the value of the paddy mentioned in the Kabuliyat is explicable on the ground that it was so done for fixing the stamp duty or registration fee, affects not only the latter class of cases, but the former class also where a money value is merely stated without any agreement to pay such value. It is desirable, therefore, that the question should be settled by a Full Bench.

In the present case, however, there is an express contract that if the tenant did not deliver the paddy, the landlord would be entitled to realize by suit Rs. 36 as the price of the paddy. There was no such express stipulation for realizing by suit the sum mentioned in the Kabuliyat as the value of the paddy in the other cases, except in the case of Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1), and it was held in that case that the landlord was entitled only to the value mentioned in the Kabuliyat. There being thus some distinction between the present case and the cases in which it was held that the landlord was entitled to the market value of the paddy, the case cannot be referred to the Full Bench, and having regard to the decision in the case of Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1) and the recent decisions on the point, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

DUVAL, J.—In my opinion, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

As I read the contract in the Kabuliyat, it says: "I execute this Kabuliyat in respect of the aforesaid land promising to pay Rs. 4 as rent and 91 aris of paddy as share of paddy for permanently enjoying and possessing the said land in succession to sons and grandsons." The document then goes on to say: "If I fraudulently do not pay the aforesaid rent and share of paddy, you shall be competent to realise the said rent and Rs. 36 as price of the paddy together with interest and damages by bringing a rent suit under the current Act or under any other Act which may come in force, to which I shall raise no objection."

The recent rulings on the disputed point as to the realisation of paddy rent go to show that each case should be decided on the terms of the contract.

In the present case, from the wording of the Kabuliyat, it appears to me clear that the only amount which could be realised on default of payment of the share of paddy was Rs. 36 as its value, even though Rs. 36 is by no means the proper value at the present day for 91 aris of paddy.

It is urged that by the Solenamah a different contract had been created; but the Soleramah only related to the amount of rent to be paid for the years for which the former suit was brought and was not a binding document for subsequent years.

In my opinion, therefore, the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

*Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 18, 26—
Reference to Court, scope of—Duty of Judge to consider question of compensation in its entirety.*

When a case is referred under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, the whole case is referred subject to the limitation contained in section 26 of the Act, and not merely any particular objection, and the District Judge is empowered, indeed bound, to consider the question of the compensation awarded in its entirety [p 921, col. 2]

Gangadhar Sastri v. Deputy Collector of Madras, 14 Ind. Cas. 270; 22 M. L. J. 370; 11 M. L. T. 327; (1912) M. W. N. 712, followed.

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 6th March 1916, awarding Rs. 11,618.4.6 as compensation for certain land, situate in Delhi, acquired by the Government.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., and Mr. A. O. Bose, for the Appellants.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act. By Notification No. 775, dated the 21st December 1911, the Government acquired the property in suit for the new Capital of India at Delhi. The Special Land Acquisition Officer, Sardar Khazan Singh, awarded Rs. 8,719.11.3 as the value of the land, Rs. 1,590.10.0 muafi, and Rs. 1,307.15.3, the 15 per cent. addition by way of compensation, or a total of Rs. 11,616.4.6. The appellants, Hafiz Zia-ud-Din and others, who were the owners of the area acquired, raised objections to this award and an order of reference was passed by the Special Land Acquisition Officer in due course. This order of reference is printed at pages 14—16 of the printed paper-book.

The District Judge of Delhi proceeded, on this reference, to record evidence and gave his award on the 6th of March 1916. In his award the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the market value of the property acquired was approximately

ZIA-UD-DIN v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

Rs. 10,000 and as that sum with the 15 per cent. addition amounted to slightly less than that awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer the original award was maintained. In framing his award the Land Acquisition Officer departed from the recognized method of assessment and valued the land according to certain methods of his own, giving a separate valuation for wells, buildings, trees and for the land. The resulting total values, however, were approximately the same.

Rai Sahib Moti Sagar for the appellants expressed himself satisfied with the value placed by the Land Acquisition Officer on the buildings, the trees and the muafi rights but challenged the values placed on the wells and the other items. The land acquired is in area 12.43 acres, situate in Mauza Banskauli towards the south-west of the Sadar Bazar, Delhi. It is just beyond a small hamlet known as Shidipura and is not easy of access. The inhabitants of Shidipura are said to be chiefly butchers, Malis and people of that class. A few hundred yards further on there was also a hamlet known as Bagh Karol, which at the time of the notification was occupied by tanners and leather dyers who carried on their trade there. On this land there was a garden which occupied 1.08 acres. The remaining land was under ordinary cultivation. There were two wells and the appellants were entitled further to irrigate about one-third of this land from a Government well. There also appear to have been a few buildings but admittedly these were not of much value. The appellants also held certain muafi rights in connection with this land.

Before the District Judge Rai Sahib Mul Chand for the Secretary of State took exception to the method of assessment adopted by the Special Land Acquisition Officer and he pressed the same objection before us, contending that the correct method of valuation for purposes of the Land Acquisition Act was to capitalise the value of the land based on its rental or its potential value if profitably laid out, or to ascertain its value by a consideration of the prices paid for similar lands in the immediate neighbourhood. Admittedly the method of capitalising the value on the basis of its rental would be impossible in this case and Rai Sahib Mul Chand pointed out that there was really no potential value of the area in question so far as its utilisation for building purposes was concerned. With this view we are in agreement. Having regard to the situation of the area acquired it seems to us that the land had no potential value as a building site at the time when the notification was issued. We are also of opinion that the method adopted by the Special Land Acquisition Officer was not a sound one. The learned District Judge has based his calculations on the prices paid for lands in the immediate vicinity, which in our opinion is the best and safest course in the present case. Rai Sahib Moti Sagar objected to this method, urging that the District Judge had no power to examine the compensation awarded as a whole but should have confined himself to a consideration of the valuation of the various parts into which it had been split up by the Land Acquisition Officer. In support of his contention he referred us to British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Secretary of State for India (1). This authority was, however, considered in a case reported as Gangadhar Sastri v. Deputy Collector of Madras (2), where it was held that when a case is referred under the Land Acquisition Act, the whole case is referred subject to the limitations contained in section 26, and not merely any particular objection. In this view we concur and hold that the District Judge was empowered, and indeed bound, to consider the question of the compensation awarded in its entirety.

At pages 30 and 31 of the printed paper-book is to be found a list of seven sales of lands in the immediate vicinity of the area acquired. Of these the seventh, a sale by Chhote Lal and others to Raghbar Dial and others, has been correctly eliminated from consideration as, though the most recent transaction, the actual value placed on the land then sold was difficult to ascertain. Items 3 and 4 of this list are two sales effected by the present appellants in 1904 and 1906. The former sale was in favour of certain Punjabi Muhammadans who acquired the land for the purposes of a graveyard. The later sale was in favour of Abdul Hakim and others, and the areas in the two sales were approximately the same and under each sale a well and rights therein were conveyed. Calculation shews that the sale in 1904 realised an average rate of Rs. 764 per acre, while in 1906 the average rate was Rs. 707 per acre. The learned District Judge has considered that the sale of 1904 was for a fancy price and, therefore, based his calculation, more or less roughly, on the sale of 1906. In 1899 a transaction took place under which 3.16 acres of land including a well and certain muafi rights were sold for Rs. 1,800 or an average of Rs. 570 per acre.

After hearing Counsel on the question of the sale to the Panjabi Muhammadans, we think it would be fairer to take the two sales by the appellants of 1904 and 1906 together and to strike a mean as to the value per acre then realized, at the same time regarding the transaction as one of 1905. This mean or average comes to Rs. 735 per acre. Calculating from the transaction in 1899, we thus have a rise, in the course of six years, of Rs. 165 per acre calculated up to 1905. Allowing a similar rate of appreciation in values for the next six years up to 1911, we arrive at the figure of Rs. 900 per acre and this, in our opinion, would represent the correct market value as near as can be ascertained of the land in question, giving a total of Rs. 11,187 or a slight increase in the amount awarded by the learned District Judge. To this must be added the 15 per cent. allowed by the Act which comes to Rs. 1,678 0.9, giving a total of Rs. 12,865 0.9. We accordingly enhance the amount awarded by Rs. 1,256-12-3.

The claim made by the appellants was exceedingly exorbitant and in the circumstances we consider that the parties should bear their own costs throughout and we order accordingly.

Order accordingly.

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 2, 16—Transfer of decree, application for, recognition of—Uncertified payment out of Court, plea of, sustainability of.

An uncertified adjustment cannot be considered by the Court as a ground for refusing to recognise the transfer of a decree and where the transferee-decree-holder applies for execution, the Court has no discretion to refuse execution on the ground that there has been an adjustment though not certified to the Court [p. 923, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Palghat, dated the 19th February 1918, in Execution Petition No. 1647 of 1917 in Small Cause Suit No. 1641 of 1912.

FACTS.—The joint application of the decree holder and his transferee for execution was resisted by a plea of adjustment before transfer, thereby impeaching the transfer as fraudulent. The Court below found fraud and dismissed the application.

Mr. P. V. Parameswara Aiyar, for the Petitioners.—Where the alleged adjustment has not been certified within the time provided by law, it cannot be pleaded in answer to an application for execution by a transferee-decree holder. Venkataswami Naidu v. Rangappa Naidu (1).

[AYLING, J.—Where there is a specific allegation of fraud as against the transfer, is the Court prohibited from going into the question?]

The payment must be got certified within the time allotted. As regards the recognition of the transfer, the Court had no doubt a discretion under section 232 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, but the particular words are omitted in Order XXI, rule 16, of the present Code. It has been so held in Asad Ali Molla v. Haider Ali (2).

KHAZAN SINGH v. SUHEL SINGH.

If the transfer is not recognised, the decree-holder is entitled to execute the decree in spite of the transfer. In the present case, the decree holder has joined the transferee in the application. Ari Ohetty v. Theerthamalai Ohetty (3).

Mr. O. Unnikkanda Menon, for the Respondent.—In Venkataswami Naidu v. Rangappa Naidu (1) no fraud was specified. That it is so specified in the present case does make a difference. See Hansi Gothaji Marwadi v. Bhawji Jogaji Marwadi (4), following Trimback Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (5).

[Mr. Parameswara Aiyar.—Trimback Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (5) has been dissented from in Mathar Dravia Sahaya Ela Nidhi Company Limited v. Subramania Pillai (6), based on Budrudeen v. Gulam Moideen (7)].

[AYLING, J.—Asud Ali Molla v. Haider Ali (2) lays down that the Court has no discretion under Order XXI, rule 16, in the matter of recognising the transfer.]

The dictum is purely obiter. And that decision ignores the essential distinction between an allegation of a specific fraud and one of fraud generally. See Byyyan Ramayya v. Nidamarthi Krishnamurthi (8), (a case under Order XXI, rule 2).

Next, Order XXI, rule 2, does not apply to transferees of decrees. See the definition of 'decree holder' in the present Code, under the old Code the definition included also an assignee. Order XXI, rule 2, applies only to decree-holders. At most section 49, Civil Procedure Code, applies and the assignee takes only subject to equities. See Ponnuswami Nadar v. Letchmanan Ohettiar (9).

[AYLING, J.—That is one specific exception recognised as regards benami transfers and that is the case in Ponnuswami Nadar v. Letchmanan Ohettiar (9).]

See also Thiruvengadam Pillai v. Doridla

Subbiah (10). An assignee is not included in the definition of 'decree-holder.'

Further this is not a matter to be interfered with in revision.

JUDGMENT—Following Venkataswami Naidu v. Rangappa Naidu (1) I must hold that the lower Court was not justified in considering the discharge alleged by the defendant. It certainly could not be set up against the original decree holder [vide Budrudeen v. Gulam Moideen (7)]. It is argued that it may nevertheless be considered by the Court as a ground for refusing to recognise the transfer of the decree, but in view of the wording of Order XXI, rule 16, from which the words "if that Court thinks fit" found in the old section 232, have been omitted, it is difficult to hold that the Court has a discretion to decline to allow execution on this ground [vide Asud Ali Molla v. Haider Ali (2)].

The order of the lower Court must be set aside and execution must be allowed to proceed. I make no order as to costs.

AMIR ALI v. GOPALDAS.

JUDGMENT.—On the 25th August 1902 Phula Singh sold 107 kanals 4 marlas of land to respondents Nos. 1—5 for Rs. 2,680, which included Rs. 1,760 due to mortgagees, items of Rs. 30 and Rs. 90 and an item of Rs. 800, for which the vendees executed a bond. Phula Singh died in 1907, leaving a widow, who is respondent No. 6. The plaintiff, a collateral of Phula Singh, sues to contest the validity of the sale, and the suit has been dismissed, the Courts below concurring in the finding that the sale was for necessity. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal in this Court, contesting the necessity for the item of Rs. 800, for which the vendees gave a bond.

From the endorsements on the bond it appears that the vendees paid Rs. 806 to Phula Singh in eleven instalments during a period of four years beginning in 1903. It has also been found that they paid an additional sum of Rs. 73 to Phula Singh's widow in 1913. The learned Additional Judge holds that necessity has been made out as Phula Singh, having no land left on which he could live (all except 6 kanals being under mortgage), did what was tantamount to purchasing for himself an annuity and was wise in so doing.

The bond is, however, not an instalment bond, but recites that the money is to be paid to Phula Singh in three years. We do not think that by obtaining such a bond from the vendees Phula Singh can be said to have been purchasing an annuity. The reason for the Rs. 800 not being paid at the time of the sale may be that the vendees had not got the money.

It is not shown that Phula Singh was under the necessity of raising the sum of Rs. 800 from the vendees. Not only had he 6 kanals free from mortgage, but he was cultivating the mortgaged land as a tenant under the mortgagees, and there is no reason why he should not have been able to maintain himself and his wife by his labour.

Further, we are of opinion that Phula Singh was not entitled to anticipate his needs. A widow cannot do so, as has been held in Gurdit Singh v. Mehr Singh (1) and Nihal Singh v. Musammatt Rajon (2), and the position of a male proprietor does not appear to be different from that of a widow in this respect.

(1) 67 P. R. 1884.

(2) 11 P. R. 1885.

We hold that no necessity has been proved for the item of Rs. 800, which must, therefore, be disallowed. We accept the appeal and pass a decree declaring that the sale of 107 kanals 4 marlas effected by Phula Singh on the 25th August 1902 shall not affect the appellant's reversionary rights, but that respondents Nos. 1—5 will have a charge on the land to the extent of Rs. 1,880, which the appellant will have to pay before he can obtain possession on the death or re-marriage of Phula Singh's widow. Respondents Nos. 1—5 will pay the appellant's costs in this Court. The parties will bear their own costs in the lower Courts.

Appeal accepted.

AMIR ALI—JUDGMENT DEBTOR—APPELLANT
versus

GOPALDAS, MINOR, THROUGH NEXT FRIEND
CHUN YABAI, AND OTHERS—DECREE-

HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48, O. XXI, r. 15, O. XXXIV, r. 4—Execution, application for—Order delivering possession, whether adjudication that execution not barred—Order, whether can be questioned in subsequent execution proceedings—Decree absolute for foreclosure—Order for possession, absence of—Irregularity—Joint decree-holders—Execution by one, effect of—Decree omitting shares of judgment-debtors, whether enforceable—Limitation for executing decree.

An order delivering possession of property under an execution application amounts in law to an adjudication that the application is in time, and it is not open to the judgment-debtor to question the legality of that order in proceedings started on a subsequent application for execution. [p. 925, col. 1.]

The absence of a formal order for possession in a decree absolute is a mere irregularity and does not vitiate proceedings consequent on the execution of the decree. [p. 925, col. 2.]

Order XXI, rule 15, Civil Procedure Code, allows one of several decree-holders to apply on behalf of all and it is not for the judgment-debtor to say that sufficient steps have not been taken to safeguard the interests of the other decree-holders, when they themselves have made no complaint whatever. [p. 925, col. 2.]

AMIRALI V. GOPALDAS.

Where a decree absolute in a suit for foreclosure is incapable of execution owing to the absence of a formal order for delivery of possession, the rule of 12 years contained in section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code applies from the date the decree becomes capable of execution, that is, from the date of the formal order for delivery of possession. [p. 925, col. 2.]

A decree is not incapable of execution merely because it omits to specify the shares of the judgment-debtors in the property decreed, if the decree-holder has secured possession [p. 926, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree in Civil Appeal No. 145 of 1914, in the Court of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, decided on 12th December 1914, arising out of the decision in Civil Case No. 87 of 1895, in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Wardha, decided on 11th July 1914.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings in Suit No. 87 of 1895 which terminated in a decree absolute for foreclosure on the 26th November 1897, based upon a mortgage, dated the 15th November 1885, executed by Amir Ali. In this suit Faiz Ali was made a defendant on the ground that he was a donee of Amir Ali subsequent to the mortgage. The second appeal has been filed by Amir Ali, but not by Faiz Ali. The first point argued is that the application for execution is barred by limitation, inasmuch as the first application for execution was made on the 14th of May 1901, that is more than three years after the decree absolute, and it is further contended that, although the subsequent applications were made within three years of each other, they also must be held to be equally barred for the reason already assigned. The learned Pleader for the appellant, however, concedes that, upon the application of 1901, possession of some of the property was actually delivered. If that is so, then the order delivering possession of property amounted in law to an adjudication that the application was in time, and it is no longer open to the judgment debtor to contest the legality of that order, and the finding which indirectly underlies the order.

It is next contended that the order was ultra vires as the decree absolute did not contain an order for delivery of possession, as it should have done. The Pleader for the appellant argues that a formal order for delivery of possession was passed on the 22nd of October 1904 and that the proceedings of 1901 were, therefore, of no legal effect. Now the order of 1901 must be held binding on the parties. It was passed after notice to the appellant, and its legality on the grounds just mentioned can no longer be questioned. The absence of a formal order for delivery of property is an irregularity, which cannot be said to have prejudiced the parties, and it is too late now to question the validity of that order.

It is contended that the Muktyar who signed the application for execution was only a Muktyar for some of the decree-holders, but not for all. Therefore, the applications for execution are bad in law. There is no force in this argument. Order XXI, rule 15, allows one of several decree holders to apply on behalf of all, and it is not for the judgment-debtor to say that sufficient steps have not been taken to safeguard interests of the other decree-holders, when they themselves have made no complaint whatever.

The next point urged is that the execution of the decree is barred under section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as more than twelve years have elapsed since the date of the decree absolute. But the appellant's own contention is that the decree absolute was incapable of execution, until a formal order for delivery of possession was passed on the 22nd of October 1904. The rule of twelve years laid down in section 48 will not apply from the date of the decree absolute, but from the date when the decree became capable of execution and the present application is, therefore, within time.

It is argued that as regards the fields in Moi and Mobarakpur, the decree should be interpreted as allowing possession of only the same share of the fields as in the villages. The decree does not bear any such interpretation. The decree absolute first specifies the shares in the villages of Moi and Mobarakpur, then mentions the fields in Daadi, Isapur, Lakhanwada, and thereafter gives the fields of Moi. I do not think it is possible to interpret the decrees in the way suggested.

It is said that the decree-holders are claiming mutation of something like 11-annas share in the two villages of Moi and Mobarakpur. This is really outside the record, but I think I may as well express my opinion that, if they are so claiming, they are claiming more than the decree in Suit Nos. 86 and 87 entitled them to, for it is obvious that the 5-annas 4-pies share of Moi and Mobarakpur decreed in Suit No. 86 is included in the shares decreed in Suit No. 87. It is contended that the decree-holders have obtained possession of fields in Moi and Mobarakpur other than those specifically mentioned in the decree absolute. The possession of the Mobarakpur fields was delivered on the 24th of August 1902, and it seems to me to be too late now for the appellant to dispute the right to these fields. As regards the fields in Moi possession of some of them was taken on the 18th of January 1911 in execution of the decree in Suit No. 87 of 1895, and of the others which are specifically mentioned in the decree in execution of the decree in Suit No. 86 of 1895 on the 11th March 1912. Faiz Ali, in my opinion, is the only judgment-debtor who could have legally objected to the delivery of possession of these fields, for he was sued only as a donee of a portion of the share in the villages. He has not appealed at all in the execution proceedings in Suit No. 87 of 1895. Amir Ali, who has parted with the whole of his share in the village, cannot complain if all the fields belonging to him have been given in the decree-holders' possession. In Second Appeal No. 386 of 1896, Ismay, J. C., overruled Amir Ali's contention that only some of the fields in Moi were mortgaged. These fields appear to be khudkasht fields, and they would certainly pass without specification under a decree for the village share. It would have been different if they were in Faiz Ali's possession and Faiz Ali had filed this appeal. But, as I have already pointed out, he has not appealed from the execution proceedings in Suit No. 87 of 1895.

It is contended that the decree is incapable of execution, because it has not been ascertained what share is possessed by each of the judgment-debtors in the two fields. The village is an undivided village, and only symbolical possession can be given in such a case, except as regards the sir and khudkasht fields, which I have already dealt with. The decree-holders have been put in accordance with the decree, and it does not lie in the mouth of Amir Ali, the appellant, to raise any such objection. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. I fix Rs. 40 as Pleader's fee.

Appeal dismissed.

LABHU RAM V. BHAG MAL.

JUDGMENT.--The facts of the case giving rise to this appeal are briefly as follows:--

Labhu Ram was appointed guardian of the property of his minor cousins Bhag Mal and Dhana Mal on the 5th of January 1911, and proceeded to deal with the same. In 1916, he was removed or allowed to resign from the guardianship and on the 19th October 1917 Bhag Mal was declared to have attained majority, and it was directed that the property be made over to him on behalf of himself and his minor brother, Dhana Mal. On the 6th of November 1917, he, on behalf of himself and his brother, instituted the present suit in which he claimed the sum of Rs. 3,226-14-6 from Labhu Ram, the former guardian. It was alleged that Labhu Ram had, instead of investing funds realized by him belonging to the minors in Banks and other securities, placed this sum in the shop of his father, in which he was a partner, and had utilized it for the purposes of their business. A sum of Rs. 3,076-8-0 was claimed as profits made by Labhu Ram in this way and a further sum of Rs. 150 was claimed as due on account of rent for the use by Labhu Ram of a shop belonging to the minors. With regard to the claim for profits it was alternatively prayed that in the event of it being found that Labhu Ram had not used the money for his own business purposes, he should still be directed to pay interest inasmuch as he had committed breach of trust by neglecting to make proper investments.

The primary Court held that the claim for interest or profits amounting to Rs. 3,076-8-0 was not maintainable but decreed a sum of Rs. 100 as due for rent. Bhag Mal and Dhana Mal appealed against this decree and the learned District Judge, while maintaining the decree for Rs. 100, held that Labhu Ram was in the position of a trustee and that he was liable to pay such interest as he had actually received on moneys belonging to the minors or that if he had not used the money but had kept it uninvested, then he was liable to pay interest thereon inasmuch as he had failed to carry out his duties as a guardian. The case was accordingly remanded to the primary Court for a decision on issues relating to the user of the money and the ascertainment of such sums as Labhu Ram might be shown to be liable for. Against this order of remand Labhu Ram has preferred this second appeal to this Court, and we have heard Bakhshi Tek Chand in its support while Pandit Sheo Narain has addressed us on behalf of Bhag Mal and his brother.

One of Bakhshi Tek Chand's objections was that the suit was not maintainable by virtue of section 41 (4) of the Guardians and Wards Act, it being alleged that Labhu Ram had been formerly discharged. A reference to the guardians and wards record has, however, disclosed the fact that no order of discharge had been passed and this contention, therefore, cannot prevail.

It was next contended that the learned District Judge had erred in holding that the principles of the Indian Trustees Act, 1882, were applicable to the case of guardians, and our attention was drawn to section 34 (d) of the Guardians and Wards Act. Under section 20 of the Act a guardian stands in a fiduciary relation to his ward and is not allowed to make any profit out of his office. The relationship between a guardian and his ward is very similar to the relationship existing between a trustee and his beneficiary and though the provisions of the Indian Trustees Act cannot, we think, be held to be strictly applicable, nevertheless we think that its provisions can be used as a guide. Section 27 of the Guardians and Wards Act lays down that a guardian of the property of a ward is bound to deal therewith as carefully as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with it if it were his own.

Bakhshi Tek Chand contended that the guardian had periodically filed his accounts and had carried out all orders passed by the Court in connection with them. He, therefore, urged that the correctness of the accounts had not been attacked and as the balances in hand were brought to the notice of the Court, Labhu Ram could not be held to be guilty of any neglect in the management of the minor's property. It was also pointed out to us that Labhu Ram had definitely denied having utilized any funds belonging to the minors in his shop, and it was alleged that the said moneys were deposited in his father's firm by Labhu Ram owing to the prevalence of dacoities and many failures of the Indian Banks. These circumstances may possibly afford a good defence and no doubt will receive due consideration in further proceedings before the primary Court. They do not, however, affect the abstract principle that a guardian is bound to take such care of his ward's property as a man of ordinary prudence would take if the property were his own. Further if the plaintiffs-respondents can prove that these moneys have been utilized by Labhu Ram's firm, we think that Labhu Ram is bound to disgorge such profits as the said firm has made out of the use of this money. Whether or not the neglect to invest the moneys would entitle the minors to claim interest at a reasonable rate on the moneys so left uninvested, is also a matter which can only be decided after the inquiry which has been ordered. In Trevelyan's Law relating to Minors, 4th Edition, page 180, it is pointed out that every plain neglect of duty by a guardian amounts to a breach of trust, and he must compensate his ward for any loss occasioned thereby, Sarat Ohandra Roy v. Raioni Mohan Roy (1). The guardian's liability extends to profits actually received, or profits which could have been received but for his gross and wilful default. Prima facie it is the duty of a guardian to invest moneys belonging to his ward, and section 33 of the Guardians and Wards Act provides means by which a guardian may obtain the assistance and advice of the Court in his dealings with his ward's funds. That Labhu Ram was desirous of keeping these moneys in his own possession is evidenced by an application made by him on the 21st August 1915, in which he asked the Court to direct the withdrawal of moneys, even in the National Bank of India, which were to be made over to him for the use and benefit of the minors, and in this application it was definitely stated that if this was not directed, he did not care to act as a guardian. It is impossible for us to give any expression of opinion as to whether Labhu Ram had made use of and profited by the retention of moneys belonging to his ward. Nor can we say whether, if he has not used the money, he has been guilty of such neglect as would entitle the wards to claim compensation from him. These are matters which will have to be dealt with by the Court to which the case has been remanded.

We, however, modify the order of remand to this extent. We hold—

(1) that while Labhu Ram is liable to pay to his wards any profits made by him, it is for the wards to show that the moneys have been used by Labhu Ram and his firm and to show approximately at any rate what such profits were; and

(2) that if it be found that the moneys have not been used but allowed to remain idle and uninvested, then it is for the Court to decide whether or not there was any justification for Labhu Ram's action in not investing the said moneys.

In other respects the appeal is dismissed. Costs of this Court will follow the event.

Appeal dismissed; Order modified.

The rule that a stay order issued by an Appellate Court suspends the power and jurisdiction of the executing Court to conduct further proceedings from the moment the order of the superior Court is passed, cannot be extended to the case of an injunction passed under Order XXXIX, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code [p. 929, col. 2.]

The Hon'ble Sir Bipin Krishna Bose, Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. K. G. Khaparde, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a sale. The appellant is one of the judgment-debtors who owned a Ginning Factory at Amraoti, which was sold between 8 and 9 A.M. of the 17th June last. The respondents are the decree holder and the auction purchaser. The sale was for Rs. 22,200 subject to a very heavy incumbrance. On the 16th July an application was made to set aside the sale on the ground of various irregularities alleged. It was also contended that the property was worth Rs. 2½ lakhs. The Additional District Judge, in a carefully written judgment, has dealt with all the points urged.

The property was attached on the 19th September 1918 and the sale was to take place on the 4th March 1919. The appellant's nephew Ramjiwan, a child aged 2½ years, filed an objection, which was disallowed on the 12th April. A fresh proclamation was issued for sale on the 23rd April last for an auction sale to be held at 5 A.M. on the 17th June. Ramjiwan filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on the last day before the May vacation, and on the 16th June when the Courts re-opened he obtained an order at 5 P.M. for a stay of the sale. This was an ex parte order and did not reach the Court of the Additional District Judge till after the sale had taken place. The order was passed presumably under Order XXXIX, rule 1.

It is contended, on the authority of Hukum Ohand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (1) and Ramanathan Chetty v. Arunachalam Chetty (2), that the sale was ultra vires, even though the injunction was not served on the decree-holder, nor the order communicated to the Executing Court before the sale. In the two cases cited it was held that a stay order issued by the Appellate Court suspends the power and jurisdiction of the executing Court to conduct further proceedings from the moment the order of the superior Court is passed. This view, which has not been accepted by a later Full Bench of the Madras High Court [Kasaribada Venkatachelatirao v. Maddipatla Kameswaramma (3)], cannot, in our opinion, be extended to the case of an injunction passed under Order XXXIX, rule 1. It is difficult to see how the jurisdiction of a superior Court can be taken away by an order of an inferior Court where, as in this instance, an appeal lay from that order to the Court which was requested to stay the sale. As pointed out by Woodroffe, J., in Hukum Ohand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (1), a prohibitory order by way of injunction is directed to a party and not to a Court. If the executing Court has notice of the injunction, it would no doubt compel the decree-holder to do what he is ordered to do by a Court of competent jurisdiction. In other words, it would stay the sale: but after the sale it is no longer in the power of the decree-holder to stay it, and the Court cannot compel him to do what he is legally incompetent to do. If the decree-holder happened to be himself the auction-purchaser with notice of the injunction, he may be treated as a trustee subject to the ultimate order of the Court issuing the injunction. This is not the case here. It has been held that an alienation made in contravention of an injunction is not void, such as would be the case when it is made after the attachment has been effected. Such an alienation subjects a party to the penalty prescribed by Order XXXIX, rule 2 (3): Delhi and London Bank Limited v. Ram Narain (4) and Manohar Das v. Ram Autar Pande (5). Assuming that a prohibitory order by way of injunction for certain purposes operates from the date when the order is made, as appears to be the opinion of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, a sale made in ignorance of the order would at the utmost be only an irregularity. Under rule 90 of Order XXI the sale cannot be set aside unless the judgment-debtor has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity.

It is contended that no notice was duly served on the appellant, as required by Order XXI, rule 66. The process-server on the 16th January 1919 found the appellant ill, and affixed a copy of the notice to the house. We cannot, however, accept the appellant's statement that he was ignorant of the proclamation of sale till the 16th June last, as he tells us in his evidence. We have already mentioned that he put up his minor nephew Ramjiwan to file an objection which was followed by a suit. He himself filed the affidavit on the basis of which the stay order was obtained from the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

It is urged that the specification of the property to be sold was not as fair and accurate as it should have been. The argument is that there were four engines, two with 40 horse power each and two small ones of 7 horse power. Only two engines are mentioned in the sale proclamation. It is also urged that the horse power and the name of the maker of the engine should have been set out in the sale proclamation. An ideally perfect description of such machinery can only be given by an expert. If the appellant thought that the sale proclamation was not as accurate as it should have been, he should have come forward and assisted the Court. Although two engines are specifically mentioned, the property advertised for sale included all "machinery".

In a petition filed at a late stage of the case the appellant contended that the inaccuracy as shown in the sale proclamation was inaccurate, inasmuch as he had made subsequent payments to the extent of Rs. 17,840. This plea was not fully inquired into and the appellant's allegation remains unproved, but we find from a certified copy of the decree in the mortgage suit that the amount stated as due under the mortgage was the amount decreed, namely, Rs. 1,22,523-10. This was the amount due to the mortgagee on the 29th June 1916. The decretal amount carried interest at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. The mortgagee is the son-in-law of the appellant. The alleged payments were not certified to the Court. If interest is calculated at the stipulated rate, then the alleged payments may fairly be regarded as having wiped off the interest. We do not think there is much force in this contention.

There were only three bidders at the auction sale, and it is contended that the stay order had the effect of discouraging people from attending the sale and bidding. The order was passed so late on the previous day that it could scarcely have been known to intending bidders. There are few people in Amraoti who can afford to buy a big Ginning Factory. The appellant took no steps to have the order of the Court communicated to the Nazir. He himself came to the sale and requested the Nazir to stay the sale for ten minutes, saying that he was going to call his Pleader. He did not turn up within the ten minutes, and when he came he found that the sale had already taken place. He did not notify to the purchasers or to the Nazir that he had obtained an injunction from the Court. Rai Bahadur Ganeshdas, one of the witnesses, says that an agent of the appellant Dharamchand came and told the Nazir to stop the sale, as he was going to obtain an order to stay the sale, a suit having been filed on behalf of a minor. The agent apparently did not know that an order had been already obtained. Though Ganeshdas says that this dissuaded him from making a higher bid, we are not prepared to attach much importance to this evidence. The appellant in his deposition says that he did not make any attempt to raise money because he was prepared to sell the factory if a good price could he had. This seems to have been his attitude throughout. If the factory is so valuable, he ought to have been able to raise money within one month and apply under Order XXI, rule 89, to have the sale set aside on payment of the decretal amount and a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the purchase-money.

As regards the value of the factory we are not prepared to attach much importance to the evidence of the judgment-debtor's witness No. 7, who says that his master had told him that the factory may be purchased for Rs. 1,75,000. The master has not been called and no offer was actually made. Similarly, judgment-debtor's witness No. 8, a broker, is said to have offered 2 lakhs for the factory for Rai Bahadur Bachha Raj Jamana Das of Wardha. There is nothing in writing to show that he had authority from a gentleman who has not been cited as a witness. If this evidence is true, there would have been no difficulty in making the application to have the sale set aside after the necessary payments. Judgment-debtor's witness No. 11, a broker, values it at more than 2 lakhs and would purchase for 2 lakhs himself. He made no attempt to purchase it within the month following the sale. The only witness whose evidence appears to be reliable is the expert witness called by the judgment-debtor himself, an engineer in the service of Messrs. Ralli Brothers, P. W. No. 13. He values the property at Rs. 1,63,800, but as the property was subject to a mortgage and no title is guaranteed, he would make a deduction of 7 per cent. from this value. Taking the incumbrance into account the property has not been sold for an unfair price, considering that there is a suit pending as regards one-sixth share and the possibility of further dispute on the part of the defendant who was discharged from liability under the appellate decree. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that no substantial injury has been proved in the case.

We note that the lower Court has not yet confirmed the sale in deference to a request made by the Court of the Subordinate Judge, when the latter found that its stay order was received too late by the executing Court. In our opinion, the Subordinate

Judge was not competent to pass any such order. So long as the property in dispute is in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree, a prohibitory order by way of injunction can be issued, but once it is sold, no such order can be passed. The lower Court, having disallowed the application to set aside the sale, was bound under rule 92 of Order XXI to confirm the sale. The lower Court will now proceed to do so.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. We fix Rs. 200 as Pleader's fee to be divided equally between the two respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 2 (e), 16, 18—Hindu Law—Joint family—Father adjudicated insolvent—Son's interest in joint family property, whether vests in Receiver—Debts incurred by father—Legal necessity—Burden of proof.

Under the Mitakshara Law a father has the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immovable estate for the payment of his own debts not contracted for immoral purposes and such interest, therefore, is "property" belonging to the father within the meaning of section 2 (e) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and on the father being adjudged insolvent, it vests in the Receiver. [p. 932, col. 2; p. 933, col. 1.]

In such a case the burden of proving that the debts were incurred for immoral purposes is on the son. [p. 933, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Delhi, dated the 29th June 1915.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellants.

Mr. M. N. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by Lala Ram Kishen Das, Receiver of the property of Jai Narain, insolvent, proprietor of the firm Rama Nand-Jai Narain, for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 2,382-15-9 from Harmukh Rai Munna Lal. The facts of the case are fully stated in the careful judgment of the lower Appellate Court and need not be given in detail. It is only necessary to mention a few dates and facts which are necessary for the decision of this appeal.

HARMUKH RAI-MUNNA LAL v. RADHA MOHAN.

Jai Narain and his son Banwari Lal constituted a joint Hind family and were the proprietors of the firm Rama Nand-Jai Narain mentioned above. Some of his creditors applied to have Jai Narain adjudicated insolvent. An order of adjudication was made on the 21st of August 1912. A Receiver was appointed on the 24th of August 1912, and this fact was formally notified to the District Judge of Delhi on the 5th of November 1912 as certain execution proceedings in execution of decrees were pending in his Court.

In 1912 a suit was brought by Ishar Das-Nirbhe Ram against Jai Narain and Banwari Lal for the recovery of a sum of money, in which a decree was passed on 1th of May 1912 for the sum of Rs. 1,512-9 6. This decree was put into execution on the 11th of July 1912 and a Cotton Press belonging to the father and son, namely, Jai Narain and Banwari Lal, was attached and sold on the 7th of October 1912 and Rs. 5,050 were realized. The sale was confirmed in due course on the 9th of November 1912.

In the meantime, the firm of Harmukh Rai-Munna Lal, defendants, had also obtained a decree against the same judgment-debtors, which they put into execution and applied to share pro rata in the sale proceeds of the Cotton Press. They succeeded in realizing Rs. 2,382-15 9 on the 28th November 1912. The decree obtained by Harmukh Rai-Munna-Lal was passed ex parte against Jai Narain and Banwari Lal. It appears that Banwari Lal, being a minor, applied for the setting aside of the decree on the ground of his minority. The subsequent proceedings show that eventually the decree was maintained against Banwari Lal also. Those proceedings, however, are not material and as no argument has been based on them in this Court, it is not necessary to discuss them here. The present suit was instituted by the Receiver in April 1914 against Harmukh Rai-Munna Lal for the recovery of the amount above mentioned which they had realized from the District Judge's Court on the 28th November 1912, on the ground that Jai Narain having been adjudicated insolvent the Cotton Press along with other properties of Jai Narain had vested in the Receiver before the date of the sale. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that the Cotton Press belonged to both the father and the son and that as Jai Narain alone had been adjudicated insolvent, the order of adjudication could not have affected the interest of Banwari Lal and as also because only half of the sum due under the decree had been realized, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. From the decree of Court of first instance dismissing the suit of the Receiver an appeal was preferred to the lower Appellate Court, which reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and passed a decree in favour of the Receiver.

The defendants have come up in appeal to this Court, and it has been argued on behalf of them that the order of adjudication could not and did not affect the property of the minor son of Jai Narain. The decision of the appeal depends upon the correct interpretation of clause (e) of section 2 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907. According to it "property" includes any property over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. It is argued on behalf of the respondent that Jai Narain, as the father of his minor son Banwari Lal, had full authority under the Hindu Law to alienate the property of his son for the payment of his debts. Therefore, if the debt was of such a nature as to entitle Jai Narain to alienate the property of his son for its payment, the adjudication would have the effect of vesting the entire property in the Receiver. This argument is fully supported by decided cases. A similar question arose in the Bombay High Court in the case of Fukirc and Motichand v. Motichand Hurruckchand () and it was held that under the Mitakshara Law a father has the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immoveable estate for the payment of his own debts not contracted for immoral purposes, and a vesting order made under section 7 of the Indian Insolvency Act vested that right in the Official Assignee who could give a good and complete title to such ancestral immoveable estate to a purchaser. This decision was followed in two Madras cases reported as Rangryya Ohetti v. Thanikachalla Mudali (2) and Nunna Brahmayya v. Ohidara. boyina (3). These cases have been relied upon by the lower Appellate Court in support of its decision and in our opinion they fully support the view taken by the lower Appellate Court.

On behalf of the appellant it has been argued that it lay upon the plaintiff to establish that the debts of the father had been incurred for legal necessity. This argument, however, cannot prevail in the face of the decision of a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court reported as Amar Nath v. Rustomji (4). According to this decision it lay upon the defendant to show that the debt had been incurred for immoral purposes and that, therefore, it was not the moral duty of the son to pay. The Privy Council ruling in Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (5) has been relied upon by the learned Counsel for the appellants in support of his contention that it is the duty of an alienee to establish under such circumstances that the alienation was made for legal necessity. This ruling was cited and considered by the Division Bench who decided the case Amar Nath v. Rustomji (4) and we are bound by the construction which they have placed upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

The defendants did not raise the question in the Court of first instance that the debts incurred by the father Jai Narain were incurred for immoral or for similar purposes. An attempt was made to raise this plea before the lower Appellate Court but as its decision would depend upon evidence to be given on the point, in our opinion the learned Additional District Judge was fully justified in not allowing the appellant to raise the question in appeal before him. Two other questions were argued before us, namely, that the suit by the Receiver was bad as it had been instituted without the sanction of the Judge of the Insolvency Court. On the facts found by the lower Appellate Court there can be no possible doubt that the necessary sanction had been obtained and the suit was rightly instituted.

The second contention somewhat faintly put forward was that the suit ought to have been a suit for the setting aside of the execution sale and not for the recovery of the money claimed. We entirely agree with the lower Appellate Court that a complete answer to this question is to be found in the provisions of section 34, Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907.

The question of limitation raised in paragraph 2 of memorandum of appeal was not seriously pressed before us nor does it arise in this case. Articles 12 and 13 of the Limitation Act, having regard to our view on the facts of the case, have no manner of application.

In our opinion the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is perfectly correct. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.
Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 17th June 1918.

Mr. Kailas Patti, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Bishun Prasad and Rai Tribhuvan Nath Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The decree-holder, appellant in this miscellaneous appeal, obtained a decree for possession and costs and mesne profits on the 8th July 1915. He applied for execution by delivery of possession and for recovery of costs by attachment on the 7th August 1915. The Court returned his application for amendment in certain particulars, and the decree-holder returned it to the Court and got it finally registered on the 30th August 1915. Possession was delivered on the 7th September 1915. On the 28th September 1915 the Court ordered the issue of attachment in regard to costs on condition that the decree-holder filed a copy of Register D within six days. The decree-holder failed to file this copy and the application for execution was then dismissed for default in October 1915. No further steps were taken till the 9th August 1918, when the decree-holder applied for a transfer of the decree for execution to the Court of the 3rd Munsif of Gaya, to whom the decree was transferred accordingly. Then on the 2nd March 1919, the decree-holder applied again for execution of the decree. The judgment-debtor objected on the ground that execution was barred since the application for transfer of the decree, dated the 9th August 1918, was made more than three years after the first application on the 7th August 1915. The Munsif found that limitation would run from the 30th August 1915, on which date the amended application had been filed, and that, therefore, the execution proceedings were not barred.

On appeal to the District Judge of Gaya, the learned District Judge disagreed with the Munsif and decided that limitation must run from the 7th August when the application was first made and that the petition for transfer on the 9th August was beyond time. He held too that the order for the issue of attachment on the 28th September 1915 could not be taken to be a step taken by the decree-holder in aid of execution, for there was no evidence that the decree-holder had applied either in writing or verbally for an order for the issue of attachment. Evidence was sought to be given that the judgment-debtor had admitted on the 25th June 1918 her liability under the decree and that this was an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. The learned District Judge refused to admit this evidence in the appeal at so late an hour, but found that even if admitted the evidence would not amount to an acknowledgment of liability. He found that the application for execution made on the 2nd March 1919 was out of time and, therefore, allowed the appeal and set aside the order of the Munsif.

Before me it has been argued that the amendment of the application in consonance with the orders of the Court was a step-in-aid of execution and that, therefore, time should be reckoned from the 30th August 1915. I can find no support for this contention. Rule 17 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that where an application is amended under the rule, it shall be deemed to have been presented when it is first presented. If a decree-holder files a defective application and has to be ordered to amend it, he cannot gain profit from the amendment on the ground that it is a step-in-aid of execution.

With regard to the order of the 28th September it is clear from the finding of the lower Appellate Court, and in the absence of any evidence that the decree-holder moved to have the attachment issued, that the order for issue of attachment was not a step-in-aid of execution. The Court issued the order in accordance with the prayer contained in the application filed on the 7th August 1915, and not in accordance with any fresh prayer made by the decree-holder.

Thirdly, it is argued that when the Court on the 9th August 1918 granted the decree holder's petition for a transfer of the decree to the Court of the Munsif at Gaya, this was a condonation of any defect in the matter of limitation. Reliance has been placed on Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Gria Kant Lahiri (1), but that ruling will not help the appellant here for the order to transfer the decree was made without any notice to the judgment-debtor, respondent so that there was no chance for her to raise any objection on the ground of limitation. Mungul Pershad Dichit's case (1) applies where though a judgment-debtor has had an opportunity to urge his objections, he has taken no steps and has allowed the Court's order to go unchallenged.

With regard to the alleged acknowledgment, the evidence has been refused by the lower Appellate Court and there is no good reason given for its admission in evidence now. I may only say that I agree with the learned District Judge in his finding that the words cited only go to show that the judgment-debtor had freed herself from liability at the time when the statement was made.

The above are the only points taken on behalf of the appellant and they afford no good reason for allowing the appeal. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Application under section 22 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, for transfer of the case from the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, to some competent Court at Delhi.

Mr. Govind Das, for the Petitioner.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application, under section 22, Civil Procedure Code of 1908, in which it is sought by the defendants to obtain the transfer of a case instituted at Rawalpindi to a Court at Delhi. It appears that the plaintiffs are residents of Rawalpindi and carried on business there. The defendants are a firm known as Seth Mul Chand-Kidar Nath. They also have a branch at Delhi apparently under the name of Mul Chand-Ganga Bishen. A contract was entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendants' firm at Delhi. The principal defendant is a resident of Rawalpindi and the second defendant also lives a good deal at that place. The plaintiffs allege that there has been a breach of contract inasmuch as goods undertaken to be delivered over to them have not been so delivered.

It is not disputed and is quite clear that the Courts at Rawalpindi have jurisdiction to try the suit. Prima facie, the plaintiffs are entitled to bring their suit in any Court which has jurisdiction. On behalf of the defendants applicants Mr. Govind Das contends that the balance of convenience renders it advisable, as well as necessary, that the case should be tried at Delhi. Mr. Sheo Narain on behalf of the plaintiffs opposes this application on the ground that it would occasion great inconvenience to his clients if the case were transferred from Rawalpindi to Delhi. He also contended that no valid reason had been shown for such a transfer being ordered. In Bohitram v. Chimunbux (1) it was held that a plaintiff should not without sufficient cause be deprived of the right given him by law to select the Court in which he will sue. In Muthia Ohetty v. Arunachallam Ohetty (2) it was held that very strong reasons must be shown for depriving a plaintiff of the right to bring his suit in any Court in which the law allows. Sachendra Nath v. Muhammad Habibullah (3) is to the same effect. In Shamussuddin v. Ali Mohamed (4) it was held that a case should not be transferred from one Court to another merely on the ground that the defendant has all his evidence at the latter place. In Syed Husain v. Musammatt Sajjadi Begam (5) it was held that a strong case must be made out in order to overrule the right of the plaintiff to select the forum of his suit.

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 449; 3 Bur. L.T. 60.

RAMCHANDRA RAO v. VENKAT RAO.

The question for determination here is whether, having regard to the principles enunciated in the above rulings, with which I am in complete accord, any such case can be said to be made out by the applicant. Mr. Govind Das urged that there were three points primarily involved in the suit; first, whether a contract was entered into; secondly, whether a breach of contract had been committed; and thirdly, what the damages, if any, were; and he contended that most of the evidence especially with regard to the third point would have to come from Delhi. I am not prepared to hold that this alone would be a sufficient cause for transferring the case to that district. It seems to me that, if anything, the balance of convenience is in favour of the case being tried in the forum selected by the plaintiffs. The head office of the defendants' firm is at Rawalpindi. The mere fact that in the branch of this firm at Delhi there is another partner with the two defendants does not to my mind affect the situation. The bulk of the property of the defendants' firm is situated at Rawalpindi, and it is obvious that it would put the plaintiffs to considerable inconvenience if they had to go from Rawalpindi to Delhi for every hearing in the case, whereas if it was found necessary to take any evidence on commission at Delhi the defendants, at any rate, would have no cause for complaint, inasmuch as the evidence taken on commission would be taken in a city where they have their own branch. In all the circumstances it seems to me that instead of the plaintiffs having instituted this suit at Rawalpindi in order to harass the defendants, the defendants have put in this application with a view to doing their utmost to hamper and harass the plaintiffs.

I accordingly dismiss this application with costs—Counsel's fee Rs. 150.

Application dismissed.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 15 Right of way—Uninterrupted enjoyment—Acquiescence by servient tenement, whether necessary—Question of fact—Burden of proof.

The uninterrupted enjoyment for 20 years of a right of way, which raises a presumption of right amounting to a presumption of law, must have been acquiesced in by the owner of the servient tenement. [p. 938, col. 2.]

Knowledge of the fact of enjoyment on the part of the owner of the servient tenement is an essential condition to the acquisition of an easement where the Court is asked to presume a grant. The fact that there has been active obstruction on the part of such owner would negative any such presumption. [p. 938, col. 2; p. 939, col. 1.]

In order to negative submission to an interruption the party interrupted need not have brought a suit. [p. 939, col. 1.]

The question whether there has been submission to, or acquiescence in, an obstruction is a question of fact, and the burden of negating submission should be placed upon the party alleging that he did not submit, the matter being within his special knowledge. [p. 939, cols. 1 & 2.]

RAMCHANDRA RAO v. VENKAT RAO.

Messrs. M. B. Khinkhede and M. B. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. S. Kotwal and Dhabe, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought on the 25th June 1915 to obtain an injunction directing the defendant to allow the plaintiff a way at one of two points in the eastern wall of the defendant's compound and thus afford access to the eastern door of the plaintiff's dwelling-house. The injunction was granted by the trial Judge, whose decree was reversed in appeal by the Additional District Judge. The plaintiff has come here in second appeal.

The plaint alleges that the plaintiff's dwelling-house was constructed by his father and grandfather 30 or 32 years before the suit, but it is now common ground that the construction took place in the middle of 1888, i. e., 27 years before this litigation began. The existence of a right of way was pleaded, being based on a presumed grant and also on acquisition in the manner laid down in section 15 of the Indian Easements Act, 1882.

There is a public road immediately to the east of the defendant's compound and the right of way claimed by the plaintiff is said by him to have been originally exercised over the ground between the south-east corner of the compound and the plaintiff's eastern door. He further pleaded that seven or eight years before the suit the defendant built a wall on the east of his (defendant's) compound, but left a passage at the south east corner through which the right of way continued to be exercised. The cause of action was said to have arisen in January 1915, when the plaintiff having evacuated his house on account of plague, the defendant closed the passage at the south east corner of the compound and made a new opening further north nearly opposite the plaintiff's eastern door. The plaintiff assumed that this new passage was meant to be substituted for the original one and used it accordingly till the beginning of June 15, when he was obstructed and refused further access.

The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's house was built in 1888, that no right of way was ever enjoyed through either of the spots mentioned in the plaint, that the south-east corner was closed three years back, that the plaintiff never passed through the northern opening and that the northern opening was made in 1913.

The trial Judge found that the plaintiff's house was built in 1888; that a gate had been constructed at the south-east corner of the defendant's compound 10 or 12 years before the suit; that the gate was closed less than a year before the suit; and that for more than 20 years prior to the closing of the gate the plaintiff has enjoyed a right of way in such a manner as to acquire a right under section 15 of the Indian Easements Act.

The 4th and 5th issues framed run as follows:—

(4) Whether plaintiff lost his right of way in question by his non-user for more than two years prior to the suit owing to the closing of the gate as alleged by the defendant?

(5) Does or does not the closing of the gate CD amount to interruption?"

It was no part of the defendant's case that even if the gate was blocked three years before the suit, the obstruction did not constitute an interruption within the meaning of section 15, Indian Easements Act. Explanation II to that section is in the following terms:—

"Nothing is an interruption within the meaning of this section, unless where there is an actual cessation of the enjoyment by reason of an obstruction by the act of some person other than the claimant, and unless such obstruction is submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after the claimant has notice thereof and of the person making or authorizing the same to be made."

This provision has not been referred to by either of the Courts below.

In appeal the Additional District Judge found that the plaintiff's house was constructed in 1888, and assumed in his favour that the eastern door was opened at the same time; he also found that the plaintiff had enjoyed a right of way from the south-east corner of the defendant's compound as an easement for more than 20 years as of right, without interruption, peaceably and openly, but that the gate at the aforesaid spot was closed before the 26th September 1913, and that the plaintiff had, therefore, failed to discharge the burden of showing enjoyment for a period of 20 years ending within two years next before the institution of the suit. The plaintiff's plea that a grant should be presumed from long user was fully considered and rejected. The result was, as already stated, that the claim was dismissed.

In second appeal the first point pressed is that a grant of the right of way should have been presumed. Reliance is placed upon the following cases as indicating that enjoyment for 25 years furnishes an ample basis for such a presumption:—

Ponnusawmi Tevar v. Collector of Madura (1), Kisto Mohun Mookerjee v. Juggurnath Roy (2) and Koylash Chunder Ghose v. Sonatun Chung Barooie (3).

All these cases were decided prior to the enactment of the Indian Easements Act. In the first Scotland, C. J., remarked as follows:—

"In the absence of any definite law of prescription, I think, the proper general rule to be acted upon is that the grant of an easement may be presumed from mere continued user of the privilege openly enjoyed by the occupiers of the dominant tenement as of right throughout any long period of time without interruption on the part of the proprietor of the servient tenement, but with this qualification that the user should be for at least the period of adverse possession which is prescribed by section 1, clause (12), of the Act of Limitations as a bar to the enforcing of a title to corporeal property. The 20 years' user from which an easement is presumable by the English Law was no doubt adopted with reference to the period of limitation barring the right of suit for the recovery of land, and it would, it seems to me, be an unreasonable inconsistency in the law that a right by prescription to a servitude upon land might be acquired by enjoyment, which, if had of the land itself, would not suffice to give a similar right to the possession of the land."

In the second Jackson, J., remarked:—

"Cases are quite conceivable in which the plaintiff might not be able to give evidence of actual use for more than four or five or six years, and yet the circumstances might be such that a Court would be warranted in inferring the existence of a right."

In the last the learned Judges (Garth, C. J., and McDonell, J.) indicated an obiter dictum at the close of their judgment that after 25 or 30 years' enjoyment the Court might presume a right unless the contrary could be shown: they treated the case in fact as governed by section 26, Indian Limitation Act, 1877, and no question whether a grant should be presumed or not arose for decision. In England the question whether a grant should be presumed seems to be treated as one of fact: see Duke of Norfolk v. Arbuthnot (4). In this country opposite views on this point were expressed by Markby, J., and Peacock, C. J., in Bagram v. Khettranath Karformah (5). The Chief Justice, however, laid down that the uninterrupted enjoyment for 20 years, which raised a presumption of right amounting to a presumption of law, must have been acquiesced in by the owner of the servient tenement. In the present case, as I understand the lower Appellate Court's judgment, the learned Judge was not satisfied that the defendant had knowledge of the plaintiff's user of the way. That knowledge is an essential condition to the acquisition of an easement where the Court is asked to presume a grant appears from the judgment of Couch, C. J., in Bhubun v. Elliot (6), see also the judgment of Garth, C. J., in Arzan v. Rakhai Chunder Roy (7). It is also clear from Exhibits P-1 to P-8, a set of papers belonging to the Court of Wards which had the management of the defendant's estate from 1892 to 1912, that the defendant was in that year desirous of denying and did actually deny passage through the south-east corner of his compound even to Rao Sahib Pratapji Sirke (P. W. No. 9), whose house was granted to him by the defendant's father and cannot be reached except by that way. The erection of the gate at the corner shows that the defendant was not only not acquiescing in the exercise of any right of way there but actively opposed to it, and that opposition was only overborne by the Deputy Commissioner whose decision of the 22nd March 1909 was based on the fact that the Rao Sahib, who had applied to him on the 8th February to have the gate opened, could not get to his house except through the gate. Exhibit P-3 shows that the Rao Sahib's passage was obstructed as far back as 1908. There is room for doubt as to the defendant's knowledge, and it seems clear that he actively obstructed passage through the south-east corner of his compound in 1908. In these circumstances I think there would be no legal basis for a finding that a grant ought to be presumed.

The second ground of appeal proceeds on the assumption that a prescriptive acquisition as distinct from one under section 15 of the Indian Easements Act has been made out. This assumption not being justified, the ground does not require separate consideration.

The third ground is rested upon Explanation II to section 15, Indian Easements Act, the terms of which have already been quoted. It is urged that the defendant did not plead any submission to or acquiescence in the obstruction complained of on the plaintiff's part. It is correctly pointed out that in order to negative submission the party interrupted need not have brought a suit: See Subramaniya Ayyar v. Ramchandra Rau (8) and Glover v. Coleman (9); also Bennison v. Cartwright (10). The two cases last cited are also authorities for the proposition that the question whether for the purposes of section 4 of the English Prescription Act (2 and 3 Will. 4, c. 71), which restricts the meaning of "interruption" in a way similar to that in the Explanation now being considered, there has been submission to or acquiescence in an obstruction is one of fact. The plaintiff's case is that he closed the gate at the south-east corner three years before the suit and the lower Appellate Court's finding is in his favour on this point. I think it was for the defendant to allege any ground he might have to rely upon for the view that he did not submit to acquiesce in this obstruction. As remarked by Bratt, J., in Glover v. Coleman (9) (above cited) at page 119, * to ascertain whether the claimant to an easement submitted to an obstruction calls for inquiry into the state of mind of the person said to have submitted and whether his state of mind was made apparent by either expressions or acts. The same learned Judge understood by "submission" submission without satisfaction and without any direct act of opposition but made apparent by some expression or some act. It seems to me that the burden of negating submission should be placed on the defendant, the matter being one within his special knowledge: See sections 103 and 106, Indian Evidence Act. And as I understand the judgments in Glover v. Coleman (9) both Brett and Grove, JJ., treated the question as in effect one as to whether the claimant to the easement had not submitted to or acquiesced in the obstruction, the burden being upon the claimant. In the present case there could hardly have been a more effectual obstruction than the closing of the gate, and it is not suggested that the evidence shows the plaintiff to have done anything by way of remonstrance after moving the Deputy Commissioner in his undated application (Exhibit P.) which was presented on the 26th September 1913. That application prayed for an enquiry and mentioned that one made a year previously asking for a copy of the order on previous complaints of obstruction in 1908 and 1909 had not been disposed of: the management of the estate having already been relinquished, the plaintiff was merely informed that the copy asked for would not be granted. I hold that it is now too late for the plaintiff appellant to urge that in view of Explanation II to section 15, Indian Easements Act, his enjoyment really lasted to a date within two years before the institution of the suit, inasmuch as he did not for one year after notice of the obstruction and of the person making it submit to or acquiesce in it.

The fourth ground of appeal attributes to the lower Appellate Court the view that in order to negative submission or acquiescence the dominant owner is required to bring a suit. No passage in the judgment of that Court can be pointed to as warranting this inference. Indeed it would appear from the omission to make any reference to the Explanation that the plaintiff relied before the Additional District Judge merely on his allegation that the gate was closed within one year before the suit.

The fifth ground of appeal has reference to Exhibits P.9 and P.10. P.10 is the earlier application for a copy of certain orders of which mention has already been made. It is urged that Exhibit P. shows that the plaintiff was determined in September 1913 not to submit to the obstruction caused by the closing of the gate. The suit was filed on the 25th June 1915, and the gate was closed about June 1912. Exhibit P.9 is, therefore, more than one year subsequent to the closing of the gate and as already remarked, there was no plea by the plaintiff in the Court of first instance which called for consideration of Explanation II.

The sixth ground of appeal raises an entirely new point, namely, that when the gate was closed access through a small sub-gate within it was still possible and that complete closure of the entire gate could not have taken place until an opening was made further north in the compound wall, inasmuch as the defendant himself required access to the compound. Here again we have questions of fact which should have been raised at an earlier stage. It is too late now to demand consideration for them.

The seventh ground is not seriously pressed. It relates to the evidence of one Shiwaji (D. W. No. 7), the defendant's maternal uncle. This person is 60 years old and his deposition as recorded makes him out to have admitted in examination in-chief that the plaintiff's house was built 20 years before the witness was examined in February 1917, and that "on occasions the plaintiff used to go to his house from the east during the last two or three years." Then in cross-examination the witness said:—

"It is an incorrect statement that plaintiff used the way for the last two or three years. I did not make any statement that the plaintiff has his passage for the last two or three years."

It seems to me clear that no value could possibly be attached to these statements of the witness. The plaintiff himself admitted obstruction before the institution of the suit and the witness gave evidence after the litigation had lasted for nearly 20 months.

The eighth ground of appeal alleges that all the evidence has not been considered and that all the necessary findings have not been given by the lower Appellate Court. I am not pointed to any evidence which has been left unconsidered. The issue said to have been left undecided is the trial Judge's fifth above quoted, and the finding said to be missing is one on the question whether the plaintiff submitted to or acquiesced in the obstruction by closing the gate. I have already explained why I do not consider this subsidiary question to have been properly raised.

The ninth ground of appeal relates to the allegation in the plaint that when the gate was closed, the plaintiff was for some time permitted to use the substituted opening further north in the compound wall, that opening being regarded by the plaintiff as made for his benefit. The allegation in the plaint, however, does not amount to attributing to the defendant a desire to benefit the plaintiff by the new opening and there is admittedly no evidence of such desire. What does appear is that the gate was closed and the new opening made almost simultaneously. It is further clear that if the new opening was substituted for the old one, the claim should have left the old one out of account.

The tenth ground of appeal does not call for separate consideration.

Holding that no ground for interference with the lower Appellate Court's decision has been made out, I dismiss this appeal with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

—Sale set aside—Appeal, second, whether lies.*

Where an execution sale is set aside under Order XXI, rule 92, of the Civil Procedure Code and the right of appeal given by Order XLIII, rule (j), of the Code is availed of, no second appeal is competent from the order passed by the Appellate Court.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Attock, dated the 4th August 1917.

Mr B. R. Puri, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. R. Sawhney, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are briefly as follows:—

Dandu Mal obtained a decree against Sawan Mal and Gumani Mal and in execution attached a certain house and asked for it to be sold. One Multani Mal, another son of Sawan Mal, filed certain objections against the sale of this property, which were rejected. Multani Mal then filed a regular suit asking that the house be released from attachment. This case Multani Mal kept pending by resorting to various devices and while this suit was pending, Jiwan Singh instituted a suit against Sawan Mal and Multani Mal, etc., obtained an ex parte decree, attached the same house, brought it to sale and got the sale confirmed. When Dandu Mal came to know of this, he put in an application under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, asking for the sale to be set aside on the ground that it had been effected in a decree obtained fraudulently. The learned Munsif on the 17th March 1915 set aside the sale under Order XXI, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code. Dandu Mal then instituted a suit against Jiwan Singh and Multani Mal, etc., for a declaration that the decree had been obtained by fraud. He could not very well have asked for the sale to be set aside in a regular suit, inasmuch as it had already been set aside under Order XXI, rule 92, Civil

ABDUL GHANI SHAH v. SYED MOHAMMAD RAZA.

Procedure Code. Jiwan Singh appealed against the order under Order XXI, rule 92, as well as against the decree in the regular suit and the learned District Judge dismissed both the appeals. A second appeal to this Court in the regular suit proved infructuous, and a second appeal was filed against the order of the learned District Judge, dismissing the appeal made to him under Order XLIII, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Dev Raj on behalf of the respondents raised an objection to the effect that no second appeal was competent inasmuch as section 104 (2) rendered orders passed on appeal under Order XLIII, Civil Procedure Code, final. In my opinion this contention is correct. The application was made under Order XXI, rule 90, and the sale was set aside under rule 92. Order XLIII gave the right to appeal and this right was availed of. No further appeal is competent, and Mr. Puri on behalf of Jiwan Singh suggested that in this event his appeal should be treated as a revision. Whether or not the order passed under Order XXI, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code, was legal is, perhaps, a matter which is debatable, but the circumstances of this case are such that I certainly do not think I should be justified in interfering in favour of Jiwan Singh. The decree was obtained by him fraudulently and collusively and, therefore, the equities are all against him. The appeal is not competent and I decline to interfere on the revision side. Jiwan Singh will pay the costs of the other side. Counsel's fees Rs. 32.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga.

Mr. Muhammad Tahir, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Fakhruddin and Hasan Jan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—The plaintiffs brought this suit for partition of 2 bighas 10 cittas of Minhaj Lakhraj land in Mauza Haveli, Darbhanga, and prayed for the allotment of a separate takhta to them of one anna nine pies share in the said land. All the defendants with the exception of defendant No. 3 resisted the suit, mainly on the ground that the land sought to be partitioned was created waqf under a Sanad, dated the 15th of Ziqad 1135 Fasli, and as such was not capable of partition or alienation. Defendant No. 3 supported the plaintiffs. The learned Munsif held that the land in suit was waqf property and so was incapable of partition and accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal the Appellate Court, however, came to a different conclusion and held that the property sought to be partitioned was not waqf property and awarded the usual preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiffs. Against this decision the defendant has now appealed to this Court. The main ground urged by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellants is that the lower Appellate Court has not properly construed the Sanad and that the learned Judge in appeal was wrong in coming to the conclusion that no valid and operative waqf was created under that document. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the respondents maintained that the view taken by the learned Judge with respect to the rights created under the Sanad was correct, and he further contended that the document under which the defendant claimed the land to be waqf was not admissible in evidence inasmuch as it was a copy of a copy, and he submitted that the Court would not be entitled to look into the document and construe it unless and until the Court was satisfied that it was admissible in evidence. It is, therefore, necessary to consider the latter objection before we consider the document itself. It is clear that if the document was not properly brought on the record and that it was not legally admissible, no question of construction of the document can arise. It appears that the objection was taken in the Courts below, but the lower Courts came to the conclusion that it was not a copy of a copy. I have carefully considered this question and have absolutely no doubt that the document is a copy of a copy and one has only to look to the heading of the document, which has been marked Exhibit B, to be satisfied that that is so. It distinctly purports to be a copy of a certain document which was filed in some Court. That document from which Exhibit B was made was itself a copy of another document as the following endorsement will show. It runs as follows:—"This copy has been taken from the records of objection filed by Ramzu Shah and Bhattu Shah." Then later on one finds that "that copy was prepared, signed and sealed by the Court and made over to one Bhattu Shah." Under the circumstances one is forced to come to the conclusion that Exhibit B is not a copy of the original, but it is a copy of a copy which was taken from the records of objection filed by Ramzu Shah and Bhattu Shah in an execution case. The law does not permit a copy of a copy to be used, and I must, therefore, hold that this document is inadmissible in evidence.

There is a further objection, that the document does not show who the original grantor was nor his designation, and it is difficult to say whether the grantor had any authority to grant it. The document is hardly a Sanad, it is simply a pirwana to the tenants, resident and non-resident, and cultivators and Gomasthas and Patwaries, etc. It does not purport to create any rights. At the highest it may be evidence that certain rights were created previously under some other grant. Under these circumstances, I am clearly of opinion that the document is inadmissible, and no question of its construction, therefore, arises. As this document is the basis of the defendants' title and as it has been rejected, their case must fail. I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Courts, J.—I agree.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 43—Decree nisi passed by District Judge—Custody and maintenance of children, order as to, nature of—Procedure.

An order under section 43 of the Divorce Act as to the custody and maintenance of the children should not form part of a decree nisi for the dissolution of marriage passed by a District Judge.

Such an order is merely ad interim and is liable to terminate upon the confirmation of the decree by the High Court.

Case referred by the District Judge, Lahore, for the confirmation of his decree, dated the 1st June 1918, dissolving the marriage between the parties.

Mr. Oertel, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—A return has now made to our order, dated 12th March 1919, and we agree with the District Judge that the petitioner has succeeded in proving that he did not connive at the adultery committed by the respondent. We accordingly confirm the decree nisi for dissolution of marriage passed by the District Judge on the 1st of June 1918. The latter part of the District Judge's decree, which directs under section 43 of the Indian Divorce Act that the custody of the children shall remain with the respondent and that the petitioner shall pay a specified sum monthly for the education and maintenance of the two elder children, should not have formed part of the decree nisi [see Burroughs v. Burroughs (1)]. These were merely ad interim orders liable to terminate upon the confirmation of the decree by this Court. Our present order must not be taken to embody these interim orders of the District Judge, and it will be for the petitioner to apply to the District Judge if he desires to obtain the custody of the children. We make no order as to costs.

Decree nisi confirmed.

PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 12—Landlord and tenant—Tenant, whether can acquire easement as against landlord.

A tenant is incapable of acquiring any easement right in the land demised to him as against his landlord. [p. 944, col. 1.]

Mani Chander Chakerbutty v. Baikanta Nath Biswas, 29 C. 363, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Kanara, in Appeal Suit No. 212 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 174 of 1917, on the file of the District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Mangalore, in Original Suit No. 192 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The appellant, though a tenant of the respondents, has a permanent interest in the land. He can acquire an easement right as against the landlord. The decision in Mani Chander Chakerbutty v. Baikanta Nath Biswas (1) does not apply as the Easements Act is not in force in Bengal.

As the tenant had been in enjoyment of the right for a long time, a grant of the easement right by the landlord may be presumed.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondents.—A tenant cannot acquire an easement right in respect of property held by him as a tenant. It is immaterial that he has permanent rights. See Mani Chander Chakerbutty v. Baikanta Nath Biswas (1). Any benefit acquired by him enures for the landlord's benefit. See Gayford v. Moffatt (2). Under section 12 of the Easements Act the right can be acquired only by owners.

The point as to presumption of a grant from long enjoyment was not taken in the lower Court and is raised for the first time here in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.—Following the ruling in Mani Chander Chakerbutty v. Baikanta Nath (1) 29 C. 363.

(2) (1868) 4 Ch. App. 133.

GURDITTA MAL V. PARTAP SINGH.

Biswas (1) we must hold that the appellants were not in a position to acquire any easement right over the respondent's land as they were his tenants. The fact that the tenants were permanent tenants was held to make no difference on this point in the Calcutta case.

That case is sought to be distinguished on the ground that the Easements Act did not apply to Bengal, but it is not shown how the Easements Act has made any difference on the point. Section 12 of that Act enables only owners of immoveable property to acquire easement rights and not persons who are mere lessees. If a lessee by his user acquires any easement right over another's land, he acquires it for the benefit of the tenement he is holding and as that belongs to his landlord the benefit will go to the latter and it follows, therefore, that such a right could not be acquired or set up against the landlord. The English Law is clear on the point. Vide the case cited by the learned Subordinate Judge, Gayford v. Moffatt (2). The question whether the land over which the easement is claimed was originally Government land or land belonging to the appellant's landlord is immaterial on the above view. It now admittedly belongs to the latter and any claim by way of easement, therefore, fails.

It was then suggested that from long enjoyment a grant of an easement right by the landlord at the time of its inception might be presumed. This case was not made in the lower Courts, and it cannot be allowed to be raised in second appeal for the first time as plaintiff has not had a proper opportunity to meet it. There is also difficulty in raising such a presumption if the land over which the right of way is claimed belonged to the Government. Even if it was the landlord's land, the Mulgeni in favour of the appellants having been created presumably by a Mulgeni document, oral evidence adding to its terms cannot be allowed. But it is suggested that this grant may have been subsequent to the grant of the Mulgeni right itself. In such a case, perhaps, the creation of a right of way in the appellants' favour by an oral grant might have been pleaded, but such a special case was not set up at all and we cannot allow it now. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi dated the 24th February 1919, rejecting the application.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Mr. Sewaram Singh, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Punjab National Bank obtained a decree on the 7th July 1919 against Partab Singh and Sant Singh, judgment-debtors. The decree was for Rs. 5,771 and subsequently Rs. 1,000 was paid by Sant Singh. On the 27th July 1920, the decree was ostensibly sold to Gurditta Mal, the present appellant, who applied to the executing Court under Order XXI, rule 16, Civil Procedure Code, for execution against Partab Singh on the ground that the decree had been transferred to him by assignment in writing. The lower Court has held that Gurditta Mal was a Benamidar for Sant Singh, judgment-debtor, and has accordingly rejected the application for execution under the second proviso to Order XXI, rule 16. From this order Gurditta Mal has appealed, and the first point urged by his Counsel, Mr. Sheo Narain, is that no enquiry was permissible in execution proceedings as to whether the ostensible assignee was a Benamidar for one of the judgment debtors. Now, it appears to me that the provisions of the law contained in the second proviso aforesaid could be easily defeated if it was not permissible upon the application of the transferee to enquire whether he was really a Benamidar for one of the judgment debtors. Pandit Sheo Narain has referred to Nagendra Bala Dassi v. Debendra Nath (1), wherein it was held on the facts of that particular case that it was not practicable in execution proceedings to go behind the decree and to enquire whether the assignee of the decree was a Benamidar for somebody else. That case is in several respects distinguishable from the present one. On the other hand in Bayyana Ramayya v. Nidamarthi Krishnamurthi (2) it was held that Order XXI, rule 2 (3), Civil Procedure Code, does not disentitle a judgment debtor from proving the fact that a transferee of a decree applying for execution is merely a Benamidar of another judgment-debtor, and it was held also that when the transferee was found to be such a Benamidar, the Court is bound by Order XXI, rule 16, to refuse execution in his favour. The same view was taken by another Bench of the Madras High Court in the case reported as Ohellam Ohetti v. Seeni Ohetti (3), where it was held that a person who gets an assignment of a decree Benami for another is entitled to execute the decree in his own name provided he is not the Benamidar of the judgment debtor himself. If he is such a Benamidar it is clear that he cannot execute the decree, and it is difficult to see how the real facts can be ascertained without an enquiry. I, therefore, see no force in the first point urged by Counsel for the appellant. As to the actual fact whether Gurditta Mal is a Benamidar for Sant Singh, I have no difficulty in agreeing with the finding of the lower Court. In the first place it is clear from Resolution No. 22 of the 22nd April 1911 by the Local Board, Rawalpindi, of the Punjab National Bank that the Board recommended that a promissory note of Rs. 6,700 carrying interest at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum should be taken from Sant Singh in full settlement of this very decree against Partab Singh and Sant Singh and of another claim against Hira Singh and Sant Singh. It is no doubt true that in a subsequent letter No. 457, dated 5th August 1911, from the Rawalpindi Branch to the Head Office, Lahore, it was stated in paragraph D that the money of this promissory note had been advanced in cash and would have nothing to do with the decree, yet I am quite satisfied that no cash actually passed. It might be said that cash was given to Sant Singh in return for the promissory note and was immediately returned by him in settlement of the claim against him. I do not, however, believe that actual cash was made available to Sardar Harbans Singh, son of Sardar Sant Singh, as is alleged. The entry in the account books of the Bank:—"By amount at the disposal of Harbans Singh, on account of two decrees against his father Rs. 7,000" makes it, in my opinion, absolutely clear that there was a connection between this sum and the amount of the two decrees. The debit and credit entries in the name of Sant Singh and Harbans Singh, which are set forth in the judgment of the lower Court, satisfy me that they were mere paper entries and were made in order to give the transaction an appearance of reality. The statement of Bhagat Ishwar Das, Advocate of this Court, is very important and supports the theory that Sant Singh was the real purchaser of the decree. Moreover Gurditta Mal has not produced his own account books in which there should be an entry showing that he had paid cash as consideration for the transfer of the decree in his favour. He says that his account books have been lost, but this is the usual excuse put forward where a party does not wish to produce his account books, and no evidence has been referred to which bears out the statement in this respect. I, therefore, am fully in agreement with the lower Court that Gurditta Mal is merely a Benamidar and that Sant Singh is the actual transferee of the decree.

GURDITTA MAL V. PARTAB SINGH.

In these circumstances Gurditta Mal is not entitled to take out execution against Partab Singh and I dismiss his appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

One co-parcener of a Mitakshara joint family cannot, without the consent of the other co-parceners, alienate by way of gift, sale or mortgage the joint family property. [p. 47, col. .]

One exception to this rule is when the father, as manager of the family, mortgages or otherwise deals with the joint property for family necessity or for antecedent debt. [p. 947, col. .]

The exception in favour of alienations by the father for antecedent debts is more or less the creation of case-law and should not be extended and should be very carefully guarded [p. 947, col. .]

An antecedent debt is an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate. [p. 47, col. 2; p. 949, col. .]

There is a distinction between a case where the property has passed out of the hands of the family by mortgage, sale or other alienation by the father, and the son sues for the recovery of the same and the case where the mortgagee seeks to enforce the mortgage executed by the father against the sons who are in possession of the property. In the former case the son must show the grounds on which he seeks to set aside the alienation by the father, in the latter it is the mortgagee who has to show how he claims for the re-payment of the debt of the father. JUDGMENT.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—The plaintiffs-appellants instituted this suit for the recovery of Rupees 675 principal plus interest on the mortgage bond alleged to have been executed by one Gobind Kamat, father of defendants Nos. 1 to 4, on the 7th July 1909. The consideration of the bond was stated to be an old debt of Rs. 411 and a fresh advance of Rs. 264 for legal necessities. The plaintiffs are members of a joint Mitakshara family and so are the defendants. The defence was that there was non-joinder of plaintiffs and that of defendants, that there was no valid consideration for the mortgage, that the father of the defendants could not legally bind the joint family property and that the bond was otherwise invalid and inoperative.

The learned Munsif who tried the suit held that it was bad, as all persons interested in the bond were not made parties, that the bond was inoperative and invalid inasmuch as the alleged previous debt was not established and that the advance of Rs. 264 was not proved to have been made for family or any legal necessity. He also held that the defendants had separated from the father at the time of the execution of the bond. He accordingly dismissed the suit. The learned Judge on appeal held that there was non-joinder of parties and that the bond was executed after the defendants and the father had separated, and that the advance of Rs. 264 was not for family necessity. As regards the old debt of Rs. 411 he held that though it was a reality, it was not such as could legally affect the joint family property, and he, therefore, dismissed the appeal with costs.

This second appeal has now been preferred by the plaintiffs. Mr. Sen has presented a very clear argument before us. He concedes that on the findings, he is not in a position to contest the order of the District Judge with respect to the advance of Rs. 264. But he strenuously contends that he is at least entitled to a decree for Rs. 411 plus interest on that amount, inasmuch as it was an antecedent debt and as such capable of binding the family property, and he submits that the learned Judge on appeal has clearly misunderstood the observations of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). In my opinion, this appeal could have been disposed of on the question of non-joinder of parties and also on the ground of the separation of the father, Gobind, from the defendants prior to the date of the execution of the mortgage bond. But it is not necessary to deal with these points in view of our opinion with respect to the main contention of Mr. Sen on the question of the liability of the family property for an antecedent debt of the father, and I now proceed to examine the validity of this contention. No authority is needed for the elementary proposition of Hindu Law that one co-parcener of the Mitakshara joint family cannot without the consent of the other co-parceners alienate by way of gift, sale or mortgage the joint family property. But exceptions have been made, one of them being when the father, as manager of the family, mortgages or otherwise deals with the joint property for family necessity or for antecedent debt. It may be pointed out that the exception in favour of the alienation by the father for antecedent debt is more or less the creation of case law and is said to be "an innovation destructive to a great extent of the Mitakshara system," see Golap Chandra Sastri's Hindu Law, page 216, and it is, therefore, not surprising that the Judicial Committee in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) observed that "this being an exception from a general and sound principle, their Lordships are of opinion that the exception should not be extended and should be very carefully guarded." So far as the claim for Rs. 411 plus interest is concerned, an appeal has been made to us only on the ground of its being an antecedent debt, so the whole question is what is an antecedent debt of the father. The term had been the subject of conflicting interpretations for a very long time. In some decisions it was understood to be a debt which was only prior in time to the father's security, though not quite independent of it. See Debi Dat v. Jadu Rai (2), Babu Singh v. Behari Lal (3), Ram Dayal v. Ajudhya Prasad (4), Chinnayya v. Perumal (5), Sami Ayyangar v. Ponnammal (6). Other decisions took it to be simply a debt prior in time to the suit in which it was sought to be enforced. See Gunga Prasad v. Ajudhia Pershad (7), Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (8), Khalilur Rahman v. Gobinda Pershad (9), Surja

Prasad v. Golab Chandra (10), Maheswar Dutt Tewari v. Kishun Singh (11). The third view was that it was a debt which was not only prior in time but completely apart from the security which was sought to be enforced, Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (12). All the doubts arising from such divergence of Judicial opinion now have been removed by the Privy Council accepting the last view. Their Lordships in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) observed as follows:—"In their Lordships' opinion these expressions, which have been the subject of much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate..... The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply only, to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immovable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property. In their view of the rights of a father and his creditors, if the principle were extended further, then the exception would be made so wide as in effect to extinguish the sound and wholesome principle itself, namely, that no manager, guardian or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge. In short, it may be said that the rule of this part of the Mitakshara Law is that the joint family estate is in this position: under his management he can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it. To permit him to do so would enable him to sacrifice those rights which he was bound to conserve. This would be equivalent to sanctioning a plain and, it might be, a deliberate breach of trust. The Mitakshara Law does not warrant or legalise any such transaction."

"The limits of the principle of the exception have been thus set forth, because in their Lordships' opinion they form a guide to the settlement of the conflict of authority in India on the subject of antecedent debt."

Therefore, applying these principles laid down above to the facts of the present case it comes to this, that if the father, Gobind, had borrowed the sum agreeing to give the plaintiffs a mortgage bond later, the bond would not be for antecedent debt as obviously the whole would be one transaction. On the other hand, if he borrowed the money independently of the joint family property and finding that he could not pay it off at all, executed a bond as a security, then it would certainly be a bond for antecedent debt. Mr. Sen, however, contended that the decision of the Privy Council must be construed to define the expression antecedent debt with reference to the facts of that particular case and the definition must not be taken to be applicable to other cases, and he brought to his aid the well-known observations of Lord Halsbury in the case of Quinn v. Leatham (13). A perusal of the whole judgment of their Lordships, coupled with a careful study of Stanley, Chief Justice's judgment in the case of Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (12), which was fully considered and approved of by their Lordships, will clearly show that their Lordships had in mind not only the facts of the particular case before them but the wider question what is an antecedent debt. I have already shown the conflict of authority on this question and it was to put an end to this divergence of judicial opinion that their Lordships were pleased to definitely settle the law on the subject. If that were not so and if their Lordships had only the facts of the particular case they were deciding, in view, they would not have expressed themselves in these terms: "The limits of the principle of the exception have been thus set forth, because in their Lordships' opinion they form a guide to the settlement of the conflict of authority in India on the subject of antecedent debt" The italics are mine. In view of this clear statement I have absolutely no doubt that their Lordships meant what they actually said, that is, they were settling the conflict of authority in India on the subject of antecedent debt. I am confirmed in the view I have taken of the observations of their Lordships by the decision of Spencer and Krishnan, JJ., in the case of Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiiah Naidu (14) and that of Tudball and Rafique, JJ., in the case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (15); Mr. Sen has, however, placed before us a very recent decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Arumugham Ohetty v. Muthu Koundan (16), which has taken a different view. I have very carefully considered that judgment and with the greatest respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, I feel unable to construe the observations of the Judicial Committee quoted above in the manner in which they have done. It seems to me and I say so again with great respect to them, that their decision tends to extend the operation of the doctrine of validity of the alienation by the father for antecedent debts against his sons, and thus create a result which their Lordships expressly deprecate. I entirely agree with the following remarks of Krishnan, J. in the case of Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiiah Naidu (14) on the observations of the Privy Council quoted above: "There cannot be any doubt on their language that they meant to restrict the doctrine of cases of antecedent debts borrowed on the father's sole responsibility with no obligation on the joint family or on its properties. We are bound to follow this expression of opinion which is quite clear, and we cannot consider any arguments about its correctness."

Mr. Sen further contended that the learned Judge in the Court below has wrongly thrown the onus on the plaintiff to show that the debt was an antecedent debt. I regret I cannot accept the contention as sound. The law is quite clear on this point. Courts have always drawn a distinction between a case where the property has passed out of the hands of the family by mortgage, sale or other alienation by the father, and the son sued for the recovery of the same and the case where the mortgagee seeks to enforce the mortgage executed by the father against the sons who are in possession of the property. In the former case the son must show the grounds on which he seeks to set aside the alienation by the father, in the latter it is the mortgagee who has to show how he claims for the re-payment of the debt of the father. See Jimna v. Nain Sukh (17) and Ohindra-deo Singh v. Mata Prasad (12).

I am, therefore, of opinion that the onus was rightly placed upon the plaintiff in this case. The two grounds on which this appeal was pressed before us, therefore, fail and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

COURT, J.—This was a suit brought on a mortgage bond for Rs. 675 executed by one Gobind Kamat, who died leaving four sons and four grandsons who are the defendants in the suit. The suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance on the ground that the bond, so far as the money was actually received, was not executed for legal necessity, that Gobind Kamat was separate from his sons at the time of the execution of the bond and that the suit was bad for defect of parties. This decision has been confirmed on appeal to the learned District Judge of Darbhanga. He has found that Gobind was separate from his sons at the time of the execution of the bond and that the suit was bad for defect of parties, but there is a difference in his finding on the first point which it is necessary to consider.

The consideration of the bond was said to be an old debt of Rs. 411 and a fresh advance of Rs. 264 for cultivation, domestic expenses and payment of other Mahajans. The learned Munsif who tried the suit found that there was in fact no old debt and that, therefore, the defendants were not bound to pay the amount. On the other hand the learned District Judge has found that there was an old debt of Rs. 411, but he has dismissed the plaintiffs' claim in toto on the ground that an antecedent debt of a Hindu father will, as such, only bind the family estate when it is incurred wholly apart from the credit obtainable on the joint family property and that it does not appear that this condition was fulfilled in the present case.

The first argument in appeal is that the learned District Judge is wrong in law on the question of the meaning of antecedent debt and reliance is placed on the case of Arumugham Ohetty v. Muthu Koundan (16). In the case of Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council after considering all the previous cases remarked: "In their Lordships' opinion these expressions, which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply only to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property."

The meaning of this is clear, and in my opinion there can be no doubt that their Lordships of the Privy Council intended to lay down generally what is meant by the term "antecedent debt." This meaning was adopted in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (15), where in a similar case Tudball and Muhammad Rafique, JJ., remanded the case with the following remarks: "It must be clearly understood that the words 'antecedent debts' must be read within the clear meaning of the ruling in Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (1). It would be for the present appellant to show and prove that the debts incurred under those mortgages were incurred to discharge not only obligations antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly irrespective of the ownership of the joint family property, in other words, that they were personal debts incurred by the father for his own purpose and apart from the security of the joint family property."

Reliance, however, as I have already said, has been placed by the learned Counsel for the appellants on Arumugham Ohetty v. Muthu Koundan (16). In that case the meaning of the decision in Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (1) was considered by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court. The learned Judges in that case appear to have been of opinion that it was not the intention of their Lordships of the Privy Council to lay down any general principle and that their remarks should be construed as applying only to the case before them. In this view I am unable to agree. Their Lordships considered all the previous cases and with all respect to the learned Judges who decided the case of Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (16), I am unable to adopt their view. On this ground, therefore, the appeal must, in my opinion, fail.

(17) 9 A. 423; A. W. N. (1887) 116.

EVANS v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

The appeal must also fail on a further ground, namely, the finding of fact that Gobind was separate at the time of the execution of the bond. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Malicious prosecution—‘Malice,’ meaning of—Police Officer directing prosecution as result of enquiry, liability of—Secretary of State, whether liable for acts of officers done in discharge of duty—Tort.

In cases of malicious prosecution the term ‘malice’ does not necessarily imply personal spite or grudge on the part of the defendant or his agent, and it exists wherever there is an improper or indirect motive which actuated the prosecutor in instituting criminal proceedings against the plaintiff. [p. 951, col. 2.]

Where a Police Officer acting in the honest discharge of his duties directs the prosecution of a person on a criminal charge as the result of an enquiry, he cannot be held liable in damages if it subsequently turns out that there was no reasonable or probable cause for the prosecution. [p. 951, col. 2.]

The Secretary of State cannot be held civilly liable for tortious acts committed by Police Officers in the performance of duties imposed upon them by the Legislature. [p. 952, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 24th May 1915.

Mr. Raghu Nath Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Herbert, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff, Mr. James Symonds Evans, Coachbuilder, Rawalpindi, sued the Secretary of State for India in Council through the Agent, North Western Railway, Lahore, for Rs. 1,50,000 as damages for an alleged malicious prosecution of the plaintiff by the defendant's servants and agents, under section 411, Indian Penal Code.

On behalf of the defendant, preliminary objections were filed to the effect that the suit did not lie against the Secretary of State and should be brought against the Government officials alleged to be guilty of the tort in question; that even if the Secretary of State could be held ordinarily liable for the torts of his servants, no such liability attached to the defendant on the facts set out in the plaint; that the plaint was vague and indefinite in that it did not specify who were the servants and agents alleged to be guilty of the wrong done to the plaintiff, or the acts which were complained of as being negligent and malicious; and finally that it was not stated how and why defendant could be held responsible for the unspecified acts of servants and agents not named in the plaint. It appears that after some consultation between Counsel for the plaintiff and the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer, an agreement was arrived at as regards the supplying of particulars relating to the servants and agents alleged to have been guilty of the tort and as to the specific acts alleged to have been committed by them. In pursuance of this arrangement, according to the argument of the learned Vakil who appeared before us, the third paragraph of the plaint, which had been originally in general terms, was amended and a specific allegation was made that the defendant's servant and agent “known and styled as the District Loco. Superintendent of the North Western State Railway at Rawalpindi” had, while acting within the scope of his duties, instituted criminal proceedings against the plaintiff negligently and maliciously and without reasonable cause. Mr. Herbert, who represented the defendant in the lower Court, explains that the agreement was merely to the effect that the defence would raise no objection if plaintiff specified the servant or agent by his official designation and not by name. Six issues were fixed by the Senior

EVANS v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

Subordinate Judge, but he found it unnecessary to deal with others than the first two. These were as follows :—

1. Was there no reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution ?

2. Was the prosecution actuated by malice ?

The learned Judge in a lengthy judgment has discussed the facts which led up to the prosecution of the plaintiff and to his eventual discharge by the Magistrate, 1st Class, and has arrived at the conclusion that there was no reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution. He has, however, dismissed plaintiff's suit on the ground that the District Loco. Superintendent, North Western Railway, Rawalpindi, was specifically named in the amended plaint as the servant or agent of the defendant who had committed the tortious act complained of and that it had been proved by the evidence on the record that the said District Loco. Superintendent was not the actual prosecutor in the criminal case, was not directly responsible for the plaintiff's prosecution and consequently there could have been "no malice on his part in respect of the prosecution."

The Judge finds upon the evidence that neither the District Loco. Superintendent nor the Railway Department had any hand in the institution of the criminal proceedings against the plaintiff, that they merely placed all the facts in their possession before the Police and that it was the Police authorities who actually instituted those proceedings. He finds further that the Police authorities were also the servants and agents of the defendant, but that it was unnecessary to consider whether they had acted maliciously or whether the defendant was civilly liable for their action, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not alleged that the tortious act of which he complained was committed by the Police Officers concerned. At the same time the learned Subordinate Judge points out that "it was almost impossible for the defendant to know that the case had not been launched against him at the instance of the Railway authorities, as he could not know of anything that transpired behind the scenes and it was only natural, therefore, that he should have named the District Loco. Superintendent, Rawalpindi, as the person responsible for the prosecution." On this ground he directed the parties to bear their own costs.

Plaintiff has appealed to this Court and it has been urged on his behalf that upon the findings arrived at the Subordinate Judge should have allowed the plaint to be amended (if necessary) so as to make the defendant liable for the acts of the Deputy Inspector General of Police who actually directed the institution of the criminal proceedings, and we are asked to allow the amendment at this stage. On behalf of the respondent, Mr. Herbert, Officiating Government Advocate, has taken exception to the finding of the Subordinate Judge as regards the absence of reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution and has urged that in any event plaintiff's claim must fail, because the criminal proceedings against him were instituted by the late Mr. Wallace, Deputy Inspector General of Police, whose action in the matter was bona fide and in no way actuated by malice in the sense that that term is understood in connection with cases of this kind, and also because the Secretary of State is not responsible for an act done by a Government official, not in obedience to an order of the executive Government but in performance of a statutory power vested in him by the Legislature.

After hearing lengthy arguments upon these points we have no hesitation in holding that Mr. Herbert's objections to the claim are sound. The term "malice" does not necessarily imply personal spite or grudge on the part of the defendant or his agent, and it exists wherever there is an improper or indirect motive which actuated the prosecutor in instituting criminal proceedings against the plaintiff. In the present case it is clear from the evidence that the Railway authorities consulted Mr. Wallace, the Deputy Inspector General of Police, and placed all the facts in their possession before him, that Mr. Wallace had an enquiry made by his Police Officers and that as the result of that inquiry he, in the honest discharge of his duties, was of opinion that a prima facie case under section 411, Indian Penal Code, had been made out against the plaintiff. It is not and never has been, so far as we know, suggested that Mr. Wallace bore any ill-feeling towards the plaintiff or that in directing the latter's prosecution he was actuated by any indirect or improper motive. Even upon the assumption, then, that there was no reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution, the present suit must fail inasmuch as one of the ingredients which go to constitute the tort known as malicious prosecution—namely, malice on the part of the prosecutor—has not been established. Apart from this objection the suit must also fail on the ground that the Secretary of State cannot be held civilly liable for tortious acts committed by Police Officers in the performance of duties imposed upon them by the Legislature [see Shivabhojan Durgoprasad v. Secretary of State for India (1) and the remark of Maclean, C. J., in Moti Lal Ghose v. Secretary of State for India (2)]. It is unnecessary for us, upon the view that we take, to discuss the more general question regarding the civil liability of the Secretary of State for wrongs committed by the servants and agents of Government.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 103B, 105, 105A, 107, 109—Record of Rights, entry in—Presumption of correctness—Declaration that entry in Record of Rights is erroneous, suit for—Decision of Settlement Officer—Jurisdiction of Civil Court, whether barred—Res judicata.

An entry in the Record of Rights under the provisions of section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect, and, therefore, in a proceeding under section 105 of that Act for settlement of fair and equitable rent, the Settlement Officer, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, is not only justified but is bound to act upon such entry. [p. 953, col. 2.]

Where a question has in effect, though not in express terms, been necessarily decided between parties to a suit, they cannot raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form. [p. 954, col. 1.]

Where a question is decided by necessary implication, the decision would operate as res judicata. [p. 954, col. 1.]

Section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not lay down that the "issues" referred to in the section can only be raised by an applicant; on the contrary, some of them from their very nature must be raised by the opposite party. [p. 954, col. 2.]

After the final publication of a Record of Rights the landlord applied for settlement of fair and equitable rent under the provisions of section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenant thereupon raised the objection that the land, being lakheraj, was not liable to assessment of rent. In consequence several issues were framed, one of them being whether the land was niskar lakheraj property of the tenant. The tenant, however, did not produce any evidence and the Settlement Officer by his judgment assessed certain rent upon the land. The tenant then brought a suit for a declaration that the entry in the Record of Rights stating that the land was liable to assessment was erroneous:

Held, (1) that the decision of the Settlement Officer under section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act was binding upon the tenant, having regard to the provisions of section 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; [p. 954, col. 1.]

(2) that apart from the provisions of section 107 the suit was not maintainable under section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 954, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Hooghly, dated the 6th of February 1918, reversing the decrees of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Amta, dated the 20th of July 1915, and remanding the suit to his Court to re-admit it in its original number and to decide it on merits.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitter (with him Babu Heramba Chandra Guha), for the Appellants.—These two appeals arise out of two suits, one by the tenants and the other by the landlord. The Appeal No. 1282 arises out of the tenants' suit and the other appeal arises out of that by the landlord. The principal points relating to the two suits are the same. The landlord, plaintiff in Appeal No. 984, brought a suit for damages and prayed for injunction restraining the tenants (plaintiffs in Appeal No. 1282) from constructing pucca structures and making excavations on the land in dispute. The tenants' suit was for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights that the land held by the tenants was assessable to rent was wrong. The first Court tried the suits together and partly decreed the landlord's suit and dismissed the tenants' suit, holding that the suit was barred by res judicata and was, therefore, not maintainable. The tenants appealed in both these cases and the learned Judge held that the tenants' suit was not barred by res judicata and remanded the case for trial on the merits. Against that decision the present appeals have been preferred. After the final publication of the Record of Rights we, the landlords, instituted proceedings for settlement of fair rent under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenants contested the suit and the Settlement Officer decided in our favour. I submit that his decision operates as res judicata on the question whether the lands held by the tenants are rent free or not as, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption of correctness of the entry in the Record of Rights stood un rebutted. Hence no subsequent suit is maintainable on the question thus expressly decided by the Settlement Officer. Refers to Gregory v. Molesworth (1), Puhlwan Singh v. Matara Mohessur Buksh Singh (2), sections 107 and 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The order of remand is, therefore, bad and as upon this question the other appeal depends that should also be decreed.

APURBA KRISHNA ROY v. SYAMA CHARAN PRAMANIK.

Babu Monmotha Nath Roy, for the Respondents.—I submit that the Settlement Officer having decided the suit ex parte as would appear from his judgment, the proceedings cannot be said to operate as res judicata. Further the question as to whether the land was rent-free or not was not expressly raised and decided in those proceedings. Sections 107 and 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, do not apply. Refers to Parhati v. Toolsi Kapri (3), Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Ahmad Hussain (4). Under these circumstances the question of res judicata does not arise.

JUDGMENT.

S. A. No. 1282 of 1918.

This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights, stating that the plaintiff held the land in dispute under the defendant and that the land was liable to assessment of rent, is erroneous, the lands being nishkar (rent-free).

The Court of first instance held that the order of the Settlement Officer under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act operated as res judicata. That decision has been set aside on appeal by the learned Subordinate Judge, who remanded the suit for trial on the merits. As against that decision, the present appeal has been preferred by the defendants.

As stated above, in the Record of Rights the land was entered as Mal land liable to assessment of rent. After final publication of the Record of Rights, the landlords defendants in the present case applied for settlement of fair and equitable rent under the provisions of section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The present plaintiff thereupon raised the objection that the land was not liable to assessment of rent, it being lakhraj. Several issues thereupon were framed, one of them being whether the land in suit is nishkar lakhraj property of the defendants. The defendants, however, did not produce any evidence and the Settlement Officer by his judgment, dated the 19th November 1913, assessed certain rent upon the land. The Settlement Officer in his judgment stated that the lands were recorded in the names of the defendants as tenants under the plaintiffs and noted as being liable to assessment of rent in the Record of Rights. He further said that the defendants had failed to produce any evidence after the framing of the issues and so the cases had been proceeded with ex parte.

It is contended before us that there was no decision by the Settlement Officer that the lands were not lakhraj. But the defendants expressly raised the issue whether the land was nishkar lakhraj and did not adduce any evidence upon that issue. The entry in the Record of Rights under the provisions of section 103 B of the Bengal Tenancy Act shall be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect. The Record of Rights was before the Settlement Officer and was expressly referred to by him in his judgment. In the absence of any evidence to show that it was incorrect, the Settlement Officer was not only justified but was bound to act upon that record, and he did act upon that record. That is what he meant by saying that the case had been proceeded with ex parte. The landlord had not to adduce any other evidence except to produce the Record of Rights and it was upon that record that the Settlement Officer proceeded and fixed the rent.

We do not see, how, in these circumstances, it can be said that there was no decision by the Settlement Officer.

It may be pointed out that where a question has been necessarily decided in effect though not in express terms between parties to a suit, they cannot raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form. See Gregory v. Molesworth (1) and Soorjomonee Dayee v. Suddanund Mohapatra (5). It may also be pointed out that where a question is decided by necessary implication, the decision would operate as res judicata. See Puhlwan Singh v. Maharaja Mohessur Buksh Singh (2). We have referred to these authorities only in answer to the argument advanced that there was no express decision as to the land not being lakhraj, but it seems to us, taking the judgment as a whole, that there was a decision upon the question raised before us.

We think, therefore, that the decision of the Settlement Officer under section 105A is binding upon the plaintiff in the present case, having regard to the provisions of section 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Apart from the provisions of section 107, we think that the present suit cannot be maintained under the provisions of section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section lays down that "subject to the provisions of section 109A, a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is, or has already been, the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under sections 105 to 108, both inclusive." In this case the question whether the land is lakhraj, was the subject matter of an application under section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act before the Settlement Officer.

It was contended that the question was not raised by the landlord but by the tenant in his objection and that, therefore, it was not the subject of an application. But we think it is unnecessary that the question should be raised by the applicant before the Settlement Court, because section 105A clearly refers to the "issues." It says:—"Where in any proceedings for the settlement of rents under this part, any of the following issues arise, (a) whether the land is or is not liable to the payment of rent, &c., &c.....the Revenue Officer shall try and decide such issue and settle the rent under section 105 accordingly." It does not lay down that those issues can only be raised by the applicant; on the contrary, some of them (from their very nature) must be raised by the opposite party.

The learned Pleader for the respondent referred us to the case of Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Ahmad Hussain (4), but that case merely lays down that "section 109 requires that the civil suit should have for its subject a matter which has already formed, and not one which might have formed, the subject of an application under section 105." There the question which formed the subject-matter of the suit before the Civil Court was never raised before the Settlement Court and the decision, therefore, does not affect the case before us.

We were also referred to the case of Parbati v. Toolsi Kapri (3). All that the case decided is that "the decision of a Settlement Officer to which the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court is given by section 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not include an order of dismissal of a suit under section 106 of the Act for default, the word 'decision' implying an adjudication on the merits."

In the present case, as we have seen, the question was directly raised and there was an express issue on the point and even though the defendant did not adduce any evidence in Court, the decision of the Settlement Officer was open to appeal and to second appeal to this Court.

In all these circumstances, the order of the Subordinate Judge remanding the case must be set aside and the decision of the Court of first instance dismissing the suit must be restored with costs in all Courts.

S. A. No. 984 of 1918.

In the view we have taken in Second Appeal No. 1282 of 1918, the decree of the lower Appellate Court in this case is set aside and the case sent back to that Court in order that the questions other than that dealt with by us in Second Appeal No. 1282 of 1918 may be decided and the case disposed of according to law. Costs to abide the result.

It appears from the order passed by Teunon and Walmsley, JJ., on the 13th February 1919 that the appeal was dismissed against the minor respondents Nos. 3, 4, and 5 as the appellant's Pleader informed the Court that the appellant would not proceed against them. The appeal will, therefore, stand dismissed against the said respondents.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 23rd June 1914.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Mr. Sewa Ram Singh, for the Appellants.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, Lala Moti Sagar, Diwan Ram Lal and Bawa Harcharan Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted in the following circumstances:—

One Sardar Partab Singh was the owner of moveable and immoveable property valued approximately at rupees three lakhs. He died somewhere in the year 1873 leaving him surviving a widow, Sardarni Partab Kaur, but no issue. Sardarni Partab Kaur obtained possession of her deceased husband's estate, and on the 6th of January 1881 executed a supurdnama in favour of Mahant Chanda Singh, which is printed at page 7 of the paper-book and in which it is stated that the Sardarni had made the Samadh of Sardar Partab Singh and certain properties wakf. These properties are detailed in the said deed, and it is declared that they together with the said Samadh were to remain in charge of Mahant Chanda Singh, who would receive the income derived from the properties and would be responsible for all necessary repairs and maintenance. He was not, however authorised to sell or mortgage any of these properties and the Sardarni retained the right to dismiss the said Mahant at will. The properties thus dedicated were detailed in the said supurdnama and consisted of houses and shops, situated in Katra Sabunian and Katra Chanasti Atari also known as Kantayan. The shops situated in the Katra Sabunian were said to have been purchased by the Sardarni out of her Stridhan.

On the 25th of November 1882, the Sardarni executed another document in favour of the same Mahant Chanda Singh. This document is printed at page 47 of the paper book. It was described and registered as a "Will" and by it some property situated in Katra Ahluwalian was also made wakf. In it the Sardarni states that her husband had died about 9 years previously and that before his death he had made a Will expressing a desire that after his demise his Samadh should be constructed in his residential haveli at Amritsar and that the Granth should always be recited in the said Samadh. Further, a sadabart should be opened in connection with the said Samadh, houses were to be constructed for the comfort of fakirs and Sadh Sangat and that the whole of the immoveable property situated in Katra Ahluwalian should be attached to the Samadh and that the sadabart should continue permanently. The document then goes on to recite the fact that in order to carry out the said wishes of her deceased husband and for his spiritual benefit, the Sardarni had constructed his Samadh and had also built a temple, that further she had opened a langar and sadabart according to his wishes which are still in existence, that she had purchased certain houses from her own private funds and had dedicated all these houses for the upkeep of the Samadh, executing and registering a wakfnama in favour of Mahant Chanda Singh on the 6th of January 1881. As, however, the income of the said wakf property was not sufficient to meet the expenses of the langar, the sadabart, the Samadh and the recitation of the Granth, therefore, in accordance with the late Sardar's wishes and for the sake of his good name the property in Katra Ahluwalian had also been dedicated and made wakf in order that it might be used as a public sitting place where fakirs might be comfortably lodged and the langar and sadabart might continue for ever. The property was then described in detail and it was declared attached to the Samadh aforesaid to be considered as wakf property. It was to remain in the hands of Mahant Chanda Singh, who was to receive the rents and out of the same defray the expenses in connection with the Samadh, the recitation of the Granth, etc., and to open a langar sadabart in the name of the Sardar for feeding Sadhus and others. The property was not to be sold or mortgaged or alienated in any way, but the Mahant was empowered to make over the property to any of his Chelas, the Nirmala Sadhs. The document then goes on to recite that the said Mahant had been lawfully put in possession of the above noted property, and two advantages are mentioned as accruing from the dedication of the property for the purposes mentioned:—

(1) "That the good memory of the Sardar will always be kept in the world," and

"(2) That a good reward will be given in the world to come."

As has been said above, this document was registered as a Will.

On the 7th of April 1883 certain reversioners of Sardar Partab Singh instituted a suit against Sardarni Partab Kaur and Mahant Chanda Singh, asking for a declaration to the effect that an alienation by the widow of immoveable property to the value of Rs. 9,500 should be declared null and void after her death. This suit related to the property referred to in the supradn. m., dated the 6th of January 1881 and in paragraph 5 of the plaint (page 11 of the paper book) it was stated that the Sardarni had executed a Will in favour of Chanda Singh in respect of other immoveable property and that as the Sardarni had a life-interest in the property and as the Will came into force only after the death of the testatrix, it did not injure their rights and, therefore, no claim was made with regard to the property dealt with under the said Will in that suit. That case was decided against the reversioners up to the Chief Court, vide page 28 of the paper-book. In their judgment the learned Judges of the Chief Court held that it had been established by trustworthy evidence that the late Sardar authorized the building of the Samadh and Shivala and the making of provision for their maintenance and that the widow was simply carrying out his instructions. They considered that the purpose for which the alienation was made was a necessary one, viz., to provide funds for the maintenance of her husband's Samadh and that it was justifiable under the circumstances, an expenditure of Rs. 30 to Rs. 35 a month for the maintenance of his Samadh and for other charitable purposes not being considered excessive having regard to the fact that the late Sardar had left property worth rupees two or three lacs.

Chanda Singh having died, on the 29th of November 1907 the Sardarni executed a document in favour of Chanda Singh's Chela, Surjan Singh. This document is printed at page 129 of the paper book and recites the fact that the Sardarni had, in accordance with her husband's wishes, built a Samadh for his spiritual benefit and had constructed a temple and other buildings along with the Samadh, and to meet the expenses of the Dharm Arth had executed a wakfnama on the 6th of January 1851 dedicating certain properties for necessary uses, that Mahant Chanda Singh had carried out his duties properly, but that as the income of the property attached to the Samadh had proved insufficient, the Sardarni had dedicated certain other property subsequently, that as her collaterals had been opposed to her, she feared that they would not make proper arrangements with regard to the Dharm Arth property and that she, therefore, in order to prevent any interference on their part, made over the whole of the dedicated property and the Samadh to Chanda Singh's successor and Chela, Surjan Singh. Surjan Singh was appointed to carry out the duties regarding the dedication and no right was reserved either for the Sardarni or, after her death, for the relations of her husband to interfere in the management of the property by Surjan Singh, who was appointed in perpetuity, his Chelas succeeding him on his death.

On the 3rd of July 1913 Sant Harnam Singh, special agent of Sardarni Partab Kaur, executed a document in favour of Mahant Budha Singh, the Sardarni's religious preceptor, by which the Sardarni purported to make over a certain Bunga in Amritsar to the said Mahant Budha Singh. This Bunga was gifted to Mahant Budha Singh, and the descendants of the original founders were deprived of all manner of control with regard to it.

On the 9th of September 1913 Sardarni Partab Kaur died, and on the 19th of January 1914 the present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs appellants against the defendants, Surjan Singh and Budha Singh, in which the plaintiffs-appellants sought to obtain possession of the property situated in Katra Abluwalian and the Bunga. The defence set up was that the Sardarni had acted in accordance with the wishes of her deceased husband in building the Samadh and Shivala and opening a sadabart and langar to perpetuate his memory. It was pleaded that the property in suit had been dedicated by a registered deed on the 25th of November 1852, since when it had been in the possession of Surjan Singh and his predecessor, Chanda Singh, that as the plaintiffs had taken no action with regard to the property in suit when they instituted their suit referred to above in 1883, the present suit was barred; that it had been held up to the Chief Court that the dedication of property yielding an income of Rs. 30 to Rs. 35 per mensem was justified and that the Sardarni had been competent to do what she did. With regard to the Bunga, it was pleaded that the Sardarni had been the proprietor and in possession and that she was justified in making the gift in favour of her spiritual Guru and in doing so only intended to secure spiritual benefit for herself, her husband and his ancestors. It was further pleaded that improvements had been made at a cost of Rs. 1,450, and it was urged that in any event the plaintiffs should be called upon to pay this sum if their suit for possession were decreed. The learned District Judge considered that the deed, dated the 25th of November 1852, was a deed of gift or endowment and not a Will, inasmuch as possession had been given at the time and that as the reversioners had remained silent for 31 years, their silence was "unaccountable." He also held that a widow was competent to alienate property, in which she had a life interest only, for legal necessity and that charitable purposes and spiritual benefits were included in the category of legal necessities. Referring to the judgment of the Chief Court in the suit instituted in 1883, the learned District Judge pointed out that it had been there held that as the Sardar had left property of considerable value, the amount alienated at the time could not be regarded as excessive. He considered that the action taken by the Sardarni had been in accordance with the wishes of her deceased husband and for his spiritual benefit.

With regard to the Bunga, he considered that an alienation made in order to benefit herself, her husband and his ancestors in after life could not be questioned. The value of the Bunga being small and the value of the property inherited by the reversioners being large, he considered the alienation valid. The plaintiffs' suit was, therefore, dismissed. They have preferred this appeal through Mr. Sneo Narain, and after hearing Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondents we are of opinion that the appeal must succeed. With regard to the Bunga, it was held in Mehr Singh v. Sochet Singh (1) that such institutions being partly religious and partly charitable, the office of manager partakes of the nature of a religious office and that the sale of the right of management for the personal gain of the vendor was, therefore, invalid. The nature of a Bunga is given in the said ruling and need not be here repeated. With regard to this particular Bunga in suit, Sardarni Partab Kaur in 1899 instituted a suit for the removal of Bhai Kishen Singh, who was then the Bungai. In that suit, which was decided on the 31st of January 1901, vide page 29 of the paper book, it was held that the Bunga had been founded by the ancestors of Sardar Partab Singh and that the family of the said founders were entitled to the management and to appoint a Bungai. Mr. Ram Lal on behalf of the respondent contended that the alienation of the Bunga had been made for the benefit of the soul of the deceased Sardar and that the Sardarni had power to make the alienation. He urged that as the alienation was by way of gift, it should be upheld and referred us to Ramanathan Ohetty v. Murugappa Ohetty (2) in support of the proposition that a trustee could divest himself of his trusteeship when by doing so he obtained no personal gain. That decision, however, does not appear to have any bearing on the present case. Here it seems perfectly clear that the Sardarni acted as she did with a view to depriving the reversioners of their right to manage this Bunga and appoint its Bungai. The right of managing a religious or charitable endowment cannot be alienated in the absence of a custom to the contrary (and here no such custom is even alleged), vide Ram Krishna's Hindu Law, Volume II, page 451, and the cases therein cited. There was thus no justification for this gift.

With regard to the question of compensation for improvements, our attention is drawn to the statements of certain witnesses who state that certain sums of money had been expended by Budha Singh on repairs that had become necessary. The document was executed on the 3rd of July 1913 and the Sardarni died on the 9th of September 1913. The improvements thereon could not have been very great during this period. It was contended, however, that as a matter of fact this document was merely evidence of the gift which had already been made many years previously. It is true that in the deed of gift a previous gift of the same property is referred to, but when that took place it did not state. The property left by the deceased Sardar was considerable and we are unable to see why this particular Bunga should have been allowed to fall into disrepair. We have no hesitation in holding that the gift of the Bunga was beyond the power of the Sardarni and that the respondent is not entitled to any sums of money expended in connection with repairs.

Turning now to the alienation of the property in Katra Ahluwalian, it was contended by Counsel for the appellants that no legal necessity had been made out justifying this transaction. Further it was pointed out that while the Sardarni was competent to alienate the property she did in 1881, she was not justified in making any further endowments. It appears that the whole of the property left by the deceased Sardar in Amritsar has now been alienated and it was contended that the subsequent alienations could not in any way be justified. With regard to the contention that the deed of the 25th of November 1882 was a deed of endowment and not a Will, it was pointed out that whatever the nature of the document might actually be, it was drawn up as a Will and registered as such, that, therefore, the plaintiffs-appellants were not in a position to know its actual contents and that, therefore, their omission to include the property it related to in the suit brought by them in 1883 could not in any way affect their present rights. In the plaint filed by them in 1883, they distinctly referred to this transaction describing it as a Will and pointing out that inasmuch as the Will only took effect after the demise of the testator, they did not include any property devised by the said Will. No attempt was then made to assert that the document was not a Will. In our opinion the plaintiffs-appellants did all that they were bound to do in the matter. They were not aware that the so called Will was really a deed of endowment and in a way they foreshadowed the present suit. Their silence is clearly accountable, and we are unable to see that the said silence can be regarded as prejudicing their interests in any way. As to the power of a Hindu widow to alienate property for the spiritual benefit of the last male holder, we were referred to B. D. Sirvya's Hindu Woman's Estate, page 195 and page 199. Our attention was also drawn to Puran Dai v. Jai Narain (3), Chooramani Dasi v. Baidya Nath (4), Ramkawal Singh v. Ram Kishore Das (5) and Harmanage v. Ram Gopal (6) and it was contended that an alienation made by a widow should not be for her own benefit but for the benefit of the last male holder. Mr. Moti Sagar, on the other hand, referred us to Collector of Masulipatam v. Cataly Vencata Narrainapah (7), Rhub Lal Singh v. Anodhya Misser (8) and pages 200-202 of Sirvya's Hindu Woman's Estate. It is not, however, necessary to discuss these rulings in detail, as there is no real dispute between the parties on the question. Clearly, whether or not an alienation made by a widow is for the benefit of her deceased husband is a question of fact to be decided on the circumstances of each case. Similarly whether or not the amount of property alienated is excessive is a question that has to be decided according to the relative values of the total estate and of the property alienated. No rule of Hindu Law nor any other authority has been cited laying down any definite fractional proportion that can be regarded as being within the competence of a widow to alienate. In the present case it will be seen that in 1881 the Sardarni dedicated certain property, which dedication was subsequently attacked by the reversioners. It appears from the judgment of the Chief Court that this alienation was justified, as having been authorised by the deceased Sardar and also by the fact that the value of the property alienated could not be regarded as excessive having regard to the value of the estate left by the said Sardar. Now the learned Judges of the Chief Court say that what had been authorised by the deceased Sardar was the building of the Samadh and Shivala and the making of provision for their maintenance. This the widow had carried out and property had been endowed. No mention was then made of any langar or sadabart. The Will or expression of the Sardar's wishes (for it was an oral and not a written Will) was subsequently further amplified in the deed dated the 25th November 1882. There is, however, not a tittle of evidence on the record to support this fact and, as pointed out by Mr. Sheo Narain, the first contention appears to have been that it had been the desire of Sardar Partab Singh that a Samadh and Shivala alone should be built. We are unable to see any reason for holding that the widow was carrying out any expressed wish of her deceased husband when she thought fit to establish a langar and sadabart and endowed property for that purpose. It is also curious that the widow should have deemed it necessary to establish a langar and sadabart nine years after the death of her husband. It would appear that the deceased lady was very much under the influence of Nirmala Sadhs and that it was they who induced her to make these subsequent alienations. Had the deceased Sardar really expressed any wish or made any Will to the effect that a langar and sadabart should be established in connection with his Samadh, it is a little difficult to understand why his wishes were not given effect to in 1881 when the first deed of dedication was executed. It will be seen that in the deed of the 25th November 1882 it is said that the income of the houses already made waqf was not sufficient to meet the expenses of the langar, the sadabast, the Samadh and the recitation of the Granth. There is nothing to show that the income of the waqf property was not sufficient to meet the legitimate expenses in connection with the Samadh, Shivala and the recitation of the Granth therein. In these circumstances we are of opinion that there was no justification for the alienation of the property in suit and we accordingly accept this appeal and grant plaintiffs-appellants a decree for possession of the properties in suit. The respondents will pay the costs of the appellants.

*Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Arts 142, 144—

In a suit for the recovery of possession, where the entry in the Record of Rights is in favour of the defendant, the plaintiff must prove his possession within twelve years of the suit. [p. 961, col 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Mczaffarpur.

Messrs. Ramesh Prasad and Sambhu Saran,
for the Appellants.

Messrs. Ganesh Dut Singh and S. N. Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in the suit which gave rise to this second appeal alleged that the lands in dispute fell into his patti under a Collectorate partition, but that the defendants 1st party had fraudulently procured the entry of their names in respect to the lands in the Settlement Record and had dispossessed him from $5\frac{1}{2}$ kathas in plot No. 304 and threatened his possession of 10 dhurs of plot No. 304 and 2 kathas of plot No. 267.

The defendants on their side claimed the lands as part of their patti and as having been all along in their possession. They also pleaded limitation.

The suit was instituted on the 16th December 1913, and about two months later a Commissioner was appointed to report whether the land was in the patti of the plaintiff or in that of the defendants. The Commissioner first reported in favour of the defendants, but on objection by the plaintiff was directed to make a second enquiry which resulted in a report favourable to the plaintiff. The defendants then in their turn objected and asked for the examination of the Commissioner and for a postponement of the hearing, but the Court refused the request and proceeded to try the case. The plaintiff appeared himself alone for examination, and the defendants, owing to the Court's refusal of their request for time, declined either to cross-examine the plaintiff or to call witnesses of their own. The Munsif then proceeded to deliver judgment and decreed the suit ex parte, basing his finding on the plaintiff's evidence and the second report of the Commissioner.

There was an appeal to the District Judge who upheld the Munsif's judgment, but on second appeal to this Court the decree of the District Judge was set aside and the judgment and decree of the Munsif vacated. The case was remanded to the Munsif's Court with a direction to obtain the attendance of the Commissioner and to allow both parties to examine him. He was not to allow either party to call further evidence but was to hear arguments and pass judgment on the basis of the evidence of the Commissioner.

On remand the Munsif found that the settlement entry was correct and that the defendants were in possession at the time of the settlement and continued in possession, and that the plaintiff had failed to show that he was in possession before 1320 or that he had been in possession within 12 years of the suit. He held the suit to be barred by limitation. At the same time he decided that the disputed lands fell in the plaintiff's patti. He dismissed the suit.

On appeal the Additional Subordinate Judge reversed the finding of the Munsif, holding that as title was found with the plaintiff and the defendants had failed to file the Settlement khatian to show when the record was finally published, the Munsif was not entitled to hold that possession since the entry in the record amounted to possession for 12 years adverse to the plaintiff. He held that the suit was not barred and so decreed the appeal and the suit.

QASIM ALI v. GHULAM MUHAMMAD.

The only question arising in this second appeal is one of limitation.

The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has laid much stress on the fact that the defendants did not produce the Settlement Khatian showing them to be in possession. Considering that in his plaint the plaintiff admitted that the settlement entry was against him, it was not necessary that the Khatian should be produced to throw the onus on the plaintiff of showing that the entry was incorrect. The plaintiff examined himself only to rebut the presumption. With regard to the date of the final publication of the record, it is well known by the Courts in Mozafferpur that there have been no settlement proceedings in the district since 1900 at the latest, so that the Munsif was justified in finding that a possession dating since the final publication of the settlement had become in 1913, when the suit was instituted, a possession for more than 12 years.

With regard to the allegation of fraud in procuring the entry in the Settlement Record, the plaintiff produced no evidence, so that it cannot be held that there was any fraud.

The learned Additional Subordinate Judge argues that prior to 1907, the Settlement Officer had no power to decide questions of title between proprietor and proprietor, but the fact is that in the Settlement Khatian the entry relates not to title but to possession; the defendants were found in possession and the plaintiff failed to prove that he had ever been in possession. It may be true that under the partition the lands in dispute fell within the patti of the plaintiff, but he has failed to show that he was ever in possession. The burden of proof in this case was on the plaintiff to show that he was in possession sometime within twelve years of the suit; to show an anterior title was not sufficient—Mohima Ohunder Mozoomdar v. Monesh Ohunder Neoghi (1), Mahammud Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh (2), Dharani Kanta Lahiri Chowdhury v. Gabar Ali Khan (3). The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has not come to any finding that the plaintiff was ever in possession.

There is no doubt as to the findings of both Courts as to the plaintiff's title, but the lower Appellate Court has misconceived the effect of that finding on the question of possession; it does not rebut the entry of possession in the Settlement Record. I do not find that on the question of limitation the Munsif's findings are vague, as suggested by the lower Appellate Court. I hold in agreement with the learned Munsif that the plaintiff failed to show that the entry in the Record of Rights was incorrect, that he also failed to show that he had ever been in possession, and that the defendants must be held to have been in possession since the final publication of the Record of Rights at least.

On these findings the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the judgment and the decree of the Munsif restored. The appeal is allowed with costs in both the Appellate Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Custom—Alienation—Collaterals, remote, right of, to challenge alienation—Burden of proof—Awans of Mauza Pholriwala, Jullundur District.

No general rule can be laid down as to the applicability to all cases alike of the principle that up to a certain degree of propinquity it is to be presumed that agnatic relations of the alienor are entitled to impeach an alienation of ancestral land and that beyond that degree it is to be presumed that they have no such right. [p. 962, col. 1.]

The general custom of the Punjab does not recognise the right of a collateral, however remotely related, to challenge alienations; and in the case of very distant collaterals the onus of proving a right to control rests on the person who challenges an alienation and not on the alienee. [p. 962, col. 2.]

Among Awans of Mauza Pholriwala in the Jullundur District there is no special custom entitling collaterals in the 10th degree to contest an alienation effected by a childless proprietor. [p. 962, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jullundur, dated the 25th July 1914.

Mr. Oertel, for the Appellants

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was an action for the recovery of a plot of land sold by one Fattu, a childless Awan proprietor of Mauza Pholriwala in the District of Jullundur. It is beyond dispute that the land is ancestral qua the plaintiffs, who are the alienor's collaterals in the 10th degree; and the sole question, which arises upon the certificate granted by the lower Appellate Court, is whether collaterals so remotely related as the plaintiffs are entitled to contest the alienation.

Now, we are prepared to accept the contention that no general rule can be laid down as to the applicability to all cases alike of the principle that up to a certain degree of propinquity it is to be presumed that agnatic relations of the alienor are entitled to impeach an alienation of ancestral land, and that beyond that degree it is to be presumed that they have no such right. If the matter rested on theoretical grounds alone, it could be said that, as long as the property was proved to be ancestral, an agnate irrespective of the remoteness of his relationship with the alienor would be entitled to object to the alienation; but the decision of such cases does not proceed upon purely theoretical grounds. We find that the members of the tribes governed by agricultural custom do draw a distinction between near agnates and remote agnates, and that in at least four cases, vide Muhammad v. Jahan Khan (1), Dula Singh v. Warir Singh (2), Mangal v. Uhetu (3) and Sawan Singh v. Harnaman (4), it was held that collaterals related in the 10th degree were not entitled to control the power of alienation of a childless proprietor. There is only one case, namely, Khazan Singh

v. Relu (5); in which a collateral within the 10th degree succeeded in establishing his claim. The whole question was considered in a Division Bench judgment reported as Pal Singh v. Ganda Singh (6) and it was laid down, after a consideration of the authorities on the subject, that the general custom of the Punjab does not recognise the right of a collateral, however remotely related, to challenge alienations; and that in the case of very distant collaterals the onus of proving a right to control rests on the person who challenges an alienation, and not on the alienee. In that case the collaterals were related the 8th degree and the learned Judges held that the onus of proving a special custom entitling them to control the power of alienation rested upon them and that they had failed to prove such a custom.

In view of the authorities cited above, and having regard to the fact that the alienor was a member of the Awan tribe, a tribe which recognises very wide powers of alienation, we are of opinion that the lower Courts were justified in placing the onus of proving a special custom upon the plaintiffs. It is admitted that there is no evidence to establish the custom, and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Section 92 of the Evidence Act merely prevents evidence being given to vary the terms of a document in a proceeding between the parties to that document and their representatives. There is nothing to prevent two persons who are arrayed on the same side, such as joint vendees, to give evidence to vary the terms of the written instrument in a contest between themselves [p. 963, cols. 1 & 2.]

In the absence of an allegation or proof that relying upon the recitals in a sale-deed a person has acted to his detriment, the plea of estoppel is not available to him. [p. 964, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 163 of 1917, decided on the 19th of June 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 244 of 1915, decided on the 3rd of September 1917 by the Munsif, Ellichpur.

Messrs. M. R. Bobde and J. J. Ghose, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and R. B. Tikekar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Govind Ambadas, who was the original owner of survey numbers 5 and 22, executed on the 25th June 1904 a sale-deed in favour of Zingraji and one Jansa for Rs 1,250 (one thousand two hundred and fifty). The defendants Nos. 1 and 2, in execution of a decree against the heirs of Jansa, attached half share of field No. 22 and half share of the crops of that field. The plaintiff Zingraji sues for possession of half share of the field and compensation for the value of the crops. The plaintiff has been successful in the Courts below. The lower Courts have found that though the sale-deed stands in the names of Zingraji and Jansa as joint vendees of the two fields, in reality each was the owner of one field, and that the property has been enjoyed in this manner up to the date of the attachment, which took place on the 28th November 1914.

The first point for consideration is whether notwithstanding the language and terms of the sale-deed evidence can be admitted, as between the parties to this suit, to vary its terms. Section 92 merely prevents evidence being given to vary the terms of a document in a proceeding between the parties to that document and their representatives. In this case no evidence could have been given as against Govind Ambadas or his heirs and representatives to show what has been allowed to be shown in the present case. But Govind Ambadas is not a party to this suit. There is nothing to prevent two persons who are arrayed on the same side, as in this case, as joint vendees to give evidence to vary the terms of the written instrument in a contest between themselves. This view is supported by the case cited by the lower Court, Mulchand v. Madho Ram (1), also by the local case of Gangabai v. Pandoo (2). The case of Rahiman v. Elahi Baksh (3) has not been subsequently followed by the Calcutta High Court, and the facts seem to be somewhat meagrely reported.

If oral evidence is admissible to prove the allegations of the plaintiff, then I think the finding is justified by the evidence. Upon the death of Jansa, mutation took place, and the vendor Govind Ambadas was examined before the Revenue Officer. Both he as well as Jansa's widow admitted that the sale, though apparently a joint sale was a sale of field No. 5 to Jansa and of No. 22 to Zingraji. In the Record of Rights field No. 22, the one now in dispute, is shown as being exclusively in the possession and ownership of Zingraji. The vendor has been examined as a witness, and he proves the allegations of the plaintiff. There were mortgages in which the representatives of Jansa have been mortgaging field No. 5 and Zingraji field No. 22, but it seems on the 16th June 1913 the appellants' father Fida Ali took a mortgage of half share of each of the fields from Jansa's son. This mortgage is called a possessory mortgage, but simultaneously with the mortgage there is said to have been a lease to Jansa's son: in other words, possession was never actually transferred in pursuance of the mortgage and lease to Fida Ali. Fida Ali sued for the rent of the fields, and in execution of this decree the attachment complained of has taken place. The conduct of Jansa's representatives shortly before the present disputes cannot have any weight attached to it. Moreover, the transactions were purely paper transactions, no possession having been transferred. There is nothing to show that Zingraji's ex-exclusive possession of field No. 22 has been disturbed. These facts justified the finding of the Courts below.

It is urged that assuming that evidence can be given, the vendor is estopped from giving evidence. This is a novel plea. There was no plea of estoppel on the part of the appellant in the Court of first instance. He could not have been misled by the terms of the document if he had made the slightest inquiry. As there is no allegation or proof that relying upon the recitals in the sale-deed he has acted to his detriment, the plea of estoppel is not available to him. Moreover, there is no authority for the application of the doctrine of estoppel to a witness who is not a party to the suit, where the party calling him is not estopped.

It is urged that there was no motive for one sale-deed, if the transaction was really of the nature deposed to by the vendor. The vendor says that delivery of possession took place separately to each of the vendees of their respective fields. There does not appear to be any adequate motive, but one reason is suggested on behalf of the respondents, namely, that by this procedure they saved a rupee in stamp and a little in registration fee and probably a little in other conveyancing charges.

It is urged that as the property vested jointly by the sale-deed in the two vendees, they cannot, without a further registered instrument as between themselves or without proof of a partition, claim exclusive title to any parcel. The argument, however, overlooks that the Transfer of Property Act was not in force in Berar when the transaction took place. If separate payment and separate delivery were made and this was followed by separate mutation, and if the understanding of the parties was as pleaded by the plaintiff, then I think the plaintiff has sufficiently proved that he is the exclusive owner of field No. 22 and of the crops therein.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act (I of 1900), applicability of—Alienor, death of, leaving widow, effect of.

The Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act contemplates only those cases in which the reversioner can obtain possession of the estate immediately upon the death of the alienor, and does not apply to a case in which the alienor died leaving a widow during whose lifetime the reversioner could not obtain possession of the property alienated by the male proprietor. Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Hoshiarpur at Gurdaspur, dated the 10th May 1915.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Nand Lal and Mehar Chand Mahajan for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are set out in extenso in the judgment of the Additional Judge, and the sole question for determination is whether the Punjab Limitation Act of 1900 applies to a case in which the alienor died leaving a widow during whose lifetime the reversioner could not obtain possession of the property alienated by the male proprietor. We have considered the arguments advanced by the learned Vakil for the appellant and are of opinion that the aforesaid Act contemplates only those cases in which the reversioner can obtain possession of the estate immediately upon the death of the alienor and that it was not intended that that Act should apply to a case of this kind. This view has been taken in Miran Bakhsh v. Ahmad (1), Sohnu v. Labha (2), Khiali Ram v. Gulab Khan (3) and Bhagat Singh v. Sher Singh (4), but Mr. Tek Chand contends that these cases are distinguishable on the ground that in every one of them the alienor had died before the aforesaid Act came into force, and that the provisions of the said Act were consequently not applicable. It is, however, clear that the learned Judges, who decided these cases, did not proceed upon the ground suggested by the learned Vakil; and conceding for the sake of argument that the decisions are obiter dicta, we are of opinion that those dicta contain the correct enunciation of the law, and that the suit is governed by Article 141 of the Indian Limitation Act.

We observe that the judgment of a single Bench in Ganesha Ram v. Panju Singh (5) is directly to the point, and that that case cannot be distinguished even on the ground put forward by Mr. Tek Chand. We accordingly hold that the suit has been rightly held to be within time, and we must, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree, setting aside of—Sufficient cause for non-appearance—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

Under Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code a Court can set aside an ex parte decree only when it is satisfied that the defendant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing. [p. 966, col. 1.]

Where the very basis which would give the Judge jurisdiction to set aside an ex parte decree does not, on his own order, exist, the High Court can interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 966, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Darbhanga.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Bimoli Ch. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners, who are the plaintiffs in the Courts below, instituted a suit against the opposite party in the Court of the First Munsif for declaration of title with respect to 12 kottas of land and for recovery of possession and also mesne profits.

After the usual preliminary steps, the case came on for hearing on the 25th March 1919. On that day the plaintiffs filed a Hazira of his witnesses, and the defendant applied for time. That petition for time was rejected by the Court on the ground that it was frivolous. After having disposed of this application on behalf of the defendant the case was taken up. The defendant's Pleader stated at that time that he would then contest the suit. The Court then waited from 4 to 4-15 P. M. for the Hazira of defendant's witnesses, but no such Hazira was filed and the Court then proceeded to hear the suit.

The plaintiff examined Ramesh Prashad and the Commissioner's report was marked Exhibit 1, Khatyan was marked Exhibit 2, Barawarda was marked Exhibit 3, and the Court held that the claim of the plaintiff was true to the extent of 11 kottas and 18½ dhurs of land. It is clear from the order of the Munsif passed on the 25th March, and it has been conceded by the learned Vakil for the opposite party, that after the defendant's application for a re-issue of summons and time was rejected by the Munsif, neither the defendant nor his Pleader appeared in his Court. As I have already said, the suit was, therefore, decided ex parte.

The defendant thereupon filed an application under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, before one Mr. Mukherji, who succeeded the Munsif who had passed the ex parte decree. Mr. Mukherji, after considering the grounds stated in the petition for restoration of the suit, came to the conclusion that no case had been made out for the restoration of the suit.

Against this order, the opposite party defendant went up to the District Judge, who, by his order dated the 9th of August, directed the suit to be restored and the case to be proceeded with, from the stage at which it was decided ex parte.

This Court has now been moved by the plaintiffs to interfere with the order passed by the District Judge and I now proceed to consider the objection that has been raised by the petitioners against the validity of that order. Under Order IX, rule 13, a Court can restore a suit only when the Court is satisfied that the defendant was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing. It is remarkable that the learned Judge in his order comes to no finding whatsoever with respect to the cause of non-appearance of the defendant. There is not a syllable in the whole order, which would give any indication as to why the defendant was prevented from appearing on that day, because that and that alone would give the learned Judge jurisdiction to interfere with the decree passed by Mr. Lahiri on the 25th of March 1919. The learned Judge does not seem to have appreciated that he was dealing with an application under Order IX, rule 13, and not dealing with an appeal against the decree of the Munsif. His whole order deals with the propriety of the Munsif's decree, and not with the only point that he had to consider, i.e., the sufficiency of cause for defendant's non-appearance. His order, therefore, must be set aside on that ground. I, however, proceed to examine further the learned Judge's order. The learned Judge has assumed that the defendant was actually present with his witnesses, when the suit was decided ex parte. Where the learned Judge gets this from, it is difficult to understand, because if the defendant and his witnesses were present, the case could not have been decided ex parte and there could be no application under Order IX, rule 13. Therefore, in my opinion, the learned Judge acted entirely beyond his jurisdiction to hold in one breath that the defendant and his witnesses were present when the case was decided and in the same breath to hold that he was restoring the suit under Order IX, rule 13. It is conceded before me that the learned Judge is clearly in error on this point, but this is, however, the only ground on which he has restored the suit. The order is, therefore, bad also on the ground that the learned Judge decided the case upon a ground which had no existence.

BASHESHAH NATH v. RAM KISHEN DAS.

I am, however, reminded of my powers under section 115 of the Civil Procedure

Code and it is respectfully urged that when there was no defect of procedure, but the Judge came to wrong conclusions on law and fact, this Court will not interfere in exercise of its powers under revisional jurisdiction. If I had been of the opinion that the learned Judge had gone wrong in weighing evidence or had taken an erroneous view on any question of law, I would have no doubt agreed with the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the opposite party. But where I find that the very basis which would give the Judge jurisdiction to restore the suit did not, on his own order, exist, I could not only interfere under section 115, clause (c), but under section 115 (a). In my opinion it was a wrong exercise of jurisdiction and also in the exercise of jurisdiction an illegality was committed by the lower Appellate Court. The authorities that have been cited by the learned Vakil for the opposite party in my opinion have no application whatsoever to the facts of the present case. I, therefore, make this Rule absolute, discharge the order passed by the District Judge dated 9th August 1919, restore the order of the Munsif, dated the 10th of May 1919, refusing to set aside the ex parte decree and I allow hearing fee one gold mohur.

decree ceases to exist and the appeal cannot, therefore, be heard.

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Delhi, dated the 18th January 1915.

Mr. Santanam, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, Messrs. Balwant Rai and Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from the final decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Delhi, in a partnership case. There were three partners, Ram Kishen Das, plaintiff, and Basheshar Nath and Raghu Mal, defendants. According to the final decree Basheshar Nath and Raghu Mal are to pay Rs. 1,742-13-0 and Rs. 3,944 respectively into Court and out of those sums the plaintiff is to receive Rs. 5,537-13-0.

Basheshar Nath filed an appeal to this Court on the 5th of March 1915. It appears, however, that prior to the filing of this appeal Ram Kishen had on the 28th January 1915 filed an application for review in the lower Court, and this application was accepted and the decree was set aside by order of the 6th May 1915, the Court at the same time ordering a further inquiry to be made in the case.

As the decree appealed from no longer exists, we are clearly of opinion that the appeal cannot be heard. This view is supported by Kanhaiya Lal v. Baldeo Frasad (1). That case is on all fours with the present one and it was held that the order for review superseded the original decree, the decree under appeal had ceased to exist and the appeal could not be heard. This was followed in Birbasi Lal v. Salig Ram (2). We see no reason to differ from these authorities and we hold that the present appeal cannot be heard and we accordingly dismiss it but leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

As the original decree has been set aside by the lower Court, it is open to it to make any further inquiries into the case which it may deem necessary.

Appeal dismissed.

Nos. 1 TO 4 AND 6—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 66—Money decree, execution of—Attachment of immovables—Mortgage, execution of, by judgment-debtor to avoid sale—Money borrowed, non-payment of, to decree-holder—Auction-sale of attached property—Suit by mortgagee against judgment-debtor and auction-purchaser, maintainability of.

One V. obtained a money-decree against the 1st defendant. In execution he attached the latter's properties. The 1st defendant executed a mortgage of the properties to plaintiff in order to avoid the sale by paying the borrowed amount to the purchaser. The payment, however, was not made and V. brought the properties to auction-sale and they were purchased by 4th defendant, who mortgaged them to 5th defendant. Plaintiff sued the 1st defendant and his sons and 4th and 5th defendants on his mortgage:

Held, that section 66, Civil Procedure Code, did not bar the suit as 4th and 5th defendants did not hold the properties for the benefit of the 1st defendant. [p. 968, col. 2.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. O. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellant.—The suit is barred by the provisions of section 66, Civil Procedure Code. The mortgage was after the attachment and is obnoxious to section 64, Civil Procedure Code. The last sentence of clause (2) of section 66 will not apply, as that applies only to execution proceedings and not to suits.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate-General), for the Respondents.—

MONGOLA SWAYI v. VISVANATHA SANTASO SINGARAO.

Section 66, Civil Procedure Code, does not operate as a bar. The suit is based on the mortgage to the plaintiff and is brought against 1st defendant as the owner and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 as the persons in possession. There is no allegation that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 do hold the property as aliases for plaintiff.

Section 64, Civil Procedure Code, will not affect the plaintiff, as defendants Nos. 4 and 5 have no better rights than the plaintiff.

See Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (1).

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant was the owner of the property. A money-decree was obtained against him by one Venkateswara Rao. In execution of that decree, the properties in suit were attached. To obviate the sale, the 1st defendant borrowed from the plaintiff and gave him a mortgage on the property. Without paying the amount to the decree-holder, he retained the money. He did not enter up satisfaction of the decree. Venkateswara Rao brought the property to sale in Court auction and 4th defendant became the purchaser. The 5th defendant is a mortgagee under the 4th defendant. Plaintiff sues on his mortgage.

The defence is that section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) bars the suit. The Courts below have rejected this plea and we think rightly. The suit is based on the mortgage and treats the 1st defendant as the owner. The 4th and the 5th defendants are impleaded as being in possession. The plaintiff's case is, not that the 4th and 5th defendants hold the property for his benefit, but that they are unlawfully in possession against his mortgagor's rights. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (1), the object of the section is to prevent purchases being made in Court sales benami for the plaintiff. If the plaintiff comes into Court with the case that the person who stands between him and the property is his alias, then the section would bar him. The present question under section 66 arises, not because of plaintiff's claim under a benami purchase, but because the defendant sought to resist the mortgage on the ground that it was made after an attachment and was, therefore, obnoxious to section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code. The reply of the plaintiff was that section 64 cannot affect him because the 4th and the 5th defendants have no better rights than the 1st defendant has. In our opinion, section 66 does not affect this class of cases. It is open to argument, as pointed out by the Patna High Court in Ram Khelawan Pande v. Asgar Ali (2), that a plaint will not be within the mischief of section 66 if the claim was anterior to that of the resisting purchaser. Even apart from this view, as the claim against defendants Nos. 4 and 5 is not based on their purchase being for the benefit of the plaintiff, the objection fails and must be overruled. The view taken in Allahabad in Kishan Lal v. Garuruddhwaja Prasad Singh (3) and in Ram Narain v. Mohanian (4) did not do justice to the intention of the Legislature as pointed out by the Privy Council in Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (1) and we are not prepared to follow them. As regards Rama Kurup v. Sridevi (5) it is enough to say that the narrow view taken in that case did not find favour with Subramania Aiyar and Benson, JJ., in Kollantavida Nanikoth Onnakkann v. Tiruvalli Kalandan Aliyamma (6). On another ground also, we can uphold the lower Court's decision. By the last sentence of clause (2) of section 66, the Legislature has expressly saved the rights of third parties. Mr. Venkatachariar contended that this sentence only applies to proceedings in execution and not to suits. We are unable to agree. This part of the Civil Procedure Code deals with suits and objections thereto and not to execution proceedings. The language "or interfere with the rights of a third person to proceed against that property" would exactly cover the present case. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the Courts below are right and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 5 (1) (c), 111, 112—Occupancy rights, acquisition of—Construction of clause (1) (c) of s. 5—Record of Rights, entry in, whether agreement—Admission, erroneous effect of.

Clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 5 of the Punjab Tenancy Act provides that a tenant who is at the date of the passing of the Act the representative of a person who settled as a cultivator in the village, in which the land occupied by such tenant is situate, along with the founders of the village, is to be deemed to have a right of occupancy in the land so occupied: whether the land was occupied from the time of first settlement or from a later date [p. 969, col. 2.]

A mere entry in the Record of Rights does not necessarily amount to an agreement [p. 969, col. 2.]

An erroneous admission by a tenant that he is a non-occupancy tenant, even though recorded in the Record of Rights, will not operate to deprive him of his right. [p. 970, col. 2.]

Revision from the order of the Commissioner, Jullundur, dated the 23rd July 1918.

Mr. Beni Pershad, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Taj Din, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—I have heard Counsel for the parties. The so called parcha tasdiq, which forms a part of the Record of Rights of the Settlement of 1882, contains a passage, which I translate as follows :—

“Jiwan, tenant, on behalf of himself and his minor brothers made to-day the following statement:—My father came and settled in this village in the Sambat year 1902 (A. D. 1845), broke up the waste of Khasra No. 131 in that year and cultivated it thereafter. We have been in possession since his death and are entered as occupancy tenants in the former record. We broke up Khasra No. 156 in Sambat 1920-21 (A. D. 1863-64). We are tenants-at-will in respect to this and (here the record changes from the first person to the third) it was stated that the rent was rent in kind as in Khata No. 3.

“Accordingly the owner, Jalal Din, admitted the statement of the tenants. Since the father of tenants cultivated the occupancy land at the time that he settled in the village, they must be recorded as occupancy tenants in respect of it, in accordance with section 5 (3) of Act XXVIII of 1868. And the land which is non-occupancy land will continue to be recorded as non-occupancy.”

The first point to be noticed about this record is that it indicates an apparent misunderstanding of the law contained in section 5 (3) of Act XXVIII of 1868, on the part of the officer who passed the order and recorded the proceeding. He appears to have thought that the law drew a distinction between land cultivated at the time of the tenant's first settlement in the village, and land cultivated by him thereafter. But the clause provides that a tenant who is at the date of the passing of the Act the representative of a person who settled as a cultivator in the village, in which the land occupied by such tenant is situate, along with the founders of the village is to be deemed to have a right of occupancy in the land so occupied: whether the land was occupied from the time of first settlement or from a later date.

The reference in the record to the rate of rent throws no light upon the question: because the rate of rent shown in Khata No. 3 is the all-round rate of the village for all tenants, occupancy and non occupancy alike (one fifth of produce together with $2\frac{1}{4}$ seers per maund for expenses).

On the facts that were stated by the tenant and admitted by the landlord, the former was entitled to occupancy rights in the whole of the land in question. The only question in regard to which doubt arises is whether the tenant's statement that he is a non-occupancy tenant in a portion of that land constitutes an agreement waiving the occupancy status. It has been strongly urged before me that the mere fact that the statement is recorded in the Record of Rights makes it an agreement. But that is certainly not so. Both under section 2 of Act XXVIII of 1868, and under section 112 of Act XVI of 1887, certain entries are to be deemed to be agreements. If all entries were to be deemed to be agreements, merely because they are recorded in a Record of Rights, there would be no necessity for a provision of the law expressly declaring that some of them are to be deemed agreements. It is an inevitable inference that entries, other than entries specified in the second part of section 2 of Act XXVIII of 1868, and in section 112 of Act XVI of 1887, may or may not be agreements according to their tenor and to the circumstances under which they were recorded.

It is a very significant fact that each of the two clauses which I have just cited, while providing that entries made before a certain date in respect of certain matters shall be deemed to be agreements, establishes this rule in respect of those matters specified, and not in respect of others under the Tenancy Act. Chapter II of Act XXVIII of 1868 is excluded from the rule laid down in the second clause of section 2: and similarly there is no provision in section 112 of Act XVI of 1887 in respect to entries determining the status of a tenant as an occupancy tenant or a tenant-at-will. It seems plain that the Legislature had a deliberate intention of placing upon a special footing entries purporting to determine occupancy or non-occupancy status, and of declining to make the assumption that such entries were agreements, unless their character as agreements was otherwise established.

One of the rulings which has been cited, in order to show that the entry in this case is an agreement, is Ghazi v. Juma Khan (1). In that case landlord and tenant concurred in saying that the land had been given 20 years previously to the tenant in a cultivated state, that the tenant had effected no improvements, that the landlord could not evict the tenant at pleasure, and that the tenant agreed to pay a stated cash malikana to the landlord in addition to the revenue. Here obviously was an agreement made by way of compromise: but it was an agreement, not in virtue of a general rule of law causing all entries to be viewed as agreements, but in virtue of the arrangements which it embodied and upon which the landlord and tenant had agreed to compromise their differences.

Similarly, the findings in Kadar Din v. Nur (2) arrive at the conclusion that the entries in a particular case amount to an agreement under the second part of section 2 of Act XXVIII of 1868, but they do not exclude from discussion the question whether another set of entries in a different case do or do not amount to such an agreement.

Rahim Bakhsh v. Rahim Bakhsh (3), on the other hand, definitely lays down the principle that the mere entry in the Record of Rights does not necessarily amount to an agreement; and, in particular, that a mere voluntary admission by a tenant, even though recorded in the Record of Rights, will not operate to deprive him of his right.

The question, therefore, in the present case remains, so far as previous rulings go, entirely an open one. It is whether the record which I have translated at the beginning of this order is an agreement. There is no general rule of law which determines it to be such.

I think that it is plainly not an agreement. The officer who recorded it misunderstood the law, as has already been pointed out. Notwithstanding this fact—a fact which would tend in many cases to cause a particular statement to be put into the mouth of a deponent—it is possible that the tenant volunteered the statement that he was a tenant-at-will in certain land. But in doing so he was merely expressing his view of the law. He had already stated facts which, on a correct interpretation of the law, showed him to be entitled to occupancy rights; and the fact that he (like the presiding officer) misunderstood the legal position does not amount to an agreement to waive his rights.

The entry, though not an agreement, is, in respect to the facts stated by the tenant and admitted to be correct by the landlord, a valuable piece of evidence, and a presumption of truth arises in respect to those facts. It has been urged before me that this presumption of truth applies to the tenant's inferences from the facts, and, therefore, to his statement that he is merely a tenant-at-will. But, of course, a presumption that a fact is correct is an entirely different thing from a presumption that an inference is justified.

The conditions of section 5 (1) (c) of Act XVI of 1887 are satisfied in respect to the land in issue in the present application. I accept the application, and cancel the notice of ejectment on the ground that the applicant is a tenant under section 5 (1) (c). This order applies to present field numbers 816 min, 817, 818, 819, 820; making 23 bighas, 12 biswas in all.

PUNNI NADDAF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 17—Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Security or deposit, whether condition precedent.

Under section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act it is a condition precedent to the granting of a new trial that the applicant should, at the time of presenting his application, deposit in Court the decretal amount or tender security for payment of the same.

Civil revision from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga.

Mr. Bimla Ch. Sinha, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner obtained an ex parte decree on the 13th January 1918 and applied for execution. In execution the judgment-debtor was arrested on the 12th March 1918 and was placed before the Court on the 14th March. He undertook to apply to have the ex parte decree which had been obtained against him set aside under Order IX, rule 13. He made the application on the 14th April 1919, but did not deposit any security such as is required under section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The decree-holder, the present petitioner, objected that the application was time-barred and that no security having been given, the application should not be entertained.

On the 12th July 1919 the decree-holder applied for summonses for his witnesses and there was an adjournment to the 26th July. On the 26th July none of the petitioner's witnesses were present because the summonses had not been served. The decree-holder applied for an adjournment which was refused, and the case was heard ex parte and the ex parte decree was set aside.

The grounds taken by the learned Vakil for the petitioner are that as the opposite party came to know of the decree passed against him on the 12th March when he was arrested, his application made on the 14th April was four days late and that, therefore, it was barred by limitation under Article 164 and so the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. This ground seems good. There is nothing on the record to show that the Court satisfied itself that there were reasonable grounds for the delay in filing the application.

The next ground taken is that under section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act the application could not be heard unless security had been deposited as required by that section. In Jogir Ahir v. Bishen Dayal Singh (1) it was decided that it is a condition precedent to the granting of a new trial that, in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, an applicant should, at the time of presenting his application for a new trial, deposit in Court the decretal amount, or tender security for payment of the same. It is true, it seems that on the 29th April a security bond was filed but the security offered was found to be insufficient. I am of opinion that under the circumstances the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the application and the order passed thereon must be set aside.

The opposite party is not represented.

Order set aside.

and obtained a decree against defendant No. 2 alone, who appealed impleading the plaintiffs alone as respondents. The plaintiffs filed cross-objections and in their memorandum of objections impleaded defendant No. 1 also among the respondents. No notice was, however, issued to him. The Appellate Court passed a decree making the defendant No. 1 jointly liable with defendant No. 2. Against his decree defendant No. 1 preferred a second appeal to the High Court:

Held, that as defendant No. 1 was no party to the appeal, no cross-objection under Order XLI, rule 22, of the Civil Procedure Code could be entertained against him and the lower Appellate Court was not justified in passing a decree against him. [p. 972, col. 2; p. 973, cols. 1 & 2.]

Bakshi Bindeswari Prasad v. Dheninder Das, 39 Ind. Cas. 662; 2 P. L. J. 162; Nga Tin v. Nga Saw, 29 Ind. Cas. 610; 2 U. B. R. (1915) 58, followed.

The powers given by Order XLI, rule 33, of the Civil Procedure Code are discretionary and no Court would be justified in making use of that rule to pass a decree in favour of a litigant who has failed to avail himself of the ordinary remedy by way of appeal. [p. 974, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 6th March 1919, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, Multan, dated the 26th April 1918, dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs against defendant No. 1 and decreeing Rs. 1,157 with proportionate costs in plaintiffs' favour against defendant No. 2.

Malak Muhammad Hussain, for the Appellants.

Lala Har Gopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case brought a suit on bahi account against (1) Ilahi Bakhsh, and (2) Qadar Bakhsh on the following allegations:—

A balance for Rs. 615 was struck in 1911 which was signed both by defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2. Again in 1915 a balance of Rs. 1,100 was struck and was signed by defendant No. 2 alone. Adding to it certain other items the total amount claimed was Rs. 1,469. In defence the defendant No. 1 pleaded that the account in reality concerned defendant No. 2 alone and that he had put down his signature only as a witness. The Court of first instance after a review of the evidence held that the defendant No. 1 was not liable and that the debt was due from the defendant No. 2 alone. Objections were taken to some of the items in the account by the defendant No. 2 which were partially allowed, and eventually a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff-iffs against the defendant No. 2 for the sum of Rs. 1,157. Against this decree the defendant No. 2 preferred an appeal impleading the plaintiffs alone as the respondents in the case. The plaintiffs-respondents then filed objections under Order XLI, rule 22, of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to a sum of Rs. 312 with respect to which the claim had been disallowed by the Court of first instance. In the memorandum of objection Qadar Bakhsh, the defendant No. 2, is mentioned as the defendant-appellant and among the respondents are mentioned the plaintiffs and also Ilahi Bakhsh, the defendant No. 1. On this petition of objections notice was ordered to go to the appellant. No notice was ever given to the defendant No. 1. This fact was admitted by the learned Vakil who appeared in this Court for the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court after considering the appeal and the objections came to the conclusion that Ilahi Bakhsh and Qadar Bakhsh were jointly indebted to the extent of Rs. 615-7-9. The decree was passed in the following terms:—"It is ordered that Ilahi Bakhsh and Qadar Bakhsh are jointly indebted to the extent of Rs. 615-7-9. Qadar Bakhsh is indebted to the extent of Rs. 782 [Rs. 1,469 deducting Rs. 36 Jholi (after balance of Rs. 1,100), Rs. 200 profit on wheat, Rs. 110 interest, Rs. 212-8-0 disallowed, Rs. 92 Jholi items (after balance of Rs. 615 but before balance of Rs. 1,100), Rs. 36 miscalculation] plus interest Rs. 66 thereon from the date of the second balance to the date of the institution of this suit at six per cent. per annum. The decree will, therefore, be against Qadar Bakhsh for this sum and may be executed against Ilahi Bakhsh to the extent of Rs. 615, the decree being joint against both the defendants to this extent. But before the plaintiffs can execute the decree against Ilahi Bakhsh, they must pay full Court-fee on their cross-objection which prays for relief to the extent of Rs. 1,469 10. The parties to pay their own costs in appeal."

Against this decree Ilahi Bakhsh, defendant No. 1, has preferred the present second appeal to this Court, and it has been contended on his behalf that having regard to the fact that he was no party to the appeal no objection under Order XLI, rule 22, could be entertained against him and that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in passing a decree against him. In support of this contention Mr. Muhammad Hussain, the learned Vakild for the appellants, has relied on the case of Bakshi Bindeswari Prasad v. Dheninder Das (1) decided by the Patna High Court and reported in 39 Indian Cases 662. In the head-note attached to the report the law on the point is stated thus :—

"In an appeal by one of two defendants the respondent is not entitled to raise a cross-objection which is directed against the defendant who is not a party to the appeal."

The judgment reported is very brief, but it does appear that the learned Judges intended to lay down the rule stated above. The cross-objection was raised in an appeal in execution proceedings. There were two judgment-debtors and against an order made in execution proceedings one of them appealed and the decree-holder filed a cross-objection, and the learned Judges made the following remark which is the basis for the head-note:—

"The decree-holder filed a cross-objection in which he challenges the decision of the Court with regard to the liability of Harihar, but as Bindeswari is the appellant a cross-objection which is directed against Harihar is not admissible. Harihar is not a party to this appeal."

He has also relied upon the decision in the case of Nga Tin v. Nga Saw (2) given by Mr. Saunders, A. J. C. of the Upper Burma Judicial Commissioner's Court and reported at page 610 of the 29th Volume of the Indian Cases. The facts of that case were very similar to the facts of the present case. In that case the plaintiff sued two defendants to recover Rs. 124, the balance of a sum advanced for the purchase of plantains, and obtained a decree against the second defendant. The second defendant appealed. The plaintiff in the Appellate Court filed cross objections in which he claimed a decree against the first defendant and the lower Appellate Court gave plaintiff a decree against him. It was objected in that case that the plaintiff was not entitled to be heard under Order XLI, rule 22, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Judge at page 611 made the following observation:—

"It seems clear that if it had been intended that Order XLI, rule 22, should give a respondent an opportunity to take a cross-objection to the decree not only as against the appellant but as against all the other respondents, this intention would have been expressed unequivocally. But in the present case the applicant was not even a respondent in the appeal. He had successfully contested plaintiff's claim in the first Court and had not been made a party to the appeal until the plaintiff attempted to make him a party by filing a cross-objection. It is clearly unreasonable in a case where a plaintiff had sued two defendants who had no common ground of defence and has been successful against one only, and where that defendant appeals, that the plaintiff should be heard in the same appeal to prove his case against the other defendant."

These observations fully apply to the facts of the present case. The ground of defence by the two defendants in the present case was in no sense common and it cannot be contended that on the hearing of the appeal of the defendant No. 2 any question could have arisen for a decision between the co-defendants. The defendant No. 1 had totally denied his liability and the defendant No. 2 had acknowledged his sole liability. No question of equity between the two defendants, therefore, could have arisen. The learned Vakild for the plaintiffs-respondents has argued that a reference to the provisions of Order XLI, rule 22, clause (3) and clause (4), would show that the Legislature intended to allow an objection to be taken against any party to the suit, whether he was a party to the appeal or not. I do not think the clauses Nos. 3 and 4 are capable of such an interpretation. The learned Vakild has also relied on the new provisions of Order XLI, rule 33, relating to the power of a Court of Appeal and has argued that the lower Appellate Court was authorised under the law to pass a decree against the defendant No. 1 under the provisions of this rule. The illustration appended to the rule appears to be against this contention. It was held by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Kshum Ohand Bhuturia v. Ghane Muhammad Saha (3):—

"That rule 33 of Order XLI is very widely expressed but it should not be applied so as to enable a party litigant to ignore the other provisions of the Code or the provisions of Statutes like those which relate to limitation or payment of Court-fees."

Even if the rule 33 be applicable to a case of this nature, which is very doubtful, the powers given under it are of a discretionary character and no Court would be justified in making use of that rule to pass a decree in favour of a litigant who has failed to avail himself of the ordinary remedy by way of an appeal. The plaintiffs could have filed an appeal within the statutory period of limitation. They did not choose to do so and they filed their cross-objections on the 1st of October 1918 long after the period for appealing had expired. The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs then argued that it was open to the lower Appellate Court to have added the defendant No. 1 as a party to the appeal and in order to enable the plaintiffs to urge their objections the lower Appellate Court ought to have made him a party. In my opinion there is no force in this contention. He has relied on Bishun Churn Roy Chowdhry v. Jogendra Nath Roy (4), Fatima Bibi v. Ram Narain Sahu (5) and Abdul Ghani v. Muhammad Fasih (6), but none of the cases has any bearing on the facts of this case. I must, therefore, accept this appeal and set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court as against the defendant No. 1, the appellant before me, and I order accordingly. The appellant will be entitled to his costs.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—
Res judicata—Co-defendants, issue between, decision of, when operates as res judicata.*

A decision on an issue arising between co-defendants has the effect of res judicata if it is necessary that the issue should be determined for the purpose of granting relief to the plaintiff. Where such an issue is determined adversely to a defendant, it is not open to him in a subsequent suit between himself and the other co-defendants to raise the question already decided by the finding on that issue. [p. 875, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 20th of December 1916.

Mr. N. C. Vaish and the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is whether the judgment in a prior suit operates as res judicata between the parties so as to preclude the defendants from raising the pleas which they have raised in this suit. The present suit is one for foreclosure of two mortgages, dated respectively the 1st of April 1902 and the 14th of November 1903, executed by Misri Naik in favour of one of the plaintiffs and the predecessors-in-title of the other plaintiffs. The original mortgagor is dead. The defendants to the suit were the three sons and three grandsons of the mortgagor, and the widow of a predeceased son. The defendants Nos. 1—7, HARRANS v. RAM KUMAR NAIK.

who are the principal defendants in this case, raised various pleas, denying the mortgages, denying payment of consideration and denying the existence of family necessity for the execution of the mortgages. The Court below has held that by reason of the decision in a previous suit it is no longer open to the defendants to raise these pleas. The previous suit to which reference has been made in the judgment of the Court below was a suit brought in 1909 by one Jia Lal, a subsequent mortgagee of the property comprised in the mortgages now in suit. In that suit the defendants were the present plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-title, and the legal representatives of the mortgagor. Jia Lal asserted that the property was free from the two prior mortgages in favour of the present plaintiff, first, because the mortgages had been discharged. He next urged that the property was free from those mortgages because the mortgages were fictitious and without consideration. We find from the decree made in the previous suit that he claimed an alternative relief to the effect that in the event of the prior mortgages being held to be valid and subsisting mortgages, he might be allowed to redeem them and bring the mortgaged property to sale for realisation of the amount due under the prior mortgages as well as the amount due upon his own mortgage. In that suit the legal representatives of the mortgagor contended that the prior mortgages held by the present plaintiffs, or their predecessors-in-title, were fictitious and were not subsisting mortgages, capable of enforcement. The Court framed an issue on the point and it decided it in favour of the present plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-title who were in that suit defendants Nos. 12—15. This decision, it is contended, has the effect of res judicata in the present suit in which the same plea has been raised by the defendants as in the former suit. It is urged on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that the decision of the Court below on the question of res judicata is erroneous inasmuch as the parties to the present suit were arrayed on the same side in the previous suit. It is true that a decision on an issue arising between co-defendants cannot have the effect of res judicata unless it was necessary that the issue should have been determined for the purpose of granting relief to the plaintiff. In the previous suit the plaintiff to that suit raised the contention, as we have said above, that the mortgages in favour of the present plaintiffs did not subsist because the amount of the mortgages had been discharged or because they were fictitious. The first ground taken by them for their allegation that the mortgages did not subsist was abandoned; but the second ground which was also the ground raised by the legal representatives of the mortgagor was pressed and an issue was framed on that point. The finding on that issue was not sufficient for the disposal of the case, because there was the alternative prayer for redemption to which we have referred above. For the determination of that part of the claim and for granting or refusing to the then plaintiff the relief claimed under the alternative prayer which was added by an amendment of the plaint allowed by the Court, the question of the validity and reality of the mortgages now in suit was a substantial and essential question, which had to be determined between the two sets of defendants to the suit in order to grant to the plaintiff the alternative relief which he asked for. The effect of the decision in the suit, if that part of the relief had been granted, would have been to make a decree against the mortgagors for sale of their property not only for the realisation of the amount of the mortgage held by Jia Lal, the plaintiff to that suit, but also the amount of the two mortgages now in dispute. As a matter of fact the Court did go into that question and in its decree provided that if the amount of the mortgage held by the plaintiff to that suit was not paid by the mortgagors, the mortgaged property should be sold and out of the proceeds of the sale the mortgages held by the present plaintiffs should be first satisfied. This being so, there was in the previous suit an issue between the co-defendants which it was necessary to determine in order to grant relief to the plaintiff. That issue having been decided adversely to the present defendants, it is no longer open to them to raise the question already decided by the finding on that issue. The Court below has in our opinion rightly held that the matter is res judicata and this appeal must fail. We dismiss the appeal with costs, including fees in this Court on the higher scale. We extend the time for payment for six months from this date.

Appeal dismissed.

Stamp Act (II of 1898), s. 12—Cancellation of stamp, what constitutes—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881, s. 4—Promissory note payable through another person, validity of.

The question whether or not a stamp has been effectually cancelled is one purely of fact to be decided by an examination of the stamp itself.

The cancellation of a stamp by drawing diagonal lines across its face is sufficient within the meaning of section 12 of the Stamp Act.

The undertaking in a promissory note to pay the money through another person does not make the promise conditional and does not take the document out of the purview of section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 6th May 1918.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was for the recovery of Rs. 668 on a promissory note. The trial Court having decreed the claim and the learned District Judge having upheld the said decree, the defendant has come up to this Court on second appeal through Mr. Mukand Lal Puri. I have heard Mr. Jagan Nath for the respondents.

Mr. Mukand Lal raised two points. First, he contended that the document described as a pro-note was inadmissible in evidence inasmuch as it had not been properly cancelled under section 12 of the Stamp Act, and secondly, that the said document did not come within the definition of a promissory note as contained in section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

With regard to the first contention it was argued that the Legislature contemplated the cancellation of a stamp which would render it impossible for use a second time. It seems to me that the question whether or not a stamp has been effectually cancelled is one purely of fact to be decided by an examination of the stamp itself.

In the present case the stamp has been cancelled by drawing diagonal lines right across it, their ends extending on to the paper. An examination of the stamp leaves no room for doubt that it was affixed for the first time on this document. It seems to me, therefore, that it has been effectually cancelled. A cancellation by drawing lines across a stamp has been considered sufficient in Mohammad Amir v. Kedar Nath (1), in which case the dictum contained in Piran Ditta v. Mangal Singh (2) was approved of. I accordingly hold that the stamp has been effectually cancelled within the meaning of section 12 of the Stamp Act.

With regard to the second point the document in question is to the effect that the drawer undertakes to pay the sum therein mentioned to the plaintiff or order "maarfah Budha Singh." It seems to me that the undertaking to pay is an unconditional one and that the words "maarfah Budha Singh" do not take the document out of the purview of section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. (Budha Singh was the plaintiffs' agent and it seems to me that the insertion of these words in the body of the document does not render the document anything other than a promissory note. This being the case, the onus to prove want of consideration was rightly placed on the defendant-appellant, and I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 186—Warrant, resistance to execution of—Warrant addressed to nazir personally—Nazir, whether can delegate execution to naib-nazir.

Although it is improper for a nazir to depute one of his assistants to execute a warrant for the delivery of possession which is directed to the nazir himself, yet the assistant is sufficiently clothed with authority to execute the warrant, and any person offering resistance or obstruction to its execution is guilty of an offence under section 186, Penal Code. [p. 981, col. 2; p. 982, col. 1.]

Application to set aside the conviction of petitioners under section 186 and section 147 of the Indian Penal Code.

FACTS.—In a certain execution case Basdeo Mahto decree-holder v. Doman Mahto judgment debtor) the 1st Munsif of Chapra issued a writ (Exhibit 1) for the delivery of possession of certain plots of land to the aforesaid decree-holder. The writ contained the direction "Waziah rahe ki Nazir khud ja kar kabza delave" i.e., "Be it noted that the Nazir himself should go and give delivery of possession." The Nazir deputed the Naib Nazir of the Civil Court to go and deliver possession of the land in question. The Naib Nazir accordingly, accompanied by two peons, a drummer, the decree-holder and an identifier, went to the spot, explained to the judgment-debtors (petitioners) the contents of the writ and asked them to allow possession to be given as directed by the writ. On this opposition was offered by Doman, and his partisans, who were already armed with lathis. Thereupon the Naib Nazir and his peons asked to the accused and their partisans not to interfere with the Court's order. Upon this there was remonstrance between the decree-holder and judgment-debtor's parties. Doman and Mohit and their partisans made preparations for assaulting Basdeo, the decree-holder, and his uncle, and certain persons on the side of the accused assaulted the decree-holder and other men on his side with lathis. The District Judge directed the prosecution of the petitioners under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, on receiving a report from the Naib Nazir, and the accused were put upon their trial for offences under sections 147 and 186, Indian Penal Code, resulting in their conviction and sentence. Before this the decree-holder Basdeo had instituted a criminal case for assault under section 323 against the petitioner Doman and others, which was compounded before the termination of the present case.

Further facts appear from the judgment of the Sessions Judge which was as follows:—

"The record of this case has come back from remand.

I have already described the alleged facts of the case in my judgment remanding it for further evidence, hence it is unnecessary to repeat them here. The defence is that the case is a false one and has been brought by Basdeo Mahto in collusion with the Naib Nazir. It is also alleged on behalf of the accused that the true facts of the case are disclosed in a counter complaint lodged by Bhawani Mahto, a son of Doman (appellant), to the effect that there was a dispute between Doman and Dukhan (P. W. No. 5), the uncle of Basdeo Babu, about the ownership of the tiles which were removed from the house by the Naib Nazir's orders and that Basdeo struck Bhawani (son of Basdeo) on the head with a lathi and then the Naib Nazir left the place. In addition to this different version of the facts a number of law points have been raised on behalf of the defence which I shall deal with presently.

In my opinion there can be no doubt that the version of the facts given by the prosecution is correct and has been satisfactorily established by the evidence of the Naib Nazir and other eye-witnesses, namely Ramzan Ali and Ram Singhasan Lal, Civil Court peons, and also Basdeo, the decree holder, and his uncle Dukhan and Sheoraj Nonia, the labourer who was removing the tiles, and Surat Ali Daffadar, who accompanied the Nazir to the spot.

I see no sufficient reason to hold that the Naib Nazir has given an incorrect account of the affair and I am satisfied with his evidence.

DOMAN MAHTO v. EMPEROR.

Two witnesses have been examined in support of the defence version. However, they appear to have concealed the real facts and I am unable to rely on them.

Thus I agree with the learned Magistrate in finding that the prosecution story has been proved.

I shall now deal with the legal points raised on behalf of the defence. It was urged that inasmuch as the complaint case brought by Basdeo against Doman and others for assault had been compromised, hence the charge of rioting could not stand, for by the compromise the accused persons have been acquitted of the charge of assault which constituted the part of the essence of the charge of rioting.

In my opinion this contention is not sound. I have looked into the record of the complaint case concerned. I find that Basdeo Mahto filed complaint against the two present appellants and seven other persons, accusing them of interfering with the Nazir in delivering possession and of assaulting Basdeo and Dukhan with lathis. Four of the accused named in the complaint were summoned under section 323 and 323/34, Indian Penal Code, viz., Nandu, Phekan, Bhawani and Doman. Evidence was gone into and a charge was framed under section 323, Indian Penal Code. Eventually the case was compromised and these four persons were acquitted. Now obviously this previous acquittal does not affect in any way the present case against Mohit, for he was not summoned in the complaint case and hence the fact that that case ended in acquittal after compromise cannot benefit him.

As regards Doman Mahto also it seems to me that this previous acquittal makes no difference. The only charge then against him was one under section 323 and that was compounded. No charge was framed under section 147 and hence the fact that Doman was acquitted on compromise cannot have any effect on the present charge of rioting, which as a matter of fact is not compoundable.

In my opinion the case comes under section 403, clause (2), and it is quite clear that the present charge of rioting is in no way affected by Doman's previous acquittal in respect of the charge under section 323. Still less is the present charge under section 186 affected thereby, for the charge under section 186 was not before the Court which disposed of the complaint case, and in fact this charge could not proceed without sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, or order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and Basdeo had not obtained any sanction. Thus the present charge under section 186, which has been brought in accordance with the order of the Munsif passed under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is in no way affected by the previous compromise.

It is also argued that inasmuch as the property of which the possession was to be delivered consisted of 2 dhurs of land out of a larger plot, it was quite possible that the Naib Nazir in delivering possession might have encroached beyond these 2 dhurs and hence the accused Doman was justified in resisting him. However, I am unable to accept this view. No doubt it would have been better in a case of this kind if the Civil Court Amin or some survey-knowing Commissioner had been appointed to deliver possession after making an accurate survey. However, at the same time I am unable to hold on the evidence that the Naib Nazir in delivering possession actually encroached on any land not included in his order. In fact the accused in their written statement do not suggest any such encroachment.

The defence appears to be that there was a dispute as regards the ownership of the tiles which were removed from the house that had to be demolished. It is clear that the accused Doman was entitled to these tiles, and his case is that the decree-holder Basdeo wanted to take them away altogether and he objected to this. But he says he raised no objection to the tiles being taken down from the portion of the house that was being removed. Thus it is not really the accused's case that there was any encroachment beyond the 2 dhurs to which the decree-holder was entitled, and thus there does not seem to me to be any force in this point.

Another point raised was that as the writ of delivery of possession was addressed to the bailiff of the Court, the Naib Nazir was not authorised to execute it inasmuch as he was not the bailiff. It is urged on the strength of the following rulings, Suleh Ali v. Emperor (1) and Mohini Mohan Banerji v. Emperor (2), that the peons and not the Nazir or Naib Nazir were really the bailiffs. Certainly in the rulings mentioned this interpretation of the word bailiff is given. However, there seems to be no doubt that in certain cases the word 'bailiff' means the Nazir or the Naib Nazir. For instance the warrant of sale under Order XXI, rule 66, Civil Procedure Code, is addressed to the bailiff of the Court and this officer is directed to sell the attached property by auction in execution of the decree concerned. Now it is the universal practice in all Courts in every district, as far as I am aware, that the Nazir (or possibly in some cases the Naib Nazir) conducts execution sales. I have never come across any case in which these sales are held by peons. Thus it seems to me clear that the words 'bailiff of the Court,' though they may in some instances refer to peons, also include the Nazir and the Naib Nazir. Hence there is certainly no force in this objection. Moreover, in this particular case there was an order of the Court on the warrant that it should be executed by the Nazir himself. Hence clearly no peon would have had any authority to execute it. In fact this point was not very seriously urged before me on appeal.

It was, however, further urged that inasmuch as on the warrant for delivery of possession (Exhibit 1) there was an order that the Nazir himself should execute it, the Nazir had no authority to delegate his power to the Naib Nazir and the latter officer, Mohammad Kasim Ali, had no authority to execute it.

When the case first came up before me on appeal, the Nazir had not been examined as a witness and hence it was not clear how he had come to delegate his power. I, therefore, remanded the case to have his deposition taken. From his evidence it seems that the Nazir, having received the order of the Court to execute the warrant, first delegated this duty to one Naib Nazir Gupteswer Prosad and afterwards (as Gupteswer Prosad had been transferred) he re-issued the warrant to Muhammad Kasim Ali, P. W. No. 1, for service. He did not obtain any order of the Court for this delegation. There is no doubt that ordinarily the Nazir has a general power of delegation of his duties to his subordinates, including both Naib Nazirs and peons [vide Dharam Chand Lal v. Queen-Empress (3) and Sheo Prakash Tewari v. Bhoop Narain Prosad Pathak (4)]. However, the question remains whether the special order of the Court in this case, that the Nazir himself should execute the warrant, deprived him of his usual power of delegation and rendered the action of the Naib Nazir in executing the warrant ultra vires. In my opinion, strictly speaking, in this particular case the Nazir should have obtained the orders of the Court before delegating his power to the Naib Nazir, for the Court's order on the warrant is quite explicit that the Nazir himself should execute it. It was urged for the Crown that the order-sheet of the execution case (Exhibit 3) shows that the Court acquiesced in the service of the notice by the Naib Nazir, inasmuch as it extended the time for service on the application of the Naib Nazir. However, the order-sheet does not bear out this contention, for it refers to an application for time by the Nazir. The actual application is not on the record, and it may be that it was submitted by the Naib Nazir through the Nazir and thus the Court may not have been aware that it was the Naib Nazir who executed the process. Hence there is nothing on the record to show that the Court acquiesced in the Nazir's delegation of his power to the Naib Nazir.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that the Naib Nazir was not strictly justified by law in executing the process. However, even taking this to be the case I do not consider that the appellants were justified in resisting the delivery of the possession. It seems to me that the case comes clearly under section 99 of the Indian Penal Code, for obviously the

DOMAN MAHTO v. EMPEROR.

Naib Nazir was a public servant acting in good faith under colour of the office and hence there was no right of private defence against his action. Thus the irregularity in the proceedings is no sufficient justification for the conduct of the appellants.

Another point urged was that the warrant for delivery of possession was not signed by the Munsif but it was only initialled. However, this is a mere irregularity and does not render the warrant illegal (vide section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, illustration).

In conclusion after considering the evidence in this case and the points raised on behalf of the defence I am of opinion that the prosecution has succeeded in proving beyond doubt that the two appellants Doman and Mohit, aided by seven other persons not now on trial, resisted the Naib Nazir in the execution of a process for delivery of possession in connection with the decree obtained by Basdeo P. W. No. 4 against Doman appellant and that the companions of Doman and Mohit assaulted Basdeo and his uncle in the course of this resistance. Also I hold that these appellants had no right of private defence against the action of the Naib Nazir. Hence they are clearly guilty of offences under section 147 and 186, Indian Penal Code. I, therefore, uphold the convictions.

As regards the sentences, however, I think that some reduction is necessary. It must be borne in mind that compensation has already been paid for the assault upon Basdeo and his uncle in connection with the complaint case in which Doman and some other persons were put on their trial. Bearing this in mind, I do not think it necessary that separate sentences of imprisonment should be imposed in this case for the offences under sections 147 and 186, Indian Penal Code.

In conclusion, therefore, while upholding the conviction I reduce the sentence of Doman and Mohit to two months' rigorous imprisonment under section 186, Indian Penal Code. I impose no separate sentence under section 147, Indian Penal Code. The fines, if any, must be refunded."

The accused thereupon applied to the High Court in revision.

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Petitioners.— A bailiff is a distinct person, i.e., a peon, and not the Nazir, therefore, the Nazir could not execute the warrant. Cites Mohini Mohan Banerji v. Emperor (2) and Subed Ali v. Emperor (1).

The warrant (Exhibit 1) distinctly directed the Nazir to execute and give delivery of possession himself and, therefore, delegation to the Naib Nazir was not justified in law and the petitioners were entitled to resist an illegal delivery of possession. Relies on the same two cases.

The common object of the assembly is alleged to be to resist by force the delivery of possession. This cannot stand, inasmuch as the element of force is no longer an offence because a charge under section 323, Indian Penal Code, had been compounded by the parties.

Mr. Manohar Lall (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.—A bailiff is any person who is directed to execute a process of the Civil Court, i.e., a peon, a Naib Nazir, a Nazir. Much confusion has arisen in not keeping this distinction in view. The two cases cited are distinguishable on the facts of the present case. Here the Court itself directed the Nazir to go and deliver. Therefore, he derived his authority direct from the Court. In Mohini Mohan Banerji's case (2) the Nazir was not directed to do so. I rely upon an elaborate discussion of this in Dharam Chand Lal v. Queen-Empress (3).

The Nazir had full authority to delegate his duties to the Naib Nazir. It is the common practice. It is supported by high authority. Cites Abdul Karim v. Bullen (5). The very name Naib Nazir shows that he is an assistant to the Nazir and, therefore, must assist him in discharge of his duties, otherwise the work of the offices will not be carried on. Relies on Dharam Chand Lal v. Queen-Empress (3).

In any case section 99, Indian Penal Code, is a clear answer to the contention of the other side.

Regarding section 147, Indian Penal Code, the point raised is not of much importance inasmuch as no separate sentence is passed thereunder. The common object was to resist the execution of the warrant, and this could not be compounded and has not been compounded. What was compounded was the force used in prosecution of the common object. In any case section 143, Indian Penal Code, would completely cover the facts.

DOMAN MAHTO v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside the conviction of the petitioners under section 186 and section 147, Indian Penal Code, and the sentence of two months' rigorous imprisonment passed under the former section.

It is only necessary to state that, in execution of a decree, the Naib Nazir proceeded to the judgment-debtor's property and started taking off the tiles through his peons from a part of the house which had been declared to have been encroaching on the decree-holder's property. The judgment-debtors and their men resisted the taking of these tiles and assaulted the decree-holder's party. The decree-holder brought a complaint against the petitioners and others under section 323. The complaint case ended in a compromise and the petitioners were acquitted. Thereafter, on a report of the Naib Nazir to the Munsif, sanction was given for the prosecution of the petitioners under sections 186 and 147 and they were tried and convicted as above mentioned.

The chief point taken by Mr. Varma for the petitioners is that the writ for delivery of possession was endorsed by the Court to be executed by the Nazir himself. The Nazir, however, delegated the execution to the Naib Nazir.

It is contended that in the first place the Nazir had no power to delegate his duty to the Naib Nazir and in the second place that the petitioners, in resisting the delivery of possession by the Naib Nazir, were not committing any illegality. The learned Counsel relies on the case of Mohini Mohan Banerji v. Emperor (2), where it was ruled that the word 'bailiff', which is printed on the writ of delivery, means the peon, and that being so, the Nazir had no power to execute a process which has been endorsed on the bailiff. He also cites Subed Ali v. Emperor (1), where it was held that the Nazir and the bailiff were not the same person in the circumstances of that case. The first of these two cases is distinguishable. There the warrant was endorsed to the peon and the Nazir executed it. In this case we have the warrant endorsed to the Nazir himself, and I have no doubt in my mind that the Nazir then became the bailiff for the purpose of carrying out the duty of executing the warrant. A bailiff is any person who is directed to go and execute a process, and so it was held in the second of the two cases cited above. There the peon executed the process and so became the bailiff, and so derived his authority direct from the Court and was not bound by a limitation of the period for service prescribed by the Nazir.

It is next argued that if the Nazir was a bailiff according to the endorsement on the process, he was bound to execute it himself as it was made over "to the Nazir Khud" and that he had no authority to make it over to the Naib Nazir.

The case of Dharam Ohand Lal v. Queen-Empress (3) is a very clear authority for the power of a Nazir to delegate the execution of a warrant to those who are subordinate to him, namely, Naib Nazirs and peons. In that judgment the history of the powers of the Nazir is given very fully, and it is shown that the Nazir has been recognised as the proper officer of the Court for the purpose of executing its processes from the earliest times and that the Nazir has the power to delegate his duties, and that the Naib Nazir is one of the persons subordinate to him to whom the execution may be entrusted. The case of Abdul Karim v. Bullen (5) is to the same effect. It was there held that when the Nazir endorses the warrant to a subordinate, that subordinate is sufficiently clothed with authority to entitle him to arrest the person against whom the warrant of arrest is directed. It was there said: "There is nothing in the Code that we are aware of to prohibit a Nazir from authorising a deputy to execute a warrant of arrest for him; and we know that it has been for years the recognised and sanctioned practice for him to do so; indeed under existing arrangements, it is impossible it should be otherwise."

The real question here is whether the warrant having been addressed "to the Nazir Khud," he could delegate his duties. I am of opinion that the Nazir acted wrongly in deputing the Naib Nazir to carry out the execution. However, the Naib Nazir, knowing that he was subordinate to the Nazir and as a rule carried out the duties delegated to him by the Nazir, could not be held, when obeying the order, to have been acting dishonestly or knowingly carrying out an illegal order. He went to the place of execution acting in good faith and under colour of his office and the petitioners resisted him when he was so acting. Under section 59, Indian Penal Code, the petitioners would have no right of private defence against his acts. I, therefore, hold that on the facts found they were rightly convicted under section 186.

The next point taken is that the conviction under section 147 cannot be supported because the common object of the unlawful assembly was to resist by force the delivery of possession, and that the element of force in the charge has been taken away by the facts that the parties to the case under section 323 had compromised it and all would be equally acquitted of the offence. This is a somewhat doubtful point. It is certain that the parties met together with the common object of resisting the execution by the use of force and they used force, but they have been acquitted of the offence of using such force. Under the circumstances I am of opinion that the conviction should have been under section 143 and not under section 147, Indian Penal Code. The matter is not very important since the petitioners were not separately sentenced under section 147. I think that the proper order I should make on this application is that the conviction and sentence passed against the petitioners under section 186 must be upheld and the conviction under section 147 be changed to a conviction under section 143, and I order accordingly.

Conviction partly altered.

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL PETITION No. 173
OF 1919.

May 10, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Bevan-Petman.

In the matter of THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS ACT, 1879, AND OF THE INVESTIGATION INTO THE CONDUCT OF Mian BELI RAM, PLEADER, HOSHIARPUR.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 13, 14, scope of—"Charged", meaning of—Professional misconduct—"For any other reasonable cause," enquiry as to—District Judge, whether has power to make enquiry.

The natural construction of section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act is that it includes clause (f) just as much as any other clause of section 13. [p. 982, col. 2.]

The word "charged" in section 14 of the Act should be construed as meaning "is accused" or that an allegation is made to that effect. [p. 983, col. 2.]

A District Judge is legally competent to take action under section 14 of the Act in cases which come under clause (f) of section 13. [p. 983, col. 1.]

District Judge of Kistna v. Hanumanulu, 32 Ind. Cas. 326; 39 M. 1045; 18 M. L. T. 549; (1915) M. W. N. 1050; 17 Cr. L. J. 38, followed.

Petition, under sections 13 and 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, praying that the enquiry to be held against the petitioner be held in any district other than the district of Hoshiarpur.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—For the petitioner Pandit Sheo Narain contends that a subordinate Court is not legally competent to take proceedings under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act in cases which come under clause (f) of section 13, "for any other reasonable cause," and is confined to cases falling under clauses (a) and (b). He relies on a judgment of the Chief Court, Punjab, reported as Amolak Ram v. Emperor (1), Southekal Krishna Rao, In the matter of (2) and Purna Ohunder Pal, In the matter of (3). At the same time he candidly admits that the judgment in District Judge of Kistna v. Hanumanulu (4) and other recent decisions are against his contention.

In the decision of the Chief Court clause (f) of section 13 was not directly under discussion and it is admitted that this decision supports the contention only by implication. It appears to me that the natural construction of section 14 is that it includes clause (f) just as much as any other clause of section 13. But the matter is, in my opinion, concluded by the judgment of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court referred to above. In that judgment the learned Judges point out that there had been some ground for the view now urged on behalf of the petitioner, under the corresponding sections 15 and 16 of Act XX of 1865, as the former section gave a power of suspension or dismissal for fraudulent or other grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty or for any other reasonable cause while the subordinate Court was only empowered to investigate charges of "such conduct as aforesaid," and that accordingly it was held in Golab Khan, In the matter of the petition of (5) that cases which did not come under fraudulent or other grossly improper conduct in the exercise of professional duty but under any other reasonable cause were not covered by section 16 of that Act. The learned Judges explain that, following this decision Hill, J., in Purna Ohunder Pal, In the matter of (3) now relied on by the petitioner, expressed the opinion that the words in section 14 "taking instructions except as aforesaid" referred to clause (a) of section 13 and that the words "any such misconduct as aforesaid" referred to clause (b) and that a subordinate Court had no power to take action in cases falling within clauses (c), (d), (e) and (f) of that section. They also point out that this restrictive construction is not supported by the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Southekal Krishna Rao, In the matter of (2), also relied on by the petitioner, and to which Hill, J., referred, as in that case no question as to clause (f) of section 13 arose or was considered. After referring to two other decisions the learned Judges held that "there is no good reason why charges under these clauses should not be investigated in the first instance by the subordinate Court, and it would be very inconvenient if they could not. Their introduction into section 13 of the Act without any amendment of section 14 goes rather to show.....that section 14 as it stood was deemed wide enough to cover them." It is, in my opinion, unnecessary to refer to other judgments in which the same view was held. I hold, therefore, that the District Judge was legally competent to take action under section 14 of the Act.

For the petitioner it was also pointed out that since the institution of this High Court the petitioner has become a Vakil and that, under the Letters Patent, this Court alone has the power to initiate proceedings against a Vakil, but, in my opinion, this fact makes no difference. The charge against the petitioner relates to his conduct as a Pleader and prior to the creation of this High Court, and his present status, if he has been enrolled as a Vakil of this Court, is beside the point.

Reference is also made to the word "charged" in section 14 of the Act, but this word should, in this section, be construed as meaning "is accused" or that an allegation is being made to that effect, and this is indicated in the judgment of the Chief Court relied on by the petitioner on the first contention.

The petitioner has to-day tendered a written explanation of the transaction which concludes with the words: "I now realize that my action was a piece of indiscretion which I now deeply regret. I most humbly crave the Hon'ble Court's forgiveness." The petitioner's Advocate, therefore, pleads that the explanation may be accepted and if considered necessary, a censure by this Court would meet the merits of the case.

I am unable to accede to this request. Even if the explanation of the petitioner be accepted, the matter cannot be treated lightly and calls for an enquiry and final disposal by a Division Bench of this Court. It is urged that Mr. Kennaway might be prejudiced by exaggerated or other information received by him, but Mr. Kennaway is no longer the District Judge of Hoshiarpur. It is uncertain when Mr. Kennaway may be released from his present duties and resume his former position. I, therefore, transfer the proceedings to the Court of the District Judge at Jullundur to avoid any possibility of complaint.

Proceedings transferred.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 432 OF 1919.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, proceedings under—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 35 (1), possession under, nature of—Dispute between judgment-debtor and decree-holder—Possession delivered by Civil Court in execution of decree—Criminal proceedings, legality of.

Where in execution of a decree possession of property is delivered to the decree-holder under Order XXI, rule 35 (1), of the Civil Procedure Code, the property cannot form the subject of proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code at the instance of the judgment-debtor, inasmuch as the dispute between the parties has been adjudged, and a Magistrate, who starts such proceedings, acts illegally and without jurisdiction. [p. 985, col. 1.]

Possession delivered under Order XXI, rule 35 (1), of the Civil Procedure Code, is actual possession and not symbolical or formal possession. [p. 985, col. 2.]

Application against the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Sadar Gaya, dated the 3rd December 1919.

FACTS appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Mr. Hasan Imam (with him Messrs. Nand. keolyar, S. N. Palit and Kailashpati), for the Petitioner, argued that possession was delivered to his client, the decree-holder, under Order XXI, rule 35. It was a direct delivery of possession. All that could be done by the Civil Court has been done. The order of the Magistrate, if allowed to stand, would mean that I must go back to the Civil Court, obtain a similar decree, a similar delivery of possession and then again be sent back to the Civil Court by a similar order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The rightful owner would be kept out of his property for ever. This could never be the intention of the Legislature. Cites Doulat Koer v. Rameswari Koeri (1), Kunja Behari Das v. Khetra Pal Singh (2), Atul Hazra v. Uma Charan Ohangdar (3). The Magistrate must uphold the recent order of the Civil Court.

Mr. P. K. Sen (with him Messrs. G. D. Singh and S. N. Rai), for the Opposite Party, submitted that the Magistrate having found that the opposite party were in possession on the date of the proceedings notwithstanding the delivery of possession by the Civil Court, the High Court could not interfere. It was not a question of jurisdiction. The finding of the Magistrate may be erroneous. He may have taken even an erroneous view of law, Cites Parmessar Singh v. Kailaspati (4).

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—If your contention is correct, there could never be a finality to this litigation between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors. That surely is not the intention of the Legislature.]

The Magistrate acts under this section simply with a view to prevent a breach of the peace.

[SULTAN AHMED, J.—But the Civil Court had recently determined those very rights of the parties which the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to determine once more.]

Mr. Hasan Imam was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner Behari Gir, Chela of Mahant Krishnadayal Gir, has made this petition for setting aside an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sadar Gaya, drawing up proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The facts may be shortly stated.

The petitioner is a Chela of the Mahant and the opposite party, who are 44 in number, consist of the Rani of the seven annas Tikari Raj and her servants and the tenants of Manza Mahabodh. It appears that the Mahant had a mortgage-decree against opposite party Nos. 9 to 44 and in execution of that decree he purchased the holdings of these tenants. On the 10th and 11th of July 1919 delivery of possession was given to the Mahant. On the 19th November 1919 on the application of the petitioner notices, under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, were issued by the Sub-Divisional Officer on the tenants opposite party Nos. 9 to 44. On the 1st of December on the return of the service of these notices the parties were heard by the Magistrate. The Magistrate thereupon on the 3rd December 1919 passed the order which is now assailed in this Court.

SURAJ BHAN v. EMPEROR.

The main ground upon which the learned Counsel for the petitioner attacks the order of the Magistrate is that the Mahant having got a decree against these tenants in execution of which decree delivery of possession was given to him, the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction in not upholding that decree and the delivery of possession. In my opinion the contention is sound. Order XXI, rule 35, clause 1, provides that "where a decree is for the delivery of any immovable property, possession thereof shall be delivered to the party to whom it has been adjudged, or to such person as he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf, and if necessary, by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property." So all that had to be done by the Court to complete the possession of the petitioner's master, the Mahant, in pursuance of the decree that he had obtained against the opposite party Nos. 9 to 44 had been done. There was nothing left for the Court to do to complete the execution of the decree.

It is absolutely clear that under these circumstances the Magistrate acted not only illegally but, in my opinion, without jurisdiction in starting the proceedings under section 145, inasmuch as the dispute between the parties had been adjudged in the Civil Court and possession had already been delivered to the Mahant. I am confirmed in the view that I take in this case by the decisions in the case of Doulat Koer v. Ramswari Koeri (1), Kunja Behari Das v. Khetra Pal Singh (2) and Atul Hazra v. Uma Charan Changdar (3). Indeed if a Magistrate could be permitted to start proceedings under section 145, under the circumstances which I find in this case, I cannot conceive any finality of dispute between the decree holder and the judgment debtors. I cannot conceive that the Legislature ever intended multiplicity of fruitless actions which must result if an order of this character is upheld. If, however, there had been, as has been pointed out by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner, an intermediate holder between the decree holder and the tenants, the question would still have to be decided as to who was in actual possession but where I do not find any intervener between the tenants and the decree holder, I think the question of formal possession or otherwise does not arise. The Magistrate is under the impression that the possession that was delivered to the Mahant was symbolical possession and, therefore, he could still proceed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and determine actual possession. In my opinion this is an erroneous view of law. It is conceded that possession was delivered under Order XXI, rule 35, and where possession is delivered under that rule, it is not, in my opinion, symbolical or formal possession but it is actual possession that is delivered. It is only when possession is delivered under Order XXI, rule 36, that it is symbolical, and provided that the other ingredients of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, are present, the Magistrate's jurisdiction under that section can be attracted in spite of delivery of such possession.

I hold, therefore, that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in instituting proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, when the Mahant had already obtained a decree against the opposite party and had also obtained delivery of possession under Order XXI, rule 35, of the Civil Procedure Code. The result is that the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Sadar Gaya, is set aside.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 344, whether applicable to appeals—Adjournment of appeal—Costs, whether can be awarded.

Section 344 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable to appeals. Costs cannot, therefore be awarded on the adjournment of an appeal [p. 986, col. 2.]

Revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Karrai, dated the 21st August 1918.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Petitioners,

BALMAKUND DAS v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—Suraj Bhan, petitioner, was convicted on the 24th June 1918 under sections 471/114 and 420/114 by H. Harcourt, Esquire, District Magistrate, Rohtak. Against this conviction he filed an appeal to the Court of the Sessions Judge at Karnal. On the 12th July 1918 the learned Sessions Judge adjourned the hearing of the appeal to the 2nd August 1918, as the Counsel for the Crown could not appear. On the 2nd August the hearing was again adjourned to the 21st August 1918 on the same ground. On the 21st August the Advocate for the accused applied to the Court to send for certain papers which were necessary for the support of the appeal and prayed that the hearing of the appeal might be adjourned for that purpose. The learned Judge made an order in the following words:—"The Advocate for the accused wishes to have some papers sent for. If the agent for the accused pays Rs. 100 to-day, the case should be postponed. In default of payment I will hear the case. The case should come off on the 18th October 1918." On the same day the learned Sessions Judge added a P. S. to his order to this effect: "The Advocate for the accused has paid in Rs. 100. The case to be postponed and to come off on the 18th October 1918. The money to be credited under the head 'Law and Justice.' The parties to be informed of the date of hearing."

The present application has been made for the revision of this order, and it is argued in the first instance that the learned Sessions Judge had no power to make such an order and in the second place it is argued that under the circumstances of this particular case such an order ought not to have been made. The only section of the Code of Criminal Procedure under which such an order could have been made is section 344, which enables the Court to postpone the commencement of or adjourn any enquiry or trial. The appeal before the learned Sessions Judge cannot strictly be said to be an enquiry or trial. It is, therefore, contended that section 344 did not empower the learned Sessions Judge to make the order under revision. In the case of Sew Prosad Lodder v. Corporation of Calcutta (1) it was held that a Court had power to call upon a party to pay costs of the day under section 344, but that was a case which did not relate to an appeal. In Mathura Prasad v. Basant Lal (2) a similar view was taken by the learned Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court. In his opinion the Court had power to allot costs. At page 208, however, referring to the case of King-Emperor v. Chhabraj Singh (3), the learned Chief Justice observed:—"In that case Mr. Justice Blair set aside an order awarding costs of an adjournment against the Government. The attention of the learned Judge does not appear to have been called to the terms of section 344 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and furthermore the case does not seem to have been argued and the award of costs was against the Government. It also appears that the adjournment was not the adjournment of the trial in the strict sense of the word, but of an appeal."

Evidently the learned Chief Justice was of opinion that section 344 was not applicable to an appeal. In my opinion the plea taken on behalf of the petitioner in this case must prevail.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge and direct that the amount paid by the petitioner should be refunded to him.

Revision accepted.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 203, 213, 436—Case triable by Court of Session—Accused discharged by Magistrate—Commitment to Sessions ordered by District Magistrate—Duty of Magistrate making inquiry.

(1) 9 C. W. N. 18; 2 Cr. L. J. 1.

BALMAKUND DAS V. EMPEROR.

When a Magistrate holding an inquiry into a case triable by a Court of Session has certain evidence put forward by witnesses which would make out a prima facie case, it is his duty to make an order of commitment. It is not open to him, in commenting upon the truth or otherwise of the depositions made to him, to discuss the probabilities of the evidence being true. [p. 932, col. 1]

Where in such a case the accused is discharged by the Magistrate, the District Magistrate has power to examine the evidence and if he finds a prima facie case established against the accused, to make an order of commitment to the Court of Session. [p. 988, col. 1]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Darbhanga, directing the commitment of the petitioner to take his trial before the Court of Session under charges under sections 467 and 468 of the Penal Code.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. P. Varma, (with him Mr. J. N. Sen Gupta), for the Petitioner.—The evidence against the petitioner is not sufficient to warrant his conviction. The evidence was fairly and fully discussed by the Deputy Magistrate and simply because the District Magistrate takes another view of the evidence, assuming that he had the power to look into the evidence, he was not justified to set aside the order of the discharge [relies on Srikrishen Lal v. Emperor (1)]. The District Magistrate had no power to go into the evidence in a case of this kind. All the evidence available to the prosecution had been received by the Magistrate and discussed by him in his order of discharge.

Mr. G. O. Pal, for the Opposite Party.—The order of the District Magistrate was strictly justified by the Code. When he found that the Deputy Magistrate had exceeded his powers and assumed the functions of the Sessions Court, the District Magistrate was right in looking into the evidence with a view to see if there was a prima facie case against the petitioner and having found that, he gave his reasons for differing from the order of the Deputy Magistrate and, therefore, was bound to set it aside.

It was a case of extreme gravity: records filed in public Court had been tampered with, and your Lordship will not interfere with the discretion of the District Magistrate which he was entitled to exercise in strict conformity with the law.

(1) 35 Ind. Cas. 506; 1 P. L. J. 97; 17 Cr. L. J. 330; 8 P. L. W. 87.

Srikrishen Lal's case (1) is distinguishable because there the District Magistrate gave no reasons for setting aside the order of discharge, nor did he state that a prima facie case was made out. Here full reasons are given and the District Magistrate finds that a prima facie case has been made out against the petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside an order of the District Magistrate of Darbhanga, whereby he directed the commitment of the petitioner to take his trial before the Court of Session under charges under sections 467 and 468 of the Penal Code.

The proceedings against the petitioner were the result of a long course of litigation. Shortly stated, one Musammatt Sukhdai instituted a suit against Rai Mahamaya Prasad Bahadur, claiming that her mother-in-law had left to her a sum of about six lakhs. In that suit she depended upon certain entries in Khesra Bahis of her father-in-law, Rai Gunga Prasad Bahadur, who is dead. In the civil suit before the Subordinate Judge it was found that these entries in the Khesra Bahis were forgeries and that pages had been torn out and other pages substituted for the purpose of proving the gift of the money to Musammatt Sukhdai.

Rai Mahamaya Prasad Bahadur moved the District Magistrate to have an enquiry made by the Criminal Investigation Department during the course of the civil suit. Those proceedings were stayed until the suit should be decided. Then fresh proceedings were started on the complaint of the servant of Mahamaya Prasad with the result that the complaint was dismissed. Against the order of dismissal Amirul Hussain moved the High Court, which directed the petitioner to apply to the Sessions Judge who, when moved, ordered further enquiry. The Deputy Magistrate of Darbhanga held an enquiry and discharged the petitioner. The District Magistrate was moved against this order of discharge under section 209, and has disagreed with the order and directed that the petitioner should be committed to take his trial in the Court of Session.

The chief ground put forward in this petition is that the evidence against the present petitioner is not sufficient to warrant his commitment. It is pointed out that the two chief witnesses are Kunj Behari, a Mokhtear, and Gokul Chand, that while Kunj Behari's evidence makes no mention of Balmakund's participation in the forgery, and in fact it does not mention his name at all, the witness Gokul Chand only deposes that the writing on the papers alleged to be forged is similar to the writing of the petitioner.

As to these papers being forged there is no doubt; the forgery has been found by the Civil Court as well as by the High Court. One Jadu Das turned approver, and, while incriminating himself, deposed that the petitioner had taken part in the forgery.

Kunj Behari is a Mokhtear who corroborates a certain part of Jadu's story, although he does not reach the point where Balmakund is said to have participated in the forgery. Gokul Chand's evidence also corroborates that of Jadu Das in so far as it goes. These are not the only two witnesses; there are other witnesses who corroborate Jadu Das.

The Committing Magistrate, while finding that the papers were forged, commented on the evidence of Kunj Behari and other witnesses and also of Jadu Das, the approver, and in commenting on the truth or otherwise of their depositions, discussed the probabilities of their evidence being true. In my opinion, without expressing any opinion on the merits of the case, his order went too far in discussing the probabilities where he had certain evidence put forward by the witnesses which would make out a prima facie case.

The learned District Magistrate discussed the reasons for which the Committing Magistrate said he disbelieved the witnesses and showed that the reasons given were not conclusive. The District Magistrate certainly had the power to look into the evidence, and in his order he has given his reasons for finding that the probabilities relied on by the Committing Magistrate were not altogether reasonable. The District Magistrate further has found that a prima facie case has been made out against the petitioner.

The learned Counsel for the petitioner has cited the case of Srikishen Lal v. Emperor (1) in support of his contention that the District Magistrate's order was not sufficient.

In that case, however, the District Magistrate merely stated his opinion that the case was eminently one which should be tried by the Sessions Court and that the evidence was of a character which required very great experience of judicial work for a proper appreciation. No reasons were given, nor was it stated that a prima facie case was made out. Whether the evidence of Gokul Chand as to the handwriting was sufficient and whether the evidence of the approver is sufficiently corroborated are questions which are to be settled by the Court of Session. The Magistrate has exercised his discretion and given his reasons and I see no reason to interfere with his order. The application is rejected.

Application rejected.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, Standing Counsel, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. S. Kotwal and Erakshah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Local Government against the appellate order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge, Chhindawara.

The facts are fully stated in the judgments of the Courts below. The respondent Khairatali, was driver and George O'Connor, who has been tried in a separate case, was guard of passenger train No. 143 on the 23rd July 1917. The train left Ghansore for the next station Pindrai. After travelling about three miles it was stopped by a gang Mukaddam, who reported that the permanent way had been breached in two places. Khairatali, the driver, proceeded to make temporary repairs with the assistance of some coolies and passengers. Meanwhile, the guard sent through a coolie the following message (Exhibit P-5) to the Station Master, Ghansore:—

LOCAL GOVERNMENT V. KHAIRAT ALI.

"The banks with ballast have been washed away at miles 713/3 and 712/25. 143 is unable to proceed. Do needful. Driver with few coolies are packing line. Arrange ballast train."

This was signed by the guard but not by the driver.

Before the receipt of this message the Station Master, Ghansore, was orally informed by a coolie about the breach. He then sent the following telegram to the District Traffic Superintendent, Jubbulpore, the Permanent Way Inspector, and the Assistant Engineer and Station Master of Nainpur:—

"Nidhani gang coolie reports that mile 713 about two telegraph posts length water flooded and bank underneath line washed off after telegraph post. No. 143 detained."

A similar intimation was sent by the Station Master, Ghansore, reciting the terms of the guard's message above referred to.

On receipt of the coolie's report the Assistant Engineer at Nainpur decided to go in a light engine at least as far as Pindrai, if not upto the point where the breach is reported to have occurred. When the telegram reproducing the guard's memo. was received at Nainpur, it was decided to attach a couple of vehicles to the engine with some coolies. The relief train reached Pindrai at 6.10 and left again 6.15.

In the meanwhile the passenger train was able to pass over the breach after temporary repairs were effected. The work of repairs took less than three hours. The train then proceeded towards Pindrai. About 6.40 a collision between the passenger train and the relief train took place, when the relief train was running at about 10 miles an hour, up a gradient of 1 in 86, and rounding a curve with a radius of 953 feet, which prevented a clear view being obtained. The result was that 20 persons were killed and 54 were injured.

The guard and the driver were convicted by the Sub Divisional Magistrate of offences punishable under section 101 (a) of the Indian Railways Act and section 304A of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. There was also a charge against the driver and a conviction under section 101 (c) of the Indian Railways Act.

On appeal the Sessions Judge has reduced the sentence passed on the guard to one of three months' rigorous imprisonment, upholding the conviction. The driver has been acquitted.

The view taken by the Sessions Judge is that the guard sent a memo. asking for assistance within the meaning of rule 87 of the General Rules made by the Railway Board under section 47 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890. He, however, finds that the driver did not know that the guard had sent an advice under rule 87 asking for assistance, and is consequently not guilty of a breach of that rule. The learned Sessions Judge also finds that though the relief train ran faster than the rules permit, the passenger train was not running at a speed exceeding that prescribed by special instructions for normal running over this section, a finding with which I agree, as the evidence to the contrary is not reliable. The reason for reducing the sentence passed upon the guard is that there was contributory negligence on the part of persons other than the guard and driver which caused the accident.

It is necessary to examine the terms of rule 87 and 87 (a), and I reproduce them below:

"87 Sending advice of accident or breakdown.—If the engine is for any reason unable to proceed, the guard in charge of the train shall send advice to the nearest station, stating the nature and cause of the accident, and if assistance has been asked for, he shall not allow the engine or any portion of his train to be moved until such assistance arrives, provided that if the train is subsequently able to move it may do so at walking pace, but not unless a man has been sent with hand signals and detonators to protect the train, such man keeping at least a quarter of a mile in advance of the train, the other end of the train being protected in a similar manner.

"87(a.) The advice to the nearest station should be written by the guard and signed by both driver and guard. In the case of an Indian driver who cannot read or write, the memorandum should be explained to the driver by the guard."

The contention that rule 87 applies only to a failure of the engine does not merit serious attention. The rule applies if the engine is for any reason unable to proceed from any cause. Damage to the line of such a nature as to render it unsafe for the passage of trains or probably cause serious delay to trains is treated as an accident in the working instructions issued by the Bengal Nagpur Railway. Here there was an obstruction which caused a detention of two to three hours. It was, therefore, the duty of the guard to send an advice stating the nature and cause of the accident or breakdown. The advice should be signed by both driver and guard, and this holds good whether assistance has been asked for or not.

Now the Sessions Judge has held that the guard's message asked for assistance. This is challenged before me. The guard O'Connor, who has been examined in the driver's case as witness No. 5 for the prosecution, says that the message as originally written by him after reciting the cause of accident ran as follows:

"143 is unable to proceed. Do needful."

I have no doubt that this was a call for assistance. O'Connor, however, says that when he read out the message to the driver the following words were added at the latter's instance:

"Driver with coolies packing the line. Arrange ballast train."

The witness adds that the driver explained to him that packing would take some time and that by giving the authorities intimation to arrange for a ballast train, it would save detention to other trains.

This explanatory statement, which forms part of the defence argument in this Court, appears to have been accepted by the learned Sessions Judge so far as the driver is concerned. The opinion of the Court below seems to be that the guard is responsible for the wording of the message and the driver is not, as he probably understood it in a different sense.

It is argued that the words "driver is packing the line" amount to an intimation that the train would proceed and this argument has been accepted by the lower Court. At best, it merely hints by implication a possibility, seeing that the sentence "the train is unable to proceed" was allowed to remain in the message. The Assistant Engineer understood from the message that the driver was "packing" to save the engine from sinking.

The explanation regarding the ballast train is ingenious but not convincing. The cause of the accident having been already stated, the Engineering Department would know that any "packing" by the driver would not be sufficient to prevent detention to other trains. Unless a ballast train was required by way of assistance, any reference to such a train in the terms used was superfluous. I have come to the conclusion that the message, read as a whole and reasonably interpreted, was a call for help with an intimation of the possibility of the train being able to move. But the rule required that when any assistance has been asked for, the precautions laid down should be taken when subsequently moving the train. These admittedly were not taken.

The Sessions Judge says:—

"I think that the evidence suffices to prove that the driver knew that the guard had sent a written message to Ghansore. No witness, however, says that the driver read what the guard had written."

I do not see why the guard P. W. No. 5 should be disbelieved. The Sessions Judge does not say that he disbelieves him. It is entirely in accordance with probabilities that the message would be sent in consultation with the driver, especially as the guard was an inexperienced man and the driver had considerable experience. I also believe that the last two sentences were added on the suggestion of the driver, though they may not have reproduced the exact words used by him. The original document (Exhibit P-5) clearly shows that these two sentences are an interpolation partly written under the signature. The rest of the evidence tends to show that there was some talk between the driver and the guard at the time when the message was sent. But this evidence does not help us in finding out what the talk was about, as the witnesses did not know English and the conversation between the guard and the driver was partly in English and partly in Hindustani.

Khairatali has denied all throughout any knowledge of any message being sent by the guard. His learned Counsel's suggestion that the words "arrange ballast train" were meant for permanent repairs comes with a bad grace now.

Khairatali has never said that he understood the message in this sense. If, as I hold, he was a party to this message, it should be interpreted as a call for assistance, as it was understood at Nainpur. It may be noted that the Station Master, Ghansore, now says that he does not think it to be a requisition for assistance, but he seems to have acted as if it was one.

I find from the evidence of the Station Master, Nainpur, P. W. No. 13, that it takes three to four hours in an urgent case to get a ballast train ready. The accused probably thought that the train would be able to reach Pindrai long before the ballast train could come from Nainpur to Pindrai.

Rule 87 applies when assistance has been asked for. It is for the higher authorities to decide what sort of assistance is suitable and available. It unfortunately turned out that a relief train was decided upon, which was able to leave Pindrai before the time anticipated by the accused.

It is urged that Khairatali had a right to assume that no requisition for assistance has been made as he had not signed the memo. I have already stated that advice, whether asking for assistance or not, has to be signed both by the driver and the guard. The driver knew, as found by the Sessions Judge, that a message was sent to Ghansore. He can read and write English. It was his duty to have signed the message and to make himself acquainted with its terms.

This leads me to another aspect of the case which has not been considered by the Sessions Judge. Assuming that the driver did not know that the guard had asked for assistance, was he justified in running at the maximum prescribed speed without ascertaining the terms of the advice which it was the duty of the guard and the driver to have sent? If he did not exceed the speed limit as suggested by the prosecution witnesses, he was certainly running up to the full speed of fourteen miles an hour. I should note here that this section of the Bengal Nagpur Railway is worked on a single line. Prudence dictates a more cautious driving in such a case where a clear view cannot be obtained, if not the walking pace enjoined by rule 87. His explanation that he did not know of any message at all has not been accepted even by the Sessions Judge. Before starting the train it was, therefore, his duty to have found out what advice had been sent. His case would come even upon the Sessions Judge's finding under section 101, clause (c) of the Indian Railways Act. This would be a case of negligently endangering the safety of the passengers by an omission to ascertain whether assistance has been asked for.

There was an argument founded upon an endorsement on the telegram (Exhibits F-19) as to the time when it was received. The time shown is 18 47 and it is urged that the guard's message was not received at Nainpur (the train ordering station) till after the collision. The telegraph signaller (P. W. No. 8) is not sure whether this was the time when the telegram was received, or copied. He admits that this might be a mistake. I am not, therefore, prepared to attach much weight to the endorsement. The evidence clearly shows that two vehicles were attached to the engine upon receipt of the guard's message.

I have noticed nearly all the points urged before me. The Sessions Judge seems to think that Khairatali knew that the train would be able to proceed and that the repairs could be effected by him. The driver seems to have been more sanguine than the guard, but he could not have been certain of it at the stage when the guard's message left. There is, therefore, nothing improbable in his asking for a ballast train expected to arrive if his own efforts turned out to be fruitless.

It is not disputed that if the driver knew that assistance had been asked for, then his conviction by the Magistrate was correct. I am also of opinion that if he did not care to ascertain what message was sent, he is guilty of an offence under section 101 (c) of the Indian Railways Act.

The message, though badly drafted, would reasonably be understood as a message asking for assistance and was so understood. What the guard and the driver meant can only be inferred from the words used, unless they are satisfactorily explained.

The theory of a misunderstanding on the part of the driver has been rejected by me mainly because he does not put it forward himself, having totally denied all knowledge of the message. The alleged misunderstanding was a matter within his own knowledge, and it was for him to prove it. I find he has failed to prove it, the guard's evidence about the driver's explanatory statement having the appearance of an afterthought. I hold that Khairatali is responsible for the message sent with his knowledge, though he has not signed it. I, therefore, restore the order of conviction.

As regards the sentence, I am of opinion that the respondent has had the charge pending against him since about a year. The Sessions Judge has also pointed out certain contributory causes of the accident. The guard, who is primarily responsible for the message and under whose orders the driver was, has been given three months and I have found it difficult in his case to enhance the sentence in revision after such a lapse of time. A sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment now will suffice as the respondent is being sent back to jail after an acquittal.

I restore the finding of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate but reduce the sentence to one of three months' rigorous imprisonment. Khairatali is ordered to surrender himself before the District Magistrate.

Appeal allowed.

*Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 23, 24, 380—
Theft—Constituents of offence—Dishonest taking, what amounts to—Claim of right, bona fide, investigation into.*

In order to constitute the offence of theft the prosecution must establish (a) that there was dishonest intention to take property (b) that the property was moveable property, (c) that it was taken out of the possession of another, (d) that it was taken without the consent of that other, and (e) that there was removal of the property in order to accomplish the taking of it. [p. 993, cols. 1 & 2.]

A person is said to take dishonestly when he takes with the intention to cause wrongful loss to another person, that is to say, with the intention that such person should be wrongfully kept out of the property. [p. 993, col. 2.]

In prosecutions for theft, whenever there is an assertion of a claim of right, it is the bounden duty of the Court to enquire into the question whether that claim is a bona fide claim or is a mere pretence. If, when that claim is actually put forward, the Court fails to decide the question whether the claim is a bona fide claim or a mere pretence, the conviction cannot be sustained. [p. 994, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Cuttack, dated the 20th of September 1919, affirming that of the Magistrate, Balasore, dated the 3rd of September 1919.

Messrs. C. C. Das and G. C. Pal, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Asghar and Gajendra Prasad Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 380, Indian Penal Code, and has been sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 each.

It is necessary to state the facts very briefly. It appears that the parties are distant relatives and co-sharer landlords. There seems to have been a partition between them. On the 3rd of March 1918 possession in terms of partition was awarded. Under the terms of partition the land on which the Kutchery stood fell into the share of the petitioners. So far as the Kutchery is concerned, the petitioners were in possession of the eastern portion and the complainant's master was in possession of the western portion. There seems to be some dispute between the parties as to whether rent is due to the petitioners from the complainant's master for the occupation of the western portion of the Kutchery.

It is alleged by the complainant that on the evening of the 29th December the petitioners broke through a partition wall between the western and eastern portions, entered upon that portion of the Kutchery house which was in the occupation of the complainant's party and took away various articles, including furniture and jewellery.

There is no doubt that the Court of first instance which heard the evidence in the case has not accepted a portion of the prosecution story, but it has undoubtedly believed that there was a taking away of the property by the petitioners within the meaning of section 379, Indian Penal Code, and accordingly convicted the petitioners under that section.

It was argued by Mr. Das on behalf of the petitioners that there is no finding of dishonest intention in the judgment of the Appellate Court and that, therefore, the conviction under section 380 cannot stand.

Now, what are the findings? The findings are first that Baroda was in possession of the western portion of the Kutchery. Secondly, that he had a considerable quantity of furniture and other property in that portion of the Kutchery. Thirdly, the petitioners were seen in the act of removing papers and other property from the Kutchery, and, fourthly, the story of theft spoken to by the prosecution was not untrue. The question is, upon these findings, was the Court entitled to convict the petitioners under section 380, Indian Penal Code? It is strongly contended by Mr. Das that there is absolutely no finding of dishonest intention and that, therefore, a conviction under section 380 cannot stand.

Now, I propose to examine this argument. It seems to me that in order to constitute theft it is necessary for the prosecution to establish (1) that there was dishonest intention to take property, (2) that the property is moveable property, (3) that it was taken out of possession of another person, (4) that it was taken without the consent of the person, and (5) that there was removal of the property in order to accomplish the taking of it.

There is no doubt on the findings of the Courts below that the property is moveable property, that it was taken out of the possession of another person and that it was taken without the consent of that person. The only point that remains for consideration is, was there a dishonest intention to take the property? The solution of this problem depends and must depend upon the meaning which the Legislature has given to the word 'dishonestly'. That definition will be found in section 24, Indian Penal Code: "Whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person is said to do that thing dishonestly." That is the meaning which the Legislature has given to the word "dishonestly". It may be that in this case there was no intention of causing wrongful gain to the petitioners but was there an intention of causing wrongful loss to the complainant? If there was an intention to cause wrongful loss to the complainant, then in my view, upon the definition given to the word "dishonestly" by the Legislature, it is not admissible to argue that there was no dishonest intention in this case.

I have, therefore, to consider whether there was an intention to cause a wrongful loss to another person. That again depends upon the meaning which the Legislature has attached to the word "wrongful loss" under section 23, Indian Penal Code. The Legislature says that "a person is said to lose wrongfully when such person is wrongfully kept out of any property, as well as when such person is wrongfully deprived of property." Therefore, reading section 379 with section 24 and section 23 it appears to me that a person must be said to take dishonestly whenever he takes with the intention to cause wrongful loss to another person, that is to say with the intention that such person should be wrongfully kept out of the property. That is what the Legislature has said and in my view, it is impossible to escape from the clear words which have been employed by the Legislature.

Now there cannot be any doubt upon the findings of the Court that there was an intention to wrongfully keep the complainant out of the property. It has been held in the case of Nabi Bakish v. Queen-Empress (1) that even if the owner is kept out of possession with the object of depriving him of the benefit arising from the possession temporarily, the case will come within the definition.

Now in dealing with this case I do not intend to throw any doubt at all on the class of cases which has been decided with reference to a bona fide claim of right. For instance, in the case of Hari Bhumali v. Emperor (2), Woodroffe, J., said as follows:—"In Criminal Law what is generally understood by theft and its kindred offences are such acts as those of the pickpocket, the shop-lifter, the house breaker, the dacoit and so forth—acts in fact of a truly criminal nature in which no claim of title is made. No doubt an accused cannot escape the penalty of crime by the mere pretence of a bona fide claim which has clearly no foundation. But I think that the Criminal Courts should not convict of theft any person who asserts a claim of right, unless it is in a position to say that that claim is a mere pretence."

With this view of law, I entirely agree. But the essential condition is that there must be an assertion of a claim of right. Whenever there is such an assertion, that is to say an assertion of claim of right, it is the bounden duty of the Court to enquire into the question whether that claim is a bona fide claim or is a mere pretence. If when that claim is actually put forward, the Court fails to decide the question whether the claim is a bona fide claim or is a mere pretence, the conviction cannot be sustained. But in this case, no such claim has been put forward. Therefore, the question of bona fide right does not arise at all. The case depends upon the definition of the offence in section 380, Indian Penal Code. In my view, upon the findings of the Courts below it is proved that that offence has been committed by the petitioners.

The next question is the question of sentence. Although there was no claim put forward in the Courts below, I have no doubt at all reading the judgments very carefully that there were disputes between the parties of a civil nature and that probably the occurrence took place as a result of those civil disputes. That being so, I cannot send the petitioners to jail as common thieves. I, therefore, maintain the conviction, but reduce the sentence to the term of imprisonment already undergone by them. They must in addition pay the fines.

(1) 25 C. 416; 2 C. W. N. 347.

(2) 9 C. W. N. 974; 2 Cr. L. J. 836.

Sentence reduced.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 94 of 1919.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

MULTAN SINGH—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 87, 89, 439—Absconder—Forfeiture of property—Application to set aside forfeiture—Proclamation, validity of, whether can be questioned—Failure to specify date of proclamation, effect of—Proclamation allowing less than thirty days for appearance, validity of—Revision—High Court, power of, extent of.

A person applying under section 89 of the Criminal Procedure Code to set aside an order of forfeiture of his property cannot contest the legality of the proclamation under that section, but there is nothing to prevent the High Court from considering it in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. [p. 996, col. 2.]

An order under section 87 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, stating that the proclamation was duly published but omitting to specify the date of the publication, cannot be considered as conclusive evidence that the requirements of section 87 have been complied with. [p. 997, col. 1.]

Where a proclamation under section 87 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not give thirty days for the appearance of the accused, the proclamation is invalid and the subsequent proceedings following upon it are liable to be set aside. [p. 997, col. 1.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Ambala, with his No. 54 G. of 10th January 1919.

FACTS.—On the 20th March 1917 a complaint (dated 15th March 1917) was presented to the Sub-Divisional Officer, Rupar, who recorded the complainant's statement and sent the proceedings to an Honorary Magistrate of Kharar for disposal.

On 23rd March 1917 the Honorary Magistrate issued summons under section 498, Indian Penal Code, to Multan Singh and others. On 30th March 1917 the complainant applied to the Honorary Magistrate to the effect that Multan Singh had gone with the woman concerned in the case to some other place (i. e., was keeping out of the way) and a bailable warrant issued for 10th April 1917. (It is important here to note that Multan Singh before the District Magistrate filed an identity certificate, with a view to showing that on the 9th April 1917, he appeared under his alleged second name, "Gharib," before the Calcutta Police; the photograph on that certificate is unquestionably that of Multan Singh).

A fresh warrant was issued by the Honorary Magistrate for 19th April 1917; and on that date it was noted on the record that the warrant had not been returned and a date was fixed, 8th May 1917.

On 8th May 1917 it was noted that the appellant could not be found; and the Honorary Magistrate ordered a proclamation to issue under section 87, Criminal Procedure Code—fixing 11th June 1917 for hearing (i. e., more than the 30 days required under section 87).

It is here important to note that on 11th June 1917 the appellant did not appear; and the Honorary Magistrate then passed a validating order to the effect that publication of the proclamation had taken place as required by law under section 87 and the Tahsildar was directed to prepare a list of attachable property.

On 7th July 1917 the Court ordered certain property to be attached and a report was received in September 1917. Meanwhile certain objections had been raised by one Laiq Ram (that the property was ancestral) and by Multan Singh's wife and mother (that certain property should be released for their maintenance). These objections failed before the Honorary Magistrate on 24th November 1917, before the Sessions Judge on 19th December 1917, and before the Chief Court on 19th April 1918.

The property of the accused was attached and seized by Khan Bahadur Sayad Bashir Husain, Honorary Magistrate, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the 1st Class in the Ambala District, by order, dated 7th July 1917, under section 88 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and an application to the District Magistrate, asking him for the return of the sale price of his moveable property and for the release from attachment of certain land attached by that Court and still under attachment, was rejected on 23rd September 1918.

GROUND.—I am unable to agree entirely with the District Magistrate's view expressed in paragraph 2 of his order of 23rd September 1918, now under appeal, for though section 88, Criminal Procedure Code, empowers the Court issuing the proclamation to attach "at any time," it seems to me quite clear that the proclamation under section 87 was really a nullity and for the following reasons:—

Section 87 (2) prescribes the mode of publication, a, b, c. In respect of the proclamation there is nothing whatever to show that it was publicly read anywhere; and though it was affixed to appellant Multan Singh's ordinary place of residence on the 15th May 1917, no duplicate was affixed to a "conspicuous part of the Court house." A duplicate was apparently affixed to the door of the Police Station. The provisions of section 87 (2) (a), (b) and (c) are mandatory, and consequently it seems quite clear that the proclamation was really a nullity.

However, there comes this difficulty—section 87 (3)—since we find that on the 11th June 1917 the Honorary Magistrate did actually pass a validating order—which must be accepted as "conclusive evidence" that the requirements of section 87 have been complied with.

This certainly seems an extraordinary provision of law; but there can be no doubt of its existence. I have been unable to find Punjab authority on the point; but I have seen Queen-Empress v. Subbarayar (1), Mian Jan v. Abdul (2) and Abdullah v. Jitu (3). In the first of these reported cases it was found that the proclamation was affixed to the Court house on November 6th, 1893, requiring a person to appear on December 11th, 1893, but was not published in the village until November 15th, 1893, and it was held that there was no legal proclamation under section

EMPEROR V. MULTAN SINGH.

87, and the order was set aside and the attachment declared void.

In the 2nd ruling it was held that the proclamation was "an absolute necessity" but there had apparently been no validating order under section 87 (3), Criminal Procedure Code.

However, the ruling to which I wish to draw special attention is Abdullah v. Jitu (3) [at page 218, the last 10 lines—and 219 (1) middle, beginning at "It has been objected"].

According to my view—though the proclamation in the present case was a nullity, Multan Singh cannot now take exception to it, because of the Honorary Magistrate's validating order.

Multan Singh, however, has certain rights under section 89, Criminal Procedure Code—and I think it is clear that evidence to prove that the appellant was absconding as well his evidence in exculpation must be heard in his presence, and a judicial determination on the point must be come to.

The District Magistrate does not appear to have heard any evidence. Multan Singh have wished to prove (a) that on April 9th, 1917, he was in Calcutta, (b) that his second name is "Gharib"; (c) that he was not absconding, and that he went to Penang—and his Counsel produced before me 3 registered envelopes in proof of his client's visit to Penang.

Whatever the truth of the matter may be, it seems to me clear that Multan Singh must have an opportunity of proving his assertion.

I cannot myself direct further enquiry into this matter: section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, and I accordingly forward this report under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, for the orders of the Chief Court of the Punjab.

Since the above order was written, appellant's Counsel has applied verbally to this Court, putting forward that, since this is an appeal, this Court could itself take action under section 428, Criminal Procedure Code. However, apart from the fact that this is asking this Court to review its own order, and also, that it seems desirable to obtain (if possible) the Chief Court's view of the correct interpretation of section 87 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, I doubt if section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, can apply here. That section distinctly refers to the taking of "additional evidence" whereas, in the present case, it does not appear that any evidence was taken at all by the District Magistrate. My order of 16th December 1918, will, therefore, stand.

Mr. Shamir Chand, for the Accused.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are given in the referring order of the Sessions Judge, Ambala, dated the 16th December 1918. The District Magistrate having passed an order rejecting the petitioner's application for restoration of the property attached under section 89, Criminal Procedure Code, an appeal was filed in the Court of the Sessions Judge, and such an appeal was competent under section 45, Criminal Procedure Code. At the same time we agree with the dictum of Blair, J. in Abdullah v. Jitu (3) "that section 89 prescribes a remedy where there is a good and legal publication, but offers no facility for the contesting of the legality of the proclamation." The petitioner, therefore, could not contest the legality of the proclamation in his application under section 89, Criminal Procedure Code; but there is nothing to prevent this Court from considering it in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, as was done in the case reported as Queen Empress v. Subbarayar. (1). The learned Sessions Judge is of opinion that the legality of the proclamation proceedings cannot be questioned having regard to the fact that the Magistrate who held those proceedings recorded an order under section 87 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, to the effect that the proclamation had been duly published. It is contended before us that this validating order is defective. Section 87 (3) runs as follows:—

"A statement in writing by the Court issuing the proclamation to the effect that the proclamation was duly published on a specified day shall be conclusive evidence that the requirements of this section have been complied with, and that the proclamation was published on such day."

Now, in the so called validating order, the Magistrate stated as follows:—Aj yeh mist pesh hui, report ishtihar zer dafa 87 sabita faujdari bad tamil hasb sabita shamil mist ho

chuki hai. This may be taken to mean that the proclamation under section 87 has been duly published; but it is nowhere stated that the proclamation was duly published on a specified day. The words "on a specified day" are important, because section 87 (1) lays down that the proclamation must require the person against whom a warrant has been issued to appear at a specified place and at a specified time not less than thirty days from the date of publishing such proclamation. It is, therefore, clear to us that the so-called validating order is defective and the statement in writing by the Court referred to above cannot, under the circumstances, be considered conclusive evidence that the requirements of section 87 have been complied with.

Now, turning to the proclamation proceedings we find that as stated by the learned Sessions Judge, the requirements as to publication contained in section 87 (2) (a) and (c) were not complied with. Moreover, such publication as there was took place on the 15th of May which was less than thirty days from the 1st of June, the date fixed for the appearance of the petitioner. It is, therefore, clear that the publication of the proclamation was not in accordance with law, and the subsequent proceedings are, therefore, also invalid. In Queen Empress v. Subbarayar (1) it was held that there was no legal proclamation under section 87, Criminal Procedure Code, and the High Court set the order of attachment aside.

We, therefore, accept the revision and setting aside the attachment of the petitioner's property as invalid direct that so much of the property, moveable or immovable, as has not yet been sold be restored to him and that the proceeds of the sale of any property which has taken place be refunded to him.

Revision accepted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 79, 107 (1)—
Act done in good faith—Mistake of fact, subsequent, whether protected—Instigation, advice, whether amounts to.

Where a person does a thing in good faith but subsequently commits a mistake of fact, he is entitled to the protection afforded by section 79 of the Penal Code. [p 1004, col. 1.]

Instigation necessarily indicates some active suggestion, or support or stimulation to the commission of the act itself, and advice can become an instigation only if it is found that it was an advice which was meant actively to suggest or stimulate the commission of an offence. [p 1003, col. 1.]

The fact that a person advises another to do a thing, does not necessarily mean that he "instigates" that other to do that thing within the meaning of section 107 (1) of the Penal Code. [p. 1003, col. 1.]

Criminal revisions against the orders of the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 10th November 1919, refusing to make a reference to the High Court against the order of the Sub Divisional Officer, Barha, dated the 24th September 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment of the Sub Divisional Officer, which was as follows:—

"The last two of the accused were discharged on the conclusion of the prosecution evidence. The others have been charged as described above. This case arises out of an unfortunate affair which took place early in May between some of the local Police and the townspeople. As to the way in which the row arose (i.e., excluding the culmination of it which is the subject of this case), I will give first the defence version, as it seems to me so palpably the true one in substance. That version is that a constable, Awadh Behari Singh, went to borrow a frying pan from accused Lala Halwai. Because (P. 2) Lala refused to lend it until he had finished with it, they quarrelled and finally Awadh Behari Singh pulled the Halwai out of his shop and caned him, and again chased him into his shop and caned him. Shiva Prasad Singh, another constable, was present and took the part of Awadh Behari Singh. Some people interfered on behalf of the Halwai. Awadh Behari Singh fled. Shiva Prasad Singh, however, remained, and what was done to him is the subject of the present case. The prosecution version of the above events is that Awadh Behari Singh went to buy sweets; and because he refused to take the bad ones offered by the Halwai, and the Halwai refused to give back his money, they had a quarrel, and the Halwai and his friends began to beat Awadh Behari Singh, who fled when the crowd turned on Shiva Prasad Singh for having taken the part of Awadh Behari Singh. This prosecution version appears to me quite ridiculous. The Halwai bore the marks of a caning, and further it is absurd to suppose that a puny man like him would dare to "beat" a big man like the constable Awadh Behari, nor would he or his friends have dared to try and bring another constable before the Court at once, had Awadh Behari Singh not been the aggressor. The events so far described were the subject of a complaint case, in which Awadh Behari Singh was fined Rs. 50 and Shiva Prasad Singh Re. 1. I now come to the present case. The prosecution say that when Awadh Behari fled, the other accused, instigated by Amir Baboo, Bharathu Lal and Kali Chaudhary, seized Shiva Prasad Singh, being incensed at his having supported Awadh Behari Singh, and started to drag him to the Magistrate's Court; and it is for this alleged wrongful confinement and rioting that they are on trial. It is to be noted that although the defence now allege that Shiva Prasad willingly consented to come, saying he had nothing to fear as the Magistrate would not hurt him, this was not what they said at any previous stage of the case, in fact it was not alleged until the last day or so of defence. For example Lala Sahu in his original complaint before the Sub Deputy Magistrate said: "This man Shiva Prasad was being brought in custody to Court." Again, while the procession, or crowd, or whatever it be, was on its way to Court, several constables came up from the Thana (vide the statement of P. W. No. 1 Shiva Prasad Singh) and on their arrival Shiva Prasad was released. Now some of those constables were prosecuted for having dispersed the crowd by force on the complaint of Hira Khatik, and two of the constables were convicted. In that complaint Hira Khatik said, talking about the original assault, "the assailant of Lala fled away, while a comrade of the assailant was caught by the people assembled." A certified copy of this complaint has been filed as an exhibit by the prosecution as also the complaint of Lala Sahu. In the course of that trial, which was summary, Hira Khatik said "we arrested him: (Shiva Prasad) to bring him to the Magistrate." The original file of that case is upon the record, by my order. Lala Sahu in that case also talked about the "rescue" by the constables from the Thana. It is thus clear that never until the time came for the defence of the present case was it ever suggested that Shiva Prasad came willingly. Further, a significant fact is that admittedly the accused brought Shiva Prasad by a roundabout road, passing about 100 yards from the Thana instead of immediately by the Thana. When asked why they did this, Hira Khatik after some hesitation said it was because they were afraid the Police would rescue the constable (as they eventually did) and beat the other party. But if Shiva Prasad Singh was coming willingly, why should his captors be afraid of being attacked by the Police. Lastly, Hira Khatik's written statement, filed before entering into defence, says in about the 9th line: "Police apna nam nahin batlate the. Tab main Hira Khatik constable ko bandegan huzur ke pas le jane laga. Wo chand log sath gae. Jab Municipal Market ke pas pahunche tab mudai ne qasid bhagne ka kia. Tab main Hira Khatik wo chand logon ne majboori se pakra is par bhi bahut zor kia." There is no suggestion in this that Shiva Prasad even pretended to be willing to go to the Magistrate at any time; the words "le jane laga" do not imply this; and if he was unwilling to give his name he certainly would not be willing to go straight to Court with all his accusers. I, therefore, consider this portion of the defence entirely disproved by the evidence. On the other hand I do not feel convinced that he had the Gumcha tied round his neck as suggested by the prosecution. The marks noted by the Doctor do not appear to indicate anything like a Gumcha tied right round the neck, for the marks did not completely encircle the neck; and the explanation given of the fact that Shiva Prosad Singh was not examined in the Hospital is extremely unsatisfactory. The occurrence took place about 9, the saneha was timed 9.45 A. M., and Shiva Prosad says he went at once to the Hospital but was told the Doctor was asleep. In this he is given the lie by the Doctor himself, who says he was never asleep at that time, and the story sounds unlikely. I think it is quite within the bounds of possibility that the marks were manufactured between 9 and 3; though I think it is equally likely that the story of the Gumcha is true and that the marks were only manufactured to make more convincing evidence. However, this is an unimportant point, the point is that accused or somebody undoubtedly did restrain and confine the constable, either by some sort of physical force or threat of physical force. The question of the Gumcha only affects the degree of indignity to which they subjected him.

The question now arises, was the confinement lawful or unlawful, i.e., Had Shiva Prosad Singh committed before their eyes a non bailable offence? If so, his arrest was lawful under section 59, Criminal Procedure Code. In the case against him he was convicted under section 323/114, vide the certified copy filed by the defence. For the purposes of the present case, however, that judgment is not final. It was never suggested, until the argument of the present case, that Shiva Prosad abetted, by his encouragement, Awadh Behari in an offence under section 452, Indian Penal Code, or section 327, Indian Penal Code, non-bailable offences; the former is house trespass having made preparation for causing hurt and the other is causing hurt for the purpose of extortion. From an examination of the record of this case, I find it has never been suggested that Shiva Prosad Singh took any step to help Awadh Behari to get the frying pan, and only one witness (D. W. No. 19 in XXa) has even suggested that Shiva Prosad ever told Awadh Behari to pull Lala Halwai out of the shop, and this statement has no corroboration anywhere that I can find. All the other evidence amounts to this, that Shiva Prosad Singh encouraged the other constable in the beating. In the other case it was held that Shiva Prosad Singh was little more than a passive spectator, supporting Awadh Behari more as a comrade than anything else. I do not think that Shiva Prosad wished to encourage Awadh Behari to extort the frying pan at all; there is no evidence that he gave him any help in this at all. I think any encouragement he gave was more to encourage Awadh Behari to chastise the shop man for the abuse which had admittedly been given. No doubt, Awadh Behari was the aggressor, and the shop man was justified in calling him names; but I do not think Shiva Prosad can be held to have committed either of the above-mentioned non-bailable offences, which alone could justify his arrest. There is no evidence even that he broke through the crowd, or went any nearer than the lamp post, which is a few paces off. I take it that he merely gave support to the other constable seeing that the crowd was hostile, and that then the crowd's anger turned on him; had he done more, he also would probably have fled at the same time as Awadh Behari. I do not think it can be held that Shiva Prosad instigated Awadh Behari to commit a non-bailable offence, or that any non bailable offence was committed as a natural consequence of such encouragement or support as Shiva Prosad did give. I, therefore, hold that the arrest was not strictly justified, by law; in any case even had it been justified the arresting people were bound under section 59, Criminal Procedure Code, to take Shiva Prosad Singh to the nearest Police station; whereas they admittedly were taking him not to a Police station but to the Magistrate, a mile and a quarter further on. This is undoubtedly only a technical error, because up to a point the accused's action was quite "bona fide". But Shiva Prosad Singh and the prosecution would be entitled to the benefit of this technicality, even if I had held that Shiva Prosad Singh had technically committed a non bailable offence. The accused may say they were afraid to go to the Thana, but the law gives them no other right. If they were afraid to go there, they would have done better to go to an Honorary Magistrate who lives in the town; he at least would have been a useful witness to them later on; and it is difficult to see what they had to gain by taking the constable to a Court nearly two miles away, when they had plenty of witnesses who could have identified him later, even if allowed to go free. Finding then that the arrest and the subsequent confinement of the constable were illegal, I have to decide two more points, viz., which of the accused took part, and what is the degree of their guilt. I will take the question of guilt and punishment last. It is clear all through the record that Lala Sahu and Hira Khatik at any rate took an active part in the conducting of Shiva Prosad through the streets. It is natural that Lala should have been one of the ringleaders; and Hira Khatik has practically admitted in his written statement that he also took part. His original complaint also shows this. As regards the other people who have been charged as principals, I do not think it would be safe to hold that they were more than spectators; they might have been active participants; on the other hand it is possible, the saneha having been written and the F. I. R. recorded in the heat of the moment, that many people who were merely following the procession were named as having actually assisted in the confinement; they may have been and probably were a disorderly rabble, but this does not make them guilty under section 342, Indian Penal Code, nor can it be said that they are guilty under section 147, unless they also partook of the common object. Only Lala and Hira, therefore, are guilty, and, under section 342, Indian Penal Code. I now come to the first three accused.

The prosecution allege that it was these three who encouraged the crowd to arrest Shiva Prosad Singh. Amir Baboo and Bharthu Lal allege that they have been implicated because they have given up giving tips or "Christmas boxes" to the constables on holy days, and other petty grudges; e.g., Amir Baboo alleges that the Inspector was annoyed with him because he would not give him any Bhussa for his cow, nor allow the cow to stray among his grass in his diara. I think it is prima facie clear that something must have happened to strengthen the crowd and encourage them to take action, between the flight of Awadh Behari and the arrest of Shiva Prosad, otherwise why should they allow the chief man to escape and then arrest the other? I think that clearly some more influential man or men than these Halwais and petty shopkeepers must have advised them what to do. Amir Babu's shop is hardly 10 paces from the scene of occurrence. The defence allege that he was there, but did not go even to the front of his shop to see what was happening. I cannot believe this for a moment. No ordinary person, however busy, would have gone calmly on with his work while all this was happening outside. Besides, Amir Babu was cited as a witness in the original complaint of Lala Halwai; but apart from this, ordinary probabilities, combined with the weight of prosecution evidence, go to show that Amir Baboo must have advised the arrest of Shiva Prosad. Next comes Bharthu Lal; his shop is 120 to 150 yards down the street, and the defence made a great deal of the fact that the Chowraha, the scene of occurrence, is invisible from there; but it is visible from the opposite side of the road. In any case it is quite likely that he might be attracted to the spot by the row, and this is what I believe in. The witnesses produced in defence depose that Bharthu Lal was in his shop all along. It is easy for a man to get such witnesses among his neighbours and servants and I do not think any sufficient grudge has been shown, to instigate the Police to implicate Bharthu Lal falsely. Other people have deposed that they also have refused to give donations and tips, just like Bharthu Lal, yet they have not been implicated. I find, therefore, that Bharthu also advised the accused to take the steps they did. The third is Kali, Chaudhari;

RAGHUNATH DASS v. EMPEROR.

he says that he went up and rescued Lala Halwai from the constable (vide his written statement). There is no evidence rebutting the statement of the prosecution that he also gave the advice to arrest Shiva Prosad Singh. I, therefore, find Amir Baboo, Bharthu Lal and Kali Chaudhari guilty under section 342/109 (they might have been charged under section 114, since they were present). Lala and Hira are convicted under section 342, Indian Penal Code. All the other accused are acquitted.

Lastly comes the question of degree of guilt. I consider that both parties in this case have acted in an undignified manner. Fortunately the constables when they did what they did were not in uniform. That being the case, the local officers would have been wiser had they been less hasty in pouring on the accused with a full fledged Police prosecution. Efforts were made by the defence to show that a lot of the Police evidence was concocted and only put together after it was known, about 3 P. M., that Lala and Hira had lodged complaints. Apart from the obvious prevarication that Awadh Behari and Shiva Prosad made, as to their not meeting when they returned to the Thana, and also about the time of examination by the Doctor, there is nothing to show fabricated evidence. But I am at a loss to understand why it should have been expected (if indeed it was expected) that a Magistrate should believe some of the palpable absurdities put forward in the Police case. It would have been far wiser also had both the cases been compromised at the beginning of Lala's case, as suggested; the constables (accused therein) did not agree and the cases had to proceed. It would have been far better for all the parties had they agreed to compromise. On the other hand, if the defence in the present case had only had a little courage and straightforwardness, they would have frankly admitted the whole thing, and claimed lenient treatment on the ground that their action was bona fide and due to a little hastiness and ignorance of the law. In that case nothing more than an absolutely nominal punishment could have been inflicted. I cannot understand why they were not advised to do this. Instead of that they have incurred an expenditure of certainly more than Rs. 2,000 at a moderate estimate, with many adjournments, two applications for transfer, and sixty defence witnesses summoned, only to come out with less credit than they would have had if they had boldly and straightforwardly stated exactly what they did. However, the case which has aroused apparently a great deal of local excitement is now over, and it is to be hoped that this will be the last that will be heard of the ill-feeling which has been aroused. As the constables were undoubtedly in the wrong to start with, I consider that the action of the accused, though technically an offence, had some moral justification. This cannot be treated as if they had in any way obstructed or treated with disrespect the forces of law and order, as the constables were not in uniform nor were they acting in the exercise of their lawful authority, and from the subsequent action of the Police it is clear that the townsmen had some justification in supposing they would not get impartial dealing if they went straight to the Thana. The constables Shiva Prosad and Awadh Behari have been dealt with in the former case as if they were private people and not as members of the Police force abusing their position, for at the time they were acting as private individuals. The accused must, therefore, be dealt with in this case as if they had wrongfully arrested a private individual, and not a public servant, a representative of the Police force. Their action was more hasty and misguided than criminal, especially as they clearly intended to come straight to the Magistrate, evidently thinking that they had a real grievance. At the same time the fact must not be obscured that Shiva Prosad Singh was not the real offender. I fine Amir Baboo, Bharthu Lal and Kali Chaudhari Rs. 2 (two only) each under section 342/109 and Hira Khatik and Lala Sahu a like amount under section 342. In default they will undergo simple imprisonment for two days. They are acquitted of the other charge, and the other accused are acquitted of all charges. Rs. 10 (ten) will be paid to Shiva Prosad Singh as compensation.

Both parties to this case have betrayed a desire for litigation which is quite unintelligible to me. They would have done better to make a straightforward admission of the facts in the beginning. This would have saved a great deal of the time and a great deal of false evidence. A hope was expressed in the argument for the defence that the accused would not be punished for the fact that one of them had made two applications for transfer. But every Magistrate knows that an application for transfer, whether bona fide or not, is considered an ordinary manoeuvre among litigants, and the fact that anybody should consider it necessary to express a hope that this would not prejudice the judgment, in my opinion, betrays in him an ignorance of the considerations which influence a Magistrate who has any respect for his position. If it has any effect at all, it must make him, if anything, more careful than ever to come to a right conclusion."

RAGHUNATH DASS v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.

IN CR. R. NO. 2 OF 1920.

The small town of Barh was the scene of a great stir on the 3rd of May 1919. The excitement began when a couple of constables, named Awadh Behari and Shiva Prosad, went to a Halwai's shop, and culminated in the arrest of Shiva Prosad by the neighbours of the Halwai which is the subject-matter of the present charge.

In order to appreciate the judgment of the learned Magistrate on the question whether the accused is guilty or not, it would be necessary to state all the incidents that happened on that day.

It appears that Lala Halwai complained to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate against the two constables above named, alleging that Awadh Behari went to his shop and asked him to give him a frying pan and Shiva Prosad was with him. Lala Halwai asked the constables to wait for a short time, on which there seems to have been an altercation between the Halwai and Awadh Behari. Awadh Behari thereupon is said to have twisted Lala Halwai's hand, dragged him and caned him. The case was instituted, as I have said, before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, but the Sub-Divisional Officer very properly withdrew the case to his own file.

Awadh Behari and Shiva Prosad were tried summarily, and both of them were convicted. Awadh was convicted under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and fined Rs. 50, the other constable was convicted under section 323/114, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to a fine of Re. 1. That is the first incident on that day, the 3rd of May 1919.

The second is the subject-matter of the present charge, but I shall deal with it after I have dealt with the third incident.

It appears that when Lala Halwai was being caned, the neighbours flocked to the place. Awadh Behari thereupon fled away, but Shiva Prosad was caught and it was considered necessary to take him to the Magistrate. While they were taking him to the Magistrate, he was rescued by some other constables of the Thana; and while these constables tried to rescue Shiva Prosad, they used force to the crowd. The result was a complaint against them by one Hira Kathik, which ultimately ended in the conviction of two constables by the Sub-Divisional Officer under section 342, Indian Penal Code, and sentence of a fine of Rs. 15 each. The intermediate incident, as I have said, is the subject-matter of the present charge, and I propose now to deal with it. The prosecution case is that when Awadh Behari fled away, Shiva Prosad was caught hold of by some neighbours who were instigated by the accused Amir Baboo, who is a respectable citizen living near the scene of occurrence; that this arrest was illegal and the subsequent taking of Shiva Prosad by the neighbours was an offence within the meaning of section 342, Indian Penal Code, and the accused is, therefore, guilty of an offence under section 342 read with section 109.

The Magistrate, after hearing the evidence in the case, came to the conclusion that the accused was guilty under section 342/109 and convicted him under that section and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 2. The accused thereupon moved the Sessions

RAGHUNATH DAS v. EMPEROR.

Judge of Patna for a reference to this Court against the conviction and sentence. His prayer having been rejected by the Sessions Judge, an application has now been filed in this Court for the setting aside of the order of conviction and sentence.

The Crown was not originally represented in this case, but at my request, the learned Government Advocate has very kindly appeared and given me every assistance that could be rendered on behalf of the Crown.

The learned Magistrate has found, and indeed after the conviction of Awadh Behari and Shiva Prosad in the other case he could not do otherwise, that nine-tenths of the prosecution case is unacceptable; in fact, he has characterised the prosecution story up to a certain stage as "ridiculous;" not only that, but he has described "the version of the defence as a palpably true one." He has disbelieved Shiva Prosad altogether, with the little exception that he thinks that he was certainly detained by some people. So far as the complicity of the accused is concerned, his finding, on a consideration of the whole evidence, is as follows. He says—"I find that an influential man like the accused must have advised them what to do." Later on he says that "Amir Baboo must have advised the arrest of Shiva Prosad." I have first of all to consider whether the learned Magistrate could convict the accused at all on the bare finding that the accused "must have advised" the arrest of the constable Shiva Prosad. In my opinion, he could not. Section 107, clause (1), of the Indian Penal Code runs thus:—"A person abets the doing of a thing, who instigates any person to do that thing." The other clauses, it is conceded, do not apply. I have then to consider whether the finding "must have advised" necessarily means "must have instigated." Instigation necessarily indicates some active suggestion, or support or stimulation to the commission of the act itself, and advice can become an instigation only if it is found that it was an advice which was meant actively to suggest or stimulate the commission of an offence. Advice per se cannot necessarily be instigation within the meaning of section 107, clause (1).

The learned Magistrate has not described the circumstances which would justify any Court to construe advice as instigation. On that ground alone I think the conviction should be set aside. But there are various other difficulties in the way of the prosecution.

To begin with, it is necessary to consider whether the finding of the learned Magistrate that the arrest of Shiva Prosad was illegal, is at all justified under the law. On the findings, it is perfectly clear that Awadh Behari went to the shop of Lala Halwai, with Shiva Prosad. Shiva Prosad did not go inside the shop but Awadh Behari did and Awadh Behari demanded the karai, which was refused. On that there was an altercation, and in consequence a beating of Lala Halwai by Awadh Behari. It is not contended before me that such acts, if committed by Awadh Behari, would not amount to an offence of extortion. It is suggested that Shiva Prosad was not in the least a party to that offence, and at the highest, he committed the offence of instigating Awadh Behari to commit the offence of beating. But Mr. Manuk, appearing on behalf of the accused, has drawn my attention to the finding of the learned Magistrate, where it is distinctly held that Shiva Prosad was present throughout and shouting "maro, maro", that is, from the time the karai was demanded till the time Awadh Behari fled away. Therefore, any encouragement by Shiva Prosad to Awadh Behari would be an encouragement to commit the offence or offences which Awadh Behari committed. It would be impossible to contend that, though the beating was an ingredient of the offence of extortion, Shiva Prosad was abetting the beating only and not the commission of the whole offence. I, therefore, hold, on the findings arrived at by the learned Magistrate, that the abetment was not only of the offence of beating but the whole offence of extortion, if that offence was committed by Awadh Behari. That being my finding, it is clear that the arrest was legal and justified under the provisions of section 59 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Therefore, on that ground also the conviction of the accused must fail.

The third ground upon which, in my opinion, the conviction must be set aside is that on the findings of the Magistrate section 79 is a complete answer to the prosecution case. Section 79 of the Penal

ABDUL KHALIQUE v. SURJA SINGH.

Code, so far as it is relevant to the present charge, may be stated as follows:—"Nothing is an offence which is done by any person who, by reason of a mistake of fact, in good faith believes himself to be justified by law in doing it." The learned Magistrate has found that, I am using his own language, "up to a point the accused's action was quite bona fide." Before that he says: "in any case even had it been justified, the arresting people were bound under section 59 of the Criminal Procedure Code to take Shiva Prosad to the nearest Police station, whereas they were taking him not to a Police station but to the Magistrate, a mile and a quarter further on." Therefore, the finding is that the arrest was illegal, but that the action of the accused up to a point was quite bona fide. It is necessary to know what was that point, up to which the learned Magistrate thought that the action of the accused was bona fide? On a fair reading of the judgment it appears to me that all that he finds is this: that the arrest was illegal, but the carrying away of Shiva Prosad by the neighbours was, though bona fide, still contrary to the provisions of section 59 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If the action of the neighbours in arresting the constable Shiva Prosad was bona fide, they could not be held guilty of any offence and would be protected under the provisions of section 79, Indian Penal Code. If they thought that a non bailable offence had been committed by Shiva Prosad, which, as a matter of fact, had not been committed, it would be simply a question of mistake of fact. Good faith having been found in favour of the people who arrested Shiva Prosad, and a mistake of fact having been committed by them, the application of section 79, Indian Penal Code, to the facts of the case, in my opinion, is complete. The result is that I set aside the conviction of and sentence on the accused. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

IN CR. R. No. 30 of 1920.

The order that I have passed in Criminal Revision No. 2 of 1920 will govern this case also. The conviction and sentence of Bharthu Lal are set aside and the fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Rules made absolute.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 202
204—Cognisance of case—Complaint—Magistrate, power of, to issue summons—Enquiry, whether necessary.*

A Magistrate has full power, upon receipt of a complaint, to issue a summons to the person accused, if he believes in the truth of the complaint. If he finds there are good grounds for proceeding, it is not necessary for him to call for an inquiry beforehand. [p. 1007, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Purneah, dated 31st October 1919, refusing to make a reference to the High Court to quash the proceedings started against the petitioner by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kishen Gunj, dated the 2nd August 1919.

FACTS appear from the following order of the learned Sessions Judge:—

"This is an application in which this Court was asked, in revision, to send for the record of the case No. 736 of 1919 (Sarju Singha complainant versus Abdul Khalique and Aulad Ali) and after perusing the same and hearing the petitioner's Vakil to recommend to the Honourable High Court to quash the proceeding, or pass such other order as it might deem fit and proper. The facts of the case material for the purpose of this application are these:—

Aulad Ali (accused No. 2), who does not join in the present application, lodged an information with the Police of Kishen Gunj Thana that Sarju Singha complainant and others committed dacoity in his house on a certain night in the month of July last. The Police after full investigation submitted its final report to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate at Kishen Ganj, who was empowered to take cognisance of the offence on the Police report, to the effect "True section 458 against 4 unknown persons." On receipt of this report the Magistrate ordered: "Enter true section 458, Indian Penal Code." On the 31st July, Sarju Singha who was named as one of the persons taking part in the alleged dacoity, filed a petition of complaint before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Kishen Gunj charging Abdul Khalique, the petitioner before us, and Anlad Ali for having falsely accused him and his co-Barqundazes in the above dacoity case knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for such an accusation. The complainant Sarju Singha further alleged in the petition that Abdul Khalique, who is in close intimacy with Anlad Ali, had caused the latter to implicate him in the above dacoity case. The Magistrate took down the initial statement of the complainant on the same day on the back of the petition of complaint and ordered thereunder thus: "C. S. I. Put up record of the case referred to." On the 2nd August he passed an order summoning both the accused, i.e., Abdul Khalique and Anlad Ali, under sections 500/211, Indian Penal Code, for 8th August 1919. In the meantime the petitioner moved this Court and got further proceeding stayed pending the disposal of the present application. The grounds upon which the proceeding of the case is sought to be quashed are:-

(a) That the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognisance of the case except in consonance with the provisions of section 195 or section 476, Criminal Procedure Code.

(b) That there were absolutely no materials justifying the Magistrate to issue process against the petitioner.

(c) That the learned Magistrate erred in law in issuing process simultaneously under section 500 and 211, Indian Penal Code.

I heard the petitioner's Pleader and the Public Prosecutor at great length. I propose to consider the above grounds in the light of the arguments advanced in the order stated above.

(a) It was urged on behalf of the petitioner that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, after having taken cognisance of the original case upon the Police report, had no jurisdiction to take cognisance of the complaint under section 211 without sanction under section 195 or without proceeding under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. Upon a careful consideration of the arguments of both sides, I am of opinion that this ground of objection is not well founded and cannot be sustained. Section

195, clause (b), Criminal Procedure Code, in so far as it is applicable to the present purpose, provides that no Court shall take cognisance of any offence punishable under section 211, Penal Code when such offence is committed in, or in relation to any proceeding in any Court, except with the previous sanction or on the complaint of such Court, or some other Court to which such Court is subordinate. It follows from this provision that the false complaint must have been made in a Court, or in relation to any proceeding in a Court. In the case before us the false complaint was made not in the Court, but before the Police. It is too much for the petitioner to say that the fact of the Magistrate having passed an order "Enter true section 458, Indian Penal Code," on the Police report, amounted to a proceeding in relation to which the false charge was committed. The offence of false charge, if any, was completed before the Police, it cannot be said that the same offence was committed in the Court of the Magistrate for the simple reason that he took cognisance of the case on Police report under section 190, clause (b), of the Criminal Procedure Code, and passed an order "enter true section 458, Penal Code." The matter would have been different if the informant had filed a petition for judicial enquiry impugning the Police report, and the Magistrate had proceeded to enquire into the complaint. The offence of false charge, if any, not having been committed in a Court or in relation to any proceeding in a Court, I think no sanction was at all necessary as contemplated by section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. In support of this view the rulings reported as Putiram Ruidas v. Mahomed Kasem (1) and Dharmadas Kavar v. Emperor (2) may be referred to. Section 476 must be read subject to the restrictions contained in section 195 (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and hence the Magistrate had no power to direct a prosecution for making a false charge before the Police. In my opinion the provisions of section 195 or 476, Criminal Procedure Code, do not apply to the case before us. Moreover, the petitioner not being a party to any proceeding cannot take this objection.

(2) 12 C. W. N. 575; 7 C. L. J. 373; 7 Cr. L. J. 340.

ABDUL KHALIQUE v. SURJA SINGH.

(b) This ground also fails. It was contended for the petitioner that the Magistrate, after recording the initial statement of the complainant, had some hesitation in issuing process as appears from the delay of some 2 days when he made up his mind to summon the petitioner. I think there is nothing in the record to support this contention. There is no suggestion at what time the Magistrate examined the complainant. There is no provision in the law that a Magistrate after examining the complainant must at once proceed either under section 202 or section 204, Criminal Procedure Code; if the Magistrate took a few days' time to consider whether or not he ought to issue process, that does not necessarily mean that he did not believe the complainant's statement. The Magistrate had no business to proceed under section 202 if he was satisfied that there was a prima facie case to justify him to issue process. The Magistrate seems to have proceeded under section 204, Criminal Procedure Code, and that is a discretion which no Court can interfere with at this stage. The complainant stated on oath that Aulad Ali was tutored by Abdul Khalique, petitioner, to lodge a false case before the Police. He took the responsibility on his own shoulders by making the above statement, and thus rendered himself liable to the consequences thereof. If the Magistrate's discretion in issuing process against accused persons be interfered with on the mere allegation that there was no material for issuing such process, then there will be a flood of motions which the existing judiciary shall be unable to cope with. In my opinion, therefore, this ground must also fail.

(c) It is too early for the petitioner to say at this stage that the Magistrate should have issued process under section 211 only and not under section 500, Indian Penal Code. It is seen that an accused is charged under one section and convicted under another section. Mere summoning the petitioner under section 500/211, Indian Penal Code, constitutes no such illegality as to justify a reference to quash the whole proceedings.

From what has been stated above it will be seen that there is no ground to justify a reference as prayed. I, therefore, decline to interfere. The application is dismissed and the Rule is discharged. The record shall be forthwith sent back to the lower Court for proceeding with the case."

Mr. M. Haque (with him Mr. Muhammad Tahir), for the Petitioner, argued that there having been a previous investigation by the Police into this matter and the Police having found the factum of dacoity being true, the Magistrate should at least have ordered an inquiry into this matter before issuing summons. Under the circumstances there were no materials before the Magistrate justifying him in issuing summons. Secondly, the Magistrate should not have summoned the petitioner to answer a charge under section 500, Indian Penal Code. There are no materials whatsoever for this charge.

I concede that sanction is not necessary under section 195 or 476, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. S. A. A. Asghur (Government Advocate) (with him Mr. Manohar Lall, Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown, submitted that it is entirely within the discretion of the Magistrate to hold an enquiry or not before issuing summons. If he is satisfied on a perusal of the complaint and the examination of the complainant he has jurisdiction to issue summons.

As to the summons under section 500, Indian Penal Code, that is not final. The charge is framed after the evidence of the prosecution has been led and if my learned friend's client is able to satisfy the Magistrate that the evidence of the prosecution discloses no materials for an offence under section 500, Indian Penal Code, the Magistrate will no doubt consider that objection. It is premature to move your Lordship at this stage. The proceedings are perfectly in order.

JUDGMENT.—One Aulad Ali lodged information at the Kishen Ganj Thana that a dacoity had been committed in his house on a certain night and he mentioned that he suspected Sarju Singh and four others. The Police enquired into the matter and reported to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that there had been a dacoity, but that it was not true that Sarju Singh had been present, and the four other participants had not been recognised. On this report the Sub-Divisional Magistrate made an entry "enter true section 458, Indian Penal Code." On the 31st July 1919 Sarju Singh put in a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate against Aulad Ali and the present petitioner, Sheikh Abdul Khalique; he asked that summonses might be issued against them under section 211 and section 500, Indian Penal Code, on the ground that Aulad Ali had instituted a false case against him and had defamed him, and that Abdul Khalique had instigated the false information which had been given to the Police and had also defamed him. The Magistrate recorded the complaint of Sarju and a few days afterwards ordered summonses against the two persons complained against under sections 500 and 211, Indian Penal Code. It is against this order that the present application is now made.

The grounds taken by Mr. Haque are that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had no material before him whereon to decide whether a summons should issue against Abdul Khalique, the petitioner, who had not been named in the information to the Police and against whom there was so far nothing on the record. It is also urged that some enquiry should have been held before issuing summons. It is admitted that neither under section 195 nor under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, any sanction was necessary for the complaint. I can see nothing irregular in the procedure followed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Sarju lodged a complaint and was duly examined. The Magistrate had full power, if he believed that there was truth in the complaint, to issue summons straightway. It was not necessary for him to call for an enquiry beforehand if he was satisfied that there were good grounds for proceeding against the persons accused in the complaint. As to whether the offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code, has been made out by the complainant or an offence under section 500, remains to be settled after the hearing of the case when witnesses have been examined. At the time that the charge is framed the Magistrate will decide what offences, if any, have been proved. The mere act that there had been an investigation by the Police beforehand and the case had been entered true does not affect the matter at all. The entry of the case as true referred to the fact that it was found that the dacoity was true; it did not refer to the fact that the persons charged in the information had in fact committed the offence. I can see no ground for interference at this stage. The application is rejected.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 367, 424—Appellate Court, duty of, to write judgment in accordance with law.

The provisions of section 367 of the Criminal Procedure Code have been made applicable to appellate judgments by section 424 of the Code, and it is the duty of an Appellate Court to decide the points raised in appeal and to write a judgment in accordance with law.

Petition under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Jullundur, dated the 17th April 1919, affirming that of an Honorary Magistrate, 2nd Class, Jullundur, dated the 27th February 1919, convicting the petitioner.

Lala Fakir Ohind, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—There was an appeal to the District Magistrate who should have recorded a judgment, in accordance with law. Points were raised in the appeal which were of importance and which should have been decided. The District Magistrate has apparently lost sight of the provisions of section 367, Criminal Procedure Code, which have been made applicable to appellate judgments by section 424, Criminal Procedure Code. The District Magistrate has not even expressed his opinion as to the guilt of the petitioner. I accept this petition and setting aside the order of the District Magistrate return Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, order under, form of—Joint possession of disputed properties—Criminal proceedings, validity of.

An order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code should merely declare whom the Magistrate finds to be in actual possession of the property in dispute, regarding which proceedings have been taken to prevent a breach of the peace.

Where parties are in joint possession of property in dispute, a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take action under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal revision against an order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Chaibassa, dated the 4th July 1919.

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case challenges the propriety of an order passed under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The finding of the learned Magistrate is as follows: "Having regard to all these circumstances I find that the first party is in possession of nearly one-third of the disputed land, viz., half of plot No. 13, one Khet of plot No. 18, 1/3rd of plots Nos. 22, 38, 55, 93 and 65, and the entire plot No. 68, and that the second party is in possession of the remaining portion of the disputed land, the plot numbers having reference to Khewat No. 3/1 in the name of Maheswar Das in Mauza Kusmi which has been marked Exhibit 1 in these proceedings." It seems to me that this finding has, to adopt the words of Prinsep and Stanley, JJ., in the case of Taruja Bibee v. Asamuddi Bepari (1), "the appearance rather of a decree in a civil suit adjudicating the rights of contending parties, whereas an order under section 145 should be merely to declare whom the Magistrate finds to be in actual possession of the property in dispute regarding which proceedings have been taken to prevent a breach of the peace." It is clear to my mind, reading the judgment of the learned Magistrate, that although partition has taken place between them and although they may be in exclusive possession of certain joint family properties, so far as these properties are concerned, they are in joint possession thereof although they hold specific shares therein. In my view, on these findings the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to deal with the case under section 145 at all. If authority is needed for this proposition, it will be found in the case which I have just cited.

I would, therefore, allow this application and discharge the order passed by the learned Magistrate under section 145.

Application allowed.

Abadi, house in, transfer of—Occupation of transferee not objected to by landlord, effect of—Well sunk in abadi, whether inconsistent with purposes of grant.

As a general rule, where no objection is made by the landlord to the occupation of the abadi site by the transferee of a house standing thereon, it must be presumed that such transferee had permission to occupy it on the same terms as his transferor.

The sinking of a well on premises in the abadi occupied by an agriculturist is not necessarily inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was granted, especially where there is no indication of any injury to the interests of the landlord. N RAMDAYAL V. JAGRANI 304 determination of the matter directly in controversy between the parties.

A gift to his wife by a member of a firm heavily involved in debt, which is deliberately kept secret till the firm is adjudged bankrupt and the plain object of which is to delay, if not to defeat, creditors, and under which possession is not obtained by the donee, nor is any convincing explanation given to justify the transaction, is a fictitious gift and confers no title on the donee to the properties dealt with thereby.

Either party to a litigation may in a proper case include in his pleadings two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claim relief thereunder in the alternative, but whenever such alternative cases are alleged, the facts belonging to them respectively should not be mixed up but should be stated separately so as to show on what facts each alternative relief is claimed.

The plaintiff, who avails himself of the right to place inconsistent cases before the Court and endeavours to establish both the alternatives by contradictory oral testimony, is in a state of inextricable difficulty evidence adduced in support of both the cases can hardly be expected to secure confidence. C OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT v. was thereupon told that he should examine his own witnesses, which he declined to do. Upon this the Munsif declared the evidence closed and fixed the next morning for arguments. The next morning the Munsif was asked to vary his order of the previous day and record the defendant's evidence. He refused the application and proceeded to adjudicate on the case. The lower Appellate Court upheld the view taken by the first Court:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case, the High Court would not interfere with the discretion of the two lower Courts, who knew the circumstances of the case and before whom evidence could be given as to the Pleader's inability to go on with the defendant's case. C SWORUP MANDAL v. Finding of fact, interference with—Abandonment of occupancy tenancy and adverse possession, whether questions of fact—Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 38—Abandonment of occupancy tenancy, what constitutes—Adverse possession by landlord.

A finding of fact based on no evidence or against express prima facie reliable evidence is liable to be set aside on second appeal.

Neither the question of abandonment by an occupancy tenant nor the question of adverse possession of the holding by the landlord is necessarily a question of fact.

Where it was found that an occupancy tenant had not for a large number of years either cultivated the land by himself or by others, that there was no sufficient cause for his not having done so, and that he did not arrange for payment of the rent:

Held, that the tenancy must be taken to have been abandoned within the meaning of section 38 of the Punjab Tenancy Act.

Where a holding abandoned by an occupancy tenant is given by the landlords to their tenants-at-will, this is sufficient to constitute adverse possession as against the occupancy tenant. L MUHAMMED UMAR KHAN v. RAZI KHAN, 170 P. R. 1919 873

Dispute, existence of, whether necessary—Interest, award of, whether invalidates award—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62—Settlement contract, whether discharges original contract.

It is an essential condition for an arbitrator's jurisdiction that when his arbitration is demanded there shall be in existence a dispute between the parties.

On 27th April petitioner agreed to sell to the respondent a certain quantity of Hessian cloth at Rs. 30. Delivery of one-half was to be made in May and of the other half in June. Delivery not having been made in May and not being proposed to be made in June, two settlement contracts were entered into on the 3rd May and the 11th June respectively and the same goods were re-sold by the respondent to the petitioner at Rs. 35. The respondent duly sent in bills but the petitioner, although admitting liability for the amount of respondent's bills, withheld payment by claiming to set it off against a larger sum than would be due to the petitioner from the respondent on other accounts. According to the terms of the contracts between the parties the respondent referred the dispute to arbitration and the arbitrators, appointed by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, gave their award in favour of the respondent and allowed interest on the claim. On an application by the petitioner to set aside the award:

Held, (1) that as the petitioner was withholding payment under a claim of right to do so, there was a 'dispute' between the parties, and this gave the arbitrators jurisdiction in the matter;

(2) that after the settlement contract was made the original contract was not utterly discharged by virtue of section 62 of the Contract Act;

(3) that the award was not bad because it awarded interest as it was for the arbitrators to decide this, and they had jurisdiction to decide it.

When a settlement contract is made re-selling the goods back again from the original buyer, the intention is not that after the settlement contract the first contract should be discharged; the intention is that the two contracts should stand together. C UTTAM CHAND SALIG RAM v. The words “permanent settlement” in the first exception to section 37 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act mean the Permanent Settlement of 1793, and not the permanent settlement of any particular mahal.

Held, by a majority (Fletcher, J., dissenting), that an overhead steel tank constructed by a Municipal Corporation for the storage of water during the hours when the demand is comparatively small, and to supplement the supply when the demand is large, is not “machinery” for the purposes of section 10 of the Bengal Municipal Act, and is, therefore, not exempt from assessment as “machinery.”

Beachcroft, J.—It cannot be properly said that everything which is connected in a system comes within the description of machinery merely because mechanical contrivances are employed in the working of some parts of that system. The test to be applied with reference to any particular part of the system is whether it is essential to, or assists in the working of, the mechanical contrivance.

Per Greaves, J.—“Machinery” is an apparatus for applying mechanical power, consisting of a number of inter-related parts, each having a definite function and it is in this sense that the word is used in section 10 of the Bengal Municipal Act. C CHAIRMAN, COSSIPORE AND HITPORE MUNICIPALITY v CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA, 23 C. Bengal Putni Taluks Regulation (VIII of 1819), ss. 8, 10, 13, 14—

"Day," meaning of—Putni sale—Payment to officer of zemindar before sale, effect of—Notice, defective—Sale, validity of—Purchaser, position and rights of—Purchaser, whether necessary party to suit—Possession, whether can be given on reversal of sale Appeal—Finding of fact, when can be disturbed.

A finding by a trial Court based solely on oral evidence adduced before it ought ordinarily not to be disturbed by a Court of Appeal.

The term "day" in the Putni Regulation, 1819, means a day reckoned in the manner prevalent in Bengal, that is, from sunrise to sunrise.

A payment to the officer of a zemindar of the full amount due for arrears of rent, made between 8 and 10 P. M. on the evening of the day antecedent to a sale under the Putni Regulation, is a valid payment and a sale held after such payment is made, is without jurisdiction.

A defective notice under section 8 of the Putni Regulation is fatal to the validity of the sale.

A notice which omits to specify the lots to be sold and does not set out the order in which the sale is to take place, is a defective notice.

Where the purchaser at a sale under the Putni Regulation is a stranger to the proceedings, he is entitled, on the sale being set aside, to be indemnified against all loss at the charge of the zemindar or other person at whose instance the sale may have been made, such loss being measured by costs of litigation and interest on the purchase-money.

Section 14 of the Putni Regulation contemplates that the purchaser is to be made a party to a suit to set aside a putni sale. If the purchaser has purchased on behalf of another or on behalf of himself and others, he must be deemed to represent all such persons and if it was he who took delivery of possession under section 15 of the Regulation, it is immaterial that a plaintiff asks not merely for reversal of the sale but also for restoration of Possession on such reversal. C BEJOY KRISHNA MOOKERJEE v. A tenant who has been in possession of a holding for a long time and has acquired a right of occupancy, cannot by any agreement contract himself

A suit by a tenant against his landlord for the recovery of possession of his holding, where the defendant did not dispossess the plaintiff in his capacity as landlord of the holding, is not governed by Article 3, Schedule III, of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

A document creating a lease by an occupancy ryot cannot be given in evidence if the lease is for more than 9 years and whether the document has been registered or not, the lease is void. The validity of such a lease can be questioned by the grantor or by a person claiming from him.

Where in a lease a lessor states that he is a kayami ryot, this does not necessarily imply that he is a ryot at a fixed rent.

Irrespective of custom or local usage the heir of an under-ryot under an annual holding is entitled on the death of the under-ryot to remain in possession of the land until the end of the then agricultural year for the purpose of tending and gathering in the crops standing on the land.

s. 52 Landlord and tenant—Rent, abatement of Tenant, whether includes one of several tenants—One of several tenants, whether can claim abatement of rent—Appeal, abatement of.

It is not open to one of many tenants to claim abatement of rent without making all the joint landlords and his co-sharers in the tenancy parties to the suit.

The expression 'tenant' in section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not include the case of a mere co-sharer tenant who has only a fractional share in the tenure: it means the tenant of the tenure and not one of many tenants.

In a suit for rent by some co-sharer landlord, the tenant defendants claimed abatement of rents and their claim was allowed by the Court of first instance. On appeal by the landlords the lower Appellate Court reversed that decree and held that the defendants were not entitled to an abatement of rent as all the landlords were not parties to the suit. Against that decision the tenant defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Section 85 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act operates as a statutory bar to the registration of a sub-lease by a raiyat which creates a term exceeding nine years; the consent of the landlord cannot validate the registration and if such a lease is registered, it is inadmissible in evidence. C MADAN MONDAL GOCHI v. A raiyat holding under a lease which is not for a fixed period can surrender the holding under section 86 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Such surrender need not be by an instrument, even though the tenant held under a registered lease.

When a raiyat surrenders his holding and the surrender is accepted by the landlord who enters into possession, the tenant cannot sue to recover the holding from persons to whom the landlord has let it after the surrender. C PORAN CHANDRA v. INDRA SENI, 47 C. 129 752

The provisions of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are not exhaustive and do not prescribe the only mode in which a holding can be abandoned.

In order to entitle a landlord to eject a transferee of the whole of a non-transferable raiyati holding it is not necessary for him to prove as a fact that the raiyat has left the holding and disclaims any interest in it. This is a direct inference from the fact that he has sold the entire holding and given possession of it to the purchaser and distinct repudiation or refusal to pay rent need not be proved. C ASAMULLA MOLLA v. An entry in the Record of Rights under the provisions of section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect, and, therefore, in a proceeding under section 105 of that Act for settlement of fair and equitable rent, the Settlement Officer, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, is not only justified but is bound to act upon such entry.

Where a question has in effect, though not in express terms, been necessarily decided between parties to a suit they cannot raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form.

Where a question is decided by necessary implication, the decision would operate as res judicata.

Section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not lay down that the "issues" referred to in the section can only be raised by an applicant; on the contrary, some of them from their very nature must be raised by the opposite party.

After the final publication of a Record of Rights the landlord applied for settlement of fair and equitable rent under the provisions of section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The tenant thereupon raised the objection that the land, being lakheraj, was not liable to assessment of rent. In consequence several issues were framed, one of them being whether the land was niskar lakheraj property of the tenant. The tenant, however, did not produce any evidence and the Settlement Officer by his judgment assessed certain rent upon the land. The tenant then brought a suit for a declaration that the entry in the Record of Rights stating that the land was liable to assessment was erroneous:

Held, (1) that the decision of the Settlement Officer under section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act was binding upon the tenant, having regard to the provisions of section 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act;

(2) that apart from the provisions of section 107 the suit was not maintainable under section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C APURBA KRISHNA ROY v. SYAMA CHARAN PRAMANIK, 24 C. W. N. 223 952

Plaintiff, who was a vatandar patil, was dismissed from his post and his life-interest in the patilki vatan was forfeited. He brought a suit against the Secretary of State for a declaration that the order of dismissal was illegal and for possession of the vatan lands;

Held, 1) that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act;

2) that section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act was not ultra vires of the Government by virtue of the provisions of section 65 of the Government of India Act, 1858, inasmuch as the plaintiff could not have brought a suit claiming the same relief against the old East India Company. B RACHANGAUDA IRANGAUDA PATIL v. Section 101 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable to warrants issued under section 6 of the Burma Gambling Act.

The Burma Gambling Act contains no provision authorising the endorsement of a warrant issued under section 6 thereof by the officer to whom it is issued, to another officer. The defendants sold to the plaintiff their share in a village, reserving to themselves the occupancy rights in the sir land, and on the same day executed another deed by which they surrendered their occupancy right in the sir land accrued to them by virtue of the sale. The plaintiff was put in possession of the village share under the sale-deed and of the land under the surrender deed, but the defendants ejected him on a subsequent date. The plaintiff brought the present suit for possession of the land surrendered:

Held, (1) that the mere fact of the possession having been delivered to the plaintiff did not suffice to separate the transaction of surrender from that of sale and that the surrender must be held to be void under the provisions of section 45 (1) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act.

(2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to get back the consideration for the surrender, as both the parties knew that they were contravening the provisions of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act and, therefore, the maxim in pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis applied.

The test as to whether a surrender in such a case is an evasion of the provisions of section 45 (1) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act consists in the fact as to whether the transaction is distinctly separate from that of sale of the village share.

If a covenant to relinquish the sir lands is part of the transaction of sale or of mortgage, then the agreement to surrender will be void and unenforceable, no matter what ingenious devices may be employed to give colour to it. If the Court is satisfied that there was first of all a transfer by way of sale or mortgage and that the transferee, having obtained the status of an ex-proprietary tenant with full knowledge of that fact and of the rights preserved to him by the Statute, deliberately chooses, as a separate transaction, to relinquish his ex-proprietary tenancy into the hands of new proprietor, or of the mortgagee in possession, then the law cannot go further in the way of protecting a reckless and imprudent man against the consequences of his own acts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (11), 47—'Representative' in s. 47, meaning of—Purchaser at sale in execution of money decree, purchaser from decree-holder, purchaser under money decree and stranger purchaser at sale in execution of mortgage, whether 'representatives' of either party to suit.

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—A person who has bought the property of the defendant in a suit since the institution of that suit, whether at a Court auction held in execution of a money decree passed in another suit or by private purchase, is entitled and bound to have any question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree decided under section 47 by the Court executing the decree, when his interest is affected either by the decree itself or by the sale held in execution of that decree, and the same rule applies to a purchaser of the property under such sale, whether he is the decree-holder himself or a stranger. Whether the purchaser in the one case or the auction-purchaser in the other is to be regarded as the representative of the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder depends upon the nature of the question raised and who the contesting party is.

Section 47, Civil Procedure Code, should be interpreted in as liberal a spirit as the language would reasonably admit of.

The word 'representative' in the section is not confined to legal representatives.

Per Oldfield, J.—The inclusion of auction-purchasers as parties to proceedings relating to an auction-sale does not make section 47, Civil Procedure Code, inapplicable to them.

Ordinarily, the purchaser at a sale held in execution of a money decree is the representative of the judgment-debtor. Where he is also the decree-holder and his position comes in question in distinct proceedings, his character as decree-holder in one execution can have no effect on his position in another and there is nothing in authority or on principle to debar his being treated like any other stranger to the latter, no reason appearing for according him any other rights than a stranger purchaser from the judgment-debtor, whether by execution or private sale, would acquire.

The purchaser from a decree-holder purchaser under a money decree is a representative of the judgment-debtor for the purposes of enquiry into a question relating to the execution of a distinct decree affecting the same property.

The term 'representative' in section 47, Civil Procedure Code, is not to be identified with 'legal representative' in section 2 (11) of the Code and a purchaser at a Court auction represents some one, that is, either the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Where the equity of redemption is purchased under a money decree, in matters relating to the execution of a mortgage decree, the auction-purchaser under the money decree will be the representative of the judgment-debtor in the mortgage decree.

Whether an auction-purchaser, be he the decree-holder himself or a stranger or purchaser from the decree-holder purchaser, is a party to the proceedings in respect of the sale depends on whether the issues arising for decision relate (a) to execution, (b) to deciding rival rights of the decree-holder and of the judgment-debtor in the subject-matter. If these conditions are satisfied, the fact that others are interested in the result of the decision should not affect the jurisdiction and competency of the executing Court to deal with the matter. M VEYINDRAMUTHU PILLAI v. The dismissal of a suit in terms of Order IX, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, is not intended to operate in favour of the defendant as res judicata.

The application of the principle of res judicata cannot be avoided by a defendant on the ground that he did not appear at the trial, but the conclusive effect of the decision must be confined to the point actually decided in the suit.

A thekadar has, in the absence of any contract or local usage to the contrary, no right to fell timber, nor does the mere grant of protected status confer on him any right to cut down trees and appropriate them to his own use if he had no such right before the grant of that status.

The position might, however, be different if the trees are planted by the person claiming the right to cut them or by his forefather, the principle embodied in section 108 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act being applicable to such a case.

A lessor is not entitled as owner of the trees standing on the land leased out to enter and fell them at his pleasure.

If the lessor desires to take out timber he must, by arrangement with his lessee, acquire permission to go on the land for the purpose. It is not, however, open to the lessee to arbitrarily refuse permission when the lessor, as owner of the timber, desires to fell what he is entitled to take, but reasonable notice of the lessor's intention to enter and fell should be given. N TIKARAM v. Held, that the suit must fail, as the plaintiff's cause of action was one and indivisible, and the fact that the transaction was recorded in his account book did not give him another or different cause of action. It is only where a promissory note is invalid owing to some inherent defect therein, that the party suing thereon is entitled to fall back upon an action for money had and received to his use, and not where, as in this case, the previous suit was dismissed in default of plaintiff's appearance.

A right to possession upon redemption is not a right to the present possession of the property.

An order passed under rule 101 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code becomes conclusive under rule 103 of the Order only so far as the present right to possession of the property is concerned. It does not affect a party's right to possession upon redemption.

The mere fact that in the course of the trial of a suit the plaintiff is found to be entitled to a part only of the relief claimed by him and that that part would have been within the competency of a Court of a lower grade, if the suit had originally been confined to it, gives no authority to the Court under section 15 of the Civil Procedure Code to transfer the suit to a Court of a lower grade, as once a suit is properly instituted and is legally pending, the operation of the section is exhausted. The section depends for its application upon what is actually claimed in the plaint filed, and not upon what ought to have been claimed or is found after trial to have been claimable.

The relinquishment by a plaintiff of a portion of his claim under Order II, rule 2 (1), of the Code refers primarily to the relinquishment before the institution of the suit, and the rule has no application to any part of a dismissed claim abandoned in appeal. No such abandonment can affect appellate jurisdiction.

After a claim has been tried and dismissed, the mere fact that an appeal is made only as to a part of it, does not involve an admission that the suit was wrongly instituted so as to justify the procedure laid down in Order VII, rule 10, of the Code, as this rule only applies when it is found that a suit as originally framed was wrongly instituted, and the abandonment of a claim pendente lite cannot be given retrospective effect so as to vitiate the institution of the suit.

The refusal by a District Judge to hear an appeal amounts to a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law, and is open to revision under section 115 of the Code. N NUR KHAN v. SHAIKH RAHIM

Plaintiffs, merchants in Negapatam, offered to purchase timber from the defendant trading at Mandalay. Plaintiffs' offer was accepted by the defendant at Mandalay. The course of dealings was that defendant prepared scantlings and then put them on board a ship which was neither the plaintiffs' nor the defendant's. He then made out a bill of lading in his own name and drew on it the money due to him according to his estimate from the National Bank. The National Bank transmitted the bills to the Bank of Madras, which in its turn passed them on to the plaintiffs. As the defendant failed to supply the timber according to the contract, the plaintiffs sued defendant in the Negapatam Sub-Judge's Court for damages:

Where a contract depends on correspondence, the whole correspondence should be considered and not particular portions of the series.

Where everything essential to make a completed contract has been settled, the mere fact that a formal document has to be drawn up will not render the contract incomplete.

Where both the plaintiff and the defendant reside in the same place, the offer can be communicated at once and would be received at the place from which it emanates. But where the acceptor resides in a different place, it is when the offer reaches him that there can be a complete offer. Until a proposal is received, therefore, there is no offer. — s. 47, O. VII, r. 10—Execution of decree—Jurisdiction and power of executing Court, question as to, whether relates to execution—Plaint, whether can be returned for presentation to proper Court as application—Jurisdiction, question of, how to be decided—Maintainability of suit, whether must be determined before returning plaint—Procedure—Appeal heard by one Bench, whether can be re-heard by different Bench.

A question as to the legality of an execution Court's procedure or as to its jurisdiction or power to order a sale is a question falling under section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

Order VII, rule 10 (), Civil Procedure Code, gives a Court power to return a plaint for presentation as an application in the Court having jurisdiction to accept it as an application.

There is nothing to prevent a Court ignoring a relief as being based on no shown cause of action and then proceeding to find that the other reliefs are outside its jurisdiction.

A case heard by one Bench can be re-heard by another Bench, i.e., a Bench composed of different Judges. O BALDEO DAS KEDAR NATH v. BOMBAY MERCANTILE BANK, LTD., 6 O. L. J. 640 364

— s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 53, 53, 60, 61, 63, scope of—Claim petition by party exonerated, dismissal of—Order, finality of—Claimant, whether can plead title in defence to suit by auction-purchaser.

The meaning of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, is that the parties to the proceedings shall be concluded by the order made thereon, and that the purchaser at a Court sale shall take the property purchased by him free from any claims negatived by that order, subject to any right of appeal or of suit to which the claimant may be entitled.

Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, may possibly be construed, where the aggrieved claimant or objector is a party to the suit, as substituting a right of suit for the right of appeal.

As section 47, Civil Procedure Code, does not prescribe the procedure to be followed in claim proceedings, regard must be had to the provisions of Order XXI, which deals with "execution of decrees and orders," and rules 58 to 63 of that Order, which are grouped under the sub-heading "investigation of claims and objections," regulate applications made on the ground that any property attached in execution is not liable to such attachment.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

The concluding words of the first paragraph of rule 58 (1) of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code must be held to apply only to the case where the claimant or objector is not a party.

Where a party exonerated from a suit preferred a claim to property attached in execution of the decree against the other defendants, alleging that it was his self-acquisition, and the property was subsequently sold and the auction-purchaser sued for partition as against all the defendants who were members of a joint family:

Held, that the exonerated defendant was precluded from raising the plea of self-acquisition as a defence, inasmuch as he had neither appealed against the order on his petition nor filed a separate suit to establish his title. M VENKATACHELLA REDDY v. MUTHIALU REDDY, 37 M. L. J. 624 536

s. 48, O. XXI, r. 15, O. An order delivering possession of property under an execution application amounts in law to an adjudication that the application is in time, and it is not open to the judgment-debtor to question the legality of that order in proceedings started on a subsequent application for execution.

The absence of a formal order for possession in a decree absolute is a mere irregularity and does not vitiate proceedings consequent on the execution of the decree.

Order XXI, rule 15, Civil Procedure Code, allows one of several decree-holders to apply on behalf of all and it is not for the judgment-debtor to say that sufficient steps have not been taken to safeguard the interests of the other decree-holders, when they themselves have made no complaint whatever.

Where a decree absolute in a suit for foreclosure is incapable of execution owing to the absence of a formal order for delivery of possession, the rule of 12 years contained in section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code applies from the date the decree becomes capable of execution, that is, from the date of the formal order for delivery of possession.

A decree is not incapable of execution merely because it omits to specify the shares of the judgment-debtors in the property decreed, if the decree-holder has secured possession. N AMIRALI v. GOPALDAS 924

An auction purchase of a jote was made by the defendant alone and the earnest money was paid by him alone but instead of paying the balance of the purchase-money from his own pocket, he obtained a portion of it from the plaintiffs under an agreement that the plaintiffs would be joint purchasers of the jote with him:

Held, (1) that the names of the plaintiffs could not be inserted in the certificate of sale, because the person who was declared to be the purchaser after the bids were concluded was the person in whose name the certificate was to be granted under Order XXI, rule 94, of the Civil Procedure Code;

(2) that there having been no agreement before the sale, the second clause of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply to the case but that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim specific performance of the contract.

Where the facts upon which a plaintiff would be entitled to maintain a suit for specific performance of a contract are all stated in the plaint, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend the plaint and add a prayer for specific performance of the contract, although the plaint originally contained no such prayer and the Courts below did not try such a case. C BABU RAM MONDAL v. Although the object of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to discourage benami purchases at Court sales, it does not render such purchases illegal. Inasmuch as the section bars the equitable jurisdiction of the Court, it must be strictly construed and should not be extended beyond its express terms.

Where a Muhammadan father purchased a jote at an execution sale with his own money in the name of one of his sons and settled it with a tenant, who attorned to him and after his death paid rent to his heirs for some time:

Held, that having been brought upon the land by the father, it was not open to the tenant to say after the father's death that he was not the tenant of his heirs, and that a suit for rent brought

One V. obtained a money-decree against the 1st defendant. In execution he attached the latter's properties. The 1st defendant executed a mortgage of the properties to plaintiff in order to avoid the sale by paying the borrowed amount to the purchaser. The payment, however, was not made and V. brought the properties to auction-sale and they were purchased by 4th defendant, who mortgaged them to 5th defendant. Plaintiff sued the 1st defendant and his sons and 4th and 5th defendants on his mortgage:

Held, that section 66, Civil Procedure Code, did not bar the suit as 4th and 5th defendants did not hold the properties for the benefit of the 1st defendant. M MONGOLA SWAYI v. VISVANATHA SANTASO SINGARAO, 37 M. L. J. 586 967 ss. 68, 71, O. XLVI, r. 1—Collector executing decree, whether "Court"—"Court" in O. XLVI, r. 1, meaning of—Reference by Collector, whether competent.

Only a Court has jurisdiction to make a reference under Order XLVI, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, and the word "Court" in the rule means a Court of Civil judicature.

The functions of a Collector in executing a decree transferred to him for that purpose, though designated as judicial, are purely ministerial, and in the exercise of these functions he is not a Court of civil judicature. A Collector, therefore, to whom a decree is transferred for execution under section 68, Civil Procedure Code, has no jurisdiction to make a reference under Order XLVI, rule 1, of the Code. O ALI BAHADUR KHAN v. arrangement was come to whereby J. S. agreed to regard his decree as satisfied on payment of a certain sum by J. R. This sum having been paid, the other creditor of M. objected to the arrangement and claimed rateable distribution:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as there was no other claimant before the Court at the time when J. S. applied for execution, it was open to the latter to attach the whole of the decree held by M. against J. R.;

(2) that the money, obtained by J. S. from J. R. not having been paid into Court so as to constitute "assets held by the Court," was not liable to rateable distribution. L JADU RAI v. MISRI, 3 P. W. R. 1920; 11 P. L. R. 1920 41

A suit for enhancement of rent of two etmams, where the plaintiff and defendants are the landlord and tenants of both and have the same interest in each, is not bad for misjoinder of causes of action; the misjoinder, if any, is merely technical and does not affect the merits of the case within the meaning of section 99, Civil Procedure Code.

Neither section 9 nor section 37 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a bar to the enhancement of rent by a temporary settlement holder, as such holder is, by virtue of the terms of sections 191 and 192 of the Act, not precluded from exercising the ordinary powers of a landlord under sections 7 and 30 of the Act.

An etmam tenancy is a tenure not held at a fixed rate of rent and the rent thereof is liable to be enhanced under the ordinary procedure under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

A rate of rent fixed fifty years ago and which is not the rate on which the tenancy is held since the last Settlement, cannot, in a suit for enhancement, be regarded as the customary rate.

Where in a lease a progressive rent is not fixed at its inception, and the lease is not a reclamation lease, the full rent is liable to enhancement.

In a suit for the enhancement of rent of a tenure where a customary rate of rent is not proved, the method of dividing equally the net profits of the tenure between the landlord and the tenure-holder is correct. C JOGESH CHANDRA ROY v. MOKBUL ALI, 23 C. W. N. 945; 30 C. L. J. 140 850

Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that alienations made by their father and uncles were without consideration and legal necessity and did not affect their reversionary rights. The land had been mortgaged on various occasions and eventually sold and all the mortgagees as well as the vendee were impleaded as defendants. A preliminary objection that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties having been taken and upheld, the plaintiffs proceeded in their case against the vendee only. Their suit was dismissed. On appeal the District Judge held that there was no misjoinder of parties or causes of action and reversed the decree of the first Court. Defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court:

Held, (1) that the suit was not bad for misjoinder of parties and the plaintiffs were competent to bring one suit against the vendee and the prior mortgagees;

(2) that the order of the first Court on the point of misjoinder of parties vitally affected the merits of the case and the District Judge was justified in reversing the decree and remanding the suit for the trial of the original plaint. L RALIA RAM v. A Court of first hearing is bound to consider all the evidence adduced before it, but the mere fact that that Court omits to mention a document in its judgment is no sufficient proof that it failed to take the document into consideration, especially where the document is of obviously no importance or weight. Where, however, the document is of obvious weight or importance, it is incumbent on the Court to mention the document in its judgment and its omission to do so may be regarded by a Court of Appeal as sufficient proof that the document was not taken into consideration.

A party is not entitled to have a document considered by an Appellate Court, unless the attention of the Court is drawn to it, or it is impliedly relied on. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it may be presumed that a respondent relies on the judgment of the lower Court in his favour, and that any document, treated as a document of importance by that Court, has been impliedly brought to the notice of the Appellate Court.

The question whether the fraud of a mortgagor alone in procuring the registration of the mortgage deed in a particular registration office, by representing that some portion of the mortgaged property was within the jurisdiction of that office, would vitiate the mortgage and disentitle the mortgagee, who was ignorant of the fraud, to enforce it, is a substantial question of law of general importance to satisfy the requirements of rule 3, Order XLV, of the Civil Procedure Code. A DIRGPAL SINGH v. S. 109 (c)—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Question of fact—“Any decree or order,” meaning of—Judges arriving at opposite conclusions on vital question—Fitness of case for appeal.

Under section 109 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code a High Court can, if persuaded that a case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council, grant leave to appeal in any case even upon a question of fact.

The words “any decree or order” in clause (c) of section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code do not mean any decree or order other than a decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court or by any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction.

Where two Judges have arrived at diametrically opposite conclusions on the vital question on which the suit should be decided, the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. O SHEO BAHADUR SINGH v. BENI BAHADUR SINGH, 6 O. L. J. 664 828

S. 109—Suit, value of, below Rs. 10,000—Question in dispute one of evidence—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Leave, whether should be granted.

Where the subject-matter of a suit is less than Rs. 10,000 in value, and the sole question upon which the decision of the case rests is one of evidence, the point is not one of general interest and importance to justify the grant of a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council. A MUZAFFAR ALI v. SS. 109, 110—Suit, value of, in excess of Rs. 10,000—Appeal, value of, below Rs. 10,000—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Leave, whether can be granted—Misjoinder, whether question of law justifying appeal to Privy Council.

Where the original value of a suit exceeds Rs. 10,000, but in an appeal by one of the defendants to the High Court, the contest is in respect of his liability for a sum less than Rs. 10,000, the case, for the purposes of an appeal to His Majesty in Council, does not come within the purview of the first paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, nor does it fall under the second paragraph of that section as involving any question regarding property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards.

The question whether the omission to implead one of the plaintiffs in an appeal to the High Court is fatal to the appeal, is not a question of law of general importance involved in the appeal, to justify a certificate that the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. A MUHAMMAD HASHIM v. A decree of the High Court dismissing an appeal on account of insufficiency of Court-fee is one affirming the decree of the 1st Court within the meaning of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code.

A refusal by the High Court to show any indulgence under section 149, Civil Procedure Code, and allow the deficiency in Court-fee to be made good is not a question of law within the meaning of

Under Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code a Court can set aside an ex parte decree only when it is satisfied that the defendant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing.

A Court is not competent to dismiss in default a suit in which a Commissioner is appointed and has not made his report, as such suit cannot be heard until the Commissioner has finished his work.

Where a Receiver is appointed by writ, it is open to the Appellate Court, on an appeal against the order of appointment, to stop the issue of the writ pending the decision of the appeal, or, if the writ has been issued, to direct the Receiver through the Court which appointed him not to take any steps in compliance with the writ of appointment. PAT MULCHAND SINGH v. I, Arts. 109, 181—Injunction, temporary, possession under, whether wrongful—Application for restitution—Limitation applicable.

A Court has inherent power to order restitution in a case not covered by section 44, Civil Procedure Code, for the obvious reason that where a Court by a temporary injunction deprives a person of what he is legally entitled to, it should ex debito justitiæ restore that which he has thus lost and also compensate him for the profits which he has been precluded thereby from earning.

Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to a case to which section 144 applies. A suit, therefore, for mesne profits following on an application for restitution to possession is not precluded.

Possession under a temporary injunction is not wrongful for the purposes of Article 109 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and as that article is confined to suits, it is inapplicable to an application for restitution. S. 151, applicability of—Appeal heard after death of respondent—Application to set aside proceedings—Inherent power of Court—Remedy, proper.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be invoked in aid of an application to an Appellate Court, asking that proceedings before it in an appeal be set aside as a nullity on the ground that on the date of hearing of the appeal the respondent was not living. The correct procedure is to apply, within the period of limitation, for a review of the judgment passed in the appeal. N GANGADHAR v. JAGANNATH 284

A Court is not confined to a narrow construction of the expression "prevented by sufficient cause" in Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code: it has inherent power to set aside an ex parte decree in certain circumstances.

an agreement before the preliminary decree is passed, and a payment under such agreement is made out of Court to the mortgagee, before the final decree is passed, such payment falls within the scope of rule 2 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, and unless it is certified to the Court as required by that rule, it cannot be pleaded as a bar to the execution of the final decree.

The expression "the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree" in rule 2 of Order XXI of the Code merely indicates the Court to which certification is to be made, and in the case of a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit, the Court which is to receive the money payable under it is clearly the Court indicated. M SAMBASIVA AIYAR v. The language of Order XXI, rule 36, of the Civil Procedure Code is wide enough to include delivery to a person while the property is in the rightful possession of a mortgagee, but such delivery is in fact no delivery at all and has no effect beyond being a notice to the mortgagee that the decree-holder is entitled to redeem.

A co-mortgagor paying off a mortgage is not the successor-in-interest of the mortgagee in every respect, but for the purpose of enforcing his right of contribution against his co-mortgagors he is entitled to all the securities of the mortgagee. He can take advantage of a decree in favour of the mortgagee that the mortgage was good and existed, and he is not precluded from doing so by the fact that he does not admit the decree to be a right decree.

Under section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act, where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property and obtains possession thereof, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors for his proportion of the expenses incurred in redeeming the mortgage. The section contemplates that the entire share of each co-mortgagor must be treated as one unit for the purposes of contribution, so that a co-mortgagor cannot ask to redeem separate fractions of his share.

scope of—Claim proceedings—Order regarding possession only and not adjudicating on title, effect of—Order on claim petition, when and how far binds judgment-debtor—Payment of decretal amount after one year from date of order, effect of—"Possession", "conclusive", meanings of.

A judgment-debtor will not be bound by an order on a claim petition unless he has been a party to it and also unless the order in terms adjudicates on his title. Where the only matter adjudicated on by the claim order is as to who is in possession and the conclusive effect predicated by Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, only affects possession and not the title, the order does not bind the judgment-debtor even though he is a party and actively contests the claimant's right, and the judgment-debtor or his heirs are not bound to sue to establish their title within a year of the date of the order.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The scope of Order XXI, rules 58 to 61, Civil Procedure Code, should be restricted to concluding the parties regarding the right to attach the property in execution, and not to finally determine the rights of the parties to the property itself.

The term "possession" in Order XXI, rule 60, of the Civil Procedure Code signifies bare possession and not possession indicative of title.

Quære.—Whether a payment of the decree amount after a year from the date of the adverse order has the same effect as payment within a year and makes the order spend itself out.

Per Bakewell, J.—The meaning of the word 'conclusive' in Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, is that the realization of the attached property shall proceed or be stayed as directed by the order of Court and that there shall be no appeal therefrom except as prescribed by the rule. If the attached property be sold in pursuance of the order, then the purchaser will take it free from or subject to the rights asserted by the claimant or objector as determined by the Court.

auction but before confirmation—Right of purchaser and judgment-debtor to set aside sale—"Owning the property," meaning of.

A purchaser at a private sale from a judgment-debtor after the Court auction but before its confirmation is entitled to apply to set aside the sale under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, but the judgment-debtor who has parted with his rights is debarred from so applying.

The words "owning the property" in rule 89, Order XXI, of the Civil Procedure Code mean owning on the date of the application and not owning on the date of the Court auction sale.

Per Spencer, J.—When both the judgment-debtor (who has sold the property after Court auction) and the private purchaser jointly apply to set aside the sale, there is no reason to refuse their joint application. The right to apply depends on whether the judgment-debtor has actually sold his interest unconditionally on the sale being set aside and has thus divested himself of all further interest in the property or has only agreed to sell it on that condition. M GANTASOLA JAGANNADHAN v. An order by an inferior Court to a superior Court to stay a sale does not take away the jurisdiction of the latter Court to sell, especially where an appeal lies to the superior Court from that order.

A prohibitory order by way of injunction can be issued so long as the property in dispute is in danger of being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree, but once it is sold no such order can be passed.

A Court is bound under Order XXI, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code, to confirm a sale after it dismisses an application to set it aside.

A sale held in ignorance of an order by way of injunction staying the sale is an irregularity, but the sale will not be set aside unless the judgment-debtor has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity.

— O. XXII, rr. 4, 11—Appeal—Death of one of several respondents—Legal representatives of deceased not brought on record, effect of—Abatement of appeal, whether partial or total.

Ordinarily an appeal does not abate in its entirety on the death of one of several plaintiffs-respondents because of the failure of the appellant to revive it against the representatives of the deceased: the abatement only takes effect as against the latter. But from the nature of the suit the result may follow that the appeal has thereafter become imperfectly constituted, so that the appellant can no longer invite the Court to adjudicate upon the matters in controversy.

Where for instance the hearing of such an appeal would result in two contradictory declarations in the same suit, the Court cannot hear the appeal on the merits, in other words, the appeal abates in its entirety. C KALI DAYAL V. NAGENDRA NATH, 30 C. L. J. 217; 24 C. W. N. 44 822

— O. XXII, r. 9—Abatement of suit, effect of—Appeal, whether lies—Application to set aside abatement, rejection of—Right of judgment-creditor of deceased plaintiff, whether affected by abatement order.

An order of abatement is a judgment and should be followed up by a decree. It is also appealable as a decree.

An order of abatement operates as a judgment in favour of the defendant and the only course open to a legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to escape the effect of the abatement order is to apply to set aside the abatement. If he does not succeed in vacating the judgment and so long as the defendant continues in possession, the order of abatement is conclusive of the defendant's rights to the property.

A person who has obtained a decree against the deceased plaintiff stands in no better position and is equally concluded by the abatement order. Though the principle of res judicata may not apply to him he has to displace a chain in the title of the defendant, and has to establish against a party in possession and in whose favour an order of Court has been passed that that party is not entitled to retain possession as owner of the property.

The prohibition against suit applies equally to execution and the decree-holder cannot execute the decree against the property as if it belonged to the judgment-debtor. M BAHIMUNNISSA BEGAM V. SRINIVASA AYYANGAR, 11 L. W. 139; 38 M. L. J. 268 565

In deciding this point the Court must, however, confine itself to the allegations in the petition and must not go beyond them.

A Court should not reject an application under Order XXXIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code on the ground that on the construction of a document filed along with it no cause of action is disclosed. Order XXXIV, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code provides for an extension of time for good cause shown, and ordinarily where a mortgagor decreed-holder wishes to pay in the redemption money after the time specified but before the final decree, the correct course for him is to apply for an extension of time. The Court may, however, treat an application to pay in the money as tantamount to an application for extension of time. But the Court is not absolved from the necessity for passing a final decree and there is no provision for the execution of the preliminary decree before it has been made final. U B MAUNG TUN MAUNG v. In a suit for partition of joint family property, the alienee of the family property was impleaded as a party. The Court found the alienation binding on the family to the extent of Rs. 800 and directed delivery of possession of a portion of the alienated property to the plaintiffs on their paying Rs. 400 to the alienee within a specified date. The plaintiffs failed to pay the amount within the time specified but paid the amount subsequently and applied for and got possession of the property decreed. The District Munsif subsequently reversed his own order on the alienee's application, holding that he had no jurisdiction to enlarge the time. The order was confirmed on appeal:

O. XXXIX, r. 1—Injunction, temporary, when to be granted—Interlocutory injunction, when should be granted—Balance of convenience—Irreparable injury, what is—Status quo, preservation of.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

In granting a temporary injunction to a plaintiff all that is necessary to see is whether the plaintiff has shown a prima facie case in support of the title asserted by him.

An interlocutory injunction should only be granted in cases where property, which it is essential should be kept in its existing condition during the pendency of the suit, is "in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated."

In granting an interim injunction it is the duty of the Court to see on which side is the balance of inconvenience if the injunction do not issue, and to bear in mind the important principle of retaining immovable property in statu quo.

By the term 'irreparable injury' it is not meant that there must be no physical possibility of repairing the injury, all that is meant is that the injury would be a material one and one not adequately reparable by damages. C BEGG DUNLOP & Co. v. Where one party to a contract alleges a breach of the contract and refers the matter to arbitration and the other party brings a suit for a declaration that it is not liable upon the contract, then if the existence of the contract itself is denied, no temporary injunction should be granted restraining the arbitration proceedings, but if the contract is impeached on grounds of equity, such as fraud or misrepresentation, a temporary injunction should ordinarily be granted. L SOHAN LAL-CHIMAN LAL v. O. XLVII, r. 1—Review, application for—Appeal, pendency of, whether bar to hearing of review application—Appeal, disposal of, effect of.

The fact that an appeal is pending against a decree is no ground for rejecting an application to review the judgment on which such decree is based.

Petitioner applied to the trial Court for a review of its judgment, and about the same time preferred an appeal against the same order. The trial Court refused to hear the application for review, on the ground that an appeal was then pending against the order which it was asked to review. Petitioner then moved the High Court in revision and during the pendency of his petition, his appeal was disposed of:

Held, that though the order refusing to hear the application for review was erroneous, yet as upon disposal of the appeal the decree of the trial Court no longer existed, the final decree being that of the Appellate Court, there was no order which the High

Held, that the High Court had jurisdiction to enforce the orders by proceedings in execution before itself, or to authorise the Official Liquidator to apply to the various District Courts in respect of each of the persons against whom orders for contribution had been passed; and that as the balance of convenience was in favour of the latter course, the Official Liquidator was authorised to proceed accordingly. A In the matter of THE NATIONAL INSURANCE & BANKING CO. In a suit on a promissory note endorsed over by the payee to the plaintiff against the debtor, endorser and another surety, the plaintiff exonerated the principal debtor:

Held, that there was a reservation of the plaintiff's intention to prosecute his remedies against the other two and that a decree could be passed against them.

The provision contained in section 178 of the Contract Act, so far as it goes, gives statutory effect to the principle that where one of two innocent parties must suffer for the fraud of a third, the loss should fall on him who enables such third party to commit the fraud. appears that the intention of the parties was to effect a mortgage in præsenti, the mere fact that the future tense is used should not be construed as indicating that the parties intended the document to be a mere agreement to mortgage to be followed by an instrument of mortgage in due course.

A transfer of grant lands without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner, in contravention of the conditions of the grant, renders the grant liable to resumption and the grantee to certain penalties, but it cannot be said that such transactions are forbidden by law, within the meaning of section 23 of the Contract Act.

A mortgage of grant lands without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner is a valid mortgage of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor in the grant, but the mortgagee runs the risk of having his grant resumed. So long, however, as the Deputy Commissioner does not take action to resume the grant, the mortgage holds good and can be legally enforced. L B PO MAUNG v. R. M. C. R. M. CHETTY, 12 Bux L. There is nothing in the wording of the section which can be so construed as to support the contention that when a beneficiary under a Will dies before the estate of the testator is fully administered and Probate is taken out of the Will of the beneficiary, then no Court-fees are required to be paid in respect of that portion of the beneficiary's estate which he has taken under the previous Will and in respect of which Court-fees have already been paid. PAT BHAGWATI SARAN SINGH v. It is competent for a Divisional Magistrate to initiate proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, during the subsistence of an order passed by a Sub-Magistrate under section 144 of the Code.

The High Court will not ordinarily interfere with a preliminary order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code except where such order is manifestly illegal.

The word 'evicted' in section 145 (6) applies to cases where a person is found to be disentitled to the extent of possession which he claims as well as to cases where he is found not to be entitled to possession at all.

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable where the contesting parties are entitled to joint possession.

An attachment under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code connotes more than a Civil Court attachment and implies the taking and keeping possession of the property attached by the Magistrate.

There is no objection to the appointment of a Receiver under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, though the powers of such Receiver are not those of a Receiver appointed under section 146 (2) of the Code but are limited to taking possession of the properties and submitting an inventory thereof.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not give powers to a Court to attach moveables.

The Criminal Procedure Code has not overruled the provisions of section 36 of the Letters Patent.

Even if the provisions of section 36 of the Letters Patent do not apply to a case not coming before the High Court in its original or appellate jurisdiction, in the absence of any provisions to the contrary, in the case of a difference of opinion between the Judges, the decision of the senior Judge should prevail in accordance with the principle laid down in section 36 of the Letters Patent.

Proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be taken until the very close of the case in which false evidence has been given, inasmuch as if taken earlier, such action is likely to intimidate subsequent witnesses and defeat the object of the trial.

As a rule a Magistrate should not make up his mind to start proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code against a witness before he has heard all the evidence in the case.

The holding of a preliminary enquiry under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is discretionary, but it should be held, wherever it appears to be necessary to hold it in the interests of justice, and wherever it is held, it must be a real enquiry and not merely a formal one, ample opportunity being given to the accused to show cause why he should not be prosecuted.

The only way in which the validity of an order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be challenged is by invoking the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, but inasmuch as the exercise of that jurisdiction is purely discretionary, such order cannot be challenged as a matter of right. Therefore, a person against whom an order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is made is not precluded from challenging the validity of the order in the subsequent trial or in an appeal from the conviction obtained in the subsequent trial.

The successor-in-office of a Magistrate who has started proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be said to be the nearest Magistrate indicated by the section to whom the case might be sent for enquiry or trial.

A direct disobedience of an express provision of the Criminal Procedure Code as to a mode of trial cannot be regarded as a mere irregularity and in a case of this nature the question of prejudice does not arise. PAT RAMOO SINGH v. EMPEROR, (1901) PAT 61; 21 Cr. L. J. 29 173

Custom—Alienation—Ancestral property—Antecedent debts—Necessity—Duty of alienee to make enquiry
Per Shadi Lal, J.—An alienee discharging an antecedent debt is not required to make an enquiry into the nature thereof.

But an alienee paying off an antecedent creditor gets no advantage, if he has knowledge of the true nature of the debt or acts in bad faith.

An alienee who is identified with the antecedent creditor, so that he and the creditor cannot be viewed as two separate persons, is in the same position.

Per LeRossignol, J.—It is the duty of an alienee of ancestral land to make enquiry not merely as to the existence of antecedent debts but also as to their nature, if the result of the first enquiry would raise doubts in the mind of an ordinary man as to the immorality or reasonableness of the debts.

Plaintiff sued for a declaration that a certain sale-deed executed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in favour of defendant No. 1 shall not affect his reversionary rights. The major portion of the consideration was paid to antecedent creditors to whom the alienors were actually indebted. It appeared, however, that the alienors had embarked upon a career of reckless extravagance and were wasting the property to injure the reversioners.

Held, (1) that the alienee, who was the next door neighbour of the alienors, must have known that the debts due to antecedent creditors had been contracted recklessly and without necessity and could not be regarded as just debts;

(2) that under the circumstances the sale could not be held to be binding on the plaintiff's reversioner. L JHANDU v. NIAMAT KHAN 842

— Alienation—Collaterals, remote, right of, to challenge alienation—Burden of proof—Awans of Mauza Pholriwala, Jullundur District.

No general rule can be laid down as to the applicability to all cases alike of the principle that up to a certain degree of propinquity it is to be presumed that agnatic relations of the alienor are entitled to impeach an alienation of ancestral land and that beyond that degree it is to be presumed that they have no such right.

The general custom of the Punjab does not recognise the right of a collateral, however remotely related, to challenge alienations; and in the case of very distant collaterals the onus of proving a right to control rests on the person who challenges an alienation and not on the alienee.

Among Awans of Mauza Pholriwala in the Jullundur District there is no special custom entitling collaterals in the 10th degree to contest an alienation effected by a childless proprietor. L QASIM ALI v. GHULAM MUHAMMAD, 138 P. R. 1919 961 — Alienation—Consideration, full payment of, not proved—Sale, whether liable to be set aside.

A sale should not be disturbed merely because the payment of an item of consideration set forth in the deed of sale has not been made or because its payment is doubtful, when the consideration even after the deduction of the doubtful item represents a reasonable sale price. L PIYARE LAL v. — Alienation by male proprietor—Widow of predeceased son, whether can challenge alienation.

The widow of a predeceased son, who desires to challenge an alienation made by her father-in-law, is bound to prove not merely that she is heir to her father-in-law but that she has a right to contest the alienation effected by him. L HARNAMAN v. DEWAN, 160 P. R. 1919 908 — or personal law—Arains of Jullundur city—Presumption—Alienation, restriction on powers of—Burden of proof.

In order to apply the initial presumption against the power of alienation in the case of families claiming to be governed by customary law, it is necessary to prove not merely that the family belongs to an agricultural tribe but also that its main occupation is agriculture.

No such presumption exists in the case of a family which, though belonging to an agricultural tribe, has altogether drifted away from agriculture as its main occupation and has settled for good in urban life and adopts trade, industry or service as its principal occupation and means and source of livelihood.

There is no presumption that Arains of Jullundur city are governed by custom. L GHULAM MUHAMMAD v. BURA, 2 U. P. L. R. (L.) 25; 8 P. L. R. 1920; 14 P. W. R. 1920 387

— Pre-emption—Proof of custom—Wajib-ul-arz, entries in, value of—Previous sales to co-sharers, effect of.

The mention of the existence of the custom of pre-emption in two wajib-ul-arzes drawn up at a considerable interval of time between each, the fact that the co-sharers in the village admit the existence of the custom, with the added fact that previous sales have been in favour of co-sharers, are sufficient to establish the existence of the custom.

— Pre-emption—Village confiscated by Government—Settlement record, entry in, value of.

Certain villages were confiscated by Government in 1857 and were subsequently settled with other persons. In 1860 and 1870 entries were made in the Settlement Records that the custom of pre-emption existed in the villages:

Held, (1) that when the Government became the sole owner of the villages in 1857, the old custom ceased to exist;

(2) that a new custom could not have sprung up between 1857 and 1860 or between 1860 and 1870;

(3) that therefore, the entries in the Settlement Records were not sufficient to prove the existence of the custom of pre-emption. A RAM SARUP v. RAM DEI, 18 A. L. J. 118; 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 37 786

— Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, of wishes of co-sharers, whether proof of custom—Appeal, second—Finding of fact, based upon one piece of evidence alone, whether binding.

Where an entry in a wajib-ul-arz dealing with pre-emption records the wishes of the co-sharers as to what should happen in the future, such entry is not binding on the members of the co-parcenary body as a village custom, nor is such entry proof of the existence of the custom of pre-emption.

Where an Appellate Court bases a finding of fact upon one piece of evidence alone without considering the whole of the evidence bearing upon the point, the finding is not binding in second appeal. A MAHRAJ SINGH v. PITAMBAR SINGH, 2 U. P. L. R. (A.) 44 768

— proof of—Local custom—Family custom—Burden of proof—Presumption—Trespasser planting groves, whether grove-holder

Where in a case a local custom pertaining not only to the persons belonging to the sub-caste of the parties to the case but also to the persons belonging to the other sub-castes of the same caste is alleged to exist, it is sufficient to prove the custom so far as the particular sub-caste under consideration is concerned and it is not necessary for the purposes of that case to prove the custom so far as the other sub-castes are concerned.

Where a local tribal custom is pleaded and it is proved that it exists in the tribe of the locality, there is a very strong presumption that any particular family of the tribe in that locality is bound by that custom, although evidence may not have been adduced to prove that the custom pertains to that particular family. In such a case the burden of proving that the custom does not obtain in that particular family lies on the person who says so.

A person who plants groves on property to which he has no title cannot, on being ousted from possession, be given the status of a grove-holder in respect of the groves, possession of the groves going with the land on which they stand. O MAKUND SINGH v. KALKA SINGH, 6 O. L. J. 704 856

——— Succession—Self-acquired property—Daughters versus collaterals—Riwaj-i-am—Presumption of correctness—Wajib-ul-arz, entries in, value of—Entries not specifically mentioning ancestral property, construction of.

Those portions of a wajib-ul-arz that refer to custom are not provisions intended to enure for the duration of the settlement only but are statements that a certain custom exists.

There is a presumption as to the correctness of such entries in a wajib-ul-arz, but though such entries are evidence, the presumption as to their correctness is a rebuttable one.

The riwaj-i-am carries with it a certain presumption of correctness, but the presumption is rebuttable and when positive instances are given, the riwaj-i-am cannot be regarded as overriding them.

In the case of self-acquired property the general custom is that daughters are preferred to collaterals.

Where the entries in the wajib-ul-arz do not distinctly state that they relate to self-acquired property as well as ancestral, they should be read as merely referring to ancestral property. L GHULAM MUHAMMAD v. GAUHAR BIBI, 18 P. W. R. 1920; 10 P. L. R. 1920 419

Where it is found that a money-lender has allowed a debt to remain outstanding for a very long period without obtaining some document or security for it and without at any time demanding payment, the presumption is that the debt has been paid off.

In a suit for pre-emption in order to determine whether the price entered in the sale-deed has been fixed in good faith, the Court is entitled to examine whether there is any very great difference between the price and the market value of the property. If the price entered in the sale-deed greatly exceeds the market value, that fact would be relevant to the issue of good faith but it would be open to the vendee to show special circumstances which induced him to pay a fancy price for the property.

Debtor and creditor—concl'd.

If a Court in the course of its judgment finds that a witness has given false evidence or that a party has rendered himself liable to criminal proceedings, there is no impropriety in stating in the judgment that separate proceedings will be taken against such witness or party. O NARAIN PRASAD v. Where the extent of a recurring liability, such as the liability to pay rent, has been determined in one suit and other suits between the same parties as to subsequent periods have been decided on the authority of that decision while it was itself under appeal to a higher Court, the party who ultimately succeeds in the appeal from the first decision is entitled to regard the intermediate decrees as superseded and to enforce his rights as regards the intermediate periods with reference to the decision in the first case.

The fact that the subsequent suits were decided on the authority of the first decision and not as res judicata, makes no difference. M ZEMINDAR OF PANGIDIGUDEN v. VENKATAPPAYYA, 37 M. L. J. 591 647

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVI of 1879), s. 2 (1st)—"District to which this Act may for the time being extend," meaning of.

The extension of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to a particular district contemplated in section 2 (1st) of the Act is the extension of the substantial portion of the Act and not merely the extension of a particular section or one or more sections. What is meant is that there must be an extension of the Act sufficient to provide that its main purpose applies to the district, or a really substantial part of the main purpose. B CHANBASAYYA v. s. 15—Right of way—Uninterrupted enjoyment—Acquiescence by servient tenement, whether necessary—Question of fact—Burden of proof

The uninterrupted enjoyment for 20 years of a right of way, which raises a presumption of right amounting to a presumption of law, must have been acquiesced in by the owner of the servient tenement.

Knowledge of the fact of enjoyment on the part of the owner of the servient tenement is an essential condition to the acquisition of an easement where the Court is asked to presume a grant. The fact that there has been active obstruction on the part of such owner would negative any such presumption.

In order to negative submission to an interruption the party interrupted need not have brought a suit.

The question whether there has been submission to, or acquiescence in, an obstruction is a question of fact, and the burden of negating submission should be placed upon the party alleging that he did not submit, the matter being within his special knowledge. N RAMCHANDRA KAO v. Several persons were placed on trial together on charges of offences under section 420, read with section 120B, of the Penal Code. After the case had been opened, the Pleader for the Crown, with the consent of the Court, withdrew from the prosecution of one of the accused R, who was thereupon discharged and afterwards examined as a witness in the case:

The question whether any particular entry in a Chaukidar's Register of Births and Deaths is admissible in evidence depends primarily on section 35 of the Evidence Act. A Civil Surgeon's evidence as to the age of a girl is on a higher level than that of an ordinary person, as he is able to examine the girl with a particularity and with a knowledge which an ordinary person does not possess. — ss. 92, 115—Oral evidence varying terms of document, whether admissible between parties on same side—Estoppel, applicability of doctrine of, against witness.

Section 92 of the Evidence Act merely prevents evidence being given to vary the terms of a document in a proceeding between the parties to that document and their representatives. There is nothing to prevent two persons who are arrayed on the same side, such as joint vendees, to give evidence to vary the terms of the written instrument in a contest between themselves.

In the absence of an allegation or proof that relying upon the recitals in a sale-deed a person has acted to his detriment, the plea of estoppel is not available to him.

Where a usufructuary mortgage deed provides for the payment of revenue by the mortgagee, but fails to indicate whether the parties meant the revenue as assessed at the date of the deed or as it might be re-assessed from time to time, evidence may be given under section 96 of the Evidence Act of facts to show what was meant. An express declaration of the parties subsequent to the execution of the mortgage deed, as to what they meant when the deed was executed, is admissible as such evidence.

Section 76 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act imposes on the mortgagee an obligation to pay the revenue and Government charges when they can be paid out of the income. If they can be so paid he cannot recover them under section 72 (b) of the Act, since the permission given by section 72 (b) must be read subject to the obligation imposed by section 76 (c). If they cannot be so paid, then in the absence of a contract to the contrary a mortgagee who has paid them out of his own pocket can recover them under section 72 (b). S. 114 (g)—Accounts, suit for—Defendants, failure of, to produce account books—Presumption—Costs, liability to pay, how to be determined—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. 1, r. 10, O. XLI, rr. 4, 33—Transfer of parties—Court, power of, extent of—Appeal—Appellate Court, power of, to make appropriate order, extent of.

The failure of a defendant in a suit for accounts to produce his account books would justify the Court in raising the presumption, under section 114 (g) of the Evidence Act, that they are being withheld, because, if produced, they would be unfavourable to his case.

Where a defendant is largely responsible for the litigation, and by his obstructive methods hampers the investigation, thereby delaying and lengthening the inquiry, he should be made liable for the whole costs of the suit.

If a suit is instituted for an account between two persons, one alleging that nothing is due from him, and a balance is found to be due from him, that person must pay the costs of the suit and of the account. But the case is different where one party admits a given sum to be due from him and the other claims a much larger sum, and the suit proceeds only for the purpose of ascertaining whether such contested balance is really due or not. In this case, the costs would depend upon the substantial result, that is, if the balance claimed, or a substantial part of it, is shown to be due, the claimant would obtain the costs of the suit; if no part of it is due, he would have to pay them; and if only a portion of it is due, the Court would probably give no costs on either side. But in all these cases the Court would endeavour to see what were the substantial questions and causes of litigation between the parties.

Order I, rule 10, of the Civil Procedure Code authorises the Court to make an order transferring a party from the category of defendants to that of plaintiffs at any stage of the proceedings, not merely after the passing of a preliminary decree, but also after expiry of the period prescribed for an appeal against that decree, so long as the transfer is for the benefit of the parties, or tends to give effect to one of the aims of the law of procedure, viz, the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits with reference to the same subject-matter.

Order XLI, rules 4 and 33, give an Appellate Court ample power to make the appropriate order needed in the interests of justice. Under the former rule, on appeal by one of the parties upon a ground common to all, the decree may be varied in favour of all; under the latter rule, the Appellate Court has power to make the proper decree, notwithstanding that the appeal is as to a part only of the decree, and such power may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, even though such respondents or parties may not character of the mother of a boy aged 9 years and of anything to show that she is not capable of looking after the child, the appointment of a guardian is unnecessary and the boy should not be removed from her care.

Where the object of a person who applies to be appointed the guardian of a minor is not so much the welfare of the minor as the vindication of his own rights to be appointed a guardian, his application should be disallowed. A SUDHIA v. MAKKA, 18 A. L. J. 71 418

— ss. 20, 27, 33—Guardian and ward, relationship between—Duty of guardian to invest moneys belonging to ward—Moneys belonging to ward used by guardian—Profit, whether must be paid to ward—Compensation—Liability of guardian, extent of.

The relationship between a guardian and his ward is very similar to the relationship existing between a trustee and his beneficiary.

A guardian stands in a fiduciary relation towards his ward and is not allowed to make any profit out of his office. He must deal with the property of his ward as carefully as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with it as if it were his own. If he uses the property of the ward in his own business, he must hand over the profits arising therefrom to the ward.

Prima facie it is the duty of a guardian to invest moneys belonging to his ward and his liability extends to profits actually received, or profits which could have been received but for his gross and wilful default.

Every plain neglect of duty by a guardian amounts to a breach of trust, and he must compensate his ward for any loss occasioned thereby. L LABHU RAM v. BHAG MAL, 157 P. R. 1919 926

— ss. 29, 30—Guardian, powers of, restriction upon—Transfer of immoveable property without sanction of Court, validity of—Minor, liability of, extent of—Minor, whether bound to restore benefit—Document, date of execution of—Presumption.

The restrictions on the powers of a guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act can be enforced only to such extent as is laid down by the provisions of that Act.

Therefore, although a transaction entered into by a certificated guardian on behalf of his ward in respect of the latter's immoveable property without the sanction of the District Judge cannot be enforced against the ward during his minority so as to affect directly his immoveable property, yet a simple money decree can be passed against him to the extent to which he is found to have benefited by the transaction.

No transaction can be avoided by a minor under the general principles of equity recognised by section 41 of the Specific Relief Act, except on the condition that the person benefited by the transaction restores the benefit he has received or makes such compensation as the justice of the case requires. O PARSHOTAM DAS v. One co-parcener of a Mitakshara joint family cannot, without the consent of the other co-parceners, alienate by way of gift, sale or mortgage the joint family property.

One exception to this rule is when the father, as manager of the family, mortgages or otherwise deals with the joint property for family necessity or for antecedent debt.

The exception in favour of alienations by the father for antecedent debts is more or less the creation of case-law and should not be extended and should be very carefully guarded.

An antecedent debt is an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate.

There is a distinction between a case where the property has passed out of the hands of the family by mortgage, sale or other alienation by the father, and the son sues for the recovery of the same and the case where the mortgagee seeks to enforce the mortgage executed by the father against the sons who are in possession of the property. In the former case the son must show the grounds on which he seeks to set aside the alienation by the father, in the latter it is the mortgagee who has to show how he claims for the re-payment of the debt of the father.

The self-acquired property of a Hindu devised by him to his sons will be regarded, in the absence of an express intention to the contrary by the deviser, as ancestral property in the hands of the sons and not as their separate and self-acquired property.

Whether in any given case property was intended to pass to the sons as ancestral or self-acquired property is a question of intention turning on the construction of the instrument of gift, the bias being in favour of ancestral property in the absence of words to the contrary. The fact that the grandsons' names are not mentioned in the instrument does not tend to show that the property is not ancestral.

Hindu Law—contd.

Per Spencer, J.—A partition of family property among Hindus cannot be treated as a transfer within the scope of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, as it only effects a change in the mode of enjoyment of the property and is not an act conveying property from one living person to another.

A document whereby a co-parcener relinquishes his incorporeal right to have a partition effected of joint family property is not a transfer which can be avoided by his unsecured creditors under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, if they have taken no action to attach his rights prior to the relinquishment.

Section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act must be strictly construed, as it is a statutory provision and Courts have no power to extend statutory provisions by analogy to transactions which do not fall within the scope of the Statute.

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—The law requires some unequivocal and definite expression of an intention on the part of a member of a joint family, to the effect that in future he would regard himself as a separated member, before a severance can be held to have been effected, and the expression of such intention must be communicated to the other members or at least to the manager of the family. From the mere fact that a member of a joint family asks for a partition it is not to be necessarily inferred that he intended a separation of status before a partition was effected.

A relinquishment by a co-parcener of a large share in family properties in lieu of an inadequate and wholly disproportionate cash consideration received from the other members operates as a severance of the joint status and if it is effected to defeat creditors, the document may be avoided by the latter under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. M INDOJI JITHAJI v KOTHAPALLI RAMA CHARLU, 10 L. The manager of a joint family is not obliged to keep accounts while the family remains joint, and when a partition is asked for, partition takes place of the property as it exists in the hands of the manager.

When a suit is filed for partition of joint family property, there is a severance of interest from the date of the filing of the suit, and for purposes of inheritance and succession the family members are no longer considered joint, but so far as the family property is concerned, the family is considered as one entity until the moment comes for division, and then each party gets his actual share. — Dedication of temple to public, tests for determining—Foreign decisions, expediency of resorting to, for conclusions on questions of fact

The following circumstances may be taken as establishing that a shrine founded and built by a person has been dedicated for public worship and that the temple has become a public religious endowment:—(1) Worship by the public in the temple for a long time, (2) contributions by members of the public for extension of temple buildings and utsavams and founding kattalais, (3) building of choultries by the public, (4) installation of a copper, instead of a stone, idol by the founder, (5) conducting of processions regularly in public streets, (6) entries in books maintained by public servants treating the temple as public

The following facts do not necessarily militate against a public dedication:—(1) The temple being founded by a private individual, 2, management being in the family of the founder or their spending the income of the temple uncontrolled by the public, (3) the tomb of the founder being in or in the vicinity of the shrine, (4) performance of pujas to the images of the founder or his descendants, (5) the family of the founder being the pujaris of the temple, (6) restrictions being placed against promiscuous entrance into the shrine, (7) the members of the founder's family submitting themselves to be taxed on any particular occasion for the income of the temple.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Where the shrine in which the idols are installed takes the form of a temple larger than the size of an ordinary middle class house and especially if the temple has prakarams and mantapams, it is incredible that, except in a few instances in Malabar, such a temple should be a private temple. Even in Malabar, the presumption would be that such a temple is a public temple till the contrary is proved.

It is dangerous and inexpedient for Indian Courts to rely on English and foreign decisions to arrive at conclusions on questions of fact.

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—There are two classes of dedications which must be differentiated. The consecration of a temple for public worship is a dedication in the strict sense of the term. In some cases the word dedication is employed to denote an endowment of property to the temple. In the latter case it has to be shown that the property ceased to belong to the individual and was given up for the use of the temple. In the first class of cases it will generally be sufficient to show that there has been free access to the temple and that there have been public worship and public celebrations. M SUBRAMANIA AIYAR v LAKSHMANA GOUNDAN, (1919) M. employment till he pays a certain amount of fine imposed upon him by the trustees, he is under no obligation to pay the fine under protest and thus reduce the amount of damages recoverable from the trustees by shortening the period of his unemployment.

Where the trustees of a temple eject an archaka from the temple they do so at their own risk, and they cannot be heard to say that a delay in taking steps to test the propriety of their conduct involved a lack of diligence on the part of the archaka, which should mitigate or deprive him of the right to damages.

Payments made to archakas for performing archakais in a temple are voluntary, in the sense that their amount and the making of them is at the devotee's option. Where an order for ejectment has been carried out and formal possession delivered to the landlord, the fact that shortly before the order was carried out a partition had taken place and the particular plot from which ejectment had been effected had fallen to the lot of another co-sharer landlord, would not make the ejectment less effective as against the tenant. U P B R BABU KHAN v. Joint tenancy—Co-tenant becoming co-sharer in mahal, effect of—Devolution of tenancy—Survivorship—Succession.

Where two brothers are recorded as occupancy tenants, the mere fact that one of them acquires a share in the mahal would not affect the occupancy right which he holds jointly with his brother, notwithstanding that at a subsequent settlement, owing to his becoming one of the proprietors of the mahal, his name is not recorded along with that of his brother as occupancy tenant. In such a case on the death of one of them the other is entitled to the whole of the occupancy holding by survivorship, and not by succession. U P B R KHUMAN SINGH v. RAM SARUP, 1 U. P. L. R. (B. Occupancy holding, non-transferable—Transfer by tenant in favour of heir without giving up possession—Landlord, right of, re-entry of.

A tenant of a non-transferable occupancy holding purported to transfer the holding by two documents, one in favour of his wife and the other in favour of his daughter. Notwithstanding these documents, however, he remained on the holding and resided at the house erected on a portion thereof down to the date of his death. His wife and daughter were living with him and on his death became entitled to the holding as his heirs:

Held, that the possession of the widow and daughter was lawful possession as heirs and that the landlord did not acquire a right of re-entry and was not entitled to disturb their possession and that the mere fact that the tenant executed two invalid documents in their favour did not alter the character of their possession. C GOLAPJAN BIBI v. A kabuliyat fixed the rent of a tenant as a specified sum of money to be paid in cash and a certain quantity of the produce to be delivered by the tenant to the lessor in a particular month according to a certain measure, and provided that in case of default the landlord would be entitled to recover the cash amount and a specific sum as the value of the produce. In a suit by the landlord claiming to recover the market value of the produce:

Held, that he was entitled only to realize the sum specified in the kabuliyat as the value of the produce and not its market value. C GURUDAS SEN v. GOBINDA CHANDRA SINHA, 24 C. W. N. 85 914

Under-proprietary rights, acquisition of—Adverse possession, acquisition of title by.

Defendants brought a suit to establish under-proprietary rights in 1868. Their claim was rejected but they were given a lease of the village for the term of the settlement. Through some mistake, however, the decree was not given effect to and when the Settlement Khewat came to be prepared a year later, an entry of under-proprietary right was made in their favour. The khewat was proclaimed for objections and none were made, and on all subsequent occasions the defendants claimed to be under-proprietors. In 1887 their claim was resisted by the person in possession of the estate, but it was upheld, and on other occasions it was either explicitly or tacitly admitted. The settlement came to an end in 1896, but the defendants continued to be treated as under-proprietors and on two occasions they asserted a transferable right by mortgaging portions of the land. In 1915 the plaintiff for the first time questioned the right of the defendants to be regarded as under-proprietors:

Held, that after the expiry of the settlement the defendants were in adverse possession of the village claiming title as under-proprietors, and that their title had been perfected by prescription. O SHEO DAYAL v. PIRTHIPAL SINGH, 6 O. L. J. 592 100 to—Failure to enforce right of reversion, effect of—Trespasser allowed to assert under-proprietary title, effect of—Rent, acceptance of, from trespasser, effect of—Estoppel.

A tenure which is not transferable cannot be treated as under-proprietary, but a superior proprietor can confer under-proprietary title on a person for life without any power of transfer. For, it is possible to conceive that a person might split up his full rights into proprietary and under-proprietary, and then grant the under-proprietary rights to another person for a limited period, reserving the reversion for another person or for himself.

An under-proprietary title for life without power of alienation was granted to a person by the superior proprietor with regard to certain property, with the condition that the under-proprietary title would lapse on the death of the grantee and the superior proprietor would then be entitled to reversion of that title. When the grantee died, the superior proprietor did not elect to claim or enforce the reversion but allowed a trespasser to assert that title and continue to pay the under-proprietary rent, so that on the faith of the trespasser being treated and recognised as an under-proprietor by the superior proprietor, the trespasser did certain acts which were to the detriment of herself and to the advantage of the superior proprietor:

Held, that the superior proprietor was estopped from denying the right of the trespasser to hold the property in question as an under-proprietor for life without any power of alienation. O JANKI KUNWAR v. MITRA SEN SINGH, 6 O L J. 636 901

Letters Patent (Bom.), cl. 10—

Bombay Pleaders Regulation (II of 1827), s. 56—"Misbehaviour," meaning of—Disciplinary jurisdiction of High Court, extent of—Satyagraha pledge, signing of, by lawyer, whether unprofessional.

In the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction the High Court can deal with a legal practitioner in the same way as if he were applying for enrolment.

The term "misbehaviour" in section 56 of Bombay Regulation II of 1827 is not restricted to misbehaviour in the strict course of a Pleader's professional duties, but includes general misbehaviour.

There may be acts which would entitle the High Court to refuse admission to a candidate seeking to be enrolled as a Pleader or an Advocate, or to consider that it is improper that a Pleader or Advocate should remain as a practitioner of the Court, although the acts complained of do not involve an imputation of general infamy or bad character.

Where certain legal practitioners signed the following pledge:

"Being conscientiously of opinion that the Bills known as the Indian Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill I of 1919 and the Criminal Law Emergency Powers, Bill II of 1919 are unjust, subversive of the principles of liberty and justice, and destructive of the elementary rights of individuals on which the safety of the community as a whole and the State itself is based, we solemnly affirm that in the event of those Bills becoming law and until they are withdrawn we shall refuse civilly to obey these laws and such other laws as a committee to be hereafter appointed may think fit, and further affirm that in this struggle we will faithfully follow truth and refrain from violence to life, person or property:

Held, that those who had signed this pledge were not fit persons to be allowed to continue as members of the legal profession. B JIVANLAL VARAJRAI DESAI, In re, 2 Bom L R 12; 21 Cr. L. J. 151 679

—Appeal filed beyond time—Limitation, extension of —Sufficient cause—Burden of proof—Objection not taken by respondent—High Court, whether can consider question of limitation—Procedure—Practice.

A petition of appeal filed without a copy of the decree appealed against is not valid as an appeal.

Where an appellant seeks the benefit of the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act, he must adduce distinct proof of the sufficient cause on which he relies and must furnish a detailed affidavit explaining the cause of the delay.

Where an Appellate Court exercises the discretion vested in it by section 5 of the Limitation Act, it must record the reasons for allowing an extension of the period of limitation.

Where a respondent fails to object to the admission of an appeal by a lower Appellate Court under section 5 of the Limitation Act, the High Court is not precluded from considering the question of limitation. Even an agreement between the parties that the objection should not be raised would not prevent the High Court from interfering.

The practice of admitting appeals out of time provisionally, without notice to the respondent, and allowing objection to its admission to be taken at the hearing should be discontinued. Provision should be made for the final determination at the stage of admission of any question of limitation affecting the competence of the appeal. Pat CHATURBHUI SAHAY v. MUHAMMAD HABIB 36

Payment by an agent through his servant or friend is payment on behalf of the principal within the meaning of section 20 of the Limitation Act.

Held, by the Full Bench (Oldfield, J., dissenting) that where an application to set aside a Court sale, made beyond the statutory period after confirmation of the sale, is admitted and is in part disallowed, the period of limitation for an application by the auction-purchaser to be placed in possession must be computed from the date the application to set aside the sale was disallowed, and not from the date of the order of confirmation passed before the application to set aside the sale was made.

In the absence of an application by the decree-holder moving the Court to make an order directing attachment to issue, such order made on the original application for execution does not amount to a step-in-aid of execution.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 3 (2) (d), (e)—Inam, grant of, by zemindar before Permanent Settlement—Grant, whether of melwaram or both warams—Presumption—Burden of proof—Ejectment of tenants, suit for, by grantee—Occupancy rights, proof of—Jurisdiction of Revenue Court Madras Regulation XXVI of 1802, s. 2

In the case of villages granted as inam by a zemindar before the Permanent Settlement, there is no presumption that the land revenue alone was granted. It must be presumed that the grant conferred a right, not only to the land revenue, but also to the land itself.

An action by the grantee in ejectment against the tenants is, however, not maintainable where the defendants have permanent occupancy rights by custom or otherwise, as neither the zemindar by the grant nor the Government by their release could convey rights over which they had no control.

The burden of proving the existence of occupancy rights is on the defendants, tenants.

Where it is not shown that the lands comprised in the grant were in the occupation of tenants at the date of the grant, it is not an 'estate' falling within clause 3 (2) (d) of the Estates Land Act and a suit in ejectment is cognizable by a Civil Court.

Per Napier, J.—The Legislature has specifically dealt with inams in clause (d) of section 3 (2) of the Madras Estates Land Act and could not have intended to provide for any other class of them in clause (e). Clause (e) of the section provides for portions of an estate held on permanent under-tenure and the fact that kattubadi is paid to a zemindar in respect of a pre-settlement inam cannot make that inam either 'a portion' or an under-

In a suit for rent presented under the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act, the Revenue Court is both competent and bound to decide for itself any question necessary for the disposal of the case, whether its decision on the point would finally determine the question between the parties so as to make it res judicata or not. M VENKATAPATHI NAYANI v. Where a ryot's holding is sold for arrears of rent under the summary procedure prescribed in section 111 and the succeeding sections of the Madras Estates Land Act and not in pursuance of a decree, the sale cannot be set aside by the Collector on the ground of irregularity or fraud, Order XXI, rules 90 and 92, Civil Procedure Code, being inapplicable to such sales.

If an order cancelling such a sale is passed, it is open to the auction-purchaser to sue to have it declared that his purchase is valid and that the order setting it aside and directing a re-sale is without jurisdiction and null and void and not binding on him.

Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code applies only to cases where immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, and it cannot be applied except to such sales inasmuch as its language precludes its application to sales in general, even though made through court officers. M JAGANNADHA CHARYULU v. Per Bakewell, J.—The words "claim to succeed" in section 21 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act should not be understood in the strict sense of the acquisition of an interest upon the death of a person, but mean the right to be appointed upon a vacancy in office. The right in dispute in Probate proceedings is not so much a right to property as it is a right to manage and administer the estate by the person applying.

A taluqdari mahal, i. e., a mahal comprising many villages separately assessed to revenue, but carrying a joint liability for revenue extending over all the villages in the mahal, is a mahal within the meaning of section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, irrespective of the fact that no separate Record of Rights is prepared for the whole mahal but only for each of the villages comprising that mahal.

Where a pre-emptor happens to be the mortgagee of the property sought to be pre-empted, the condition in the sale-deed as to redemption of the mortgage as economically as possible does not affect the nature of the transaction as it appears from the deed, so as to debar the pre-emptor from claiming pre-emption of the property sold.

If a vendee fails to see that the vendor complies with the provisions of section 10 of the Oudh Laws Act and files a redemption suit against the mortgagee of the vendee property, who files a simultaneous pre-emption suit, the vendee cannot recover from the pre-emptor mortgagee the costs incurred by him in the redemption suit.

A pre-emptor does not lose his right of pre-emption by reason of the vendee becoming a cosharer after the date of the sale in question but before the date of the pre-emption suit.

The provisions of Chapter II of the Oudh Law Act mean that the persons, who in section 9 are described in a proleptic or anticipatory sense as having a right of pre-emption, are invested with an actual right to pre-empt as soon as a sale to a stranger takes place. In other words, up to the date of sale the pre-emptor has merely the right to be preferred, which is a potential or imperfect right. This potential right gives place, on the happening of the sale to a stranger, to an actual or perfect right to be substituted for the vendee, and such right cannot be defeated by any act of the vendee after he right has accrued.

It is a fundamental principle of law that a person cannot take advantage of his own wrong-doing. A purchaser who purchases property, without ascertaining that it has been offered first to a person having a preferential right of purchase, is assisting the vendor in evading his obligation to give notice under section 10 of the Oudh Laws Act. O. A vendor of certain property left with the vendee a portion of the sale money to be paid to the mortgagee of the property and the pre-emptor, who was the mortgagee, applied under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure for amendment of the decree to the effect that the defendant vendee was entitled to receive from him only such sums as the latter had paid to the vendor, and the Court amended the decree accordingly.

Held, that the Court was right in applying section 151 and in amending the decree as prayed for.

In the absence of any special reason for paying a fancy price for property, the fact that such a fancy price has been entered in the sale-deed is in itself evidence of the price being fictitious.

Under section 13 of the Oudh Laws Act if any single item forming part of the price mentioned in the sale-deed is found to be fictitious, the Court must fix such price as appears to it to be the fair market value of the property sold. O. The Oudh Sub-Settlement Act of 1866, which was enacted for the purpose of securing a better determination of certain claims by subordinate proprietors in Oudh, emphasised that the rights of subordinate proprietors which were to be enforced were those which they held on or before the 13th February 1856 and that the settlement was not intended to enlarge the rights which the holders of subordinate tenures possessed.

The true test to be applied to a transaction challenged by the reversioners as an alienation not binding upon them, but which is alleged to be a family settlement, is whether the alienee derives title from the holder of the limited interest or life-tenant. s. 75—Enhanced sentence, when to be passed—Interpretation of Statutes—Marginal note, value of.

Section 75 of the Penal Code enables a court to pass a sentence commensurate with the nature of the offence on the accused person; it does not empower a Court to pass a sentence disproportionate to the nature of the actual offence.

Recourse should not be had to the provisions of section 75 of the Penal Code if the punishment provided for the offence is sufficient.

The marginal note to a section forms no part of the Statute itself and is not binding as an explanation or construction of the section. Pat SHEIKH CHAMMAN v EMPEROR, (1919) PAT. 43; 1 P. L. T. 2 U. P. L. R. (PAT) 24; 21 CR. L. J. 143 623

Where a person does a thing in good faith but subsequently commits a mistake of fact, he is entitled to the protection afforded by section 79 of the Penal Code.

Instigation necessarily indicates some active suggestion, or support or stimulation to the commission of the act itself, and advice can become an instigation only if it is found that it was an advice which was meant actively to suggest or stimulate the commission of an offence.

The fact that a person advises another to do a thing, does not necessarily mean that he "instigates" that other to do that thing within the meaning of section 107 (1) of the Penal Code. Pat RAGHUNATH

Accused, who was in illegal possession of opium, was ordered by an Excise Inspector to stop, and the latter fired two shots to frighten him. The accused thereupon turned round and wounded the Excise Inspector with his sword. He was then caught and while a peon was proceeding to disarm him, the accused wounded the peon also with his sword.

Held, (1) that the Excise Inspector was entitled to arrest the accused and for that purpose to use all necessary means.

2 that he was not, however, justified in causing death in effecting the arrest under section 46 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code;

3 that inasmuch as apprehension of death had been caused to the accused, he had a right of private defence against the Inspector which had not been exceeded;

ss. 425, 430—Mischief, what constitutes—Cutting bund and causing diminution of water supply—Offence—Bona fide belief of right, effect of.

To constitute the offence of mischief under section 425 of the Penal Code it is the destroyed property that must have lost its utility or value.

The accused was charged with causing diminution of water supply to the complainant by destroying a bund at a particular place. It was not proved that the bund belonged to the complainant or that its destruction caused any diminution in its utility or value. It was proved, however, that the accused was in the habit of taking the water from this opening to his fields under a permit and that on this occasion, he cut open the bund anticipating the grant of the permit.

Held, that accused could not be convicted of mischief, inasmuch as (1) he acted in the bona fide belief that he would get the permit;

(2) by the mere diminution of water supply there was no destruction or diminution in value or utility of the property on which the injurious act was committed. M KULLAPPA NAICKER v. PALANIAMMALL, 1 L. W. 148; 14 O. M. W. N. 131; 21 Cr. L. J. 37 617

In every case where the plaintiff sues for recovery of possession of land on establishment of his title, the onus is primarily on him to prove his title. The rule of law is perfectly clear that a plaintiff must be limited to the case which he puts forward in his plaint, but he may put forward an alternative case in his plaint in the commencement, so that the defendant may know if he has more than one case to meet and may not be taken by surprise.

It is not open to a Court to make out a new case for the plaintiff which the defendant has had no opportunity to meet.

Where, therefore, plaintiffs sued for joint possession with the defendants on the ground of ownership and the Court decreed their claim in respect of a portion of the area in dispute for the purpose of grazing cattle:

Press Act (I of 1910), ss. 4, 17, 22—

Forfeiture of security—Application to set aside forfeiture—High Court, duty of—Construction of documents—Intention of author, whether material—Object of Act.

In dealing with an application under section 17 of the Press Act to set aside an order directing the forfeiture of security, the Court has to see that the matter which is the subject of the order is not obnoxious to the provisions of section 4(1) of the Act, as if it contains words of the nature described in sub-section (1) of the section, the Court cannot, under section 22, set aside the forfeiture.

In considering whether a document offends against clauses (a) to (f) of section 4(1) of the Press Act, the Court has nothing to do with the intention of the author: it has to look at the document and after a fair reading ascertain what is its meaning and then say whether the words were of the nature or tendency mentioned in the clauses.

The intention of the author is material only where the Court has to deal with comments on the measures or actions of Government, or the administration of justice: such comments are protected if they are made with a view to obtain an alteration by lawful means of the measures of Government, or if they are made on the actions of Government or administration of justice, and there is no attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection.

The Press Act is essentially a preventive measure with a view to prevent crime, that is, crime imperilling the existence of the State, the safety of its officers, public order and the like.

In distinguishing between the meaning of an article and the intention of its author, the article must be construed by grammar and logic, the primary organs of interpretation, and, when necessary, by evidence to make the words which are used fit the external things to which the words are appropriate. C AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA, In the matter of, 23 C. Where a company wanting payment of a debt from one of its agents asks that payment should be made and obtains a payment of its debt without any knowledge whatever of the sources from which the money has come, it would be straining the doctrine of notice beyond all reasonable limits to hold that in such circumstances moneys received in absolute good faith should be earmarked with some independent ownership, because the debtor, who was also a servant of the company, committed a fraud in order to discharge his obligations. P C TEXAS COMPANY v. Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 4, 23, 6, 69, 70, 73

—Letters of Administration, application for grant of—Caveator setting up paramount title—Court, whether can go into question of paramount title—Caveator not applying for grant, effect of.

A Court of Probate is not only entitled but even bound to enter into questions of title, if it is necessary to decide that question, in order to determine which of the two contesting parties is entitled to the grant of Letters of Administration. But where a caveator does not himself apply for Letters of Administration, but merely sets up a paramount title, e. g., that he being an adopted son is entitled to the whole estate, not by inheritance but by survivorship, the Probate Court is not entitled to go into the merits of the title set up by the caveator and the nature of the estate left by the deceased.

Sections 64, 69 and 70 of the Probate and Administration Act do not authorise a Probate Court to discuss the question of paramount title set up by a caveator, who puts forward title to the property not for the purpose of having a grant to himself, but for the purpose of preventing a grant to others.

Under section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act if the person making the application is, according to the law of inheritance, entitled to the whole or a part of the property and alleges the fact that there is property of that nature, and there is no other applicant for Letters of Administration,

It is not necessary for a person taking a mortgage from a Hindu widow, who has obtained Letters of Administration to the estate of her deceased husband and has also obtained the sanction of the Probate Court to effect the mortgage, to enquire about the necessity for the loan. If he bona fide relies upon the order of the Probate Court and makes the advance, there is no onus upon him to go and enquire about the truth of the allegations upon which the sanction to mortgage was granted to the widow. A reversioner challenging the transaction must show that the mortgagee knew that the facts on the basis of which the sanction was obtained were false, or that he was instrumental in getting the order from the Court on false representations.

The proper Court to set aside a grant of Letters of Administration is the Probate Court and a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to declare an order granting Letters of Administration as null and void.

When a transaction is assailed on the ground of fraud, allegations of fraud must be particularised in the plaint. C ANNODA CHARAN MONDAL v. ATUL CHANDRA MALIK, 23 C. W. N. 1045; 31 C. L. J. 3

Provident Fund Act (IX of 1897), s. 4

—Provident fund deposit, whether can be attached in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code Act V of 1908, s. 115—Revision—“Acting illegally,” meaning of—Execution of decree—Order directing attachment of property not liable to attachment, legality of.

Whether an employee is in service or out of service, whether he be alive or dead, his share of the provident fund is unattachable in the hands of the provident institution under the provisions of section 4 of the Provident Fund Act.

Sub-section (2) of section 4 of the Provident Fund Act does not in any way cut down sub-section (1) of the Act. It ensures that money payable to a widow or child as such directly shall not, even in their hands, be treated as assets of the deceased depositor's estate. The only light thrown by the second sub-section upon the first is that the first did not go far enough.

Where in spite of statutory provision to the contrary, a certain sum of money held in deposit by a provident institution was attached in execution of a decree:

Held, that in passing the order of attachment the execution Court had “acted illegally” within the meaning of section 115 clause (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

All cases of acting illegally are cases of error in law, though the converse is not always true. Any error in law which amounts to a usurpation of authority in the act done by a Court comes within clause (c) if it is not already within clause (a) of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the broad sense of the word no Court ever has jurisdiction to act illegally, though it may have jurisdiction to make an order which in fact or in law is wrong. C HINDLEY, C. D. M. v. —Hindu Law—Joint family—Father adjudicated insolvent—Son's interest in joint family property, whether vests in Receiver—Debts incurred by father—Legal necessity—Burden of proof.

Under the Mitakshara Law a father has the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immovable estate for the payment of his own debts not contracted for immoral purposes and such interest, therefore, is “property” belonging to the father within the meaning of section 2 (e) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and on the father being adjudged insolvent, it vests in the Receiver.

Provincial Insolvency Act—concl'd.

In such a case the burden of proving that the debts were incurred for immoral purposes is on the son. L HARMUKH RAI-MUNNA LAL v. RADHA MOHAN, 158 P. R. 1919 ss. 43, 46, 93—Inventory, failure to file—Creditor who sets Court in motion, whether ‘person aggrieved’—Right of creditor to ask for commitment.

The duties imposed by the provisions contained in section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act are of a disciplinary character, and if a debtor fails to carry them out, the person, if any, who is really aggrieved is the Court to which proper assistance has not been rendered by the debtor and not any person who sets the Court in motion.

A creditor, therefore, has no right to ask for the committal of the debtor for the latter's failure to file an inventory. M PALANIAPPA CHETTY v. SUB-RAMANIAN CHETTY, 11 L. W. 145; (1920) M. W. N. 185; 38 M. L. J. 338

Held, that under section 32 (2) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the Munsif who finally dealt with the case was bound to try it as a regular suit and the procedure adopted by him was perfectly correct, and that, consequently, his decree was not a final decree. A BINDSRI v. Although the maxim quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit cannot be accepted in India as having the wide meaning attached to it in England, it does cover the case of trees growing on the land.

It was not the intention of the Legislature to exclude standing trees from the definition of land given in section 2 (3) of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act and consequently such trees are exempt from attachment and sale under the provisions of section 16 of the Act. P. Agreements to lease which are compulsorily registrable under the combined operation of section 2, sub section (7), and section 17 of the Registration Act are those agreements which import a present demise or the creation of an immediate interest.

In order to determine whether an agreement is compulsorily registrable, the intention of the parties as declared by the words of the instrument must govern the construction.

An agreement between the parties that at a future time one of them shall become the tenant, provided certain things are intermediately done by the landlord or his agent so as to put the premises into a certain state which the agreement describes, is not an agreement of demise but an agreement to demise at a future date on the performance of certain conditions and is not, therefore, required to be registered. B SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. II, Art. 31—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Suit to recover profits of mortgaged land and value of trees cut down by mortgagee, whether cognizable by Civil Court.

No particular form of document is required to redeem a mortgage.

An unregistered receipt cannot in itself be used as evidence of redemption of a mortgage, but the Court is entitled to take it into consideration as evidence of the fact that on a particular date a particular sum was paid by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and this, coupled with the fact that the mortgagor was put into possession of the property and has continued in possession of it, is good evidence upon which the Court might base its finding that the mortgage has been redeemed.

A suit by a mortgagor, after redemption, to recover from the mortgagee the profits of the mortgaged property and the value of certain trees alleged to have been cut down by the defendant, is exempted from the cognisance of a Small Cause Court by Article 31 of Schedule II to the Small Cause Courts Act and is, therefore, cognisable by a Civil Court. A EASDEO v. In September 1917 plaintiffs agreed to buy and defendants agreed to sell certain goods and entered into a contract. The material clause of the contract was as follows: "Ghaghrapat (cloth) cases or bales 19 'Gin' at Re. 0-10-3 inches 31. The above-mentioned goods which are to arrive are sold (to you). Those purchased by us from Graham & Co. are sold to you. Shipment thereof January or February. And there are (to be) two to three months in addition To be delivered early if arrive early. If the goods, to arrive come 'late' the purchaser is to take (delivery of the same)." The goods which were eventually received by the defendants from Graham & Co. were not of the description which the plaintiffs had agreed to buy. The plaintiffs refused to accept the goods and sued the defendants for damages:

Held, per Heaton, J.—That having regard to the commercial situation in September 1917, it must be presumed that the parties intended that the defendants should offer to the plaintiffs nineteen bales out of those which Graham & Co. were sending to them; and that the bales should be as near the description stated in the contract as possible; that the contract might also have contemplated that if the plaintiffs were quite justly dissatisfied with a tender of goods on the ground that the goods were nowhere near the description contained in the contract, then they might repudiate the bargain altogether, but that neither of the parties could have contemplated that there should follow, on a repudiation of that kind, any right on the part of the plaintiffs to recover damages

Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 160, applicability of—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 130 to 134, applicability of—Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Gift of specific amount to be paid out of profits of immovable property, nature of—Gift, whether annuity or gift of corpus—Intention of testator—Interest, whether payable on annuity.

A testator by his Will devised his movable and immovable properties to his sons and gave certain legacies to his daughters and other persons with the following direction—"My eldest son Narindra shall, year after year, go on paying to my third son Nagendra the sum of Rs. 500 per annum out of the income from the mahals that he (Narindra) shall obtain as per schedule No. 1 and comprised within Lot Dawarbashini, etc."

Held, that in determining whether the devise of Rs. 500 per annum to Nagendra was in the nature of an annuity or was in fact a gift of the corpus, it was unnecessary to consider whether the provisions of section 60 of the Succession Act were more favourable to the annuitant than the provisions of English law, inasmuch as under both the question was one of intention.

Although the segregation of any particular property is the common mode of indicating an intention of the testator to make an annuity perpetual, yet that is not the only mode and the Will may indicate an intention in other ways that the sum payable is really not an annuity or at any rate is intended to be perpetual.

Succession Act—concl'd.

The intention of a testator must be gathered by reading the Will as a whole.

Where words of inheritance are not used by a testator with regard to any of the gifts which are admittedly absolute, the absence of such words with regard to a particular gift does not make it limited to the life of the donee, if the Will in other respects contains a clear intention of the testator that the gift is not so limited but is absolute and perpetual.

The provisions of sections 130 to 134 of the Probate and Administration Act relate to interest on annuities or legacies payable by the executor, and cannot apply to a sum to be paid out of the profits of immovable property which a legatee was entitled to as part of the properties obtained by him under a Will, and which was in his enjoyment for several years before his death, and which devolved upon his heirs. C PANCHAGOPAL MOOKERJEE v. In a suit for declaration of title by a purchaser from a judgment-debtor after the dismissal of his objection under Order XXI, rule 63 of the Civil Procedure Code, the attaching decree-holder is entitled to set up a defence that the sale in favour of the plaintiff was a sham transaction and was intended to defraud the creditors of the judgment-debtor.

A suit under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act to avoid a transfer alleged to have been made with intent to defraud the creditors of the transferor need not necessarily be brought by one of several creditors in a representative capacity and a single creditor as a defendant in a suit to declare the transfer valid is entitled to avoid the plaintiff's transaction.

A defendant may use in defence a plea which would furnish him with ground for a suit, as this procedure would avoid multiplicity of suits.

A fraudulent and colourable transfer may be challenged otherwise than under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, for instance as being a sham transaction not intended to have any effect whatever. N DHANSUKHDAS v. ZANGOO, 16 N. L. R. 3 798

Where by an agreement between a vendor and purchaser, the purchase-money is to be applied by the purchaser in payment of the vendor's debts, and there is no completed agreement between the vendor's creditor and the purchaser for substituting the latter's liability for that of the vendor, the vendor is entitled to enforce his lien against the purchaser for the unpaid sale consideration. M THYGARAJA MUDALIAR v. Where an unpaid vendor takes an unregistered mortgage bond from the vendee to secure the payment of the purchase-money, the bond, being inadmissible in evidence as affecting the property sold, is not a contract to the contrary within the meaning of section 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act and does not operate to extinguish the vendor's lien.

Such a bond may be treated as a simple money bond and a suit would be maintainable on its basis as such bond. M RANGANAYAKI AMMAL v. PARTHASARATHY AYYANGAR, 10 L. W. 550 503

Where a mortgagee is deprived of a part of the mortgaged property by the act of the mortgagor, he is entitled to recover the mortgage money from the mortgagor.

Where in a contract of mortgage, interest is stipulated to be paid at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum, in the absence of coercion or undue influence there is no reason why the rate of interest stipulated should not be allowed.

The law relating to hard and unconscionable transactions has been codified in the Contract Act and a Court cannot go outside the statutory provision and follow some rules or supposed rules that have been applied in certain cases by the Courts of Equity in England. C HARIS CHANDRA NANDI v. Trust, private—Debutter estate—Shebait, failure of line of—Founder, right of, to appoint shebait—Removal of shebait, suit for, maintainability of—Administration of trust—Misconduct of trustee—Discretion of Court—Trustee, whether can purchase trust property—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, applicability of, to private trust.

The rule embodied in section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be extended to private trusts.

Where the line originally indicated by the founder fails the founder or his heir has the right to nominate the shebait, and this principle applies equally to private and public trusts.

The founder or his heirs may also sue for the enforcement of the trust, for the removal of the old trustee, for the appointment of a new one and may thereby secure the proper administration of the trust and its properties. Whatever restrictions may have been prescribed by the Legislature as to the mode of institution of such suits in respect of public trusts, the rights of the founder of a private trust and his heirs remain unimpaired.

On the analogy of the well settled principle of English Law the view may be maintained that in respect of a debutter in India the founder or his heirs may invoke the assistance of a judicial tribunal for the proper administration thereof on the allegation that the trusts are not properly performed, and the case is strengthened when the management would under the terms of the trust vest in the plaintiff as the founder's heir, on a vacancy caused by the removal of the actual incumbent for misconduct.

A trustee cannot purchase trust property directly or indirectly from himself or at his own sale. The rule is universal that, however, fair the transaction, the cestui que trust is at liberty to set aside the sale and take back the property. The law does not stop to enquire into the fairness of the sale or the adequacy of the price but stamps its disapproval upon a transaction which creates a conflict between the self-interest and the integrity of the trustee and this principle is equally applicable to the case of a purchase made by the shebait at a sale publicly held or held at the instance of a Court in execution of a decree against the debutter estate.

The question as to whether there are sufficient grounds for the removal of a shebait is within the sound judicial discretion of the Court. In such a case the Court is guided by considerations of the welfare of the beneficiaries and of the trust estate, and also of a clear necessity for interference to save the trust property. C MANOHAR MOOKERJEE v. U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901),

s. 110—Partition proceedings—"Date of issue of proclamation" what is—Objection filed beyond time—Court, discretion of, to entertain objection.

Where there is a direction to fix a date as a matter of procedure, a Court is still at liberty, after expiration of that date, to entertain an objection and do justice between the parties if sufficient reason is shown for the delay.

The date of "issue" of a proclamation under section 110 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act is the day on which it is published in such a manner that the persons likely to be affected thereby can, with the exercise of reasonable prudence, obtain knowledge of its contents.

Where such a proclamation assumes the shape of a notice to be served personally on the co-sharer, the date on which personal service is effected is the date of "issue" of the proclamation, and it is from this day that the period of thirty days for preferring objections must be reckoned. O SHEO RATAN SINGH v. s. 110—Time for filing objections, extension of—Jurisdiction of Revenue Court to direct party to get his title determined by Civil Court—Declaration of title, suit for—Khewat, entry in, effect of—Limitation—Adverse possession.

The date originally fixed by the partition officer for filing objections under section 110 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act may from time to time be extended either on account of non-service of the notices or at the request of any of the parties; and the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court to direct a party to get his title determined by the Civil Court within a certain period is not ousted so long as an objection is filed within such extended period and no order is passed by the partition officer determining the shares of the parties and directing the method in which the partition is to be effected.

Where a person continues in possession of his property in spite of a contrary entry appearing in the khewat, no question of limitation or adverse possession can arise in a suit filed by him for declaration of his title. O BHAGWAN BAKHSH SINGH v. duty on goods exported by him from Agra. The suit was dismissed as having been brought beyond the period of six months prescribed by sub-section (3) of section 326 of the U. P. Municipalities Act. The High Court was moved in revision against the order of dismissal, and it was contended that the provisions of the foregoing sub-section referred only to suits arising out of acts done inadvertently or illegally for which a suit for damages would lie, and that that sub-section did not apply to suits for money demandable from a Municipal Board in consequence of a breach of contract or of a legal relation resembling a contract:

Held, that inasmuch as the plaintiff's cause of action had its origin in the refusal of the Municipal Board to pay a sum which it was legally bound to pay, the suit as framed was a suit for compensation within the description of suits in sub-section (1) of section 326 and was not founded upon a breach of contract or the breach of some relation resembling a contract and that, therefore, the rule of limitation contained in sub-section (3) of the section was applicable to it. A MAKHAN LAL v. In a suit for a declaration that an attachment in execution of a decree against the judgment-debtor does not affect a mortgage of the property in plaintiff's favour, where the subsistence of the mortgage is not in dispute, the proper valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction is not the value of the property but the amount for which execution is sought. M MADUKURI ANKAMMA v. Village temples—Control and management vested in villagers—Decision of majority, whether binds minority—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata, determination of, by reference to pleadings, issues and judgment—Question of law, when res judicata.

The relationship of the inhabitants of a village in respect of a temple and its properties owned and managed by them in common partakes more of the character of a corporation than that which exists among the members of a club or trustees, public or private, and the law regulating the latter does not apply to them.

In matters relating to the management of village temples the decision of the majority in meetings duly convened binds the minority.

To constitute a matter res judicata the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must be the matter which was directly and substantially in issue, either actually or constructively, in the former suit. Whether a matter has been dealt with and adjudicated on is to be determined by a reference to the plaint, the written statement, the issues and the judgment. An issue of law may be res judicata if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is the same as that in the former suit. The operation of a decree as res judicata, so far at any rate as the subject-matter of a direct adjudication contained in the decree is concerned, can in no way be affected, in the absence of fraud or collusion, by the fact that the suit was the result of a mistake of law or that the decree proceeded on such mistake. As between the parties thereto it must be held to be binding and to operate as res judicata. M VENKITASUBBAN PATTAR v. AYYATHURAI, 37 M. L. J. 554; 26 M. L. T. 364 202

A wajib-ul-arz is a mere record of custom; it does not create a right.

A wajib-ul-arz mentioned a garpagari, whose duty it was to ward off hailstorm by means of mantras, as one of the village servants, who got a sheaf of corn from the tenants at the time of the crops:

Held, that the entry did not make it obligatory upon the tenants to seek the garpagari's services and to pay for them. N SITARAM v. RAKHADU 177
